P R E F A C E

THIS New Edition was undertaken by the late Mr. Ruffhead, who not living to go through half the Work, the Proprietors desired the present Editor to complete it.

A New Edition was absolutely necessary, the Eighth being very defective and erroneous, and almost wholly engrafted, with many of it's Imperfections, into another Compilation by a Person formerly engaged to render it more perfect.

Under these Circumstances, and for that the Book admitted of many Improvements, the Proprietors resolved to publish a Ninth Edition, and not to spare any Expence to have it Corrected and Enlarged, so as to merit the Acceptance of the Public.

To attain that End many common Precedents have been omitted. — A great Variety of useless Matter rejected, — and many Additions and other Alterations made: Indeed the Additions are so considerable, that the present Book contains 257 Pages more than any former Edition.

With respect to the Precedents omitted, most of them were useless; others might have been attended with ill Consequences, if depended on; for whether in Pleading or Conveyancing, unless in very common Cases, Precedents, (even if good) in unskilful Hands, like good Medicines for particular Cases, administered by an Empirick, may be productive of the worst Effects. Every Practitioner's Office contains what are requisite for common Use. 'Twas therefore judged advisable to substitute valuable Learning, in the place of useless Forms.

As to Alterations, the principal Articles of the old and new Matter are, in this Edition, divided and arranged under proper Heads, following, in most Instances, the Method observed in BACON's, or the NEW ABRIDGMENT.

There are occasionally Notes of Practice, &c. by the Editor. which his own Experience hath enabled him to make. Many of the References in the former Edition are Corrected. The Chapters, to a great Number of Statutes, omitted in the last, are supplied: and, a Variety of new References to the Reporters, &c. added. Yet, References are not made for the Sake of referring, but sometimes to offer to the Student, on applying to the Authors, new Objects for Reflection.

With respect to the Statute-Law, the Acts are not given at large, and very seldom even Clauses, but Abstracts, full enough for a Work of this Kind. The same may be said as to Cases in Law and Equity, which, being sometimes stated in the original Reporters, with great Prolixity, are here abstracted, and only the essential Part given, unless in very particular Instances. Where a Subject is, in it's Nature, prolix, so much as the Form of the Work would admit, hath been inserted, and for further Illustration, References made to the most approved Authors.

The present Editor hath taken the Liberty of revising and making many Additions to that Part, through which Mr. Ruffhead had gone. He hath also enrich'd the Work at large with a great Number of Extracts from, and References to, Blackstone's Commentaries, Lord Lyttelton's History of Henry II. Lord Bacon's Works, Locke on Government, Montesquieu's Esprit des Loix, the Parliamentary History of England, &c. Robertson's History of the Emperor Charles V. Squire's Anglo-Saxon-Government, Madox's History of the Exchequer, Viner's Abridgment, the New Abridgment, Comyns's Digest, Foster's, Burrow's, Annals's, Wilson's, and Vezey's Reports: Authors either lately published, or (excepting Viner's and the New Abridgment,) not applied to by the Authors or Editors of Law Dictionaries.

Exclusive of various other Alterations, which are innumerable, many TITLES are added, not in any other Work of this Kind.

It is proper to observe, that the former Editions of this Work, contained a great Fund of Learning, useful and curious, relative to our ANCIENT HISTORY, LAWS and CUSTOMS. Nothing of that Kind is omitted in the present; and what hath fallen within the Editor's Notice, hath also been added.

Many of the Editor's Additions, tend to shew, the Improvements made in our Laws and Constitution (unnoticed in former Editions) and, the legal ones, include a Variety of the later Determinations, on Points of Consequence.

As the Work now stands, it is a Collection, from a great Number of the best Authors, Ancient and Modern, (especially Spelman, the Monasticon, nasticon, &c. among many others,) and may be very useful, to the Lawyer, the Divine, the Merchant, and the Gentleman. Even the Tradesman will find many Articles, necessary for him to be acquainted with: And as to the Form, that of a Dictionary, is of all others, the most universally useful. 'Tis obviously so, with regard to the Laws of England, and therefore, in that Respect, does not require a Recommendation.

The Book cannot contain every Thing; but the Editor hath in general referred to almost every useful Author. He will here advise the Reader, if the Forms of Writs are wanting, to apply to the Books of Practice, Theſaurus Brevium, Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium, and the Register. For Conveyancing, to Wood, Horselman, &c. For Indictments, to the Crown Circuit Companion, Officium clerici pacis, and Tremayne's Pleas of the Crown; but, in every Case of Nicety, or where there is a Doubt, to take proper Assistance.

With Respect to the present Edition, the Editor will not pretend that it is a perfect Work. 'Twould be the highest Degree of Arrogance. Human Works are, and ever will be, Imperfect.

A few Cases may not be Law: They are either stated to shew how Determinations have varied, or perhaps, tho' 'tis hoped but seldom, from Innovation. There are, occasionally, Observations without Authority——They may be the Editor's. There are some Cases unsupported——They were in the Original, and he might suppose them Law, or worthy Consideration. There are others with Queries.—The Editor introduced those Queries, as either doubting of the Law, or suggesting to the Reader that the Subjects were proper for Reflection. Repetitions may occasionally happen.—He flatters himself there are but few. In so voluminous a Work, 'twas morally impossible wholly to avoid Repetition.

As to References, some must unavoidably be erroneous. In such Cases the Editor would recommend to the Reader, to consult the Index to the Author. Should that fail, then to transpose the Figures, as 'tis seldom examining above three Pages: Should he still be disappointed, to apply to Comyns's Digest, or some Abridgment, if the Reference is to a Law-Book.

The Editor hopes, if Men of Sense should think any Thing exceptionable on the Subject of Religion or Politics, they will not impute it to him. He wishes well to the Religion, and admires the Constitution of his Country. In a Work of this Kind, the Law is, in general, to be stated, the Sentiments of a private Man; but seldom.

It is very necessary the Editor should offer some Apology for himself. He hath gone through the Work with infinite Difficulty, it taking up much more of his Time than he either expected, or could conveniently spare, from the Avocations of his Profession. Yet, he hath done every Thing his Leisure and Abilities would permit, to render the Work correct and useful. 'Twas absolutely necessary for a Man of Business to assist in a Performance of this Kind, but 'tis too much to lie on the Hands of one alone ; and indeed he hath often been troublesome to his Friends. It is much to be wished that Men of Experience would sometimes employ a few leisure Hours in useful Productions ; for, notwithstanding the Man of Speculation may understand the Theoretic, yet, he who is acquainted with the practical Part of any Profession, is more able to give useful Instruction.

Altho' the Work is, like all human Compositions, in several instances, defective, yet, on the whole, it contains a great Body of ancient and modern Learning, much more perhaps than any Performance of the Kind, and 'tis hoped, on a close Examination, 'twill be found to be, by far, the best Law Lexicon extant—The Proprietors have been at a very great Expence to give it that Superiority they wished it should possess, and for their sakes, the Editor hopes, it will be kindly received.

With respect to Himself, he has only farther to wish, that some abler Hand, more at Leisure, would have undertaken the Completion of the Work, as began by Mr. Ruffhead.

N. B. The References to Lord Bacon's Works are to the last Quarto Edition. To Montesquieu the last London Quarto Edition in French : But the Book and Chapter are added. To Cowell the Edition of 1727. To Wood's Institutes of the Common Law, the eighth Edition, in general. To Moor, Leonard, Hobart, &c. the Reference is sometimes to the Number of the Case.

The Whole Law, and The Practice thereof, under all the Heads and Titles of the Same.

A.

A, The first letter of the alphabet, which being prefixed to words in English, signifies as much as un in French, as a man, un homme.

Ab, From the word abbot, and in the beginning of any place signifieth that the place belonged to some abbey.

Abacot, A cap of state, wrought up in the form of two crowns worn by our ancient British kings. Chron. Angl. 1463. Spelman's Gloss.

Abactors, (abactores, derived ab abigendo) Stealers and drivers away of cattle by herds, or in great numbers. They are thus distinguished from fures: nam qui ovem unam surripuerit, ut fur coercetur, qui gregem ut abactor. MS.

Abacus, arithmetick, From the abacus, or table strewed with dust, on which the ancients made their characters and figures. Omnium liberalium artium peritus, abacum præcipue, lunarem computum & cursum rimatus. Knighton's Chron. lib. i. c. 3.

Abandum, (abandendum) Any thing sequestred, proscribed, or abandoned. Abandon, i. e. In bannum res missa.—A thing bann'd or denounced as forfeited and lost; from whence is to abandon, desert, or forsake as lost and gone.

Abarnare, From the Sax. Abarian, to discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret crime.—Si homo furtivum aliquid in domo sua occultaverit, & ita fuerit abarnatus, rectum est ut inde habeat quod quaesivit. Leg. Canuti Reg. cap. 104.

Abate, As derived from the French Abbatre, signifies to prostrate, break down or destroy; and in law, to abate a castle or fort, is interpreted to beat it down. Old Nat. Brev. 45. Westminster. 1. c. 17. Abater Maison, is to ruin or cast down a house, and level it with the ground. Thus, to abate a writ, is to defeat or overthrow it, by some error or exception. Brit. c. 48. In the statute de conjunctim feoffatis, the writ shall be abated, that is, shall be disabled and overthrown. 34 Ed. 1. stat. 2. The appeal shall abate, and be defeated by reason of covin or deceit. Staundf. Pl. Cr. 148. And the justices shall cause the said writ to be abated and quashed. Anno 11 H. 6. c. 2. The word abate likewise is sometimes used in contradistinction to disseise, and as he that puts a person out of possession of his house, land, &c. is said to disseise; so he that steps in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. Kitch. 173. Old Nat. Br. 115.

A B A

Abatement, (from the French) in Latin intrusio, or rather interpositio, to distinguish it from intrusion after the death of tenant for life; is used in that sense for the act of the abator, as the abatement and entry of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. Old Nat. Br. 91.

Abatement, when it relates to writs or plaints, is the quashing or destroying of the plaintiff's writ or plaint; and under this signification, which is most general, it is used to denote a plea put in by the defendant, in which he shews cause to the court why he should not be impleaded or sued, or if impleaded, not in the manner and form he then is; therefore praying that the writ or plaint may abate, that is, that the suit of the plaintiff may for that time cease. Co. Lit. 134. b. 227. a. P. N. B. 115. Corwell. Gilb. H. C. P. 186. Terms de Ley 1.

Herein it is material to consider,

1st, What may be pleaded in abatement.

2dly, The time and manner of pleading in abatement.

3dly, The judgment in abatement.

As to what may be pleaded in abatement, the defendant may plead,

I. To the jurisdiction of the court.

II. To the person of the plaintiff, as

1. Outlawry.
2. Excommunication.
3. Alienage.
4. Premunire.
5. Popish recusancy.

III. To the person of the defendant.

IV. To the writ.

V. To the count or declaration.

VI. Abatement by demise of the king, marriage, or death of parties.

I. With respect to pleas in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court, it is to be premised, that the courts of Westminster have a superintendency over all other courts, and may, if they exceed their jurisdiction, restrain them by prohibition; or if their proceedings are erroneous, may rectify them by writs of error and false judgment. Nothing shall be intended within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, but what is expressly alleged; so that where an action is brought on a promise in a court below, not only the promise, but the consideration of the promise, must be alleged to arise within an inferior jurisdiction; because such inferior courts are bounded in their Original creation, to causes arising within the limits of such new-erected jurisdiction; and therefore if a debtor, that has contracted a debt out of such limited jurisdiction, comes within it, yet they cannot sue there for such debt, because the cause of action did not arise within such jurisdiction; and therefore it is not within the limits of their commission to try and determine; for which reason the consideration of the promise, which is the cause of action, must be alledged to be within the jurisdiction of the court; and not only so, but it must be proved upon the trial; and if the plaintiff prove a consideration out of the jurisdiction, that cannot be given in evidence; and if it be, the defendant's counsel may tender a bill of exceptions.

There are no pleas to the jurisdiction of the courts at Westminster in transitory actions, unless the plaintiff by his declaration shews the cause of action accrues within the county palatine, or if it be between the scholars of Oxford and Cambridge. 4 Inst. 213. 1 Sid. 103. There is a difference between a franchise to demand consuance, and a franchise, ubi breve domini regis non currit. For in the first case the tenant or defendant shall not plead it, but the lord of the franchise must demand consuance; but in the other case, the defendant must plead it to the writ. 4 Inst. 224. See titles Franchise, Consuance, County Palatine.

Where a franchise, either by letters patent or prescription, hath a privilege of holding pleas within their jurisdiction, if the courts at Westminster intrench on their privileges, they must demand consuance, that is, desire that the cause may be determined before them; for the defendant cannot plead to the jurisdiction: and the reason is, because a defendant is arrested by the king's writ. But within a franchise, where the king's writ doth not run, he is not legally convened, and therefore he may plead it to the jurisdiction.

The pleas to the jurisdiction of the courts at Westminster, according to chief baron Gilbert, are,

Held of the king's manor. Hansf. 103.

Counties palatine. Rast. 419. Herne 7. See title County palatine.

Cinque ports. See title Cinque ports.

The plea of privilege is likewise a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, though it doth not arise from the matter in variance, not being within the jurisdiction of the court, but it submits to the court, whether it ought to take consuance of the action, or proceed against the defendant in that court, by reason of his being a person privileged by another court, where he ought properly to be sued. But the law on this head will properly fall under the division concerning pleas in abatement respecting the person of the defendant.

II. As to pleas in abatement to the person of the plaintiff, 1. Outlawry may be pleaded in abatement, because the plaintiff having refused to appear to the process of the law, thereby loses its protection; but this is only a disability 'till the outlawry is reversed, or 'till he has obtained a charter of pardon. 1 Inst. 128. Lit. sect. 197. Dy. 28, 222. Aff. 49. Br. Nonability 25.

But this disability is only pleadable when the plaintiff sues in his own right; for if he sues in autre droit, as executor or administrator, or as mayor with his commonalty, outlawry shall not disable him, because the person whom he represents has the privilege of the law. Co. Lit. 128. Nor when the plaintiff brings a writ of error to reverse an outlawry, shall outlawry in that suit, nor at any stranger's suit, disable him; for if he were outlawed at several mens suits, and one should be a bar to another, he could never reverse any of them. The outlawry itself is no objection; for that would be exceptio ejusdem rei cuius petitur dissolutio: nor is another outlawry pleadable in bar to such writ of error; for then two erroneous outlawries would be irreversible. 1 Inst. 128. Doct. Plac. 396.

But when outlawry is pleaded in abatement, the plaintiff shall not reply that the outlawry is erroneous, for it is good till reversed. 1 Lutw. 36.

As outlawry is a dilatory plea, when it is pleaded in another court than where the outlawry issued, the defendant must bring in the Record immediately. For this being in delay, if the court should give time, and it should not be brought in, then the delay of justice would be from the court; and since there is a way of having it immediately, by producing it under the great seal, no time shall be given to bring it sub pede sigilli; but otherwise when it is in the same court; for then the record is already in court. Doct. Placit. 393. Stamf. 103. Fitz. Coron. 233.

Outlawry in a county palatine cannot be pleaded in any of the courts of Westminster; for he is only ousted of his law within that jurisdiction, and it shall not extend to disable a man in another county, where they have no power; for the county palatine being a royal jurisdiction within bounds, the losing the privileges of law within that jurisdiction, can be no disadvantage to him in another county; and if he does not live within the palatine jurisdiction, he is not obliged to attend there. But it seems that outlawry in the county palatine of Lancaster may be pleaded in the courts of Westminster; because that county was erected by act of parliament in the time of Ed. 3. but Durham and Chester are by prescription. Fitz. Coron. 233. 12 Ed. 4. 16. Doct. Placit. 396. Yet query, as to this doctrine? for the same reason militates against it.

Outlawry may be always pleaded in abatement, but not in bar, unless the cause of action be forfeited. 1 Inst. 128. 6. Doct. Pl. 395.

In personal actions, where the damages are uncertain, outlawry cannot be pleaded in bar; but in actions on the case, where the debt to avoid the law wager, is turned into damages, there outlawry may be pleaded in bar, for it was vested in the king, by the forfeiture, as a debt certain, and due to the outlaw: and the turning it into damages, whereby it becomes uncertain, shall not divest the king of what he was once lawfully possessed of. 2 Lutw. 1604. 3 Lev. 29. 2 Vent. 282. 3 Leon. 197. 203. Cro. Eliz. 204. Owen 22.

2. Excommunication is a good plea even to an executor or administrator, though they sue in autre droit; for an excommunicate person is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses. 1 Inst. 134. 43 E. 3. 13. Theol. 11.

But in an action brought by bailiffs and commonalty, the defendant shall not plead excommunication in the bailiffs; because they sue as a corporation, and a corporation cannot be excluded from the communion of the visible church. Theol. 11. 30 E. 3. 4. Co. Lit. 134.

Likewise excommunication is no plea in a qui tam, because it is for example; and the statute having given the informer an ability to sue, and not excepted excommunicated persons from the liberty of informing, he is enabled to sue by the statute, notwithstanding the censures of the church. 12 Co. 61.

When excommunication is pleaded in the plaintiff, he shall not reply, that he has appealed from the sentence; for the sentence is in force until it is repealed, and whilst it is in force he cannot appear in any of the courts of justice; but he may reply that he is absolved, for then his disability is taken away. Bro. Excom. 3. 3 Bulf. 72. 20 H. 6. 25. Roll. 226.

When prohibition is brought against the bishop, and he pleads excommunication against the plaintiff, and in the excommunication there is no cause of such excommunication shewn, this is no good plea; for in such case it will be intended, that the excommunication was for endeavouring to hinder the bishop's proceeding by application to the temporal court; and if such excommunication were allowed, it would destroy all prohibitions, and the plea of excommunication in this case is exceptio ejusdem rei cuius petitur dissolutio. Theol. 10, 11. 28 E. 3. 27. 8 Co. 68.

The court will not receive the certificate of excommunication of one bishop from another, because they must have the certificate from the bishop whose subject he was; and he might have been absolved, that is, discharged from the excommunication by his own ordinary after the first certificate to the bishop. Vide Bro. Excom. Finn.

Fitz. Excom. 8 Co. 68. Co. Lit. 134. Nor will they receive a certificate; (because he may stand assailed by the present ordinary that now is,) after the decease of the bishop who has certified; and the court will not receive any certificate, but from such person to whom they can write to assail. Bro. Excom. 21. Fitz. Excom. 26. 1 Roll. 883.

3. Alienage.--An alien born may be pleaded in abatement: but Jews may prosecute actions and recover, a plea in abatement against them being but a disability so long as the king shall prohibit them to trade. 1 Lill. 4.

An alien enemy, or one whose king is in enmity with ours, cannot bring any action either real, personal, or mixed. Yet see Lord Raym. 282. Wells v. Williams.

Those pleas are at present seldom pleaded, and as little regarded. Wars are not now so implacable as formerly.

An alien in league shall maintain personal actions; otherwise he would not be able to merchandise and trade amongst us. But he shall not maintain real or mixed actions, because there is no necessity that he should settle amongst us. Co. Lit. 129. b. Yelv. 198. 1 Bulstr. 134. If alienage be pleaded to an alien in league, that must be in disability of the plaintiff; but if it be to an alien enemy, it may be pleaded to the action; because it is forfeited to the king, as a reprisal for the damages committed by the dominion in enmity with him. Bro. Denizen 10. Co. Lit. 129. b.

Where the defendant pleads that the plaintiff is an alien in abatement of the writ, it is triable where the writ is brought, and the replication must conclude to the country; but otherwise it is laid where it is pleaded in bar, that the plaintiff is an alien, the replication must conclude with an averment. Salk. 2. West. 5. Comb. 394. Texell. 5. Hooper contra. Where the defendant pleads, that the plaintiff was an alien, born at Roan in the kingdom of France, within the ligeance of the king of France, the plaintiff replies, that he is an alien friend, born at Hamborough, within the ligeance of the emperor, and traverseth that he was born at Roan. Holt inclined it was an ill traverse, and offered an ill issue. Comb. 212. See title Offens.

4. Præmunire. Persons attainted of præmunire are incapable of bringing any action; for they are out of the protection of the law. Lit. seâ. 199. Co. Lit. 129. See title Præmunire.

5. Popish recusancy. This disability of popish recusancy convict, is by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. which disables to all intents, as excommunication, except where he sues for lands, tenements, leases, annuities, rents, and hereditaments, or for the issues and profits thereof, which are not to be seized into the hands of the king, his heirs or successors.

Of pleading recusancy in disability, vide the case of Coburn v. Fletcher, Modern Cases in Law and Equity, 1 Part, 43.

III. Pleas in abatement to the person of the defendant. Of these pleas, the plea of privilege is one of the most material. The officers of each court enjoy the privilege of being sued only in those courts to which they respectively belong; the reason whereof is, because of the duty they are under of attending those courts, and lest their clients causes should suffer if they were drawn to answer to actions in other courts. 2 Mod. 297. Vaugb. 155. 2 H. 7. 2. 2 Roll. Abr. 272. 1 Lutw. 44. 639. But this is to be understood, when the plaintiff can have the same remedy against the officer in his own court, as in that where he sues him; for if money be attached in an attorney's hands by foreign attachment in the sheriff's court in London, he shall not have his privilege; because in this case the plaintiff would be remediless. 1 Sand. 67, 68. Turwill's case.

So if a writ of entry, or other real action, be brought against an attorney of the King's Bench, he cannot plead his privilege; because, if this should be allowed, the plaintiff would have a right without a remedy; for the King's Bench hath not cognizance of real actions. 1 Sand. 67.

So if an attorney of the Common Pleas be sued in an appal, he shall not have his privilege; for his own court hath not cognizance of this action; for this vide 38 H. 6. 29. b. 9 E. 4. 35. Cro. Car. 585. 1 Leon. 189. 2 Leon. 156.

But the privilege, which the court indulges their officers with, is restrained to the suits only, which they bring in their own right; for if they sue or are sued as executors or administrators, they then represent common persons, and are to have no privilege. Hob. 177.

So if an officer of one court sues an officer of another court, the defendant shall not plead his privilege; for the attendance of the plaintiff is as necessary in his court as that of the defendant is in his; and therefore the cause is legally attached in the court where the plaintiff is an officer. 2 Mod. Rep. 298. Hamelton v. Jutice Scroggs. 2 Lev. 129. 2 Roll. Abr. 275. pl. 4. Moor 556.

So if a privileged person brings a joint action, or if an action be brought against him and others, he shall not have his privilege, but this is to be understood where the action is joint, and cannot be severed; for if the action can be severed, without doing any injury, the officer shall have his privilege. Dyer 277. Godb. 10. 2 Roll. Abr. 275. 2 Lev. 129. 1 Vent. 298, 9.

An officer shall not have his privilege against the king; for as the executive power is lodged in the king, it would be unreasonable that his court, which gives relief to private persons, should protect any subject from being brought to justice, for offending against the laws, which concern the whole commonwealth. Hob. 9. Bro. Superfed. 1. 2 Roll. Abr. 274. (a). But in any action qui tam, at the suit of an informer, he shall have his privilege. Lil. Reg. 7. 3 Lev. 398. Lutw. 193.

If an action be brought in the King's Bench against an attorney of the Common Pleas, it is not enough for him to say that he is an attorney, for his being an attorney does not abate the plaintiff's bill, when once the action is attached in the King's Bench; but he must shew that he was an attorney at the time of the plaintiff's exhibiting the bill; for then it will appear to the court, that the plaintiff might have sued the defendant there, as a privileged person. 1 Salk. 1. Pease v. Parsons.

It is said by Holt, in the case of Duncombe v. Church, Comb. 390. that if a person who hath the privilege of being sued in another court, be in actual custody of the Marshal, he cannot plead his privilege; but otherwise where he is bailed, and so only supposed in custodia mariscalii. 1 Salk. 1. Jones v. Bodinner, the same point.

The court of King's Bench will take notice of the privilege of their own officers; as where a filazer of the King's Bench was arrested by a writ, he was discharged on common bail. Brown's case. Salk. 544.

But where an attorney of the Common Pleas was sued by a bill in the King's Bench; upon a motion for his being discharged, the court, absente Holt, denied it, and put him to plead his privilege. 1 Mod. Ent. 26.

Here should be observed the difference;--the former was an actual officer, whose attendance was absolutely necessary, and no one to supply his place; the latter, an attorney, and the number of attorneys is very great.

After a general imparlance, an officer cannot plead his privilege, because by imparling he affirms the jurisdiction of the court; but by the better opinion it seems, that after a special imparlance he may plead his privilege. Bro. Priv. 25. 22 H. 6. 6, 22, 71. 1 Roll. Rep. 294. 1 Sid. 29. 2 Roll. Abr. 273, 279. Hard. 365. 1 Lutw. 46. 1 Salk. 1. And now the common practice is to use a special imparlance.

Misnomer likewise may be pleaded in abatement. But though a defendant may, by pleading in abatement, take advantage of a misnomer when there is a mistake in the writ or declaration, as to the name of baptism or surname; yet in such a plea he must set forth his right name, so as to give the plaintiff a better writ. Finch 363. 9 Hen. 5. 1.

And where a defendant comes in gratis, or pleads by the name alledged by the plaintiff, he is estopped to alledge any thing against it. Style 440. Where one is misnamed in a bond, the writ may be in the right name, and the count shew that defendant, by such a name, made the bond. To the plea of misnomer, the plaintiff may reply, the defendant was known by the name in the writ. 1 Salk. 6.

If A. gives a bond by the name of B. and he is accordingly sued by that name of B. he may plead misnomer, and the other may reply, that he made the bond by the name of B. and estop him by demanding judgment, if against his own deed he shall be admitted to say his name is A. and then he may rejoin and say, that he made no such deed, and this he must do without oyer; for if he prays oyer, he admits his name to be B. Salk. 7. Linch v. Hooke.

One defendant cannot plead misnomer of his companion; for the other defendant may admit himself to be the person in the writ. 1 Lutw. 36. The defendant, though his name be mistaken, is not obliged to take advantage of it; and therefore if he be impleaded by a wrong name, and afterwards impleaded by his right name, he may plead in bar the former judgment, and aver that he is una et eadem persona. Gilb. H. C. P. 218.

Where an indictment for a capital crime is abated for misnomer of the defendant, the court will not dismiss him, but cause him to be indicted de novo by his true name. 2 Hawk. 367. Pleas in abatement found against a defendant in capital cases, are not peremptory, as they are in other cases; but he may afterwards plead over to the felony. 1b. 191.

A writ also may be abated for want of addition of the place, trade, dignity, &c. of the defendant; as where one pleads there is no such place, or that he is a baron and not a knight, &c. 1 Vent. 154. If the addition of the defendant's quality and dwelling be omitted in any original writ, in a personal action, appeal, or indictment, where exigent may be awarded, the writ shall abate; but it shall not abate for surplusage in the addition. 1 H. 5. cap. 5.

The name of earl, if omitted, abates the writ. Davis Rep. 60. a. But if a person is created an earl pending the action, bill, or suit, it shall not abate. 1 Ed. 6. cap. 2. sect. 3. But there must be an entry on the roll, with a post ultimam continuationem, scilicet, that such a day and year, the king by his letters patent, &c. setting it forth with a proferri in cur. &c. quod predicti. defendens non 1 Mod. Ent. 31, 32.

The defendant's being under the protection of the law, as by being an infant, feme covert, &c. may likewise be pleaded in abatement. A feme covert, after an arrest, giving bail-bond by a wrong name, may plead the misnomer, and he is not estopped by the bail-bond. 1 Salk. 7. Linch v. Hooke. See titles Feme Covert, Infant.

On the whole, it is proper to observe, as to misnomers, the courts at Westminster will not abate a writ for a trifling mistake, as the omission or insertion of a letter, that does not make a material variation in the sound, &c.

As to infancy, it may either be pleaded in bar, or given in evidence, on the general issue, unless in the case of necessities, when the law binds an infant to his promise.

As to coverture, it may be pleaded in bar, or abatement. But vide post Div. vi.

IV. As to pleas in abatement to the writ, the writ being the foundation of the subsequent proceedings, great certainty and exactness is requisite, to the end that no person be arrested or attached by his goods, unless there appear sufficient grounds to warrant such proceedings; so that if the writ vary materially from that in the Register, or be defective in substance, the party may take advantage of it. See 5 Co. 12. 9 H. 7. 16. 10 Ed. 3. 1. 2 Inst. 662. Plowd. 1, 51, 52, 80. Carth. 172. But where the writ shall not abate for variance from the Register, so that it be equivalent. See Hob. 1, 51, 52. What variance between a bond and the declaration abates the writ, see Hob. 116. Walter v. Pigot. Mo. 645. 2 Roll. 147. 1 Cro. 896. Hob. 18, 19, 20.

In declaring on bonds, 'tis most advisable to omit the alias dict. for 'tis unnecessary.

Where a demand is of two things, and it appears the plaintiff hath an action only for one, the writ may not be abated in the whole, but shall stand for that which is good; but if it appear, that although he cannot have this writ which he hath brought for part, he may have another, the writ shall abate in the whole. 11 Rep. 45. 1 Saund. 285. A writ of ejectment shall be abated, on its appearing to the court to be sued out before the cause of action. Cro. Car. 272. Now the practice is, to serve a copy of the declaration in the first instance.—If judgment goes by default, there is not any one to bring error. If the tenant appears, there are several instances, where the issue may be made right, and the variance shall not hurt. In case administration be granted after the action brought, and this appears, the plaintiff's writ abates. Hob. 245.

V. As to pleas in abatement to the count or declaration, it is observable, that after the party suing has declared, the party impleaded may demand oyer of the writ; and then, if there be any fault or insufficiency in the count for a cause apparent in itself, or if there be a variance between the count and the writ, or between the writ and a record, specialty, &c. mentioned in the count, the party impleaded ought to shew it, by his pleading. Theol. lib. 10. c. 1. sect. 5. Fitz. Count, 27.

One may plead in abatement of a declaration, where 'tis by original; but if the action be by bill, you must plead in abatement of the bill only. 5 Mod. 144. A little variance between the declaration and the bond pleaded, will not make naught the declaration; but uncertainty will abate it. Plowd. 84. The variance of the declaration from the obligation, or other deed on which it is grounded, will sometimes abate the action; and if a declaration assign waste in a town not mentioned in the original writ, the writ of waste shall abate. Hob. 18, 38.

Likewise where the declaration is otherwise defective, in not pursuing the writ, or not setting forth the cause of action with that certainty which the law requires, or laying the offence in a different county from that in which the writ was brought. 1 New Abr. 6.

It is a good plea in abatement that another action is depending for the same thing; for whenever it appears on record, that the plaintiff has sued out two writs against the same defendant, for the same thing, the second writ shall abate; and it is not necessary that both should be pending at the time of the defendant's pleading in abatement; for if there was a writ in being at the time of suing out the second, it is plain the second was vexatious and ill ab initio. 9 H. 6. 12. Mo. 418, 539. 5 Co. 61. Doct. Pl. 10, 67. But it must appear plainly to be for the same thing; for an assize of lands in one county shall not abate an assize in another county, for these cannot be the same lands. 4 H. 6. 24. Doct. Pl. 10.

In general writs, as trespass, assize, covenant, where the special matter is not alledged, and the plaintiff is nonsuited before he counts; and the second writ is sued pending the other, yet the former shall not be pleaded in abatement, because it does not appear to the court that it was for the same thing; for the first writ being general, the plaintiff might have declared for a distinct thing from what he demanded by the second writ; but when the first is a special writ, and sets forth the particular demand, as in a precipe quod reddat, &c. there the court can readily see that it is for the same thing; and therefore though the plaintiff be nonsuited before he counts, yet the first shall abate the second writ, it being apparently brought for the same thing. 5 Co. 61. Doct. Pl. 11, 12. If an action of debt, &c. be depending in an inferior court, a bill for the same debt may be brought in any court in Westminster. 5 Co. 62. In an action of debt, &c. another action depending in the courts of Westminster for the same matter, is a good plea in abatement; but a plea of an action in an inferior court is not good, unless judgment be given. 5 Co. 68.

If a second writ be brought tested the same day the former is abated, it shall be deemed to be sued out after the abatement of the first. Allen 34.

If an action, pending in the same court, be pleaded to a second action brought for the same thing, the plaintiff may pray that the record may be inspected by the court, or demand oyer of it, which if not given him in convenient time, he may sign his judgment. Dy. 227. Carth. 453, 417.

VI. With respect to abatement by the demise of the king, or by the marriage, or death of the parties, it is to be observed, that 1. As to the demise of the king at common law, all patents of justices, commissions civil and military, were thereby determined; also all suits depending in the king's courts were discontinued by the death of the king; so that the plaintiffs were obliged to commence new actions, or to have re-summons or attachment on the former processes, to bring the defendant in; but to prevent the inconvenience, expence and delay which this occasioned, the statutes of 1 Ed. 6. c. 7. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 27. and 7 Ann. c. 8. were made, which see under title Prærogative.

But proceedings on an information, in nature of a quo warranto, are not abated by the demise of the crown. 2 Stra. 728. Where the king brings a writ of error in quare impedit, it abates by his death. 2 Stra. 243.

2. With respect to the marriage of the parties, coverture is a good plea in abatement, which may be either before the writ sued, or pending the writ. By the first the writ is abated de facto, but the second only proves the writ abatable; both are to be pleaded, with this difference, that coverture, pending the writ, must be pleaded, post ultimam continuationem; whereas coverture before the writ brought, may be pleaded at any time, because the writ is de facto abated; but if a feme sole takes out a writ, and after marriage, the defendant was legally attached on such suit, and therefore may plead in chief to it any defence he has; but such plea must be puis darrein continuance. Doct. Pl. 3. 1 Sid. 140. 1 Leon. 168, 169.

If a writ be brought by A. and B. as baron and feme, whereas they were not married until the suit depended, the defendant may plead this in abatement; for though they cannot have a writ in any other form, yet the writ shall abate, because it was false when sued out. Fitz. Brief, 476. If a writ be brought against a feme covert as sole, she may plead her coverture; but if she neglects to do it, and there is a recovery against her as a feme sole, the husband may avoid it by writ of error, and may come in at any time and plead it. Latch 24. Stile 254, 280. 2 Roll. Rep. 53. If an action be brought in an inferior court against a feme sole, and pending the suit she intermarries, and afterwards removes the cause by habeas corpus, and the plaintiff declares against her as a feme sole, she may plead coverture at the time of suing the habeas corpus; because the proceedings here are de novo; and the court takes no notice of what was precedent to the habeas corpus; but upon motion on the return of the habeas corpus, the court will grant a procedendo. For though this be a writ of right, yet where it is to abate a rightful suit, the court may refuse it; and the plaintiff had bail below to this suit, which by the contrivance he is ousted of, and possibly by the same means of the debt. 1 Salk. 8.

In ejectment against baron and feme, after verdict for the plaintiff, baron dies between the day of Nisi prius and the day in Bank; adjudged that the writ should stand good against the feme, because it is in nature of a trespass, and the feme is charged for her own act; and therefore the action survives against her. So if the wife had died, the baron should have judgment entered against him. Cro. Jac. 356. Cro. Car. 509. 1 Roll. Rep. 14. Moor 469.

If a feme sole plaintiff, after verdict, and before the day in Bank, takes husband, she shall have judgment, and the defendant cannot plead this coverture, for he has no day to plead it at. Cro. Car. 232. 1 Bulst. 5.

If an original be filed against a feme sole, and before the return she marries, you may declare against her without taking notice of her husband, for her intermarriage is no abatement of the writ in fact, but only makes it abateable. Comb. 449. 1 Roll. Rep. 53.

'Tis now in general held, that if a feme sole commences an action, and pending the same marries, the suit is abated, but that it is otherwise with respect to a feme sole defendant, as she shall not take advantage of her own act.

3. As to pleas in abatement by the death of parties, the general rule is, that whenever the death of any party happens pending the writ, and yet the plea is in the same condition as if such party were living, there such death makes no alteration or abatement of the writ. 1 New Abr. 7.

The death of the plaintiff did in all cases abate the writ before judgment, till the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. by which neither the death of plaintiff or defendant shall abate it, if the action might be originally prosecuted by and against the executors or administrators of the parties; and if there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more die, the writ or action shall not abate, if the cause of action survives to the surviving plaintiff against the surviving defendant, &c. Stat. ibid.

Before this statute it was held, that if there were two executors, and they brought an action of debt, and one of them died, that the writ should not abate; for in this case summons and severance lies, after which the one executor does not proceed for a moiety, but for a whole, as representative of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 652. Co. Lit. 139. 1 Leon. 44. So in a quare impedit, by two jointenants, and one is summoned and severed, and the severed person dies, the writ shall not abate, because the advowson is an intire thing, and he proceeded for the whole, after the severance; and so he may after the death of the severed jointenant. Dyer 279.

If there were several defendants in the original action, and one died, the writ did not abate; because there being a joint demand, it survives against the residue; but in this case there must be a suggestion on the roll, because it would be error to give judgment against a deceased person. Hard. 151, 164. Stile 299. 3 Mod. 249. Cro. Car. 426. 1 Jones 367. 1 Rol. Abr. 756. 1 Show. Rep. 186. But in a writ of error, if there be several plaintiffs, and one dies, the writ shall abate, because the writ of error is to set persons in statu quo, before the erroneous judgment given below; and they that are plaintiffs in error were distinct sufferers in the judgment, since there might be different executions issued thereupon, and different representatives were by such judgment affected; and by consequence the survivor cannot prosecute the writ of error for the whole, left by a collusive persuasion, or by negligence or design he should hurt the representative of the deceased. Bridg. 78. Yelv. 208. 10 Co. 135. 1 Vent. 34. 1 Sid. 419. cont. But if any of the defendants in error die, yet all things shall proceed, because the benefit of such judgment goes to the survivor, and he only is to defend it. Sid. 419. Yelv. 208. 1 L. Raym. 439. In an audita querela, by two, the death of one shall not abate the writ; for the survivor is not to be restored to any thing he has lost, but to discharge himself of the execution; and thereupon, notwithstanding the death of the other, he may proceed for a discharge in toto for himself. 1 Vent. 34. 3 Hen. 7. 1. 3 Mod. 249. If there be several persons named as plaintiffs in the writ, and one of them was dead at the time of purchasing the writ, this may be pleaded in abatement; because it falsifies the writ; and because the right was in the survivors, at the time of suing the writ, and the writ not accommodated, as the case was. 20 Hen. 6. 30. 18 E. 4. 1. 2 H. 7. 16. 1 Brownl. 3, 4. Clift Ent. 6. Raft. Ent. 126.

By stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8. (made perpetual by 1 Jac. 2. c. 17.) it is enacted, that the death of either of the parties between verdict and judgment, shall not be alleged for error, so as judgment be entered within two terms after such verdict.

Secondly, of the time and manner of pleading in abatement.

A plea in abatement must be put in within four days after the return of the writ, because the person coming in by the process of the court ought not to have time to delay the plaintiff. Lutw. 1181. Hob. 19. 2 Stra. 1192.

But if a declaration be delivered against one in custody, he has the whole term to plead in abatement. Salk. 515.

If the declaration be delivered in the vacation, or so late in term, that defendant is not bound to plead to it that term; he may plead in abatement, within the first four days of next term.

As pleas in abatement enter not into the merits of the cause, but are dilatory, the law has laid the following restrictions frictions on them. First, By the statute of 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. for amendment of the law, no dilatory plea is to be received unless on oath, and probable cause shewn to the court. Secondly, No plea in abatement shall be received after respondens ouster, for then they would be pleaded in infinitum. 2 Saund. 41. Thirdly, That they are to be pleaded before imparlance. See Yelv. 112. 1 Lutw. 46, 178. 2 Lutw. 1117. Doct. Pla. 224. Except where antient demesne is pleaded; for this may be done after imparlance, because the lord might reverse the judgment by writ of disceit, and it goes in bar of the action itself. For this see Dyer in marg. 210. Stike 30. Latch 83. 5 Co. 105. 9 Co. 31. Han. Ent. 103. Fourthly, That when issue is joined on them, if it be found against him who pleads such dilatory plea, it shall be peremptory. 2 Show. Rep. 42. 6 Mod. 236.

With respect to pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, it is to be observed, that the defendant must plead in propria persona; for he cannot plead by attorney without leave of the court first had, which leave acknowledges the jurisdiction; for the attorney is an officer of the court; and if he put in a plea by an officer of the court, that plea must be supposed to be put in by leave of the court. 1 New Abr. 2.

The defendant must make but half defence, for if he makes the full defence quando & ubi curia consideraverit, &c. he submits to the jurisdiction of the court. Lutw. 9. 1 Show. Rep. 386.

If a plea is pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court, it ought to conclude with a prayer of judgment in this manner, viz. The said defendant prays judgment, whether the court will take any farther cognizance of the said plea. 1 Mod. Ent. 34.

As to pleas in disability of the plaintiff, they may not be pleaded after a general imparlance. 1 Lutw. 19. It may be added, that in pleading ouster in disability in another court, the antient way was to have the record of the outlawry itself sub pede sigilli by certiarari and mitimus; but this being very expensive, it is now sufficient to plead the capias ulagatum under the seal of the court from whence it issues; for the issuing of execution could not be without the judgment; and therefore such execution is a proof to the court that there is such a judgment, which is a proof that the defendant's plea of matter of record is proved by a matter of record; and consequently appears to the court not to be merely dilatory; and therefore on shewing such execution, if the plaintiff will plead nul tiel record, the court will give the defendant a day to bring it in. Co. Lit. 128. Doct. Placit. tit. Outlawry. But where excommunication is pleaded, it is not sufficient to shew the writ de excommunicato capiendo under the seal of the court; for the writ is no evidence of the continuance of the excommunication, since he may be affoiled by the bishop, and that will not appear in the king's court, because such affoiment is not returned into the king's court from whence the significavit is sent.

If a plea in abatement be pleaded to the person of the plaintiff, there it must conclude, if he ought to be compelled to answer. 1 Mod. Ent. 34. If it be pleaded to the writ, then the plea concludes with the prayer of judgment of the writ, and that the writ may be quashed. When it is to the action of the writ, there he should shew that the party ought not to have that writ, but by the matter of his plea should intimate to him how he should have a better. Latch 178. Respondere non debet is a proper beginning to a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but a plea of ne unques executor, ought to begin with petit. judic. de bill. 5 Mod. 132, 133, 146. 1 Saund. 283. 2 Saund. 97, 189, 190, 339. Lutw. 44. Show. 4. In a replication to a plea in abatement where matter of fact is pleaded, the plaintiff must pray his damages. Vide 1 L. Raym. 339, 554. 2 L. Raym. 1022. If upon issue verdict be found for him he shall have final judgment; but where matter of law is pleaded, the plaintiff must only maintain his writ. 3 Anne in B. R. If one pleads matter of abatement, and concludes in bar, Et petit judicium si actionem habere debet, though he begins in abatement, and the matter be also in abatement, yet the conclusion being in bar, makes it a bar; and the reason is, because you admit the writ by concluding specially against the action. 18 H. 6. 27. 32 H. 6. 17. 36 H. 6. 18. 22 H. 6. 536. 1 Show. 4. 2 L. Raym. 1018. If a man pleads matter in bar, and concludes in abatement, it shall be taken for a plea in bar, from the nature and reason of the thing; for the plaintiff can have no writ if he has not a cause of action, and therefore the court will take the plea to be in bar. 37 H. 6. 24. 36 H. 6. 24. 2 Mod. 6.

As to the conclusion of a plea in abatement, vide 1 L. Raym. 337, 593.

A plea was held good in bar, though pleaded in abatement, and the defendant hath his election to plead, either in bar or abatement; the nature of a plea in abatement is to intitle the plaintiff to a better writ, and is hath been expressly resolved, that where the plea is in abatement, and it is of necessity that the defendant must disclose matter of bar, he shall have his election to take it either by way of bar or abatement. 2 Roll. Rep. 64. Salkill v. Shilton. In short, whatever destroys the plaintiff's action, and disables him for ever from recovering, may be pleaded in bar. But the defendant is not always obliged to plead in bar, but may plead in abatement, as in replevin for goods, the defendant may plead property in himself, or in a stranger, either in bar or in abatement, for if the plaintiff cannot prove property in himself, he fails of his action for ever; and it is of no avail to him who has the property if he has it not. 1 Vent. 249. 2 Lev. 92. 1 Salk. 5, 92. Carth. 243.

Where matter of bar may be pleaded in abatement, vide 2 L. Raym. 1207, 1208. Hackett v. Tilly.

Thirdly, Of the judgment in abatement. If issue be taken upon a plea to the writ, judgment against the defendant is peremptory; but if there be a demurrer, it is then only that the plaintiff answer over. Latch 374. Yelv. 12. Allen 66. Upon a judgment in waste for the damages recovered, the defendant demurs partly in abatement, and partly in bar, the court shall give judgment in chief. Show. 255. If the defendant imparts to a day in a personal action, and does not appear at that day, judgment final shall be given against him; for the default is peremptory as to him; and there is no process to bring him into court again. 38 H. 6. 33. So in debt, if the defendant pleads in abatement to the writ, to which the plaintiff imparts, and at the day given, the defendant makes default, judgment final is upon the default, though the plea was only in abatement. 10 E. 4. 7. Mod. Cases 5. Where matter of abatement is pleaded in bar, there shall be judgment in chief. 1 Lev. 291. The judgment for the defendant, on a plea in abatement, is quod breve, or narratio cassetur; if issue be joined on a plea in abatement, and it be found for the plaintiff, it shall be peremptory against the defendant, and the judgment shall be quod recuperet, because the defendant chusing to put the whole weight of his cause upon this issue, when he might have had a plea in chief, is an admission that he had no other defence. Yelv. 112, 2 Show. 42. Str. 532.

In abatement, if issue is joined on a matter of fact, and found for the plaintiff, the jury who try that issue shall assess the damages.—If there is a demurrer to the plea, and adjudged for plaintiff, then a respondens ouster is awarded.

Abator, Is a person that abates or entereth into a house or land, void by the death of him that last possessed the same, before the heir takes possession, and by that means keeps out the heir. Old Nat. Br. 115.

Abatude, Is any thing diminished.—Moneta abatuda, is money clipped or diminished in value: si tempore solutionis hac moneta fuerit abatuda sive deteriorata. Charta Simonis Comit. Leicestriz, anno 1290.

Abbay, (abbatia) Is the same as to the government of a religious house, and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as a bishoprick is to a bishop. This word is used in some of our antient grants, particularly anno 34 & 35 H. 8. in a grant to the countess of Pembroke.

Abbat, or abbot, (abbas in Latin, in French abbe, and in Saxon abbud) Is a spiritual lord or governor, having the the rule of a religious house. The word is also by some derived from the Syriac abba pater. Of these abbots here in England some were elective, some preservative; and some were mitred, and some were not; such as were mitred had episcopal authority within their limits, being exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan; but the other sort of abbots were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. The mitred abbots were lords of parliament, and called abbots sovereign, and abbots general, to distinguish them from the other abbots. And as there were abbots, so there were also lords priors, who had exempt jurisdiction, and were likewise lords of parliament. Some reckon twenty-six of these lords abbots and priors that sat in parliament. Sir Edw. Coke says, there were twenty-seven parliamentary abbots and two priors. Co. Lit. 97. In the parliament 20 R. 2. there were but twenty-five; but anno 4 Ed. 3. in the summons to the parliament at Winton more are named. And in Monasticon Anglicanum there is also mention of more, the names of which were as follow: abbots of St. Austin's Canterbury, Ramsey, Peterborough, Croiland, Evesham, St. Bennet de Hulmo, Thornby, Colchester, Leicester, Winchcomb, Westminster, Cirencester, St. Albans, St. Mary's York, Sherwobury, Selby, St. Peter's Gloucester, Malmesbury, Walsham, Thornby, St. Edmond's, Beaulieu, Abingdon, Hyde, Reading, Glastonbury, and Ojny. — And priors of Spalding, St. John's of Jerusalem, and Lewes. — To which were afterwards added the abbots of St. Austin's, Bristol, and of Bardeny, and the priory of Sempringham. These abbots and priories were founded by our ancient kings and great men, from the year 602 to 1133. An abbot with the monks of the same house were called the convent, and made a corporation; but the abbot was not chargeable by the act of his predecessor, unless it were under the common seal, or for such things as came to the use of the house or convent. Terms de Ley 4. By stat. 27 Hen. 8. cap. 28. all abbots, monasteries, priories, &c. not above the value of 200 l. per ann. were given to the king, who sold the lands at low rates to the gentry. Anno 29 H. 8. the rest of the abbots, &c. made voluntary surrenders of their houses, to obtain favour of the king: and anno 31 H. 8. a bill was brought into the house to confirm those surrenders; which passing, completed the dissolution, except the hospitals and colleges, which were not dissolved, the first till the 33d, and the last till the 37th of H. 8. when commissioners were appointed to enter and seize the said lands, &c.

Abbatis, An avener or steward of the stables; the word was sometimes used for a common hostler, pronounced short in the middle syllable. — Abbatis ad canam dat equis abbas avenam. Spelm.

Abbrocament, (abbrocamentum) The buying up of wares before they are exposed to sale in a fair or market, and selling the same by retail; which is a forestalling of a market or fair. MS. de placit' coram rege Ed. 3. pencs J. Frevor, Mil.

Abbutals, (from the French aboutir, to limit or bound) Are the buttings and boundings of lands, east, west, north, or south, shewing how the same lie with respect to others; as by what lands, highways, or other places, they are limited and bounded. Camden tells us, that limits were distinguished by hillocks raised in the lands called Bosentines, whence we have the word butting. The sides on the breadth of lands are properly adjacentes, lying or bordering; and the ends in length abuttantes, abutting or bounding. And in old surveys, these last are called head-lands, from capitare, to head. The boundaries and buttals of corporation and church lands, and of parishes, are preserved by an annual procession. And abuttals or boundaries are of several sorts; such as inclosures of hedges, ditches and stones in common fields, brooks, rivers, and highways, &c. of manors and lordships.

Abdicare, (abdicare) to renounce or refuse any thing. Terms de Ley 5.

Abdication, (abdication) In general, is where a magistrate, or person in office, renounces and gives up the same, before the term of service is expired. And this word is frequently confounded with resignation, but differs from it, in that abdication is done purely and simply; whereas resignation is in favour of some other person. Chamb. Dic. 'Tis said to be a renunciation, quitting and relinquishing, so as to have nothing further to do with a thing; or the doing of such actions as are inconsistent with the holding of it. On king James's leaving the kingdom, and abdicating the government, the lords would have had the word desertion made use of; but the commons thought it was not comprehensive enough, for that the king might then have liberty of returning. Abdication Debates. The Scots called it a forfeiture of the crown, from the verb forisfacio. — This word is fully canvassed in the Parliamentary Debates, on the abdication of James II.

Abditorium, An abditory or hiding-place, to hide and preserve goods, plate, or money; and is used for a chest in which reliques are kept, as mentioned in the inventory of the church of York, Mon. Ang. p. 173. — Item anum coffeur, & una pixis de Ebore ornata cum argento deaurato, item tria abditoria, &c.

Abched, From the French abecher, to feed, is an old word, which signifies to be satisfied.

Aberamurder, (abermurdrum) Plain or downright murder; as distinguished from the less heinous crimes of manslaughter and chancemedley. It is derived from the Saxon abere, apparent, notorious, and mord, murder; and was declared a capital offence, without fine or commutation, by the laws of Canute, cap. 93. and of Hen. 1. cap. 13. Spelm.

Abet, (abettare) From the Saxon a, and bedan or beten, to stir up or incite; or from the French bouter, impellere or excitare. In our law it signifies as much as to encourage or set on; the substantive abetment is used for an encouraging or instigation. Staundf. Pl. Cr. 105. And abettor (abetator) is an instigator or setter on; one that promotes or procures a crime. Old Nat. Br. 21. Abettors of murder are such as command, procure, or counsel others to perpetrate the murder; and in some cases these abettors shall be taken as principals, in others but as accessaries; their presence or absence, at the time of committing the fact, making the difference. Co. Lit. 475. Vide Accessaries. Hawk. P. C. part 2. tit. Accessary, under letter B. and tit. Appeal, under letters R. S.

Abeyance, or abbayance, (from the Fr. bayer) To expect. It is what is in expectation, remembrance, and indentment of law. By a principle of law, in every land there is a fee-simple in some body, or it is in abeyance; that is, though for the present it be in no man, yet it is in expectancy belonging to him that is next to enjoy the land. Co. Lit. 342. Lit. c. Discontin. If a man be a patron of a church, and presents one to the same, now the fee of the lands and tenements pertaining to the rectory is in the parson; but if the parson die, and the church become void, then is the fee in abeyance, until there be a new parson presented, admitted, and inducted; for the patron hath not the fee, but only the right to present, the fee being in the incumbent that is presented. Terms de Ley 6. The frank-tenement of the glebe of a parsonage, during the time the parsonage is void, is in no man; but in abeyance or expectation, belonging to him who is next to enjoy it. If a man makes a lease for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. the fee-simple is in abeyance until J. S. dies. Co. Lit. 342. In this case the remainder passeth from the grantor presently; though it vests not presently in the grantee, but is said to be in abeyance until J. S. dies, after whose death the heir has a good remainder, and it ceases to be in abeyance. Terms de Ley. If lands be leased to A. B. for life, the remainder to another person for years, the remainder for years is in abeyance until the death of the lessee, and then it shall vest in him in remainder as a purchaser, and as a chattel shall go to his executors. 3 Leon. 23. Where tenant for term of another's life dieth, the freehold of the lands is in abeyance till the entry of the occupant. Fee-simple in abeyance cannot be charged until it comes in esse, so as to be certainly charged or aliened; though by possibility it may fall every hour. Co. Lit. 378. The word abeyance hath been compared to what the civilians call hereditatem jacentem; for as the civilians say lands and goods do jacere, so the common lawyers say, that things in like estate are in abeyance, as the logicians term it in posse.

posse, or in understading; and as we say in nubibus, that is, in consideration of law. See Plowd. Rep. Walsingham's case.

Abgetoria, abgetorium, The alphabet, A, B, C, &c. This seems to be an Irish word. Mat. Westm. reports of St. Patrick — Abgetoria quoque 345 & eo amplius scripsit, totidem episcopus ordinavit — The Irish still call the alphabet abghittin.

Abigeus, For abigenus, signifies a thief who hath stolen many cattle, viz. Si quis suam surripuit fur erit, & si quis gregem abigeus erit. Bract. l. 3. cap. 6.

Ability. The king's issue are of ability to inherit in England wheresoever born; and children of subjects born beyond sea, may inherit if their birth were within the allegiance of the king. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. Stat. 2. 42 Ed. 3. c. 10. or born out of allegiance, if children of natural born subjects, 7 An. c. 5. declared to be natural born, 4 Geo. 2. c. 21.

Natural subjects may inherit, and make their title by ancestors born beyond sea. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39. Vide Naturalization.

Abisbering, Is understood to be quit of amercements. It originally signified a forfeiture or amercement; and is more properly misbering or miskering, according to the learned Spelman. Since, it hath been termed a liberty or freedom, because wherever this word is used in a grant or charter, the persons to whom made have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and are themselves free from the controul of any within their fee. Rastal's Abr. Terms de Ley.

Abjuration, (abjuratio) A forswearing or renouncing by oath, signifies a sworn banishment, or an oath taken to forsake the realm for ever. Stauf. Pl. C. l. 2. c. 40. It hath also now another signification, extending to the person as well as place; as to abjure the Pretender by oath, whereby a man binds himself not to own any regal authority in the person called the Pretender, nor ever to pay him any obedience, &c. Formerly, in king Edward the Confessor's time, and other reigns down to the 22 H. 8. (in imitation of the clemency of the Roman emperors towards such as fled to the church) if a man had committed felony here, and he could fly to a church or church-yard before his apprehension, he might not be taken from thence to be tried for his crime; but on confession thereof before the justice, or before the coroner, he was admitted to his oath to abjure or forsake the realm; which privilege he was to have forty days, during which time any persons might give him meat and drink for his sustenance, but not after, on pain of being guilty of felony: the form of the oath you may read in an ancient tract, de Officio Coronatorum, and in Horn's Mirror, lib. 1. But at last, this punishment being but a perpetual confinement of the offender to some sanctuary, wherein (upon abjuratio of his liberty and free habitation) he would chuse to spend his life, as appears by the stat. anno 22 H. 8. c. 14. It is enacted 21 Jac. 1. cap. 28.

That thence after no sanctuary or privilege of sanctuary should be allowed; whereupon this abjuratio ceased. 2 Inst. 629. An abjuratio or deportation for ever into a foreign country, is a civil death, and called (by the Lord Coke) a divorce between husband and wife; and the wife of such a person may bring actions, or be impleaded during the natural life of the husband, which she may not do in any other case: also she shall have her dower or jointure, &c. Co. Lit. 133. This is where a person suffers banishment for any crime. By stat. 35 Eliz. Popish recusants not making the submission of conformity, &c. are to abjure the realm. And by 1 W. & M. 13 W. 3. 1 Geo. 1. &c. All persons are to abjure the pretended prince of Wales; and refusing the oath, are liable to divers penalties and forfeitures, &c. This abjuratio oath was invented for the security of the crown, and the protestant religion. See Oaths.

Abolition, A destroying or effacing, or putting out of memory: it also signifies the leave given by the king, or judges, to a criminal accuser to desist from further prosecution. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21.

Abridge, (abbreviare) Is derived from the French word abreger, to make shorter in words so as to retain the sense and substance. And in the common law it signifies particularly the making a declaration or count shorter, by severing some of the substance from it: a man is said to abridge his plaint in assise; and a woman her demand in action of dower, where any land is put into the plaint or demand which is not in the tenure of the defendant; for if the defendant pleads non-tenure, joint-tenancy, &c. in abatement of the writ, as to part of the lands, the plaintiff may leave out those lands, and pray that the tenant may answer to the rest. The reason of this abridgment of the plaint is, because the certainty is not set down in such writs, but they run in general; and though the demandant hath abridged his plaint in part, yet the writ will be good for the remainder. Brook, tit. Abridgment, vide 21 H. 8. c. 3.

Abrogate, (abrogare) To disannul or take away any thing: as to abrogate a law, is to lay aside or repeal it. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 3.

Abteentes, or des absenteees, was a parliament so called, held at Dublin 10 May 8 Hen. 8. And mentioned in letters patent, dat. 29 Hen. 8. 4 Co. Inst. 354.

Abolve, (absolvere) To absolve one excommunicated, or pardon, or set free from excommunication. Vide Affoile.

Abolutions from Rome, high treason, &c. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1. See Bull.

Absoniare, Was a word used by the English Saxons in the oath of fealty, and signified to shun or avoid. — As in the form of the oath among the Saxons recorded by Mr. Sommer: In illo Deo, pro quo sanctum hoc sanctificatum est, volo esse nunc domino meo N. fidelis & credibilis, & amare quod amat, & absoniare quod absoniat, per Dei rectum, & seculi competentiam.

Abque hoc, (without this, that, &c.) Are words of exception made use of in a traverse; as the defendant pleads that such a thing was done at B. &c. abque hoc, that it was done at, &c. Mod. Ca. 103.

Accapitum, and accapitare. The same with relief due to lords of manors. — Capitali domino accapitare, i. e. to pay a relief to the chief lord. Fleta, l. 2. c. 50.

Accedas ad Curiam, Is a writ that lies where a man hath received false judgment in a hundred court, or court-baron. It is directed to the sheriff; and issued out of the Chancery, but returnable into B. R. or C. B. And is in the nature of the writ de falso judicio, which lies for him that had received false judgment in the county-court. In the Register of Writs, it is said to be a writ that lies as well for justice delayed, as for false judgment; and that it is a species of the writ recordare, the sheriff being to make record of the suit in the inferior court, and certify it into the king's court. Reg. Orig. 9. 56. F. N. B. 18. Dyer 169.

Accedas ad Witecomitem, Where a sheriff hath a writ called pone delivered to him, but suppresseth it; this writ is directed to the coroner, commanding him to deliver a writ to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 83.

Acceptance, (acceptatio) Is the taking and accepting of any thing in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated and avoided, were it not for such acceptance had. To state the law under this head, it will be proper to consider the title,

I. With regard to the acceptance of rent.

II. To show how far the acceptance of one estate shall destroy another.

III. How far the acceptance of one thing shall be a good bar to the demand of another.

IV. Where the acceptance of money shall discharge a bond; and what other satisfaction shall be good.

I. With regard to the acceptance of rent, it is necessary to shew, 1. Where such acceptance shall confirm a lease. 1 Nels. Abr. 7.

If a bishop before the statute 1 Eliz. leased part of his bishoprick for term of years, reserving rent, and then died; and after another was made bishop, who accepted and received the rent when due, by this acceptance, the lease was made good, which otherwise the new bishop might have avoided. It is the same if baron and feme seized of lands in right of the same, join and make a lease or or feoffment, reserving rent; and the baron dies, after whose death the feme receives or accepts the rent; by this the lease or feoffment is confirmed, and shall bar her from bringing a cui in vita. Co. Lit. 211. Tenant in tail made a lease for years, rendring 20s. rent, and afterwards released 19s. and died; the issue in tail accepted the 12d. rent: the better opinion was, that by the acceptance of the shilling for rent he had affirmed the lease, and could not distrain for the 19s. rent. Dyer 304. Tenant for life, remainder in tail; a stranger levies a fine to him in remainder, who leased the lands to the conusor, rendring rent, the tenant for life died, and the issue in tail accepted the rent: adjudged, that by the fine and acceptance of the rent, the lease was affirmed. Dyer 209. See Smith against Stapleton, Plowd. 418, 434. Lord and tenant; the rent is behind many years, the tenant made a feoffment in fee, and the lord accepted the rent of the feoffee which became due in his time; adjudged, that by such acceptance he shall lose all the arrearages, and cannot avow for the same. 3 Rep. 65. Penant's case. Lease for years, rendring rent, with a clause of re-entry; the lessee paid the rent, which the lessor accepted, and put into a bag, but afterwards finding brass money amongst it, he refused to carry it away, and entered for the condition broken; but adjudged unlawful; because after he had accepted the rent he is barred. 5 Rep. 113. Wade's case.

Acceptance of the next rent due, at a day afterwards, will bar one to enter for a condition broken before by reason of non-payment of the rent; because the lessor thereby affirmeth the lease to have continuance. Co. Lit. 211. And taking a distress affirmeth the continuance of the rent; but if rent was due, at a day before, and thereby the condition was broken, one may receive that rent, and yet re-enter: and if he accepts of part of the rent, he may enter for a condition broken, and retain the lands until he has the whole rent. 3 Rep. 64. 1 Inst. 203.

If an infant accepts of rent at his full age, it makes the lease good, and shall bind him. Plowd. 418.

2. Where the acceptance of rent shall not make the lease good.

If a parson, &c. makes a lease for years not warranted by the stat. 32 H. 8. but is void by his death; acceptance of rent by a new parson or successor will not make it good. 1 Saund. 241. And if a tenant for life make a lease for years, there no acceptance will make the lease good, because the lease is void by his death. Dyer 46, 239.

Tenant in tail made a lease for years, rendring rent to him and his heirs, and died; his son and heir accepted the rent, and was afterwards executed for treason, leaving issue a son; the king accepted the rent, but that did not make the lease good, the lands being in his hands by the attainder, and not in the reverter. Dyer 115. Lease for years, with condition, that the lessee shall not alien or assign, without the assent of the lessor, and if he did, that then the lessor should re-enter: he assigned part of the land without assent, &c. and then the lessor before notice of the assignment, accepts the rent, and afterwards entered for the condition broken, and adjudged lawful; for the condition being collateral, he might assign the land so secretly, that it may be impossible for the lessor to know it. 3 Rep. 65. Penant's case. Cro. Eliz. 453. S. C. Lease for twenty-one years, rendring rent, on condition, that if the lessee did let any part of it above three years, then the lease to be void, and that the lessor might enter; he let it out for three years, and so from three years to three years, during the term of twenty-one years, if he so long lived; the lessor accepted the rent of the assignee, and afterwards entered; this was a breach of the condition, and the acceptance of it afterwards did not dispense with it, because the original lease was void and determined. Cro. Car. 368. If tenant in tail make a lease for years, to commence after his death, rendring rent, in such case acceptance of rent by the issue will not make the lease good to bar him, because the lease did not take effect in the life of his ancestor. Plowd. 418.

3. How far the acceptance of rent after assignment of the term destroys the privity of contract between the lessor and the first lessee.

If a lessor accepts of rent from an assignee, knowing of the assignment, it bars him from action of debt against the lessee; for the privity of contract is extinguished: but after such acceptance, the lessor or his assigns may maintain an action against the first lessee upon his covenant for payment of the rent. 1 Saund. 241. 3 Rep. 24. Acceptance of rent from the assignee has been adjudged a sufficient notice of the assignment, so that the lessor could not resort to the first lessee. 2 Bulst. 151.

Lessee for years assigned his term, and died intestate, the lessor brought debt against his administrator, who pleaded the assignment, and that the plaintiff had notice, and had accepted the rent of the assignee: adjudged, that by the death of the lessee, the privity of contract was determined, and the action would not lie against the administrator. Cro. El. 715. and cited in Walker's case, 3 Rep. 24.

II. How far the acceptance of one estate shall destroy another.

If a lessee, for term of twenty years, accepts of a lease of the same land for ten years, by the lessee's acceptance of the new lease, the term of twenty years is determined in law. 2 Roll. Abr. 469.

Lease for years to R. B. rendring rent; the next year a lease was made of the same lands to the lady P. for ninety-nine years; the next year the same lands were demised to the said R. B. for forty-one years, who accepted the lease, but that did not extinguish his first lease; because the lessor by making the intermediate lease to the lady P. had only a reversion, and could not afterwards give any interest to R. B. but if it had not been for this intermediate lease, then the acceptance of the second lease for forty-one years had been a surrender of the first. Hutt. 104.

If a man hath a lease for years, which is good in law, and afterwards accepts a new lease of the same land, which is void in law, this is no surrender in law of the good lease. Hutt. 101. Baker v. Willoughby. Wells v. Whitewood, ibid. S. P.

A man, in consideration of a marriage to be had with M. R. made an estate to her for life of certain lands in full satisfaction of her dower; afterwards they married, and the husband died, and the widow brought a writ of dower against the heir, who pleaded in bar the acceptance of the estate for life: adjudged no good plea; for such acceptance did not bar her of her dower at the common law, because she had no title of dower when the acceptance was made; and besides no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold. See 4 Rep. Vernon's case.

A man made a lease of a manor for thirty years, excepting the wood, &c. and afterwards made a lease of the woods to the same lessee for sixty years, and a third lease to him of the manor for thirty years, without any exception; resolved, that by the acceptance of this future lease, the lease for sixty years was surrendered; because by such acceptance the lessee had affirmed, that the lessor had authority to make a new lease. 5 Rep. 11. Jew's case.

In a special verdict in trespass, the case was, a lease was made to husband and wife for their lives, and afterwards they accepted a new lease for themselves and their son; habendum to all three of them, a die datus indenturæ, for the term of their lives with a letter of attorney to make livery: adjudged, that the acceptance of a second lease, to commence a die datus, was a surrender of the first, and this by the express agreement in writing of the lessees themselves; for otherwise the lessor had no power to make a new lease. Moor 636.

III. How far the acceptance of one thing shall be a good bar to the demand of another.

Where the condition of a bond is to pay money, acceptance of another thing is good. But if the condition is not for money, but a collateral thing, it is otherwise. Dyer 56. 9 Rep. 79. And the acceptance of uncertain things, as customs, &c. made over, may not be pleaded in satisfaction of a certain sum due on bond. Cro. Car. 192. If a woman hath title to an estate of inheritance, as dower, &c. she shall not be barred by any collateral satisfaction or recompence: and no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold, without some release, &c. 4 Rep. 1. When a man is entitled to a thing in gross, he is not bound to accept it by parcels; and if a lessor distrains for rent, he is not obliged to accept part of it; nor in action of detinue, part of the goods, &c. 3 Salk. 2.

If a man be bound in 200 quarters of corn, with condition to pay 20*l.* the obligor may, by agreement, give the obligee any other thing in satisfaction of the money; but if the condition had been to pay 100 quarters of corn, there the acceptance of money, or any other thing, had not been good, because the contract was not made for money, but for a collateral thing. Pryto's case, 9 Rep. 79.

Debt upon bond, conditioned for the obligor to make an assurance of such lands to such uses as in the condition mentioned; the defendant pleaded, that he had made a feoffment of the same lands to other uses than in the condition expressed, which the obligee had accepted; and upon demurrer it was adjudged an ill plea; for the obligor ought not to vary from the uses set forth in the condition. 1 Brownl. 60.

Acceptance of a less sum may be in satisfaction of a greater sum, if it be before the day on which the money becomes due. 3 Bulst. 301. Thus in debt on bond; the defendant pleaded payment of the money according to the condition, &c. upon which they were at issue, and the evidence was, that the defendant had paid the money before the day appointed by the condition, and that the plaintiff had accepted it: adjudged, this was a good discharge of the bond, if it had been specially pleaded; but as the defendant had pleaded, it must be found against him, and so it was. Godb. 10.

Now, by the stat. 12 Ann. c. 16. payment after the day, specified in the condition, may be pleaded. — And 'tis much to be doubted, whether the case in Godb. is law, for if the money was paid before the day, it must have been paid at the day; and therefore paid according to the condition.

The wife, whilst sole, in consideration the plaintiff had expended 1500*l.* about her suits, promised to pay, &c. and in an action on the case against husband and wife, they pleaded that the plaintiff did not expend 10*l.* and that the heir made a lease for years to the plaintiff to the use of the wife; to commence after her death, in recompence of her dower, and that they agreed the plaintiff should retain the lease to his own use in satisfaction of his expences, which he accepted; and upon demurrer to this plea it was held ill, because the agreement to accept the lease, being at a time to come, was not executed, but executory. Dyer 356. Onely v. Earl Rivers.

IV. Where the acceptance of money shall discharge a bond; and what other satisfaction shall be good.

Where a lesser sum is paid before it is due, and the payment is accepted, it shall be good in satisfaction of a greater sum; but after the money is due, then a lesser sum, though accepted, shall not be a satisfaction for a greater sum. Thus in debt upon bond, conditioned to pay 8*l.* &c. defendant pleaded payment of 5*l.* before the day mentioned in the condition, which the obligee accepted in satisfaction of the bond; and upon demurrer this was adjudged a good plea. Moore 677.

But payment after the day of a less sum is not good, as the bond is forfeited, at common law; and there is not any statute to relieve.

Debt upon bond of 16*l.* conditioned to pay 8*l.* 10*s.* on a certain day; the defendant pleaded, that before that day, he at the request of the plaintiff, paid to him 5*l.* which he accepted in satisfaction of the debt, and upon demurrer the plaintiff had judgment, because the defendant had pleaded the payment of the 5*l.* generally, without alledging, that it was in satisfaction of the debt. It is true, he sets forth, that it was accepted in satisfaction of the debt, but it ought likewise to be paid in satisfaction. 5 Rep. 517. Debt upon bond, conditioned, that in consideration the plaintiff had paid 12*l.* to the defendant, he became bound to pay the plaintiff 12*l.* if he lived one month after the date of that bond; and if not paid at that time, then to pay to him 14*l.* if he lived six months after the date of the bond; the defendant pleaded, that after the six months, he paid the plaintiff 8*l.* and then gave him another bond in the penalty of 20*l.* conditioned to pay him 10*l.* on a certain day, in full satisfaction of the other bond, and that the plaintiff did accordingly accept the said bond; upon a demurrer to this plea it was held ill; for admitting that one bond might be given in satisfaction of another, yet it cannot be after the other is forfeited, as it was in this case; because after the forfeiture the penalty is vested in the obligee, and a less sum cannot be a satisfaction for a greater. 1 Lut. 464.

It has been adjudged, that the acceptance of one bond cannot be pleaded in satisfaction of another bond. Cro. Car. 85. Moore 872. Cro. Eliz. 716, 727. 2 Cro. 579. Thus in debt on a bond of 100*l.* conditioned for the payment of 52*l.* 10*s.* on a certain day; the defendant pleaded, that at the day, &c. he and his son gave a new bond of 100*l.* conditioned for the payment of 52*l.* 10*s.* at another day then to come, which the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction of the old bond; and upon demurrer it was adjudged for the plaintiff, because the acceptance of a new bond to pay money at another day, could not be a present satisfaction for the money due on the day when it was to be paid on the old bond. Hob. 68. But it is otherwise where the second bond is not given by the obligor, as in debt upon bond against the defendant as heir, &c. he pleaded, that his ancestor, the obligor, died intestate, and that W. R. administered, who gave the plaintiff another bond in satisfaction of the former: there was a verdict for the defendant: and it being moved in arrest of judgment, this distinction was made, that if the obligor, who gave the first bond, had likewise given the second, it would not have discharged the first; but in this case the second bond was not given by him who gave the first, but by his administrator, which had mended the security, because he may be chargeable de bonis propriis; and for that reason the second bond was held to be a discharge of the first. 1 Mod. 225.

Necessary, accessorius vel accessorium, (particeps criminis) Is where a man is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation, as by command, advice, or concealment, &c.

The law relating to this title may be reduced under the following divisions:

- I. Of accessories before the fact.
- II. Of accessories after the fact.
- III. Of accessories to felonies, by common law and by statute.
- IV. Of the proceedings against accessories.

I. An accessory before the fact is he, that being absent at the time of the felony committed doth yet procure, counsel, command, or abet another to commit a felony, and it is an offence greater than the accessory after; and therefore in many cases clergy is taken away from accessories before, which yet is not taken away from accessories after, as in petit treason, murder, robbery, and wilful burning, by 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4. 1 Hale's History of the Pleas of the Crown 615. — If the commander or counsellor be present, he is a principal. H. H. P. C. 616. Words which sound in bare permission, make not an accessory, as if A. says he will kill J. S. and B. says, you may do your pleasure for me, this makes not B. accessory. 1 H. H. P. C. 616. 21 Hen. 7. 36, 37. Crompt. 41. b. If A. hire B. to mingle or lay poison for C. and B. doth it accordingly, and C. is poisoned; B. though absent, is principal, and A. is accessory; but if A. were present at the mingling or laying of the poison, though both were absent at the taking of it, yet both are principal, for they are both equally acting in the poisoning. But if A. buys the materials of the poison, knowing and consenting to the design, and deliver them to B. to mingle and apply it, or lay it in the absence of A. here it seems A. is only accessory before. H. H. P. C. 616. See 3 Lust. p. 50. State Tr. vol. 1. p. 329.

There cannot be an accessary before the fact in manslaughter, because it is committed of a sudden, and unpremeditated. H. P. C. He who counsels or commands any evil, shall be adjudged accessary to all that follows upon it, but not to any thing else. If a person commandeth another to beat such a person, and he beats him so that he dies of his wounds, the person commanding will be accessary to the murder: but if the command had been to beat another person, or to burn such a house, and he burns another, he that commandeth will not be accessary. 3 Inst. 51. If I command a person to do an unlawful act, as to rob A. B. at one place, and he doth it at another; or to rob him on such a day, and he doth it not himself, but procures another to do it; or to kill by poison, and he doth it by violence; in all these cases I shall be accessary: but where the command is to kill A. B. and he killeth A. D. this difference in substance will not make the commander accessary. Plowd. 475. If a man counsels a woman to murder the child in her womb, and the woman murder her child after it is born, he is accessary to the murder. Dyer 185.

II. An accessary after the fact.

An accessary after the fact is he that receives, assists or comforts any man that hath committed murder or felony, which hath come to his knowledge; but this doth not extend to a woman who receives or assists her husband, though a husband receiving his wife will be accessary: and a servant may be accessary in relieving his master, or assisting him in his escape, &c. 3 Inst. 108.

If the wife alone, the husband being ignorant of it, do knowingly receive a felon, the wife is accessary and not the husband. 1 H. H. P. C. 621.

But if felons come to the house of D. and M. his wife, and M. know them to be felons, though D. doth not, and both D. and M. receive and entertain them, but M. consents not to the felony: adjudged, that this makes not M. accessary. 3 Inst. 108. cap. 47. cites Mich. 37 E. 3. Dey's case.

But if the husband and wife both receive a felon knowingly, it shall be judged only the act of the husband, and the wife shall be acquitted. 1 H. H. P. C. 621.

If a felon comes to the house of another, and he permits him to escape without arrest, knowing him to have committed felony, this doth not make a man accessary; but if he take money of the felon to suffer such escape, it makes him an accessary: and so it is if he shut the fore door of his house, whereby the pursuers are deceived, for here is not a bare omission, but an act done. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 619.

By statute 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 19. "Receivers of stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, are to be deemed accessaries after the fact, and suffer as such." But because these receivers often concealed the principal felons, and thereby escaped being punished as accessaries; therefore by 1 An. c. 9. it is enacted, that "whosoever shall buy or receive stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, and punished by fine and imprisonment, tho' the principal felon be not convicted"; and this shall exempt them from being punished as accessaries, if the principal shall afterwards be convicted. But by 5 An. c. 31. it is enacted, that "if any person shall receive or buy knowingly any stolen goods, or knowingly harbour or conceal any felon, he shall be taken as accessary to the felon, and shall suffer as a felon." This statute does not take away the benefit of clergy; but by stat. 4 Geo. 1. such person may be transported for fourteen years. And by this last-mentioned statute it is also enacted, that "whosoever shall take a reward under the pretence of helping any one to stolen goods, shall suffer as a felon, as if he himself had stolen them, unless he cause such felon to be apprehended and brought to trial, and give evidence against him." Upon this clause the famous Jonathan Wild was convicted and executed. 10 Geo. 1. Vide 10 Geo. 3. a new act against receiving.

Likewise if any person, knowing another to have committed piracy, shall on the land or sea receive, entertain, or conceal him, or receive or take into their custody any ship, vessel, or goods, which have been piratically taken, shall be adjudged accessary to the piracy. 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7. s. 9.

Accessaries after the fact can only be in felonies, and in those felonies, where by the law, judgment of death regularly ought to ensue; and therefore there is no accessary in petit larceny, homicide per infortunium, or homicide se defendendo. 1 H. H. P. C. 618.

III. Of accessaries to felonies by common law and by statute.

As to felonies at common law it is said, that accessaries both before and after are included; and as to felonies by act of parliament; regularly if an act of parliament enact an offence to be felony, though it mention nothing of accessaries before or after, yet virtually and consequentially those, who counsel or command the offence, are accessaries before, and those that knowingly receive the offender, are accessaries after; as in the case of rape made felony by the statute of Westminster 2. c. 34. 1 H. H. P. C. 613. 2 Inst. 434. Staundf. P. C. lib. 1. c. 47. But if the act of parliament, that makes the felony, in express terms comprehend accessaries before, and makes no mention of accessaries after, namely, receivers or comforters, there it seems there can be no accessaries after; for the expression of procurers, counsellors, abettors (all which import accessaries before) makes it evident, that the law-makers did not intend to include accessaries after, which is an offence of a lower degree than accessaries before; as the statute of 8 H. n. 6. c. 12. for stealing of records, the statute of 33 Hen. 8. c. 8. for witchcraft, &c. 1 H. H. P. C. 614.

In the highest capital offence, namely, high treason, there are no accessaries, neither before nor after; for all consenters, aiders, abettors, and knowing receivers and comforters of traitors are all principals. 1 H. H. P. C. 613.

In cases that are criminal but not capital, as in trespass, mayhem, or præmunire, there are no accessaries, for all the accessaries before are in the same degree as principals; and accessaries after by receiving the offenders cannot be in law under any penalties as accessaries, unless the acts of parliament that induce those penalties, do expressly extend to receivers or comforters, as some do. 1 H. H. P. C. 613. And though generally an act of parliament, creating a felony, renders (consequentially) accessaries before and after within the same penalty, yet the special penning of the act of parliament in such cases sometimes varies the case. Thus the statute of 3 Hen. 7. c. 2. for taking away maidens, &c. makes the offender, and the procuring and abetting, yea and wittingly receiving also, to be all equally principal felonies, and excluded of clergy. 1 H. H. P. C. 614.

In what cases accessaries are excluded from clergy, see the quarto edition of The Statutes at Large, title Accessarii, under the head of Felonies without Clergy.

IV. Of the proceedings against accessaries.

By the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24. the accessary is indictable in that county where he was accessary, and shall be tried there, as if the felony had been committed in the same county; and the justices, before whom the accessary is, shall write to the justices, &c. before whom the principal is attainted, for the record of the attainer. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 623. This writing is to be by writ in the king's name, under the seal of the justice so sending it. Dyer 253. b. The accessary may be indicted in the same indictment with the principal, and that is the best and most usual way; but he may be indicted in another indictment, but then such indictment must contain the certainty and kind of the principal felony. 1 H. H. P. C. 623. Formerly it was held, that the accessary might be tried and punished as if the principal had been attainted; and this, although the principal was admitted to his clergy, pardoned, or otherwise delivered before attainer. By stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30. the buyer or receiver of stolen lead, iron, copper, brass, bell-metal, or solder, may be convicted, although the principal hath not been convicted, and shall be transported for fourteen years. If the principal be erroneously attainted, yet the accessary shall be put to answer, and shall not take take advantage of the error in that attainder; but the principal reverſing the attainder, reverſeth the attainder of the acceſſary. 1 H. H. P. C. 625.

Where the principal is not attained, but diſcharged by being burnt in the hand only, the acceſſary after the fact ought to be diſcharged without burning in the hand, on being put to his book. Cro. Car. 566. pl. 3. Hill. 15 Car. B. R. Stevens's caſe.

The acceſſary ſhall not be conſtrained to answer to his indictment, till the principal be tried; but if he will waive that benefit, and put himſelf upon his trial before the principal be tried, he may; and his acquittal or conviction upon ſuch trial is good. But it ſeems neceſſary in ſuch caſe to reſpite judgment till the principal be convicted and attained; for if the principal be after acquitted, that conviction of the acceſſary is annulled, and no judgment ought to be given againſt him; but if he be acquitted of the acceſſary, that acquittal is good, and he ſhall be diſcharged. 1 H. H. P. C. 623, 624.

It ſeems to be ſettled at this day, that if the principal and acceſſary appear together, and the principal plead the general iſſue, the acceſſary ſhall be put to plead alſo; and that if he likewiſe plead the general iſſue, both may be tried by one inqueſt; but that the principal muſt be firſt convicted; and that the jury ſhall be charged, that if they find the principal Not guilty, they ſhall find the acceſſary Not guilty. But it ſeems agreed, that if the principal plead a plea in bar, or abatement, or a former acquittal, the acceſſary ſhall not be forced to answer, till that plea be determined: for if it be found for the principal, the acceſſary is diſcharged; if againſt the principal, yet he ſhall after plead over to the felony, and may be acquitted. 1 H. H. P. C. 624. 2 Haw. 323. Where there are two principals, the attainder of one of them gives ſufficient foundation to arraign the acceſſary. Jenk. Cent. 76. Vide Haw. P. C. tit. Acceſſary. See Murder Principal, &c.

Accola, An huſbandman who came from ſome other parts or country to till the lands, eo quod adveniens terram colat.—And is thus diſtinguiſhed from Incola, viz. Accola non propriam, propriam colit Incola terram. Du Fresnoie.

Accolade, (from the French accoller, collum amplecti) A ceremony uſed in knighthood by the king's putting his hand about the knight's neck.

Accompt, (computus) Is a writ or action which lies againſt a bailiff or receiver to a lord or others, who by reaſon of their offices and buſineſſes are to render accompt, but reſuſe to do it. F. N. B. 116.

This action is now ſeldom uſed, but it lies in the following caſes:

If a perſon receives money due to me upon an obligation, &c. I may either have an action of accompt againſt him as my receiver; or action of debt, or on the caſe, as owing me ſo much money as he hath received. 1 Lill. 33.

If I pay money in my own wrong to another, I may bring an action againſt him for ſo much money received to my uſe; but then he may diſcharge himſelf by alledging it was for ſome debt, or to be paid over by my order to ſome other perſon, which he hath done, &c. 1 Lill. 30. But if a man have a ſervant, whom he orders to receive money, the maſter ſhall have accompt againſt him, if he were his receiver. 1 Inſt. 172. If money be received by a man's wife to his uſe, action of accompt lies againſt the huſband, and he may be charged in the declaration as his own receipt. Co. Lit. 295. Account does not lie againſt an infant; but it lies againſt a man or woman, that is guardian, bailiff or receiver, being of age and diſcover: and though an apprentice is not chargeable in this action, for what he uſually receives in his maſter's trade; yet upon collateral receipts he ſhall be charged as well as another. 1 Inſt. 172. Roll. Abr. 117. 3 Leon. 92. As to other actions of accompt, they will not lie of a thing certain; if a man delivers 10*l.* to merchandize with, he ſhall not have account of the 10*l.* but of the profits, which are uncertain: and this is one reaſon why this action will not lie for the arrears of rent. 1 Danv. Abr. 215. Action of account may be brought againſt a factor that ſells goods and merchandizes upon credit, without a particular commiſſion ſo to do, though the goods are bona peritura. 2 Mod. 100. If there are two demands in a declaration, to which the defendant pleads an accompt ſtated, the plaintiff can never after reſort to the original contract, which is thereby merged and diſcharged in the accompt: if A. ſells his horſe to B. for 10*l.* and there being divers other dealings between them, they come to an accompt upon the whole, and B. is found in arrear 5*l.* A. muſt bring his inſinuat computaſſet for it, but if there be only one debt betwixt the parties, entering into an accompt for that would not determine the firſt contract. 1 Mod. Rep. 206. 2 Mod. 44. It has been held, that mutual demands on an accompt are not extinguished by ſettling it, and promiſe to pay the balance; wherefore assumpsit lies for the original debt. Fitzgib. 44. A man having received of another 100*l.* to be employed in merchandize abroad, covenants at his return to accompt to him; this doth not alter the caſe, but notwithstanding the covenant, action of accompt may be brought. 2 Bulſt. 256. And if I deliver to another perſon goods or money beyond ſea, to be delivered to me again in England at a certain place, and he delivers it not, I may be relieved by this action. F. N. B. 18.

It may be brought againſt the following perſons:

If a man makes one his bailiff of a manor, &c. he ſhall have a writ of accompt againſt him as a bailiff; where a perſon makes one receiver, to receive his rents or debts, &c. he ſhall have accompt againſt him as receiver, and if a man makes one his bailiff and alſo his receiver, then he ſhall have accompt againſt him in both ways. Alſo a perſon may have a writ of accompt againſt a man as bailiff or receiver, where he was not his bailiff or receiver; as if a man receive money for my uſe, I ſhall have an accompt againſt him as receiver; or if a perſon deliver money unto another to deliver over unto me, I ſhall likewiſe have accompt againſt him as my receiver: ſo if a man enter into my lands to my uſe, and receives the profits thereof, I ſhall have accompt againſt him as bailiff. 9 H. 6. 36 H. 6. 10 R. 2. Fitz. Accompt. 6.

A judgment in accompt, as receiver, is no bar to action of accompt as bailiff; but 'tis ſaid a bailiff cannot be charged as receiver, nor a receiver as bailiff; becauſe then he might be twice charged. 2 Lev. 127. 1 Danv. Abr. 220, 221. The heir may have writ of accompt before or after his full age, againſt a guardian in ſocage; and if he ſue the guardian for profits of his lands taken before he is fourteen years old, he muſt charge him as guardian; but if it be for taking the profits after that age, there he muſt ſue him as bailiff. Lit. 124. F. N. B. 118. Where an heir ſues a ſtranger that doth intermeddle with his land, he ſhall charge him in accompt as guardian. F. N. B. 18. A man deviſes land to be ſold by his executors, and the money thence ariſing to be diſtributed amongſt his daughters; action of accompt lies in this caſe, for the daughters againſt the executors. Jenk. Cent. 215. 2 Roll. Abr. 285. An action of accompt lies againſt a bailiff, not only for what profits he hath made and raiſed, but alſo for what he might have made and raiſed by his care and induſtry, his reaſonable charges and expences deducted. Co. Lit. 172. One merchant may have accompt againſt another, where they occupy their trade together; and if one charges me as bailiff of his goods ad merchandizandum, I muſt answer for the increaſe, and be puniſhed for my negligence; but if he charges me as receiver ad computandum, I muſt be answerable only for the bare money or thing delivered. F. N. B. 117. Co. Lit. 272. 2 Leon. Ca. 245.

If a bailiff or receiver make a deputy, action of accompt will not lie againſt the deputy, but againſt him. 1 Leon. 32. But ſeveral ſtatutes have extended the benefit of this writ or action.

The ſtatute of 13 E. 3. c. 23. gives an action of account to the executors of a merchant; the ſtatute 25 Ed. 3. c. 5. to executors of executors; the ſtatute 31 Ed. 3. c. 11. to adminiſtrators: and by the ſtatute 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16. actions of account may be brought againſt the executors and adminiſtrators of every guardian, bailiff and receiver, and by one jointenant, tenant in common, his executors and adminiſtrators againſt the other as bailiff, for receiving more than his ſhare, and againſt their executors and adminiſtrators.

It may be proper to say something concerning the plea and judgment in account; and though the order may seem somewhat irregular, it will be necessary first to explain the nature of the judgment, which being rightly understood, the distinctions as to the method of pleading will be more easily conceived.

The usual judgment is quod computet; on which the defendant is taken by capias ad computandum: but there are two judgments in this writ, for if the defendant cannot avoid the suit by plea, judgment is first given, That he do account; and having done this before the auditors, there is another judgment entered, that the plaintiff shall recover of the defendant so much as is found in arrears. 11 Rep. 40. The first judgment is but an award of the court, like to a writ to enquire of damages; and these two judgments depend one upon another; for if judgment be to account, and the party die before he hath accounted, the executor cannot proceed in the action, but it must be begun again; and no writ of error will lie upon the first till after the second judgment. Ibid. Thus it appears, that after the first judgment to account, auditors are assigned; and

With respect to the plea, the following distinctions are to be noticed:

What may be pleaded in bar to the action, shall not be allowed to be pleaded before the auditors. Cro. Car. 82; 161. Some pleas are in bar of the account, and others in discharge before auditors; and some pleas will be allowed before auditors, that will not be in bar to the account. Dyer 21. 11 Rep. 8. In account the plaintiff declared of the receipt of money by the hands of a stranger; the defendant pleaded a gift of the money afterwards by the plaintiff; this was a good plea as well in bar of the action, as before auditors. Winch 9.

The pleas in this action are, quod nunquam fuit receptor, quod plene computavit, &c. It is no plea by an accountant that he was robbed; but alledging it was without his default and negligence, will be a good plea. Co. Lit. 89. That the defendant never was bailiff, is the general bar; and it is a good plea in bar, by claiming a property in the things to be accounted for. 21 Ed. 3. 29 E. 3. 47. A defendant, as receiver, cannot wage his law, where he receives the money by another's hands: 'tis otherwise where he received it of the plaintiff himself. 1 Cro. 919. Supposing there was not any evidence of the delivery.

It may be proper to add, that the process in account is summons, pone and distress, and upon a nihil returned, the plaintiff may proceed to outlawry. The statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1: doth not bar a man who is a merchant from bringing action of account for merchandize at any time; but all other actions of account are within the statute. In Chancery upon an account of fifteen or twenty years standing, the defendant may be allowed to prove, on his own oath, what he cannot otherwise make proof of; but here the particulars must be named, as to whom the money was paid, for what, and when; &c. 1 Chan. Rep. 146. And a defendant shall be discharged upon his oath of sums under 40 s. though it is held a plaintiff shall not so charge another, or be allowed any thing in equity on his oath. 2 Chan. Caf. 249. 1 Vern. 283. See Oath. Vide Comyn's Digest, tit. Account.

Accountant General, A new officer in the court of Chancery, appointed by act of parliament, to receive all money lodged in court, in the place of the masters, &c. He is to convey the money to the Bank, and take the same out by order; and shall only keep the account with the bank, for the Bank is to be answerable for all money received by them, and not the Accountant General; &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. No fees shall be taken by this officer or his clerks, on pain of being punished for extortion; but they are to be paid salaries. The Accountant General 650 l. per annum, out of interest made of part of the suitors money. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 24. Vide 4 Geo. 3. c. 32. 120 l. per ann. to his third clerk.

Counterfeiting the hand of the Accountant General is felony without clergy. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. sec. 9.

Accord, (French) Is an agreement between two or more persons, where any one is injured by a trespass, or offence done, or on a contract, to satisfy him with some recompence; which if executed and performed, shall be a good bar in law, if the other party after the accord performed bring any action for the same. Terms de Ley 14.

For the right understanding of this head, it is to be shewn,

- I. In what cases accord may be pleaded.
- II. In what manner it may be pleaded.

I. When a duty is created by deed in certainty, as by bill, bond, or covenant to pay a sum of money, this duty accruing by writing, ought to be discharged by matter of as high a nature; but when no certain duty arises by deed, but the action is for a tort or default, &c. for which damages are to be recovered, there an accord with satisfaction is a good plea. 6 Rep. 43. In accord, one promise may be pleaded in discharge of another, before breach; but after breach, it cannot be discharged without a release in writing. 2 Mod. 44. Accord with satisfaction, upon a covenant broken, is a good plea in satisfaction and discharge of the damages. Lutw. 359. And accord made before the covenant broken, hath been adjudged a good bar to an action of covenant, as it may be in satisfaction of damage to come. 1 Danv. Abr. 546.

If a contract without deed is to deliver goods, &c. there money may be paid by accord in satisfaction; but if one is bound in an obligation to deliver goods, or to do any collateral thing, the obligee cannot by accord give money in satisfaction thereof: though when one is bound to pay money, he may give goods or any other valuable thing in satisfaction. 9 Rep. 78. 1 Lift. 212. Where damages are uncertain, a lesser thing may be done in satisfaction, and in such case an accord and satisfaction is a good plea; but in action of debt on a bond, there a lesser sum cannot be paid in satisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 88. Accord with satisfaction is a good plea in personal actions, where damages only are to be recovered; and in all actions which suppose a wrong vi & armis, where a capias and exigent lie at the common law, in trespass and ejectment, detinue, &c. accord is a good plea: So in an appeal of maihem. But in real actions it is not a good plea. 4 Rep. 1, 9, 70. 9 Rep. 77. Of late it hath been held, that upon mutual promises an action lies, and consequently there being equal remedy on both sides, an accord may be pleaded without execution, as well as an arbitrament. Raym. 450. 2 Jones 158. Acceptance of the thing agreed on in these accords is the only material thing to make them binding. Heb. 178. 5 Mod. 86.

II. As to the manner in which it may be pleaded.

It is to be observed, that accord executed only is pleadable in bar, and executory not. 1 Mod. 69. Also in pleading it, it is the safest by way of satisfaction, and not of accord alone. For if it be pleaded by way of accord, a precise execution thereof in every part must be pleaded: but by way of satisfaction, the defendant need only alledge, that he paid the plaintiff such a sum, &c. in full satisfaction of the accord, which the plaintiff received. 9 Rep. 80: The defendant must plead, that the plaintiff accepted the thing agreed upon in full satisfaction, &c. And if it be on a bond, it must be in satisfaction of the money mentioned in the condition, and not of the bond; which cannot be discharged but by writing under hand and seal. Cro. Jac. 254. 650.

Accroche, (from the Fr. accrocher) To hook or grapple unto. It signifies as much as to encroach, and is mentioned in the statute 25 Ed. 3. c. 8. to that purpose. The French use it for delay; as, accrocher un procès, to stay the proceedings in a suit.

Accusation, (accusatio) To charge any person with a crime. By Magna Charta, no man shall be imprisoned or condemned on any accusation, without trial by his peers, or the law. 9 H. 3. None shall be vexed upon any accusation, but according to the law of the land; and no man may be molested by petition to the king, &c.

unless it be by indictment, or presentment of lawful men, or by process at common law. 25 Ed. 3. 28 Ed. 3. c. 3. None shall be compelled to answer an accusation to the king, without presentment, or some matter of record. Stat. 42 Ed. 3. Promoters of suggestions are to find surety to pursue them, and not making them good, shall satisfy damages to the party accused, and pay a fine to the king. 38 Ed. 3. c. 9. In treason there must be two lawful accusers. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. A person is not obliged to answer on oath to a matter by which he may accuse himself of any crime, &c. 2 Mod. Rep. 278.

Acephali, The levellers in the reign of king Hen. 1. who acknowledged no head or superior. Leges H. 1. They were reckoned so poor that they had not a tenement by which they might acknowledge a superior lord. Du Cange.

Ac etiam billae, Words or a clause of a writ, where the action requires good bail. The stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2. which enjoins the cause of action to be particularly expressed in the writ or process which holds a person to bail, hath ordained the inserting of this clause in writs; but it ought not to be made out against a peer of the realm, or upon a penal statute, or against an executor or administrator, or for any debt under 10*l*. Nor in any action of account, action of covenant, &c. unless the damages are 10*l*. or more: nor in action of trespass, or for battery, wounding or imprisonment; except there be an order of court for it, or a warrant under the hand of one of the judges of the court out of which the writ issues: 1 Lill. Abr. 13. See an historical account of ac etiams in North's Life of Lord Keeper Guildford, fol. 99, 100.

Achat, (Fr. achet) Signifies a contract or bargain. Purveyors by stat. 36 Ed. 3. were called achators, from their frequent making of bargains.

Acherfet, A measure of corn, conjectured to be the same with our quarter or eight bushels. The monks of Peterborough had an allowance weekly of twelve acherfetos de frumento, and eight acherfetos de brasio, and six de Grad. and eleven acherfetos de fabis, &c.

Scholite, (acholitus) An inferior church servant, who, next under the subdeacon, followed or waited on the priests and deacons, and performed the meaner offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance.

Acknowledgment Money, Is a sum paid in some parts of England by tenants on the death of their landlords, as an acknowledgment of their new lords; in like manner as money is usually paid on the attornment of tenants.—Solvet XIIId. ad recognitionem cujuslibet novi domini de Hope, &c.—Ex libro Cart. Prior. Leominstræ.—It is in Latin called, Laudativum vel Laudemium, a laudando Domino.

Acquiescentia de Shiris & Hundredis, To be free from suits and services in shires and hundreds.

Acquiescentia Plegis, A writ of justicies lying for the surety against a creditor, who refuses to acquit him after the debt is satisfied. Reg. of Writs 158.

Acquiescere, Is a law word, signifying quietum reddere. Dr. Wilk. Gloss. And it also sometimes signifieth to pay. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 199.

Acquittal, (from the French word acquitter, and the Latin compound acquiescere) To free or discharge. It signifies in one sense to be free from entries and molestations of a superior lord for services issuing out of lands; and in another signification (the most general) it is taken for a deliverance and setting free of a person from the suspicion of guilt; as he that on trial is discharged of a felony, is said to be acquiescentus de feloniam; and if he be drawn in question again for the same crime, he may plead auter foits acquit; as his life shall not be twice put in danger for the same offence. 2 Inst. 385. When two are indicted, the one as principal, and the other as accessory, the principal being discharged, the accessory of consequence will be acquitted by law. Acquittal in fact, is when a person is found Not guilty of the offence by a jury, on verdict, &c. But in murder, if a man is acquitted, appeal may be brought against him. 3 Inst. 273.

If one be acquitted on an indictment of murder, supposed to be done at such a time; and after indicted again in the same county, for the murder committed at another time; here, notwithstanding that variance, the party may plead auter foits acquit, by averring it to be the same felony: so where a person is indicted a second time, for robbery upon the same person, but at another vill, &c. 2 Hawk. 370. Where a man is discharged on special matter found by the grand jury, yet he may be indicted de novo seven years afterwards, and cannot plead this acquittal; as he may upon the special matter found by the petit jury, and judgment given thereon. Ibid. 246. If a person is lawfully acquitted on a malicious prosecution, he may bring his action, &c. for damages, after he hath obtained a copy of the indictment and the judge's certificate; but it is usual for the judges of gaol delivery to deny a copy of an acquittal to him who intends to bring an action thereon, when there was probable cause for a criminal prosecution. Carth. Rep. 421.

Acquittance, (acquiescentia) Signifieth a discharge in writing, of a sum of money, or debt due; as, where a man is bound to pay rent, reserved upon a lease, &c. and the party to whom due, on receipt thereof, gives a writing under his hand witnessing that he is paid: this will be such a discharge in law, that he cannot demand and recover the sum or duty again, if the acquittance be produced. Terms de Ley 15. Dyer 6, 25, 51. An acquittance is a discharge and bar in the law to action &c. And if one acknowledges himself to be satisfied by deed, it may be a good plea in bar, without any thing received; but an acquittance, without seal, is only evidence of satisfaction, and not pleadable.

'Tis observed, that a general receipt or acquittance in full of all demands, will discharge all debts, except such as are on specialty, viz. bonds, bills, and other instruments sealed and delivered; on which account those can only be destroyed by some other specialty of equal force, such as a general release, &c. There being this difference between that and the general acquittance. See 2 Cro. 650.

But in some cases a court of equity will order accounts to be opened, even after an acquittance in full of all demands.

And now, in the superior courts of law, the producing an acquittance will not bar the action, if the plaintiff can by any means shew a mistake, and that he has not been paid, or paid so much as the acquittance is for.

In some cases payment may be refused, unless an acquittance is given. Thus the obligor is not bound to pay money upon a single bond, except an acquittance be given him by the obligee; nor is he obliged to pay the money before he hath the acquittance. But in case of an obligation with a condition, it is otherwise; for there one may aver payment. And by 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16. If an action of debt is brought upon a single bill, and the defendant hath paid the money, such payment may be pleaded in bar of the action.

A servant may give an acquittance for the use of his master, where such servant usually receives his master's rents, &c. and the master shall be bound by it. 1 Inst. 112. The manner of tender and payment of money shall be generally directed by him who pays it, and not by him who receives it; and the acquittance ought to be given accordingly.

Acre, (from the German word acker, i. e. ager) A quantity of land, containing in length 40 perches, and in breadth four perches; or in proportion to it, be the length or breadth more or less. By the customs of various countries, the perch differs in quantity, and consequently the acres of land. It is commonly but 16 feet and a half, but in Staffordshire it is 24 feet. According to the statute 34 Hen. 8. concerning the sowing of flax, it is declared that 160 perches make an acre, which is 40 multiplied by four; and the ordinance of measuring land, 35 Ed. 1. agrees with this account. The word acre formerly meant any open ground or field; as castle-acre, west-acre, &c. and not a determined quantity of land. Also acre, or acre-fight, is an old sort of duel fought by single combatants. English and Scotch, between the frontiers of their kingdoms, with sword and lance; and this duelling was called called camp-fight, and the combatants champions, from the open field that was the place of trial.

Armilla, Military utensils. — Quilibet paratus sit cum armillis & barnesibus, &c. & quicumque habet decem libras in bonis, & non habuerit omnia cremorum armilla, perdat omnia bona. Du Cange.

Action, (actio) Is the form of a suit given by law for recovery of that which is one's due: or it is a legal demand of a man's right. 1 Inst. 285. The learned Bracton thus defines it, Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur. And actions are either criminal or civil; criminal, to have judgment of death, as appeals of death, robbery, &c. or only to have judgment for damage to the party, fine to the king and imprisonment, as appeals of maihem, &c. 1 Inst. 284. 2 Inst. 40. Civil actions are such as tend only to the recovery of that which by reason of any contract, &c. is due to us; as action of debt, upon the case, &c. 2 Inst. 61.

Under criminal actions may be classed actions penal; which lie for some penalty or punishment in the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary. Bract.

Actions upon statute, brought upon the breach of any statute, whereby an action is given that lay not before; as where one commits perjury to the prejudice of another, the party that is injured shall have a writ upon the statute.

Actions popular, given on the breach of some penal statute, which every man hath a right to sue for himself and the king, by information, action, &c. And because this action is not given to one especially, but generally to any that will prosecute, it is called action popular, or qui tam action. See title Qui tam.

Actions civil are divided into real, personal, and mixed. Action real is that action whereby a man claims title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in fee, or for life: and these actions are possessory, or auncestrel; possessory, of a man's own possession and seisin; or auncestrel of the possession or seisin of his ancestor. Action personal is such as one man brings against another, on any contract for money or goods, or on account of any offence or trespass; and it claims a debt, goods, chattels, &c. or damages for the same. Action mixed is an action that lieth as well for the thing demanded, as against the person that hath it; in which the thing is recovered, and likewise damages for the wrong sustained: it seeks both the thing whereof a man is deprived, and a penalty for the unjust detention. But detinue is no action mixed, notwithstanding the thing demanded and damages for withholding it be recovered; for it is an action merely personal, brought only for goods and chattels. In a real action, setting forth the title in the writ, several lands held by several titles may not be demanded in the same writ: in personal actions, several wrongs may be comprehended in one writ. 8 Rep. 87. A bar is perpetual in personal actions, and the plaintiff is without remedy, unless it be by writ of error or attain: but in real actions, if the defendant be barred, he may commence an action of a higher nature, and try the same again. 5 Rep. 33. Supposing he did not at first sue by a writ of right, which is the highest in the law. Action of waste sued against tenant for life, is in the realty and personalty; in realty, the place wasted being to be recovered, and in the personalty, as treble damages are to be recovered. 1 Inst. 284.

Many personal actions die with the person. Thus if a lessee for years commit waste, and dies, action of waste may not be had against his executor or administrator, for waste done by the deceased. And where a keeper of a prison permits one in execution to escape, and afterwards dieth, no action will lie against his executors. Also if a battery be committed on a man, and he that is the aggressor, or the party on whom committed, die, the action is gone. 1 Inst. 53. But in real actions it is otherwise, for they survive.

Again, actions are either local or transitory. Actions real and mixed, ejectment, waste, trespasses, quare clausum fregit, &c. are to be laid in the same county where the land lieth: personal and transitory actions, as debt, detinue, assault and battery, &c. may be brought in any county, (except it be against officers of places, &c. by statute 21 Jac. 1.) 1 Inst. 282. Actions transitory may be laid in any county, although the statute 6 R. 2. enacted, That writs of debt, account, &c. should be commenced in the county where the contracts were made; for that statute was never put in use; and yet generally actions have been laid in the county where the cause of them was arising. If the cause of action arise in two counties, an action may be brought in either county: but if a nuisance be erected in one county, to the damage of a man in another, the assise must be brought in confinio comitatum. Mich. 8 Ann. B. R.

The defendant cannot by his plea oblige the plaintiff to lay his action in a different county from that in which he brought it, unless the matter pleaded be local; for in transitory actions he must move the court on affidavit, that if the plaintiff hath any cause of action, such cause accrued in the county of, &c. and not where the plaintiff hath laid it, &c. and such motion must be made before issue joined; for by joining issue, he agrees with the plaintiff, as to the manner of bringing the action, and though the court seldom refuses on such an affidavit to change the venue, yet if before or after the motion made, the plaintiff will enter into a rule, to offer material evidence, in the county where he laid his action, the cause will be tried there. 1 Sid. 44. 2 Salk. 669, 670.

But though the court, on application, seldom refuses to change the venue, yet there are cases in which the judges have refused; as where a peer of the realm brings an action of scandalum magnatum, the court will not change the venue; because a scandal raised on a peer reflects on him through the whole kingdom. 2 Mod. 215. 1 Lev. 56. S. P.

Also a serjeant at law, barrister, attorney, or any other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary at Westminster-hall, may lay his action in Middlesex, though the cause of action accrued in another county; and the court, on the usual affidavit, will not change the venue. 2 Salk. 668, 670. 2 Show. Rep. 176, 177, 242. S. P.

But if a privileged person be sued, and the action brought against him in the right county, his privilege will not intitle him to have it tried in Middlesex. Carth. 126. 2 Salk. 668.

So if an attorney lays his action in London, the court will change the venue on the usual affidavit; for by not laying it in Middlesex, he seems regardless of his privilege. 2 Vent. 47.

If the action be grounded on a specialty, the court will not change the venue; for not being dated at any particular place, it may be presumed to be omitted, that it may charge the defendant at any place. 2 Mod. 228.

It is not the course of the court to change the venue in an action of escape; per Holt Ch. Just. 2 Mod. 228. The court will not change the venue in an action of covenant. 1 Lev. 307.

Actions likewise are said to be perpetual and temporary: Perpetual, those which cannot be determined by time; and all actions may be called perpetual that are not limited to time for their prosecution: Temporary actions are those that are expressly limited: as for example; the statute 7 H. 8. c. 3. gives action within four years after the offence committed: the 1 Ed. 6. c. 1. within three years: the 31 Eliz. c. 5. within one year, &c. Since the statute of limitations, all actions seem to be temporary; or not so perpetual, but that they may in time be prescribed against: a real action may be prescribed against within five years, on a fine levied, or recovery suffered. By stat. Hen. 8. A writ of right for recovery of lands is to be brought within sixty years: by 21 Jac. 1. Writs of formedon for any title to lands in esse, are to be sued within twenty years: actions of debt, on the case, of account, detinue, trover and trespass, are to be brought within six years; of assault and battery within four years; and slander within two years: but the right of action in these cases is saved to infants, feme covert, persons beyond sea, &c. And on a fresh promise the time limited may be enlarged; also the taking out and filing of a writ, is a good bringing of an action to avoid the statute of limitations. 1 Lill. 19.

Actions also are joint or several; joint, where several persons are equally concerned, and the one cannot bring the the action, or cannot be sued, without the other; several, in case of trespass, &c. done where persons are to be severally charged, and every trespass committed by many is several. 2 Leon. 77.

Having said thus much concerning the general divisions of actions, it remains to consider,

- I. By whom and against whom actions may be brought.
- II. What particular actions are adapted to particular cases.

I. In all actions there must be a person able to sue; the party sued must be one sueable for the thing laid; and the plaintiff is to bring his right and proper action which the law gives him for relief. 1 Shep. Abr. 20. There are three sorts of damages or wrongs, either of which is a sufficient foundation for an action. 1. Where a man suffers damage in his same and credit. 2. Where one has damage to his person, as by imprisonment, battery, &c. which respects his liberty. 3. Where a person suffers any damage in his property. Cnrrb. Rep. 416.

A man attainted of treason or felony, convict of recufancy, an outlaw, excommunicated person, convict of præmunire, an alien enemy, &c. cannot bring an action, till pardon, reversal, absolution, &c. But executors or administrators, being outlawed, may sue in the right of the testator or intestate, though not in their own right. A feme covert must sue with her husband: and infants are to sue by guardian, &c. 1 Inst. 128. Actions may be brought against all persons, whether attainted of treason or felony, a convict recusant, outlawed and excommunicate, &c. and a feme covert must be sued with her husband. A seire facias, or any writ to which the defendant may plead, or by which a plaintiff may recover, is an action. 6 Rep. 3. Salk. 5.

II. What particular actions are adapted to particular cases.

There are various kinds of actions suited to different cases, as actions of COVENANT, DEBT, DETINUE, TRESPASS, TROVER, &c. which see under titles COVENANT, DEBT, DETINUE, TRESPASS, TROVER, &c.

But where the law has made no provision, or rather, where no general action could well be framed before hand, the ways of injuring, and methods of deceiving being so various, every person is allowed to bring a special action on his own case. 1 New Abr. 44. Co. Lit. 56. a. 6 Mod. 53, 54.

This action is in practice become the most universal of any, as most of the other actions may, under particular circumstances, be resolved into this, which it will be necessary, therefore, to consider somewhat largely.

Action upon the case is a general action given for redress of wrongs and injuries, done without force, and by law, not particularly provided against, in order to have satisfaction for damages: and in actions upon the case, the like process is to be had as in actions of trespass or debt. 19 H. 7. c. 9. Terms de Ley 17. It is called action on the case, because the whole cause or case, so much as in the declaration (except time and place) is set down in the writ; and there is no other action given in the case, save only where the plaintiff hath his choice to bring this or another action.

That is, all actions originally were sued in the court of Common Pleas, and there the foundation of the suit is, a writ, called an original, whereon the capias is grounded, and which original (in case, int' al') contains the nature of the plaintiff's complaint at large.

'Tis the same where suits are commenced in B. R. by original out of Chancery.

In all cases, where a man has a temporal loss, or damage by the wrong of another, he may have an action upon the case to be repaired in damages. But the particular damage must be specially alleged.

This action, as hath been intimated, lies in a great variety of instances, which are particularly enumerated in NELSON'S Abridgment. Of these the chief are, 1. Action of the case for words which is brought for words spoken or written which affect a person's life, reputation, office, or trade, or tend to his loss of preferment, in marriage or service, or to his disinherittance, or which occasion him any particular damage. This action therefore will lie for charging another with any capital, or other crime. To say of another he is a traitor, action lies. 1 Bulst. 145. But if one call another a seditious traitorous knave, no action lieth; because the words imply an intention only, and not an unlawful act. 4 Rep. 19. Nor to say of a man he deserves to be hang'd: nor to call another a rogue generally, or say he will prove him to be a rogue; though it will lie to say a man is a rogue of record. 4 Rep. 15. Darv. 92. Words which charge a person with being a murderer, highwayman, or thief, in express terms, are held actionable. 1 Roll. Abr. 47. Tho' for saying such a one would have taken his purse on the highway, or have robbed him, an action lies not; for nothing is shewn to be done in order thereto. Cro. Eliz. 250. Likewise to say a man was in gaol for stealing any thing is not actionable, for the words do not affirm the theft. Darv. 140. But to say, I think A. B. committed such a felony; or, I dreamt he stole a horse, &c. these words are actionable. Dal. 144. 1 Darv. 105. If a felony be done, and common fame is, that such a person did it, although one may charge or arrest him on suspicion of that felony; yet a man may not affirm that he did the same, for he may be innocent all the while, and therefore affirming it hath been held actionable. Hob. 138, 203, 381.

It was heretofore held, that no action would lie for words importing a charge of murder, without an averment that the person said to be killed was dead; but the latter and better opinion is, that the party shall be intended to be dead, unless the contrary appears in the pleadings. 1 Vent. 117. Cro. Jac. 489. Sid. 53. Cro. Eliz. 560, 823. If one say of another, Thou art a bugging rogue, and I could hang thee, action lies. 1 Sid. 373. And if a man say, I know myself, and I know you, I never bugger'd a mare, &c. it is actionable.

When such words are spoken of another maliciously, for which criminally, if true, such other might be punished, action lies; as, to say of a person, he hath perjured himself; or that he would prove him perjured; or that he was forsworn in the court of Chancery, Common Pleas, &c. are actionable: but not to call a person forsworn man, unless it be said in a court of record. 3 Inst. 163. Darv. 87, 89. To say a man hath forged an obligation, &c. and he will prove it; this is actionable. Darv. 130.

Some writers make a difference, where the subsequent words are introduced by the word and; as, you are a thief, and have stolen, &c. which are additional, and shall not correct; and the word for; as you are a thief, for you have, &c. Hob. 386. Style 115. Godb. 89. The words, He is a maintainer of thieves, and keeps none but thieves in his house, will not support an action, unless it be averred that he knew them to be thieves. 1 Cro. 746.

To say an alehouse-keeper keeps a bawdy-house, action lies. Cro. Eliz. 582. Though to say of an inn-keeper, that he harbours rogues, &c. is not actionable; for his inn is common to all guests. 2 Roll. Rep. 136. To say of another he hath the French pox, action will lie. Cro. Jac. 430. But 'tis said, if one say that he had the pox, after cured, no action lies; because none will then avoid his company, &c. Ney 151. To call a man a whore-master, or a woman whore, no action lies; for these are merely spiritual. Darv. But calling a woman whore in London, is actionable by the custom of the city.

Words likewise are actionable which tend to the disgrace or detriment of a person in office, or of a man in the exercise of his profession or trade.

Calling an officer in the government, &c. jacobite, hath been held actionable; aliter of a private person. Farrest. Rep. 107. To say a justice of peace doth not administer justice, is actionable. Cro. Eliz. 358. And so for other disgrace in his office.

But it is to be observed, that as to words for which an action lies, relating to a man's office, they must have a plain and direct meaning, to charge him with some crime that is punishable; and be spoken of his office, or otherwise they are not actionable. 6 Mod. 200. Thus the plaintiff, being a justice of peace, the defendant said, Mr.

Stukely covereth and hideth felonies, and is not worthy to be a justice of peace; actionable, for though his office is not named, the words necessarily refer to it. 4 Rep. 16.

The plaintiff being a justice of peace, and high sheriff, the defendant said, 'Tis well known I am a true subject; but thou (innuendo the plaintiff's servant) servest no true subject, and thine own conscience may accuse thee thereof; actionable. 1 Leon. 335.

Case, &c. for these words spoken of a justice of peace, He is a forsworn justice, and not fit to be a justice of peace; after a verdict for the plaintiff it was intimated, that the words were not actionable, because forsworn doth not intend judicial perjury, and there was no discourse of his office; but adjudged actionable, because the words forsworn justice shew that the defendant intended perjury relating to his office, for sermo refert ad conditionem personæ. 1 Vent. 50.

Slander, &c. brought by a doctor of the civil law, who was also a justice of peace and chancellor of the bishoprick of Norwich, for these words, He is not fit to be a chancellor or a justice of peace, he is a knave, a rascal, and a villain, it is not fit to practise, he ought to have his gown pulled over his ears; actionable, the plaintiff had a verdict, and 40*l.* damages. 2 Lutw. 1288.

The defendant spoke of an officer, (viz.) *You have cozened the state of 20000*l.* and I will prove it, for you have received 25000*l.* of the office, and not compounded for it, and have justified in words in the order of your commission;* actionable. Style 436.

In offices of profit, for such words as impute the want either of understanding, ability, or integrity to execute them, this action lies.

But in offices of honour, words that impute want only of ability, are not actionable; as to say of a justice of peace, He a justice of peace! he is an ass, and a beetle-headed justice: the reason is, because a man cannot help his want of ability, as he may his want of honesty; otherwise where words impute dishonesty or corruption. 2 Salk. 695. But if special damage can be proved, it may be actionable; and indeed in every case, where special damage can be proved, an action will lie.

As to words tending to the disgrace or detriment of a man in his profession or trade, it is to be premised, that where the words are disgracing a man's profession, they also must appear to be spoken precisely of it; for to say a person has cozened one in the sale of certain goods, is not actionable; unless you shew that the party lived by such selling. 1 Roll. Abr. 62.

To say of a doctor in divinity, Doctor S. is robbing the church; and at another time, Doctor S. hath robbed the church; actionable. Cro. Car. 301, 417.

In case, &c. in which the plaintiff declared, that he was instituted and inducted into a parsonage in, &c. and that he executed the office of a pastor in that church for the space of four years, and that the defendant said of him, You are a drunkard, a savor-master, a common sweaver, and a common lver, and you have preached false doctrine, and deserve to be degraded; after a verdict for the plaintiff, it was objected, that the words are not actionable, because they import no civil or temporal damage to the plaintiff; but adjudged actionable, for, if true, he may be degraded, and so lose his freehold. Allen 63.

These words spoken of a preaching parson, Parrat is an adulterer, and had two children by B. G.'s wife, and I will cause him to be deprived for it; not actionable; for 'tis a spiritual defamation, and punishable in that court. Cro. Eliz. 502.

To say of a counsellor, that he is no lawyer; that they are fools who come to him for law, and that he will get nothing by the law, action lies. Danv. 113. And it is the same to say he hath disclosed secrets in a cause.

To call a doctor of physick fool, ass, empirick, and mountebank, or say he is no scholar, are actionable. Cro. Car. 270. So to say of a school-master, put not your son to him, for he will come away as very a dunc as he went. Heil. 71. Where one says of a midwife, that many have perished for her want of skill, an action will lie. Cro. Car. 211. If one calls a merchant bankrupt, action lies. 1 Leon. 336. And to call a trading person bankrupt knave, is actionable. 1 Danv. 90. Also if one say of a merchant, that he is a beggarly fellow, and not able to pay his debts; or say of a person that he is a runaway, and dares not shew his face, by reason whereof he is disgraced and injured in his calling, these are actionable. Raym. 184.

Words likewise as hath been said tending to the loss of preferment in marriage, &c. are actionable. Thus to say that a woman hath a bastard, or is with child; or that a certain person hath had the use of her body, whereby she loses her marriage, action lies; though not without special damage, on action at common law. 2 Salk. 696. If a man is in treaty with a woman to marry, and another tells him, she is under a pre-contract; this doth not imply a scandal, but yet, if false, an action will lie. Mich. 5 Ann. To say of a man that he lay with a certain woman, &c. by which he loses his marriage, is actionable; for in these cases there is a temporal damage. 1 Danv. 81.

As to words tending to a person's disinherittance, if one says of another that has land by descent, that he is a bastard; action upon the case lies, as it tends to his disinherittance. Co. Ent. 28. But to say of a son and heir apparent, that he is a bastard, action lies not until he is disinherited, or is prejudiced thereby. 1 Danv. 83. To slander the title of another person to his lands is actionable; but the words must be false, and be spoken by one that neither hath, nor pretendeth title to the land himself; and who is not of counsel to him that pretends right. 4 Rep. 17. If a man shall pretend title to the land another hath in possession, and hath no colour of title to it; and shall say he hath such a deed or conveyance of it, where in truth he hath none, or if he hath any it is a counterfeit and forged deed, and he knows it to be so: in this case the words may bear an action; but if there be any colour for what is said, they will not be actionable. 2 Cro. 339. Yelv. 80, 88. And the party of whom the words are spoken must have, or be likely to have some special damage by the speaking of them; as that he is hindered in the sale of his lands, or in his preferment in marriage, &c. without which it is said action doth not lie. 1 Cro. 99. 2 Cro. 213, 397. Popb. 187. 2 Bulst. 90. The affirming that another hath title to the land, where actionable, see 4 Rep. 175.

If A. says, that B. said that C. did a certain scandalous thing, C. shall have action against A. with averment that B. never said so, whereby A. is the author of the scandal. Cro. Jac. 406. See 1 Roll. Abr. 64.

It is to be observed in general, that though scandalous words are spoken before a man's face, or behind his back, by way of affirmation, or report, when drunk, or sober; and although they are spoken in any language, if they are understood by the hearers, they are actionable: also words may be actionable in one county, which are not so in another, by the different construction, &c. 4 Rep. 14. Hob. 165, 236. But if the defendant can make proof of the words, he may plead special justification. Co. Ent. 26. Yet where the plaintiff has a pardon, after an offence committed, the words are still actionable. Moor 865. If words may receive a double interpretation, the one way that they shall be actionable, and the other way not, they shall be taken in mitiori sensu, so far as not to be actionable. Cro. Jac. 438. Therefore to say that a man hath the pox, when it may be the ordinary disease; or that he is a coiner of money, when it may be his trade, and he may do it by authority, &c. no action will lie: and yet in this case, if the common and violent sense of the words in the import thereof be the worst sense, they may be taken accordingly, and are liable to action. 4 Rep. 20. Hob. 126. 3 Cro. 352. The words to maintain this action must be direct and certain, that there may be no intendment against them: but as some words separate, without others joined with them, are not actionable; so some words that are actionable may be qualified by the precedent or subsequent words, and all the words are to be taken together. 4 Rep. 17. 1 Cro. 127. Meor Ca. 174, 331. Where words spoken are somewhat uncertain, by the precedent conference or some circumstance; with an averment, they may be many times made certain and actionable. 2 Bulst. 227. So by the pleadings of the parties, and verdict of a jury for the plaintiff. 2 Cro.

107. The thing said by the words must be that which is possible to have been done; for if it be of a thing altogether and apparently impossible, no action lies. 4 Rep. 16. For words spoken in pursuit of a prosecution in an ordinary court of justice; and where a lawyer in pleading his client's cause, shall utter words according to his instructions; and to say of one he is a ballard, when this is to defend the party's own title, where he himself doth claim to be heir of the land that is in question; these words will not bear an action. 2 Cro. 90. 4 Rep. 13.

In this action the nature of the words must be set forth, with the manner of speaking them, the time and place, when and where spoken, and before whom, and the damage thereby to the plaintiff; that his credit was, and how, impaired, with the aggravating circumstances: but it matters not whether the plaintiff doth in his declaration set forth all the circumstantial words as they are spoken; so as to shew the very words that are actionable, and the substance of them, &c.

2. Action on the case likewise lies upon an assumpsit or undertaking; and such actions are founded on a contract either express, or implied by law, and gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92. Moor 667. For the law on this head see title Assumpsit.

3. It has been premised, that a special action on the case lies in all instances wherein no general action could be framed; it will be necessary therefore to point out some of those particular cases to which it is most peculiarly applicable.

It was formerly held, that if my fire, by misfortune, burn the goods of another man; for this wrong he shall have action on the case against me: and if my servant puts a candle or other fire in any place in my house, and this burns all my house and the house of my neighbour, action of the case lies for him against me. 1 Danv. 10.

But by stat. 6 Ann. c. 31. it is enacted, that an action shall not be brought against any, in whose house or chamber any fire shall accidentally happen: but by the same statute it is enacted, that if any servant through negligence shall cause an house or outhouse to be fired, such servant being thereof convicted upon oath before two justices, shall forfeit 100*l.* unto the churchwardens of the parish of, &c. to be distributed amongst the sufferers, as to the churchwardens shall seem just, and upon non-payment, shall be committed to some workhouse by a warrant of one justice, there to be kept eighteen months at hard labour.

This action likewise lies against carriers and others upon the custom of England.

But see the statutes 6 Ann. and 10 Ann. c. 14. If a person delivereth goods to a common carrier, to carry them to a certain place, and he loseth them, action upon the case lies against him; for by the common custom of the realm he ought to carry them safely: it is the same of a common hoyman or lighterman, who is a water-carrier of goods; but goods in this case may be thrown overboard in a tempest, to preserve the passengers lives in the lighter, &c. and no action lies. 2 Bulst. 280. If a common carrier is robbed of goods, he is chargeable for them, because he had his hire, and took upon himself the safe delivery of the goods therefore: and though a person doth not acquaint the carrier with all the particulars in a box, as that there is such a sum of money, &c. the carrier shall answer for the money, if robbed: though a special acceptance may excuse him. 1 Danv. 13.

If a carrier asks whether money or plate is contained in a parcel, and is answered in the negative, and upon a robbery, and action brought, 'tis proved there was money or plate, we conceive the law does not make the carrier liable, he being deceived.

Case, &c. upon the custom of England against a master of a ship, for negligently keeping the plaintiff's goods; adjudged he is rather an officer than a servant, for he may pawn the ship if he see occasion: he may sell bona peritura, &c. and tho' he receives his wages from the owners, yet in effect he is paid by the merchant; for 'tis he who pays the owners, and there is no difference between this case and that of a hoyman or a common carrier. 1 Vent. 190.

In an action on the case upon the custom of the realm against the defendant, who was master of a stage-coach, the plaintiff sets forth, that he took a place in the coach for such a town, and that in the journey the defendant, by negligence, lost the plaintiff's trunk; upon Not guilty pleaded, the evidence was, that the plaintiff gave the trunk to the man who drove the coach, who promised to take care of it, but lost it; and the question was, whether the master was chargeable, and adjudged that he was not, unless the master takes a price for the carriage of the goods as well as for the carriage of the person, and then he is within the custom as a carrier is: that a master is not chargeable for the acts of his servant, but when they are done in execution of the authority given by the master, and then the act of the servant is the act of the master. 1 Salk. 282.

If a mail is robbed, and bills are lost; by Holt, Chief Justice, action lies against the post-mailer, as against a common carrier, &c. he being paid a salary for doing his duty; but 'twas over-ruled by the other justices. 1 Salk. 17. And we do not know of any other case upon this point since determined.

A common inn-keeper is chargeable for goods stolen in his house; and if the inn-keeper be not of sound memory, it is said action lies against him: but if the inn-keeper be an infant, no action will lie against such infant. The person robbed must be a traveller, and guest in the inn; if the goods are committed to the host on another account, and are stolen, no action will lie. So if a man comes to an inn, and leaving goods there, goes away for two or three days, if in that time they are stolen, no action lies against the inn-keeper; for at the time of the stealing he was not his guest: but where a man comes on horse-back to an inn, and leaves his horse with the host, if he goes away from the inn for several days, and in his absence the horse is stolen, the inn-keeper shall be charged for it; because he had benefit by the continuance of the horse with him, he being paid for it, and so the owner was a guest. Moor 877. If a man upon a special agreement boards in an inn for any time and is robbed, the inn-keeper shall not answer for it. Latch 127. for he is not a guest but a boarder. An inn-keeper is liable, though the guest doth not acquaint him what goods or money he hath. 8 Rep. 33. If an inn-keeper refuse to entertain his guest, this action may be brought against him. Dyer 158.

This action lies for deceits in contracts, bargains, and sales: if a vintner sells wine, knowing it to be corrupt, as good and not corrupt, though without warranty, action lies. Danv. 173. So if a man sells a horse, and warrants him to be sound of his limbs, if he be not, action on the case lies. 11 Hen. 6. A person warrants a horse wind and limb, that hath some secret disease known to the seller, but not to the buyer, this action may be brought: though if one sell a horse and warrant him sound, and he hath at the time visible infirmities, which the buyer may see: action on the case will not lie. Yelv. 114. 2 Cro. 675. Where one sells me any wares or commodities, and is to deliver that which is good, but delivers what is naught; or sells any thing by false or deceitful weights and measures, with or without warranty, action on the case lies; and so where a man doth sell corrupt victuals, as bread, beer, or other thing for food, and knows it to be unwholesome. Dyer 75. 4 Rep. 18. 2 Cro. 270. Yet if the buyer or his servant shall see and taste the victuals, &c. and like and accept the same, no action can be had. 7 H. 4. 16. Nor will case lie upon a warranty of what is out of a man's power, or of a future thing; as that a horse shall carry a man thirty miles a day, or the like. Finch 188. If a man sells certain packs of wool, and warrants that they are good and merchantable, if they are damaged, action of the case lies against him. 1 Danv. 187. The bare affirmation by the seller of a particular sort of diamond, without warranting it to be such, will not maintain an action. 2 Cro. 4. 196. But where a man hath the possession of a personal thing, the affirming it to be his own is a warranty that it is so; though it is otherwise in case of lands, where the buyer at his peril is to see that he hath title. 1 Salk. 210. If a person sells to another cattle or goods, that are not his own, action of the case lies: so if he warrants cloth to be of such a length, that is deficient of it. If a taylor undertakes to make a suit of clothes, and spoils them, action lies: and if a carpenter promises to repair my house before a certain day, and doth not do it, by which my house falls; or if he undertakes to build a house for me, and doth it ill, action on the case lies. 1 Danv. 32. If a surgeon neglects his patient, or applies unwholesome medicines, whereby the patient is injured, this action lieth. And if a counsel retained to appear on such a day in court, doth not come, by which the cause mis-carries, action lies against him: so if after retainer, he become of counsel to the adversary against the plaintiff. 11 H. 6. 18. For stopping up a water-courte or way; breaking down a party wall; stopping of ancient lights, and for any private nuisance to a man's water, light, or air, whereby a person is damaged, this action lieth. 1 Cro. 427. 2 Id. 159. Where a smith promises to shoe my horse well, if he pricks him, action of the case lies; and so when he refuses to shoe him, or when I travel without, and my horse is damaged. If a horse that is hired hath been abused by the rider, action lies: so where goods pawned are not delivered, on offering the money.

Where any one personates another, for cheating at gaming, where a surety is not saved harmless, &c. 2 Inst. 198. If I lend another my horse to ride to far, and he rides further, or forward and backward, or doth not give him meat, this action lieth. 1 Cro. 14. And where one lends me a horse for a time, if he take him from me within that time, or disturb me before I have done what I hired him for; action of the case lies: and though I ride the horse out of the way in my journey, he may not take him from me. 8 Rep. 146. This action lies for keeping a dog accustomed to bite sheep; but not for a man's dog running at my sheep, though he kill them, if it be without his content. 1 Danv. Abr. 19. Hest. 171. Action of the case will lie against a gaoler for putting irons on his prisoner; or putting him in the stocks, or not giving sufficient sustenance to him, being committed for debt. F. N. B. 83. The master may in many cases have this action against his servant, steward, or bailiff, for any special abuse done to him, and for negligence, &c. Also it lies for taking or enticing away my servant, and retaining him; or threatening a servant, whereby I lose his service. Lunc. 68. 1 Cro. 777. 1 Shep. Abr. 52, 59. A servant is trusted with goods and merchandize consigned to him by a merchant, to pay the customs for them, and dispose of them to profit; if he to deceive the merchant, and have allowance for it on his account, and to defraud the king, lands some of the goods without paying the customs, by which they are forfeited, action of the case lieth. Lanc. 65. 2 Cro. 266. If I trust one to buy a lease or other thing for me, and he buyeth it for himself, or doth not buy it, this action lies against him; but if he doth his endeavour it sufficeth. Bro. 117. And where a man is disturbed in the use of a seat in the church, which he hath had time out of mind; a steward is hindered in the keeping of his courts; a keeper of a forest disturbed in taking the profits of his office; a bailiff in distraining for an amercement, &c. action on the case will lie. Bend. 89. Lib. Intr. 5. Moor 987. An action of the case lies for him in reversion, against a stranger, for damage to his inheritance, though there be a term in esse. 3 Lev. 360. Also if a lessor comes to the house he has demised, to see if it be out of repair, or any waste be done, and meets with any disturbance therein; or if one disturbs a parson in taking his tithes, this action lies. 2 Cro. 478. 2 Inst. 650. And for setting up a new mill on a river, to the prejudice of another who hath an ancient mill, an action will lie. Lib. Intr. 9.

Action on the case likewise lies for and against commoners, &c. for injuries done in commons.

Case against R. B. for surcharging the common; it was objected in arrest of judgment, that case would not lie, but an assise; adjudged, that the plaintiff might have either action. Style 164.

Case, &c. by a commoner for digging pits and spreading the gravel, &c. by which he lost his common; the defendant pleaded; that he is lord of the soil, and that he did dig for coals, doing as little damage to the pasture as he could, and averred, that he had left common sufficient; and upon a demurrier to this plea, it was adjudged, that it amounted to no more than the general issue, and that the lord could not dig pits in the common, for the statute of 43 Eliz. intends only an improvement by enclosing. Sid. 106. 2 Cro. 165.

Action on the case may likewise be brought for malicious prosecutions: where a suit is without ground, and one is arrested, action on the case lies for unjust vexation: so for false imprisonment. And for falsely and maliciously arresting a person for more than is due to the plaintiff, whereby the defendant is imprisoned, for want of bail; or if it be on purpose to hold him to bail, action on the case will lie, after the original action is determined. 1 Lev. 275. 1 Salk. 15. And action likewise lies against sheriffs, for default in executing writs; permitting escapes, &c.

Actions on the case likewise lie for conspiracy, escape and rescous, nuisances, &c. which see under titles Conspiracy, Escape, Rescous and Nuisances, &c. Vide Com. Dig. V. 1. tit. Action, Action upon the Case, &c. &c.

Action prejudicial, (otherwise called preparatory, or principal) is an action which arises from some doubt in the principal; as in case a man sues his younger brother for lands descended from his father, and it is objected against him that he is a bastard: now this point of bastardy is to be tried before the cause can any further proceed: and therefore it is termed prejudicialis, quia prius judicanda. Bract. lib. 3. c. 4. num. 6. Cowell.

Action of a writ, Is a phrase of speech used, when one pleads some matter, by which he shews the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ he brought, yet it may be that he may have another writ or action for the same matter. Such a plea is called a plea to the action of the writ; whereas, if by the plea, it should appear that the plaintiff hath no cause to have an action for the thing demanded, then it is called a plea to the action. Cowell. Termes de la ley.

Actionare, i. e. In jus vocare, or to prosecute one in a suit at law. Thorn's Chron.

Action Burnel, A statute so called, made 13 Ed. 1. ann. 1285, ordaining the statute merchant: it was so termed from a place named Action Burnel, where it was made; being a castle sometime belonging to the family of Burnel, and afterwards of Lovel, in Shropshire. Cowell.

Actor, The proctor or advocate in civil courts or causes. Actor dominicus, was often used for the lord's bailiff or attorney. Actor ecclesie was sometime the serinick term for the advocate or pleading patron of a church. Actor villæ was the steward or head bailiff of a town or village. Cowell.

Acts done, Are distinguished into acts of God, the acts of the law and acts of men. The act of God shall prejudice no man: as where the law precribeth means to perfect or settle any right or estate; if by the act of God the means in some circumstances become impossible, no party shall receive any damage thereby. Co. Lit. 123. 1 Rep. 97. So in an action of case against a largeman, who justified, for that there were several passengers in his barge, and a sudden tempest arising, all the goods in the barge were thrown overboard to save the lives of the passengers, amongst which the goods of the plaintiff were thrown over, and that he had not any notice that there was money in the pack; adjudged, that the action would not lie, because what the owner of the barge did in this case was occasioned by the act of God, and in defence of their lives. 1 Roll. Rep. 79.

The acts of the law are esteemed beyond the acts of man: and when to the perfection of a thing, divers acts are required, the law hath most regard to the original. act. 8 Rep. 78. The law will construe things to be lawfully done; when it standeth indifferent whether they should be lawful or not: but whatsoever is contrary to law is accounted not done. 1 Inst. 42. 3 Rep. 74. Our law doth favour substantial more than circumstantial acts; and regards deeds and acts more than words: and the law doth not require unnecessary things. Plowd. 10. As to acts of men; that which a man doth by another, shall be said to be done by himself; but personal things cannot be done by another. Co. Lit. 158. A man cannot do an act to himself, unless it be where he hath a double capacity; no person shall be suffered to do any thing against his own act; and every man's acts shall be construed most strongly against himself. Plowd. 140.

But

But if many join in an act, and some may not lawfully do it; it shall be adjudged the act of him who might lawfully do the same. Dyer 192. Acts that men are forced by necessity and compulsion to do, are not regarded: and an act done between persons shall not injure a stranger not party or privy thereto. Plow. 19. 6 Rep. 16.

Where mutua laests are to be done, who is to do the first act, see title Condition.

Acts of Parliament, Are positive laws, consisting of two parts, (viz.) the words of the acts, and the sense and meaning of them, which being joined make the law. The words of acts of parliament shall be taken in a lawful sense: cases of the same nature are within the remedy, though out of the letter of the act; and some acts extend by equity to other things than are mentioned therein, &c. 1 Inst. 24, 381. Vide Statute.

Actuary, (actuarius) A clerk that registers the acts and constitutions of the convocation.

Adcredulitate, To purge one's self of an offence by oath. Qui in collegio fuerit ubi aliquis occisus est, adcredulitet se quod eum non percussit. Leges Inae, c. 36.

Addition, (additio) Signifieth a title given to a man besides his Christian and surname, setting forth his estate, degree, trade, &c. As for example; additions of estate are yeoman, gentleman, esquire, &c. Additions of degree, are knight, earl, marquiss, and duke: additions of trade, are merchant, clothier, carpenter, &c. There are likewise additions of place of residence, as London, York, Bristol, &c. And these additions were ordained that one man might not be grieved or molested for another: and that every person might be certainly known, and bear his own burden. If one be of the degree of a duke and earl, &c. he shall have the addition of the most worthy dignity. 2 Inst. 669. But the titles of duke, marquiss, and earl, &c. are not properly additions, but names of dignity. Terms de Ley 20. And the title of knight or baronet, is part of the party's name, and ought to be rightly used; but the titles of esquire, gentleman, yeoman, &c. being no part of the name, but additions as people please to call them, may be used or not used, or if varied is not material. 1 Lill. 34. An earl of Ireland is not an addition of honour here in England, but such a person must be written by his Christian and surname, with the addition of esquire only: and sons of English noblemen, although they have given them titles of nobility in respect to their families; if you sue them, they must be named by their Christian and surnames, with the addition of esquire, as such a one esquire, commonly called Lord A. &c. 2 Inst. 596, 666.

By the common law, a man that had no name of dignity, was named by his Christian and surname in all writs; which was sufficient. If he had an inferior name of dignity, as knight, &c. he ought to be named by his Christian and surname with the name of dignity: but a duke, &c. might be sued by his Christian name only, and name of dignity, which stands for his surname. 2 Inst. 665, 666. By stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5. It is enacted, that in suits or actions where process of outlawry lies, additions are to be made to the name of the defendant, to shew his estate, mystery, and place of dwelling; and that writs not having such additions shall abate, if the defendant takes exception thereto, but not by the court ex officio. By pleading to issue, the party passes by the advantage of exception for want of addition; for by the common law it is good without addition, and the statute gives remedy only by exception. Cro. Jac. 610. 1 Roll. 780. No addition is necessary, where process of outlawry doth not lie. 1 Salk. 5. If a city be a county of itself, wherein are several parishes, addition thereof, as of London is sufficient: but addition of a parish, not in a city, must mention the county, or it will not be good. 1 Danw. 237. An addition after the alias dictus is ill; and according to Holt Chief Justice, if a man of Wills commit felony at Westminster, he shall be indicted by his name, as of Westm. 3 Salk. 20.

A gentleman by reputation, that is neither so by birth, nor by office, nor by creation, but commonly called gentleman, and known by that name, is a sufficient addition; but if he be named yeoman, he cannot qualify the indictment. 2 Inst. 668.

Where there are several defendants of different names, and the same addition, it is safest to repeat the addition of each of their names, applying it particularly to every one of them. 2 Harok. 87.

And where a father hath the same name and the same addition with a defendant being his son, the action is abateable, unless it add the addition of the younger to the other additions; but where the father is the defendant, it is said that there is no need of addition of the elder. 2 Harok. 187.

Adeling, (from the Saxon adelan) Signifying excellent, was a title of honour amongst the Angles; properly belonging to the king's children; it being usual for the Saxons to join the word ling to the Christian name, which signified a son, or the younger. King Edward the Confessor having no issue, and intending to make Edgar, his nephew, the heir of the kingdom, gave him the title and title of Adeling. Spelm. Gloss.

Ademption, or taking away of a legacy; this arises from a supposed alteration of a testator's intent, by calling in money due to him on bond, &c. that he had expressly devised by will to another person. Tulbo's Chan. Ca. See Legacy.

Ad Inquirendum, Is a judicial writ, commanding enquiry to be made of any thing relating to a cause depending in the king's courts. It is granted upon many occasions for the better execution of justice. Reg. Judic.

Adjournment, (adjournamentum) The same with the French word ajournement, and signifies a putting off until another day, or to another place. As adjournment in eyre, by stat. 25 Ed. 3. is an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre will sit again. A court, the parliament, and writs, &c. may be adjourn'd; and the substance of the adjournment of courts is to give licence to all parties that have any thing to do in court to forbear their attendance till such a time. Every last day of the term, and every eve of a day in term, which is not dies juridicus, or a law day, the court is adjourned; and it is usually done two several times, sitting the court. 2 Inst. 26. The terms may be adjourned to some other place, and there the King's Bench and other courts at Westminster be held: and if the king puts out a proclamation for the adjournment of the term, this is a sufficient warrant to the keeper of the Great Seal to make out writs accordingly; and proclamation is to be made, appointing all persons to keep their day, at the time and place to which, &c. 1 And. 279. 1 Lev. 176. Though by Magna Charta the court of Common Pleas is to be held at Westminster. But necessity will sometimes supersede the law, as in the case of a plague, a civil war, &c. In the first year of king Car. 1. a writ of adjournment was delivered to all the justices, to adjourn two returns of Trinity term: and in the same year Michaelmas-term was adjourned until crispine annivarsum to Reading; and the king by proclamation signified his pleasure, that his courts should be there held. Cro. Car. 13, 27. Anno 17 Car. 2. The court of B. R. was adjourned to Oxford, because of the plague; and from thence to Windor; and afterwards to Westminster again. 1 Lev. 176, 178.

On a foreign plea pleaded in assise, &c. the writ shall be adjourned into the Common Pleas to be tried; and after adjournment, the tenant may plead a new plea pursuant to the first: but if he pleads in abatement a plea triable by the assise, on which it is adjourned, he cannot plead in bar afterwards, &c. 1 Danw. Abr. 249. The justices of assise have power to adjourn the parties to Westminster, or to any other place; and by the express words of Magna Charta, cap. 12. they may adjourn, &c. into C. B. before the judges there. Dyer 132.

If the judges of the court of King's Bench, &c. are divided in opinion, two against two, upon a demurrer or special verdict (not on a motion) the cause must be adjourn'd into the Exchequer Chamber, to be determined by all the judges of England. 3 Mod. 156. 5 Mod. 335. After dissolution or prorogation of parliament, and after adjournment for above fourteen days, actions may be prosecuted against persons entitled to privilege, &c. Stat. 12 W. 3. Now see new act 10 Geo. 3.

Adlegiare, Or aleier in French, is for one to purge himself of a crime by oath. In the laws of king Alfred, in Brompt. Chron. cap. 4. Si se velit adlegiare, &c. And cap. 13. Si accusetur, inde adlegiet se per sexaginta hidas, &c.

Admeasurement, (admesuratio) Is a writ brought for remedy against such persons as usurp more than their share, to bring them to reason. It lies in two cases; one is termed admeasurement of dower (admesuratio dotis) where a man's widow after his decease holdeth from the heir more land, &c. as dower, than of right belongs to her: and the other is admeasurement of pasture (admesuratio pasturæ) which lies between those that have common of pasture appendant to their freehold estates, or common by vicinage, where any one or more of them furcharge the common. Reg. Orig. 156, 171. In the first case, the heir shall have this writ against the widow, whereby she shall be admeasured, and the heir restored to the overplus; and in the last case, it may be brought against all the other commoners, and him that furcharged; for all the commoners shall be admeasured. Terms de Ley 23. The heir shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower, for dower assigned in the time of his ancestor: and if an heir within age assign unto the wife more in dower than she ought to have, &c. the guardian in right may have a writ of admeasurement. But if the guardian assigns dower more than she ought to have, the heir, during his nonage, shall not have a writ of admeasurement of dower. 7 Hen. 2. 4. Vide 13 E. 1. c. 7. & Fitz. N. B. 148. If the wife after assignment of dower do improve the land, and make it better than it was at the time of the assignment; an admeasurement doth not lie of that improvement. Nat. Brevium 332.

A person who hath common appurtenant certain, or common by certain grant, shall be admeasured, and a tenant shall have admeasurement against him: but he who hath a common appurtenant without number, or common in gross without number, shall not be stinted, nor shall a writ of admeasurement of pasture lie against him. If the lord furcharge the common, his tenant must not have a writ of admeasurement; but an assise of common against the lord. And so if the lord do make improvement of the common. And it is said, that if the tenant furcharge the common, the Lord shall not have a writ of admeasurement against him; but he may distrain the surplussage cattle. On a second furcharge of a common, after admeasurement made, the plaintiff shall recover his damages against him that was defendant in the first writ; and he shall forfeit to the king the cattle which he put in over and above the due number after the admeasurement made. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 7. Vide c. 8. & Fitz. N. B. 125. The writs of admeasurement of dower and pasture are vicontiel, and shall be directed unto the sheriff, and shall not be returnable; and they run thus:

A writ of admeasurement of dower.

George the Third, &c. to the sheriff of, &c. A. the son [or cousin] and heir of B. hath complained unto us, that C. who was the wife of the aforesaid B. hath for dower more of the freehold which was of the aforesaid B. sometime her husband, in N. than she ought to have, and than belongs to her to have; and therefore we command you that justly and without delay you cause that dower to be admeasured, so that the aforesaid C. may not have more for dower of the inheritance of the aforesaid A. than she ought to have, and than belongs to her to have, according to her reasonable dower; and let the aforesaid A. have of that dower that which he ought to have and belongs to him to have, that we may hear no more clamour thereof for want of right, &c.

A writ of admeasurement of pasture.

George the Third, &c. to the sheriff of, &c. greeting. A. B. hath complained to us, that C. D. and E. F. have unjustly furcharged their common of pasture in, &c. so that they have in it more beasts and cattle, than they ought to have, and to them belongeth to have; and therefore we command you, that justly and without delay, you cause to be admeasured that pasture, so that the said C. D. and E. F. may not have therein more beasts and cattle than they ought, and to them it belongs to have, according to their freehold which they have in the same town; and that the said A. B. may have in that pasture so many beasts and cattle as he ought to have, and belongs to him to have; that we may hear no more clamour thereof, &c.

Adminicle, (adminiculum) Signifies aid, help, or support; being used to this purpose, Stat. 1 Ed. 4. cap. 1.

Administrator, (Latin) Is one that hath the goods of a man dying intestate committed to his charge by the ordinary, for which he is accountable when thereunto required.

For the better understanding this head it is to be considered,

- I. By whom and to whom administration is to be granted.
- II. Of the interest, power, and duty of an administrator.
- III. Of suits by and against administrators.
- IV. How administration may be revoked.

I. The bishop of the diocese where the party dies is regularly to grant administration: but when the person dying hath goods in several dioceses, which are bona notabilia, administration must be granted by the archbishop in the prerogative court, or it will be void. 1 Plowd. 281. See Bona notabilia.

At common law, and before the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 19. the ordinary had the absolute disposal of intestates estates. And therefore if a man died intestate, neither his wife, child, nor next of kin, had any right to a share of his estate, but the ordinary was to distribute it according to his conscience to pious uses; and sometimes the wife and children might be amongst the number of those whom he appointed to receive it; but however the law trusted him with the sole disposition.

The first statute that abridged the power of the ordinary herein, was the stat. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 19. A.D. 1285. Whereas after the death of a person dying intestate, which is bounden to some other for debt, the goods come to the ordinary to be disposed; the ordinary from henceforth shall be bound to answer the debts as far forth as the goods of the dead will extend, in such sort as the executors of the same party would have been bounden, if he had made a testament.

Before this statute the ordinary had the absolute disposal of intestates estates; and as that statute first subjected them to an action at the suit of creditors, so from thence they found, as my Lord North observes, that what was before very beneficial to them began to be very troublesome, which obliged them to put the administration into other hands, taking security to save them harmless from suits. Raym. 497.

But this method did not intirely free them from the trouble they had before; for such persons, being looked upon as servants or attornies to the ordinaries, could not sue for, nor gather in the intestate's estate. 2 Inst. 397. Co. Lit. 133. 1 Roll. Abr. 906. This however was remedied by the stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 11. (A.D. 1357.) Where a man dieth intestate, the ordinaries shall depute the next and most lawful friends to administer his goods, which deputies shall have action to demand and recover as executors the debts due to the intestate, and shall answer also to others to whom the said dead person was bounden and bound, in the same manner as executors, and shall be accountable to the ordinaries as executors. And it is enacted by the stat. 21 Hen. 8. cap. 5. sect. 13. In case any person die intestate, or the executors refuse to prove the testament, then the ordinary shall grant administration to the widow, or next kin, or to both, by discretion of the ordinary, taking surety for true administration.

Secd. 4. Where divers persons be in equality of kindred, the ordinary is to be at liberty to accept one or more, taking nothing for the same, as in probate of testaments, unless the goods of the deceased amount to above the value of an hundred shillings.

As the law is now settled administration must be granted, 1st. To the husband, of the wife's goods and chattels. 2. To the wife, of the husband's goods and chattels. 3. If there be no husband or wife, to the children, sons or daughters. 4. If there be no children alive, to the father or mother. 5. Then to a brother or sister of the whole blood, or of the half blood. 6. And if there are none such, to the next of kin, as uncle, aunt, or cousin. 7. Then to a creditor of the deceased. 8. And for want of all these, to any other person, at the discretion of the ordinary: or the ordinary may grant to a stranger letters ad colligendum bona defuncti, to gather up the goods of the deceased; or may take them into his own hands, to pay the deceased's debts, in such order as an executor or administrator ought to pay them: but 'tis said, he or the stranger who hath letters ad colligendum, cannot sell them, without making themselves executors of their own wrong, and action lies only against the ordinary, &c. Wood's Inst. 333.

Administration likewise may be granted durante minori atate of an infant executor or administrator.

If one makes an infant his executor, or dies intestate, and the right of administration devolves upon an infant, in these cases the ordinary is to grant administration during the minority of the infant, id est, in the first case till he arrives at the age of fourteen, and in the latter till he arrives at the age of twenty-one, because an infant cannot, before his full age, give bond to administer faithfully. Goddolph. 102. 5 Co. 29. Hob. 250. Yelv. 128.

And as such an administrator is but in nature of a curator for the infant, and has no interest or benefit in the testator or intestate's estate, but in right of the infant; it has been always held discretionary in the ordinary to whom to grant it, and therefore it hath been frequently adjudged, that he is not obliged within the statute 21 H. 6. to grant it to the next of kin either of the deceased, or the infant. Hob. 250. 1 Vent. 219. 1 Keb. 549. 3 Mod. 24. 1 New Abr. 381.

If an infant, and one of full age, are made executors, he who is of full age may take out administration durante minori atate of the infant, and may declare as executor or administrator durante minori atate, and there is no absurdity in this case, that there should be an executor and administrator to the same party. 1 New Abr. 381.

Administration also may be granted de bonis non, where the first administrator dies, or the executor dies intestate, or without probate of the will.

If a person dies intestate, and administration is granted to J. S. who dies without having administered all the intestate's goods, in this case the ordinary must grant administration of the goods unadministered to another; for the first administrator cannot continue the trust reposed in him to his executor or administrator, because he has no interest but what he derives from the act of the ordinary. 1 New Abr. 385.

So if an executor dies intestate, administration de bonis non cum testamento annexo of the testator must be granted by the ordinary, for they are not devolved on the administrator of the intestate, because he had them in ante deum in order to discharge the trust reposed in him, but if the executor makes his executor, then the trust is devolved on him; and after payment of the debts and legacies of the first testator he has an absolute property in the goods. 1 New Abr. 386.

If the executor dies before probate, though he administered in part by disposing of the testator's goods, &c. yet his executor cannot be executor to the first testator, but in this case there is not an administration de bonis non granted, but an immediate administration, because the executor died ante onus executionis testamenti super se susceptum, which is the foundation the spiritual court proceed upon. 1 New Abr. 386.

So if an executor refuses administration with the will annexed, it is to be granted to another. 1 New Abr. 386.

Besides all these administrations, there is administration durante absentia extra regnum, where a person is absent abroad; and administration pendente lite, which may be granted by the ordinary as well as durante minori atate.

In these cases administration is to be granted to the next of kin to the first testator or intestate, but if the testator appoints a residuary legatee, such legatee is entitled to administration. 1 New Abr. 385.

II. With respect to the interest of an administrator.

An administrator, by virtue of his administration, hath interest in all the chattels, real and personal of the intestate, and in all the goods and chattels, either in possession or action, in like manner as an executor in the goods of the testator deceased. And all these goods and chattels which belonged to the intestate at the time of his death, and which come to the hands of the administrator, shall be assets, or sufficient goods and chattels, to make him chargeable to the creditors, as executors are to creditors and legatees. Before they come to his hands he is not chargeable. Wood's Inst. new edition, 339.

N. B. If the references to Wood's Institute, or any other author, should not agree with the reader's edition, yet the parts may easily be found by referring to the index of the book referred to.

An administrator can't take advantage by his administration, (unless by paying his own debt first, if it is equal in degree with others, or by taking the goods and chattels as they are appraised) because the surplusage must be distributed amongst the next of kin, if there are any kin, according to the statute of the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. hereafter to be mentioned. If a debtor takes administration of the goods and chattels of his creditor, this shall not discharge the debtor; but his debt shall be assets; because the intestate did not act to free him from the debt. Whereas by making a debtor executor, the testator doth thereby release the debt. (But the duty remains, and is assets. 1 Inst. 264. l.) When an administrator (as well as an executor) hath paid funeral charges, debts, &c. with his own money, he may retain so much of the goods of the intestate in kind according to the value, and shall have property in them. But by such payment the property is altered from the intestate to the administrator. Wood's Inst. new edition, 339.

As to the power of an administrator, he can do nothing till an administration is granted to him; but after the administration is granted, his power is almost equal with that of an executor. Yet if there are many administrators, one of them cannot sell goods, release debts, &c. without the other, but they must all join, because they have but one authority. See 30 Car. 2. c. 7. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. And see title Executors.

With regard to the office and duty of an administrator, it is the same with that of an executor, as to the burial of the deceased and payment of funeral charges, the making of an inventory of his goods and chattels, the payment of debts, and the passing of an account. But something more is to be done by an administrator with respect to distributing the effects of intestates, which is regulated by the statute, commonly called the Statute of Distribution, that is, the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. by which it is enacted, that all ordinaries and ecclesiastical judges (upon granting administration) must take bond of the administrator with two or more sureties, with condition that the administrator shall make a true and perfect inventory of all the goods and chattels of the deceased, and exhibit it into the registry of the ordinary's court by such a day; and to administer according to law, and to make a true and just account thereof, and to make distribution of the surplusage as followeth: viz. one third to the wife of the intestate, the residue among his children, and such as legally represent them, if any of them be dead, other than such children (not heirs at law) who shall have any estate by settlement of the intestate in his life-time, equal to the other shares. Children, other than heirs at law, advanced by settlements or portions not equal to other shares, shall have so much of the surplusage as shall make make the estate of all to be equal. But the heir at law shall have an equal part in the distribution with the other children, without any consideration of the value of the land which he hath by descent or otherwise from the intestate.

Sect. 5. If there be no children, nor legal representatives of them, one moiety shall be allotted to the wife, the residue equally to the next of kindred to the intestate, in equal degree, and those who represent them.

Sect. 6. No representation shall be admitted among collaterals after brothers and sisters children. And if there be no wife, all shall be distributed among the children; and if no child, to the next of kin to the intestate in equal degree, and their representatives.

Sect. 7. No such distribution shall be made till one year after the intestate's death; and every one, to whom any shares shall be allotted, shall give bond with sureties in the said courts, that if debts afterwards appear, he shall refund his ratable part thereof, and of the administrator's.

Sect. 8. In all cases where the ordinary hath used to grant administration cum testamento annexo, he shall continue so to do. Made perpetual, 1 Jac. 2. cap. 17. But by Stat. 1 Jac. 2. cap. 17. s. 6. No administrator shall be cited into court to render an account of the personal estate of his intestate, otherwise than by an inventory thereof, unless at the instance of some person in behalf of a minor, or having a demand out of such estate as a creditor, or next of kin; nor shall be compellable to account before any ordinary or judge empowered by the act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10. otherwise than as aforesaid.

Sect. 7. If after the death of a father, any of his children shall die intestate, without wife or children, in the life-time of the mother, every brother and sister, and their representatives, shall have equal share with her.

Upon this clause of the statute this case has been determined. After the death of the father the son died intestate, without issue, but leaving a wife, a mother, three brothers, a sister, and two nieces, the children of a deceased brother: this is within the statute; the intestate's wife shall have but one moiety, and as to the other moiety, the intestate's brothers and sisters, &c. shall come in for an equal share thereof with the mother. 2 P. Williams 344.

But if a child dies intestate and unmarried, the father surviving has the child's whole estate at this day. 1 P. Williams 48. And this without taking administration to him. Pr. Ch. 260.

Sect. 8. The clause in the said act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. by which is provided, that that act shall not prejudice the customs of the city of London and province of York, shall not extend to such part of any intestate's estate, as an administrator, by virtue of his being so, by pretence of any custom may claim, to exempt the same from distribution.

It has been held, that a descent of lands in the nature of Borough English to the youngest son, will not prevent his having a full distributive share of his father's personal estate: the right to which vests immediately on the intestate's death: but not so as to exclude a posthumous child. W. & A. edit. 341.

It has been resolved likewise, that the half blood shall have a share upon a distribution equally with the whole blood. Id.

It seems to have been always holden, that the husband was intitled to administration as best friend to his wife, within the words of the statute 31 E. 3. but there being some doubt, whether since the statute of 22 & 23 Car. 2. he was not obliged to make distribution amongst the rest of her kindred, it was thought proper to settle this matter by a subsequent law, viz.

Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. sect. 25. The act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10. shall not extend to the estates of *feme covert*s that die intestate, but that their husbands may have administration of their personal estates, and recover and enjoy the same as they might have done before the making of the said act. Made perpetual, 1 Jac. 2. c. 17.

Also since the statute 22 Car. 2. the ordinary may grant administration to the wife or next a-kin, at his election, but then she must have her distributive share; also the ordinary may grant administration quoad partem to the wife, and as to the other part, to the next of kin; in which case neither can complain, since the ordinary need not have granted any part of the administration to the party complaining. 1 Sid. 179. Ryms. 93. 1 Show. 351. 1 Salk. 36.

If there be grandfather, father and son, and the father dies intestate, the son shall have the administration, and not the grandfather, tho' they be both in equal degree as to nearness of kindred. 2 Vern. 125. laid arguendo.

Since the making this statute 22 & 23 Car. 2. a man died intestate having one son, who likewise died intestate, and administration of goods was granted to the next of kin of the father, because there being but one child, there can be no distribution; and so this is a case out of the statute, and therefore the son is to have the whole at Common law; but it hath been otherwise adjudged since that time, (viz.) that by this statute of distribution of intestates estates, a right is vested in one child, where there is one and no more (viz.) a right to sue for the estate; and by consequence, if he die, before the estate is recovered and actually in his possession, it must go to his administrator, and not to the administrator of the father. Banb. v. Newton, 35 Car. 2. Palmer v. Allcock. 3 Mod. 58.

So where a person died intestate, leaving two, who were next a-kin, in equal degree to him, one of them died intestate within the year, and before distribution; adjudged, that an interest was vested in him, and his next of kin shall have administration, like the case of a residuary legatee dying before probate of the will, (viz.) his next of kin shall have the administration, and the next of the testator. Show. 25.

Administration was granted to the grandmother; and the aunt moved for a mandamus, but it was denied; for she is as near of kin as the aunt, or rather nearer, because she is in the right line ascending. 1 Salk. 30, 39.

III. Of suits by and against administrators.

Against an administrator and for him, action will lie, as for and against an executor, and he shall be charged to the value of the goods, and no further; unless it be by his own false plea, or by wasting the goods of the intestate. An executor or administrator shall never be charged de bonis propriis, but where he doth some wrong; as by selling the testator's goods, and converting the money to his own use, concealing or wasting them, or by pleading what is false. Dyer 210. 2 Roll. Rep. 295. But this plea must be of a fact, within his own knowledge. If an administrator plead plene administravit, and 'tis found against him, the judgment shall be de bonis propriis, because 'tis a false plea, and that upon his own knowledge. 2 Cro. 191. Contra where he pleads such a plea, and that he hath no more than to satisfy such a judgment, &c. the recovery shall be de bonis testatoris, &c. 2 Roll. Rep. 400. Upon plene administravit pleaded by an administrator, the plaintiff must prove his debt, or he shall recover but a penny damages, though there be assets; because the plea only admits the debt, but not the quantum. 1 Salk. 296. Special bail is not required of administrators in any action brought against them for the debt of the intestate; except where they have wasted the goods of the deceased: nor shall costs be had against administrators. Vide New Abr. tit. Costs. Where an administrator is plaintiff, he must shew by whom administration was granted; for that only intitles him to the action: but if an administrator is defendant, the plaintiff need not set forth by whom administration was granted, for it may not be within his knowledge. Sid. 228, 1 Lutw. 301. If a stranger that is not administrator, take the goods and administer in his own wrong, he shall be charged and sued as an executor, Terms de Ley 24. And generally an administrator shall be charged by others, for any debt or duty due from the deceased, as he himself might have been charged in his lifetime; so far as he hath any of the intestate's estate, to discharge the same. Co. Lit. 219. Dyer 14. An administrator's power is given by the administration, therefore he can do nothing until that be granted; and yet as to goods taken away before, the administration shall relate so as to give the administrator an action for them. Fitzherb. 26.

If a man have judgment for land in a real or mix'd action, and for damages, and then dies; his executor or administrator, not the heir, shall have execution for the damages; but not for the land. Fitz. Admin. 53. March 9.

IV. How administration may be revoked.

The ordinary ought not to repeal letters of administration which he hath duly granted; but if they are granted to such persons who ought not by law to have them, he may revoke them. 1 Lill. 38. For just cause they may be revoked, and where a person is a lunatick, &c. And if granted where not grantable, they may be repealed by the delegates. 1 Lev. 157, 186. If an administration is granted, and afterwards a will is produced and proved, the administration shall be revoked; and all acts done by the administrator are void. 2 Roll. Abr. 907. If a citation is granted against a stranger administrator, and his administration is revoked by sentence, yet all acts done by him bona fide as administrator are good till the revocation; the administration being only voidable. 6 Rep. 18. 8 Rep. 135. But if there is any fraud, a creditor may have relief upon the stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. And when the first administration is merely void, as granted by a wrong person, &c. it is otherwise: so when there is an appeal from the grant of the administration, to suspend the former decree. 5 Rep. 30. Administration was granted to J. S. and he released all actions, and after the administration was revoked, and declared void; this release was held good. 1 Brownl. 51. If an administrator give goods away, and then administration is revoked or repealed, 'tis said the gift is good; except it be by covin, when it shall be void only against a creditor by statute: and where the administrator after many goods administered, had his administration revoked, and it was committed to B. who sued the first administrator for goods unduly administered; it was held, that there was no remedy but in Chancery. 6 Rep. 19. Clays. 44. 4 Shep. Abr. 89. See Hob. 266. But we conceive, in such a case as this, the second administrator might maintain an action at law against the first, for money had and received, &c. or trover for any goods remaining in his possession.

In 2 Leon. 155. 'tis said, where the first administration is void, the administrator, who, under that administration, takes the goods, is a trespasser. And this we apprehend to be law, because at the time of taking he had not any authority. Letters of administration obtained by fraud are void. 3 Rep. 78, 6 Rep. 18, 19. 8 Rep. 143. Vide Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Administration and Administrator, and the table to Coke's Reports, same title.

Administratrix, (Lat.) She that hath goods and chattels of an intestate committed to her charge, as an administrator.

Admiral, (admiralius, admirallus, admiralis, capitaneus or custos maris) is derived of the French amerel, and signifies an high officer or magistrate, that hath the government of the king's navy, and the determining of all causes belonging to the sea. This word is also said to have its derivation from the Saxon acen mereal, over all the sea: and in ancient time the office of the admiralty was called custodia maritimæ Angliæ. Co. Lit. 260. It appears that anciently the admirals of England had jurisdiction of all causes of merchants and mariners, happening not only upon the main sea, but in all foreign parts within the king's dominions, and without them, and were to judge them in a summary way, according to the laws of Oleron and other sea laws. 4 Inst. 75. In the time of king Ed. 1. and king John, all causes of merchants and mariners, and things arising upon the main sea, were tried before the lord admiral: but the first title of admiral of England, expressly conferred upon a subject, was given by patent of king Ric. 2. to the earl of Arundel and Surry. Of late times this high office has been generally executed by commissioners; who by statute are empowered to use and execute the like authorities as lord admiral. 2 W. & M. cap. 2. In the reign of Ed. 3. the court of admiralty was established, and Ric. 2. limited its jurisdiction.

By the statute 13 Ric. 2. stat. 1. c. 5. it is enacted, that, upon complaint of incroachments made by the admirals and their deputies, the admirals and their deputies shall meddle with nothing done within the realm, but only with things done upon the sea. For the construction of this statute, see 2 Bulstr. 323. 3 Bulstr. 205. 13 Co. 52.

By stat. 15 Ric. 2. c. 3. it is declared, that all contracts, pleas and quarrels, and other things done within the bodies of counties by land or water, and of wreck, the admiral shall have no cognizance, but they shall be tried, &c. by the law of the land; but of the death of a man, and of mayhem done in great ships, being in the main stream of great rivers beneath the points near the sea, and in no other place of the same river, the admiral shall have cognizance; and also to arrest ships in great fleets, for the great voyages of the king and the realm, saving to the king his fortresses; and shall have jurisdiction in such fleets during such voyages, only saving to lords, &c. their liberties.

By the statute 2 Hen. 4. c. 11. reciting the R. 2. c. 5. it is enacted, that he that finds himself wronged against the form of the statute, shall have his action writ grounded upon the case against him that so pursued in the admiralty, and recover double damages against him, and he shall incur the pain of 10l. if he be attainted.

By the statute 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15. it is enacted, that "all felonies and robberies, &c. upon the sea, or in any haven, river, creek or place, where the admiral or admirals have, or pretend to have power, authority or jurisdiction, shall be inquired, tried, heard, determined and adjudged in such shires and places in the realm, as shall be limited by the king's commission or commissions to be directed for the same, in like form and condition as if any such offence or offences had been committed or done in or upon the land; and such commissions shall be had under the king's great seal, directed to the admiral or admirals or to his or their lieutenant, deputy or deputies, and to three or four such other substantial persons as shall be named or appointed by the lord chancellor of England for the time being, from time to time, and as oft as need shall require, to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of this land, used for felonies and robberies, &c. done and committed upon the land within this realm": And it is further enacted, "that if any person or persons happen to be indicted for any such offence done, or hereafter to be done upon the seas, or in any other place above limited, that then such order, process, judgment and execution, shall be used, had, and done, and made to and against every such person and persons so being indicted, as against felons, &c. for any felony, &c. upon the land, by the laws of the land is accustomed; and such as shall be convicted of any such offence, by verdict, confession or process, by authority of any such commission, shall have and suffer such pains of death, losses of lands, goods and chattels, as if they had been attainted and convicted of such offence done upon the land; and also, that they shall be excluded from the benefit of the clergy."

It was held (Yelv. 134.) that by force of this statute, accessaries to this offence could not be tried; but this is remedied by 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7. by which their aiders and comforters, and the receivers of their goods are made accessaries, and to be tried as pirates by 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15. also the said statute 11 & 12 W. 3. directs how pirates may be tried beyond sea, according to the Civil law, by commission under the great seal of England.

By the statute 5 Eliz. cap. 4. and 13 Eliz. cap. 1. in the act mentioned, if done on the main sea, or coasts of the sea, being no part of the body of any county, and without the precinct, jurisdiction and liberties of the cinqueports, and out of any haven and pier, shall be tried before the admiral or his deputy, and other justices of oyer and terminer, according to the statute of 28 H. 8.

By the statute 1 Ann. cap. 9. captains and mariners belonging to ships, and destroying the same at sea, shall be tried in such places as shall be limited by the king's commission, and according to 28 H. 8.

The statute 10 Ann. cap. 10. directs how the trial of officers and soldiers, that either upon land out of Great Britain, or at sea hold correspondence with a rebel enemy.

And by the statute 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11. all persons who shall commit any offence for which they ought to be adjudged pirates, felons, or robbers by 11 & 12 W. 3. may be tried and judged for every such offence according to the form of 28 H. 8. and shall be excluded from the benefit of clergy.

* The jurisdiction of the lord admiral therefore is confined to the main sea, or coasts of the sea, not being within any county. Thus, the admiralty hath cognizance of the death or maim of a man, committed in any ship riding in great rivers, beneath the bridges thereof, next the sea: but by the common law, if a man be killed upon any arm of the sea, where the land is seen on both sides, the coroner is to inquire of it, and not the admiralty; for the county may take cognizance of it; and where a county may inquire, the lord admiral has no jurisdiction. 3 Rep. 107. All ports and havens are infra corpus comitatus, and the admiral hath no jurisdiction of any thing done in them: between high and low water-mark, the common law and admiral have jurisdiction by turns; one upon the water, and the other upon the land. 3 Inst. 112. Every commander, officer, and soldier of ships of war, shall observe the commands of the admiral, &c. on pain of death, or other punishment. 13 Car. 2. cap. 9. The lord admiral hath power to grant commissions to inferior vice-admirals, &c. to call courts martial, for the trial of offences against the articles of war; and these courts determine by plurality of voices, &c. Stat. Ibid. Admiralty process is made out in the name of the admiral, who has under him a judge of the admiralty: and though the proceedings are according to the Civil law, and the maritime laws of Rhodes and Oleron, the sea being without the common law; yet by the several statutes abovementioned certain offences at sea may be tried by special commission to the lord admiral, &c. according to the laws of England.

The admiralty is said not to be a court of record, by reason it proceeds by the Civil law. 4 Inst. 135. But the admiralty has jurisdiction where the common law can give no remedy; and all maritime causes, or causes arising wholly upon the sea, it hath cognizance of. 6 Rep. The admiralty hath jurisdiction in cases of freight, mariners wages, breach of charter-parties, though made within the realm; if the penalty be not demanded: and likewise in case of building, mending, saving, and victualling ships, &c. so as the suit be against the ship, and not against the parties only. 2 Cro. 216. Mariners wages are contracted on the credit of the ship, and they may all join in suits in the admiralty; whereas at common law they must all sever: the master of a ship contracts on the credit of the owners, and not of the ship; and therefore he cannot prosecute in the admiralty for his wages. 1 Salk. 33. It is allowed by the common lawyers and civilians, that the lord admiral hath cognizance of seamen's wages, and contracts, and debts for making ships; also of things done in navigable rivers, concerning damage done to persons, ships, goods, annoyances of free passage, &c. And of contracts, and other things done beyond sea, relating to navigation and trade by sea. Wood's Inst. 218. But if a contract be made beyond sea, for doing of an act or payment of money within this kingdom; or the contract is upon the sea, and not for a marine cause, it shall be tried by a jury; for where part belongs to the common law, and part to the admiral, the common law shall be preferred. And contracts made beyond sea may be tried in B. R. and a fact be laid to be done in any place in England, and so tried here. 2 Bulstr. 322.

Where a contract is made in England, and there is a conversion beyond sea, the party may sue in the admiralty, or at common law. 4 Leon. 257. So where a bond is made and delivered in France: but we apprehend, if 'tis under seal, it can't be sued in the admiralty. An obligation made at sea, it has been held cannot be sued in the admiral's court; because it takes its course, and binds according to the common law. Hob. 12. The court of admiralty cannot hold plea of a matter arising from a contract made upon the land, tho' the contract was concerning things belonging to the ship: but the admiralty may hold plea for the seamen's wages, &c. because they become due for labour done on the sea; and the contract made upon land, is only to ascertain them. 3 Lev. 60. Though where there is a special agreement in writing, by which seamen are to receive their wages, in any other manner than usual; or if the agreement at land be under seal, so as to be more than a parol contract, it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 31. See Hob. 79. If the master pawns the ship on the high sea out of necessity for tackling or provision, without the consent of the owners, it shall bind them; but 'tis otherwise where the ship is pawned for the master's debt: the master can have no credit abroad, but upon the security of the vessel; and the admiralty gives remedy in these cases. 1 Salk. 35. The master hath a right to hypothecate the ship, for any debt, incurred on her account. Vide 1 Inst. 134, 140. Tho' the agreement is made, and the money lent at land. 1 Lord Ray. 152. Benzen v. Jeffries. Sale of goods (taken by piracy) in open market, is not binding by the admiral law, so that the owner may retake them; but at common law the sale is binding, of which the admiralty must take notice. 1 Roll. Abr. Vide 1 Vent. 308.

If a ship is taken by pirates upon the sea, and the master, to redeem the ship, contracts with the pirates to pay them 50*l.* and pawns his person for it, and the pirates carry him to the isle of S. and there he pays it with money borrowed, and gives bond for the money, he may sue in the admiralty for the 50*l.* because the original cause arose upon the sea, and what followeth was but accessory and consequential. Hard. 183.

If goods delivered on shipboard are imbezilled, all the mariners ought to contribute to the satisfaction of the party that lost his goods, by the maritime law, and the cause is to be tried in the admiralty. 1 Lill. 368. By the custom of the admiralty, goods may be attached in the hands of a third person, in causa maritima & civili, and they shall be delivered to the plaintiff after defaults, on caution to restore them, if the debt, &c. be disproved in a year and a day; and if the party refuse to deliver them, he may be imprisoned quousque, &c. March Rep. 204. The court of admiralty may cause a party to enter into bond in nature of caution or stipulation, like bail at common law; and if he render his body, the sureties are discharged; and execution shall be of the goods, or of the body, &c. not of the lands. Godb. 260. 1 Shep. Abr. 129. See 1 Salk. 33. T. Ray. 78. 2 Lord Ray. 1286. Fitzg. 197. A person in execution, on judgment in the admiral's court, upon a contract made on the land in New England was discharged, being out of the admiralty jurisdiction. 3 Cro. 603. 1 Cro. 685. And where sailors cloaths were bought in St. Katherine's parish, near the Tower, London, which were delivered in the ship; on a suit in the admiralty for the money, prohibition was granted; for this was within the county: so of a ship lying at Blackwall, &c. Owen 122. Hughes's Abr. 113. But the admiralty may proceed against a ship, and the sails and tackle, when they are on shore, altho' alleged to be detained at land: yet upon alleging offer of a plea, claiming property therein, and refusal of the plea, on this suggestion a prohibition shall be had. 1 Show. 179.

If there be a war with the Dutch, and an Englishman having letters of mark, takes an Offender for a Dutch ship, and brings it into a haven, and libels against it to have it condemned as a prize; but sentence be given that it is no prize; the Offender may libel in the admiralty against the captain, for the damage the ship received while it lay in the port; for the original taking being at sea, the bringing it into the port, in order to have it condemned, is but a consequence thereof. 1 Lev. 243. 1 Sid. 367.

If an English ship takes a French ship richly laden, the French being in enmity with us, and such ship is libelled against, and after due notice on the exchange, &c. declared a lawful prize, the king's proctor may exhibit a libel in the admiralty court, to compel the taker (who sent the ship to Barbadoes, and converted the lading to his own use) to answer the value of the prize to the king; although it was objected, that by the first sentence the property was vested in the king, and that this second libel was in nature of an action of trover, of which the court of admiralty cannot hold plea. Carib. 399.

If the owner of a ship victuals it and furnishes it to sea, with letters of reprisal, and the master and mariners when they are at sea commit piracy upon a friend of the king, without the notice or assent of the owner, yet by this the owner shall lose his ship by the admiral law, and our law ought to take notice thereof. 1 Rel. Abr. 530. But see 1 Roll. Rep. 285.

By the Civil law and custom of merchants, if the ship be cast away, or perish through the mariners defaults, they lose their wages; so if taken by pirates, or if they run away; for if it were not for this policy, they would forsake the ship in a storm, and yield her up to enemies in any danger, 1 Sid. 179. 1 Mod. 93. 1 Vent. 146.

The admiralty court may award execution upon land; tho' not hold plea of any thing arising on land. 4 Inst. 141. And upon letters missive or request, the admiralty here may award execution on a judgment given beyond sea, where an Englishman flies or comes over hither, by imprisonment of the party, who shall not be delivered by the common law. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. When sentence is given in a foreign admiralty, the party may libel for execution of that sentence here; because all courts of admiralty in Europe are governed by the civil law. Sid. 418. Sentences of any admiralty in another kingdom are to be credited, that ours may be credited there, and shall not be examined at law here: but the king may be petitioned, who may cause the complaint to be examined; and if he finds just cause, may send to his ambassador where the sentence was given, to demand redress, and upon failure thereof, will grant letters of marque and reprisal. Raym. 473.

If one be sued in the admiralty, contrary to the statutes 13 & 15 R. 2. he may have a superfedeas, to cause the judge to stay the proceedings, and also have action against the party suing. 10 Rep. 75. A ship being privately arrested by admiralty process only, and no suit, it was adjudged a prosecution within the meaning of the statutes; and double damages, &c. shall be recovered. 1 Salk. 31, 32. And if an erroneous judgment is given in the admiralty, appeal may be had to delegates appointed by commission out of Chancery, whose sentence shall be final. Stat. 8 Elix. cap. 5.

Appeals may be brought from the inferior admiralty courts to the lord high admiral: but the lord warden of the cinque ports hath jurisdiction of admiralty exempt from the admiralty of England. A writ of error does not lie upon a sentence in the admiralty, but an appeal. 4 Inst. 135. And vide id. 339. By the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 3. His majesty's commission to all the privy counsellors then and for the time being, and to the lord chief baron of the court of Exchequer, the justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, and barons of the said court of Exchequer, then and for the time being, for hearing and determining appeals from sentences in causes of prizes pronounced in the courts of admiralty, in any of his majesty's dominions, declared valid, although such chief baron, justices and barons are not of the privy counsel. But no sentence shall be valid, unless the major part of the commissioners present be of the privy counsel. See stat. 29 Geo. 2. cap. 34. and Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Admiralty.

Admission, (admissio) Is when a patron of a church having presented to it, the bishop upon examination admits the clerk, by saying admitto te habilem. Co. L. 344. a. It is properly the ordinary's declaration that he approves of the presentee, to serve the cure of the church to which he is presented. Co. L. 344. a. All persons are to have episcopal ordination before they are admitted to any parsonage or benefice; and if any shall presume to be admitted, not having such ordination, &c. he shall forfeit 100l. Stat. 14 Car. 2. No person is to be admitted into a benefice with cure of 30l. per ann. in the king's books, unless he is a bachelor of divinity at least, or a preacher lawfully allowed by some bishop, &c. Action of the case will not lie against the bishop, if he refuse to admit a clerk to be qualified according to the canons, (as for any crime or impediment, illiterature, &c.) but the remedy is by writ quare non admisit, or admittendum clericum brought in that county where the refusal was. 7 Rep. 3.

The ordinary may refuse a clerk presented to him, if he be minus idoneus, as outlawed, excommunicated, within age. 2 Inst. 632. Or mere laicus. 2 Inst. 632. 5 Co. 58. a. Or criminosus, as a heretick or schismatick, &c. 2 Inst. 632. Dal. 51. Or a manslayer, felon, &c.

5 Co. 58. Or guilty of any offence for which he ought to be deprived. 5 Co. 58. a. Or if he be illiterate. 2 Inst. 632. Cases in Parliament 91. And to say quod fuit minus sufficiens in literaturâ & eâ ratione inhabilis, is sufficient; for it is in the negative, and does not consist of a single instance, but general ignorance. Vide Mod. 135. Ca. Parl. 92. 3 Lev. 114. Sulk. 539.

If the patron brings a quare impedit against the upon refusal of his clerk the cause of refusal is traversed. If it be a spiritual matter, and the clerk is living, he shall be tried by the metropolitan. 2 Inst. 632. 5 Co. 58. a. If it be a temporal matter, or a spiritual matter, and the party is dead, it shall be tried by the country. 5 Co. 58. a. 2 Inst. 632.

Admittendo Clerico, A writ where a man has recovered his right of presentation against the bishop. Reg. Orig. 33. If a man do recover his presentation against the Common Pleas against the bishop, then he may have a writ to the same bishop to admit his clerk, or unto the metropolitan: a person recovers an advowson, and six months pass; yet if the church be void, the patron may have a writ to the bishop; and if the church is void when the writ comes to the bishop, the bishop is bound to admit his clerk. 7 H. 8. 14 H. 4. Where a man recovers against another than the bishop, this writ shall go to the bishop; and the party may have an alias and a pluries, if the bishop do not execute the writ, and an attachment against the bishop, if need be. New Nat. Br. 84. In a quare impedit betwixt two strangers, if there appears to the court a title for the king, they shall award a writ unto the bishop, for the king.

Admittendo in socium, A writ for associating certain persons to justices of assize. Reg. Orig. 206. Knights and other gentlemen of the county are usually associated with judges in holding their assizes on the circuits.

Anichiled, From the Latin nihil, written of old Nicbil, and signifies annulled, cancelled, or made void. Stat. 28 Hen. 8.

Ad quod Damnum, Is a writ which ought to be issued before the king grants certain liberties, as a fair, market, &c. which may be prejudicial to others: it is directed to the sheriff to inquire what damage it may do, for the king to grant a market, fair, &c. Terms de Ley 25.

Stat. 27 Ed. 1. stat. 2. sect. 1. ordains, that such as would purchase new parks shall have writs out of Chancery to inquire concerning the same.

Seçt. 4. In like manner they shall do that will purchase any fair, market, warren, or other liberty.

This writ is likewise used to inquire of lands given in mortmain to any house of religion, &c. And it is a damage to the country, that a freeholder who hath sufficient lands to pass upon assizes and jury, should alien his lands in mortmain, by which alienation his heir should not have sufficient estate after the death of the father to be sworn in assizes and juries. F. N. B. 121.

The writ ad quod damnum is also had for the turning and changing of ancient highways; which may not be done without the king's licence obtained by this writ, on inquisition found that such a change will not be detrimental to the public. Vaugh. Rep. 341. Ways turnable without this authority, are not esteemed highways, so as to oblige the inhabitants of the hundred to make amends for robberies; nor have the subjects an interest therein to justify going there. 3 Cro. 267. If any one change an highway without this authority, he may stop the way at his pleasure. But see the statute, 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 16. for enlarging of highways by order of justices of peace, &c. Where any common highway shall be inclosed after a writ of ad quod damnum executed, any person aggrieved by such inclosure may complain to the justices at the next quarter-sessions; but if no such complaint or appeal be made, then the inquisition and return, recorded by the clerk of the peace, shall be for ever binding. 8 & 9 W. 3.

The river Thames is an highway, and cannot be diverted without an ad quod damnum, and to do such a thing ought to be by patent of the king. Noy 105.

If there be an ancient trench or ditch coming from the sea, by which boats and vessels used to pass to the town, if the same be stopped in any part by outrageousness of the sea, sea, and a man will sue to the king to make a new trench, and to stop the ancient trench, &c. they ought first to sue a writ of ad quod damnum, to enquire what damage it will be to the king or others. F. N. B. 225. E.

And if the king will grant to any city the assise of bread and beer, and the keeping of weights and measures, and ad quod damnum shall be first awarded, and when the same is certified, &c. then to make the grant. F. N. B. 225. E.

Appears by the writs in the Register, that in ancient times upon every grant, confirmation, &c. or licence made by the king, first a writ ad quod damnum was to be awarded, to inquire of the truth thereof, and what damage the king might have by the same: but now the practice is contrary; and in the patents of common grants of licence, are put in the end these words—Et hoc absque aliquo breui de ad quod damnum, seu aliquibus aliis brevibus sive inquisitionibus aut mandatis superinde habendum, sive aut prosequendum. &c. Vide Com. Dig. 1 V. 302, &c.

Adreſtare, adreſſare, i. e. ad rectum ire, recto stare, To do right, satisfy, or make amends. Gerw. Dorobern. anno 1170.

Ad terminum qui preterit, A writ of entry, that lies for the lessor and his heirs, where a lease has been made of lands or tenements for term of life, or years; and after the term is expired, the lands are withheld from the lessor by the tenant, or other person that possesseth the same: and it likewise lies for the heir of the lessor. F. N. B. 201.

Now by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. Tenant wilfully holding over, after demand and notice in writing for delivering possession, shall pay double the yearly value.

Advent, (adventus) A time containing about a month preceding the feast of the nativity of our Saviour Christ. It begins from the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew's day, being the 30th of November, or next to it, and continues to the feast of Christ's nativity, commonly called Christmas. Our ancestors shewed great reverence and devotion to this time, in regard to the approach of the solemn festival: for in adventu domini nulla assisa debet capi. Int. placita de temp. regis Joh. Ebor. 126. But the statute West. 1. cap. 48. ordained that notwithstanding the usual solemnity and times of rest, it should be lawful (in respect of justice and charity, which ought at all times to be regarded) to take assises of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, &c. in the time of Advent, Septuagesima, and Lent. This is also one of the seasons, from the beginning of which to the end of the octaves of the Epiphany, the solemnizing of marriages is forbidden, without special licence, as we may find from these old verses,

*Conjugium adventus prohibet, Hilarique relaxat;
Septuagena vetat, sed Pasche octava reducit;
Rogatio vetitat, concedit trina potestas.*

Ad ventrem Inſpiciendum. A writ mentioned in the statute 12 Ed. 2. See Ventre Inſpiciendo, by which a woman may be searched, whether she be with child by a former husband, on her withholding lands from the heir.

Adventure, A thing sent to sea, the adventure whereof the person sending it, stands to out and home. Lex Mercat. Vide Adventure.

Adultery, (adulterium, quasi ad alterius thorum) Anno 1 Hen. 7. cap. 7. and in divers old authors termed adultery, is the sin of incontinence between two married persons; and if but one of the persons be married, it is nevertheless adultery: but in this last case it is called single adultery, to distinguish it from the other, which is double. This crime is severely punished by the laws of God, and the ancient laws of the land: the Julian law, among the old Romans, made it death; but in most countries at this time the punishment is by fine, and sometimes banishment; in England it is punished by fine, penance, &c. King Edmund, a Saxon, Leg. sua, cap. 4. Adulterium affici jussit instar homicidii. And Canutus i. e. Dane, Hominem adulterum in exilium relegari jussit, sicut nam nasum & aures præcidi. Leg. par. 2. c. 6. &c. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 12.—Ren, &c. Vic.

South'ton, Præcipimus tibi quod diligenter inquiri facias per legales homines de visis. Candeur. si Robertus Pincerna habens suspectum Will. Wake qui cum uxore sua adulterium committeret, prohibuit ei ingressum domus sue, & si idem Will. post prohibitionem illam domum ipsius Roberti ingressus adulterium prædictum commisit, inde præfatus Robertus mentula eum privavit, & si inquisitio dederit, quod ita sit, tunc eidem Roberto & suis qui cum eo erant ad hoc faciend. terr. & catalla sua occasione illa in manum nostram seiscita, in pace esse facias, donec aliud inde tibi præcipimus, &c. Clauſ. 14. Joh. m. 2. Perhaps this might be in some measure agreeable to a law made by William the Conqueror, that whoever forced a woman should lose his genitals, the offending parts.

Before the statute 22 Car. 2. which makes malicious maiming felony, it was a question, whether cutting off the privy members of a man, taken in adultery with another man's wife, was felony or not? For according to Bracton, sequitur pena aliquando capitalis: but anno 13 H. 3. one John, a monk, being taken by Henry Hull in the act with his wife, he cut off the privy members of the monk, and was only indicted for a maihem. 3 Inst. 118. If a wife elope from her husband, and live with the adulterer, (without being reconciled to the husband) she shall forfeit her dower. 1 Inst. 36. 2 Inst. 435. And there is a notable cause concerning Margaret, the wife of John de Cameis, who with her husband's consent lived in adultery with Sir William Pannel, yet lost her dower. 2 Inst. Adultery being a thing temporal, as well as spiritual, is against the peace, &c.

Advocate, Is the patron of a cause assisting his client with advice, and who pleads for him: it is the same by the Civil and Ecclesiastical laws, as a counsellor by the common law. The ecclesiastical, or church-advocate, was originally of two sorts; either an advocate of the causes and interest of the church, retained as a counsellor and pleader of its rights; or an advocate, or patron of the presentation and advowson. Both these offices at first belonged to the founders of churches and convents, and their heirs, who were bound to protect and defend their churches, as well as to nominate or present to them.—As Ailwin, founder of Ramsay abbey, proruit in medium, se Ramsayensis ecclesie advocatum, se possessionem ejus tutorem allegans. Lib. Rameſ. sect. 49. But when the patrons grew negligent in their duty, or were not of ability or interest in the courts of justice, then the religious began to retain law advocates, to solicit and prosecute their causes. Vide Spelman.

Advocati, Were those which we now call patrons of churches, and reserved to them, and their heirs, a liberty to present a person on any avoidance. Blount.

Advocatione Decimarum, A writ that lies for tithes, demanding the fourth part, or upwards, that belong to any church. Reg. Orig. 29.

Advow, (advocare) To justify or maintain an act formerly done. For example: one takes a distress for rent, and he that is distrained sues the replevin: now the distrainer, justifying or maintaining the act, is said to advow or avow: and hence comes advowant and advowry. Old Nat. Br. 43. Now called avowant and avowry, the d being dropped in spelling, as well as in pronunciation. The signification of this word is also to bring forth any thing: anciently when stolen goods were bought by one, and sold to another, it was lawful for the right owner to take them wherever they were found; and he in whose possession they were found, was bound advocate, i. e. to produce the seller to justify the sale; and so on till they found the thief. Afterwards the word was taken for any thing which a man acknowledged to be his own, or done by him, and in this sense it is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 5. par. 4. Si vir ipsum in domo sua suscepit, natriet & advocaverit filium suum. See Advowry.

Advowee, or avowee, (advocatus) Is used for him that hath right to present to a benefice: and by 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. we find advowee paramount is taken for the king, the highest patron.—Advocatus est ad quem pertinet jus advocationis alicujus ecclesie, ut ad ecclesiam, nomine proprio non alieno, possit presentare. Fleta, lib. 5. c. 14.

Advowson, (advocatio) Signifies the right of presentation to a church or benefice: and he who hath this right present is styled patron: because they that originally obtained the right of presentation to any church, were maintainers of, or benefactors to the same church. When the Christian religion was first established in England, kings began to build cathedral churches, and to make bishops; and afterwards, in imitation of them, several lords of manors founded particular churches on some part of their own lands, and endowed them with glebe, reserving to themselves and their heirs a right to present a fit person to the bishop, when the same should become void: and this is called an advowson, and he that hath this right of presentation is termed the patron, it being presumed that he who founded the church will avow and take it into his protection, and be a patron to defend it in its just rights. 1 Nelf. Abr. 184. See further as to the origin of lay-patronages, Willon Rep. part 2. 183.

Under this head it may be proper

- I. To consider the several kinds of advowson.
- II. How advowsons may lapse.
- III. How they may be gained by usurpation.

I. Advowsons are of two kinds; appendant, and in gross: Appendant, is a right of presentation dependant upon a manor, lands, &c. and passes in a grant of the manor as incident to the same; and when manors were first created, and lands set apart to build a church on some part thereof, the advowson or right to present to that church became appendant to the manor. Advowson in gross is a right subsisting by itself, belonging to a person, and not to a manor, lands, &c. So that when an advowson appendant is severed by deed or grant from the corporeal inheritance to which it was appendant, then it becomes an advowson in gross. 1 Inst. 121, 122.

If he that is seised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, grants one or two acres of the manor, together with the advowson; the advowson is appendant to such acre; especially after the grantee hath presented. Watson's Compleat Incumbent, c. 7.

But this feoffment of the acre with the advowson ought to be by deed, to make the advowson appendant; and the acre of land and the advowson ought to be granted by the same clause in the deed; for if one having a manor with an advowson appendant, grant an acre parcel of the said manor, and by another clause in the same deed grants the advowson; the advowson in such case shall not pass as appendant to the acre: but if the grant had been of the intire manor, the advowson would pass as appendant. So if a husband, seised in right of his wife of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, doth alien the manor by acres to divers persons, saving one acre; the advowson shall be appendant to that acre. Or if a lessee for life of a manor to which an advowson belongs, alien one acre, with the advowson appendant, the advowson is thereby appendant to that acre. Watf. c. 7.

The right of advowion, tho' appendant to a manor, castle, or the like, may be severed from it; and being severed, becomes an advowson in gross; and this may be effected divers ways: as, 1. If a manor or other thing to which it is appendant is granted, and the advowson excepted. 2. If the advowson is granted alone, without the thing to which it was appendant. 3. If an advowson appendant is presented to by the patron, as an advowson in gross. Gibf. 757.

A disappendency may also be temporary; that is, the appendency, tho' turned into gross, may return: as, 1. If the advowson is excepted in a lease of a manor for life; during the lease, it is in gross, but when the lease expires it is appendant again. 2. If the advowson is granted for life, and another enfeoffed of the manor with the appurtenances; in such case the reversion of the advowson passeth, and at the expiration of the grant it shall be appendant, and so in other cases.

But in case of the king, by the statute of prærogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 15. When the king giveth or granteth land or a manor with appurtenances; without he make express mention in his deed or writing, of advowson of churches when they fall, belonging to such manor or land, at this day the king reserveth to himself such advowsons, albeit that among other persons it hath been observed otherwise.

But when he reserveth, as in case of the restitution of a bishop's temporalities; then advowsons pass without express mention, or any words equivalent thereto. 10 Co. 64.

The law, in the case of a common person, is thus shown by Rolls, out of the antient books: If a man of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, that manor, without saying with the appurtenances (yet the advowson shall pass; for 'tis parcel of the manor. 1 Col. Abr. 60.

An advowson being an inheritance incorporeal, and lying in manual occupation, cannot pass by livery; but may be granted by deed, or by will, either for the inheritance, or for the right of one or more turns, or for as many as shall happen within a time limited.

But this general rule, with regard to advowsons in gross, next avoidances, and the like, is to be understood with two limitations.

First, That it extends not to ecclesiastical persons of any kind or degree, who are seised of advowsons in the right of their churches; nor to masters and fellows of colleges, nor to guardians of hospitals, who are seised in right of their houses; all these being restrained (the bishops by the 1 Elix. cap. 19. and the rest by the 13 Elix. cap. 10.) from making any grants but of things corporeal, of which a rent or annual profit may be reserved; and advowsons and next avoidances, which are incorporeal and lie in grant, cannot be of that sort; and therefore such grants, however confirmed, are void against the successor; tho' they have been adjudged to be good against the grantors (as bishop, dean, master, or guardian) during their own times.

Corporeal hereditaments are said to lie in livery (as actual possession may be given of them). Incorporeal are said to lie in grant (for the reverse of the preceding reason). And they pass merely by the delivery of the deed. Vide Braddon, l. 2. c. 18. Blackstone's Commentaries, 2 V. 317.

Secondly, Where the right of granting is absolute and indisputable; yet a grant cannot be made by a common person, whilst the church is void, so as to be intitled thereby to such void turn; for however the avoidance that shall happen next after, or the inheritance of the advowson, may be granted when the church is void; the void turn itself (being a mere spiritual thing and annexed to the person of the patron) is not grantable: it is then (as the law books speak) a thing in power and authority, a thing in action and effect; the execution of the advowson, and not the advowson. This is the doctrine and language of all the books; which also say, that if two have a grant of the next avoidance, and one releaseth all right and title to the other while the church is void: such release for the same reason is void. But all this is to be understood of common persons only, and not of the king, whose grant of a void turn hath been adjudged to be good. Gibf. 758. Watf. c. 10.

And with respect to clergymen, it is to be observed, that by 12 Ann. stat. 2. c. 12. they are prohibited from purchasing the next avoidance of living.

But this act being only restrictive upon clergymen, all other persons continue to purchase next avoidances as they did before, and present thereunto as they think proper.

As to advowsons in gross, there cannot be any descent thereof from the brother to the sister of the intire blood, where there is a brother of the half blood; but the same shall descend to the brother of the half blood, unless the first had presented to it in his life time, and then it shall descend to the sister, she being the next heir of the intire blood. Watf. c. 8. We take it for granted, that in this case the brother of the half blood must take as heir of the ancestor, who last presented, he being, by the exercise of that right, &c. the person last actually seised.

So if one be seised of an advowson in fee, and the church doth become void, the void turn is a chattel; and if the patron dieth before he doth present, the avoidance doth not go to his heir, but to his executor. Watf. c. 9.

But if the incumbent of a church be also seised in fee of the advowson of the same church, and die; his heir, and not his executors, shall present; for altho' the advowson doth not descend to the heir at the death of the incumbent, and by his death the church become void, so that the avoidance may be said in this case to be severed from the advowson before it descend to the heir, and vest in the executor; yet both the avoidance and descent to the heir happening at the same instant, the title of the heir shall be preferred as the more antient and worthy. Watf. c. 9.

By last will and testament, the right of presenting to the next avoidance, or the inheritance of an advowson, may be devised to any person; and if such devise be made by the incumbent of the church, the inheritance of the advowson being in him, it is good, tho' he die incumbent; for altho' the testament hath no effect but by the death of the testator, yet it hath an inception in his life time. And so it is, tho' he appoint by his will who shall be presented by the executors, or that one executor shall present the other, or doth devise that his executors shall grant the advowson to such a man. Watf. c. 10.

Also advowsons are either presentative, collative, or donative.

An advowson presentative is, where the patron does present or offer his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in his church.

This may be done either by word or writing. The king may present by word, or in writing under any seal; who otherwise cannot do any legal act, but by matter of record. But where an aggregate corporation doth present, it must be under seal. The presentation to a vicarage doth of common right belong to the parson. If a feme covert hath title to present, the presentation must be by husband and wife, and in both their names, except in case of the queen consort. Wood's Inst. 155, &c.

And if a feme covert is seised of an advowson, and the church becometh void, and the wife dieth, the husband shall present to the advowson. A guardian by socage or by nurture cannot present to a vacant living in right of the heir, or in his name, because he can make no benefit of it, or account for it, though it is sometimes practised, and made good by time. Therefore the infant shall present of whatsoever age. Vide Co. Lit. 17. b. If a common patron presents first one clerk, and then another, the bishop may institute which he pleases; unless he revokes the presentation of one of them before he is admitted by the bishop. If there is a right of nomination in one, and a right of presentation in another, to the same benefice; he that has the right of nomination is the true patron, and the other is obliged to present the clerk which is nominated. Id. 156.

An advowson collative is that advowson which is lodged in the bishop; for collation is the giving of a benefice by a bishop, when he is the original patron thereof, or he gains a right by lapse.

Institution is given by the bishop upon a presentation of a clerk; but collation is an immediate institution, because the bishop is both patron and ordinary. Institution and collation are in effect (for the most part) the same, and are terms made use of to distinguish the persons, who have the power to bestow the benefice. (But where they differ, see of Lapse and Usurpation postea). Id. 157, &c.

An advowson donative is, when the king or other patron (in whom the advowson of the church is lodged) does, by a single donation in writing, put the clerk into possession, without presentation, institution, or induction. Donatives are either of churches parochial, chapels, prebends, &c. and may be exempt from all ordinary jurisdiction, so that the ordinary cannot visit them, and consequently cannot demand procurations. If the true patron of a church or chapel donative doth once present to the ordinary, and his clerk is admitted and instituted, it becomes a church presentative, and shall never have the privilege of a donative afterwards. Yet if a stranger presents to such a donative, and institution is given, all is void. Id. 158.

The right of donation descends to the heir (the ancestor by whom the church became void in his life time) and not to the executor, which it would had it been a presentative benefice. Wilson Rep. part 2. 150, 1.

There's not any case in the books to exclude the heir of a donative from his turn in this case. And a patron of a donative can never be put out of possession by an usurpation. Id. ibid.

Advowsons were formerly most of them appendant to manors, and the patrons parochial barons; the lordship of the manor, and patronage of the church were feldem in different hands till advowsons were given to religious houses; but of late times the lordship of the manor and the advowson of the church have been divided; and now not only lords of manors, but mean persons have, by purchase, the dignity of patrons of churches, to the great prejudice thereof. By the common law the right of patronage is a real right fixed in the patrons or founders, and their heirs, wherein they have as absolute a property as any other man hath in his lands and tenements: for advowsons are a temporal inheritance, and lay fee; they may be granted by deed or will, and are assets in the hands of heirs or executors. 1 Inst. 119. A recovery may be suffered of an advowson; a wife may be endowed of it; a husband tenant by the curtesy; and it may be forfeited by treason or felony. 1 Rep. 56. 10 Rep. 55. If an advowson descends to coparceners, and the church, after the death of their ancestors, becomes void, the eldest sister shall first present. 13 E. 1. c. 5. f. 5. And when coparceners, jointenants, &c. are seised of an advowson, and partition is made to present by turns, each shall be seised of their separate estate. 7 Ann. c. 18.

Persons seised of advowsons, being papists, are disabled to make presentations, and the chancellors of the universities shall present. 1 W. & M. cap. 26. And presentations to advowsons, &c. for money or other reward, shall be void, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6.

Besides the statutes above taken notice of, there are several other statutes respecting this title, which will more properly be treated of under the particular heads of Darrein Presentment, Lapse, Presentation, Quare impedit, Simony, Usurpation, &c.

II. How advowsons may lapse.

A lapse is a title given to the ordinary, to collate to a church, by the neglect of the patron to present to it within six months after avoidance. Or a lapse is a devolution of a right of presenting from the patron to the bishop; from the bishop to the archbishop; from the archbishop to the king. The term in which the title by lapse commences from one to the other successively is six months, or half a year according to the calendar, not accounting twenty-eight days to the month, as in other cases, because this computation is by the Ecclesiastical law, and because tempus semestre, in the stat. of West. 2. chap. 5. is intended of half a year, the whole year containing 365 days, which being divided, the half year for the patron to present is 182 days. The day in which the church becomes void is not to be reckoned as part of the six months. Wood's Inst. 160. But for the law on this head, see title Lapse.

III. How they may be gained by usurpation.

An usurpation must commence upon a presentation, not a collation, and is settled by institution six months before a quare impedit brought. But as to this head see title Usurpation and Quare impedit. Vide Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Advowson.

Moiety of the Moiety of the Church, (advocatus medietatis ecclesiae) is where there are two several patrons and two several incumbents in one and the same church, the one of the one moiety, the other of the other moiety thereof. Co. Lit. 17. b. Medietas advocacionis, a moiety of the advowson, is where two must join in the presentation, and there is but one incumbent; as where there are two parceners: and though they agree to present by turns, yet each of them hath but the moiety of the church. 1 Inst. 17. b. But vide 7 Ann. c. 18.

Abolition of Religious Houses, Where any person founded any house of religion, they had thereby the advowson or patronage thereof, like unto those who built and endowed parish churches. And sometimes these patrons had the sole nomination of the abbot, or prior, &c. either by investiture or delivery of a pastoral staff: or by direct presentation to the diocesan; or if a free election were left to the religious, a conge d'eslire, or licence for election, was first to be obtained of the patron, and the elect confirmed by him. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 147, 163.

Aerie, (aerie accipitrum) airy of goshawks, is the proper term for hawks, for that which of other birds we call a nest. Stat. 9 H. 3. c. 12. And it is generally said to come from the French word aerie, a hawk's nest. The liberty of keeping these aeries of hawks was a privilege, granted to great persons: and the preserving the aeries in the king's forests was one sort of tenure of lands by service. Anno 20 Ed. 1. Simon de Raghton & al' tenent terras in Raghton, &c. per serjantiam custodiendi acrias aufurcorum domini regis.

Estimatio Capitis, (pretium hominis) King Athelstane ordained that fines should be paid for offences committed against several persons according to their degrees and quality, by estimation of their heads. Cress. Ch. Hist. 834. Leg. Hen. 1.

Attache Robanda, A writ that lay to inquire, whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry, was of full age to receive his lands into his own hands. It was directed to the escheator of the county; but is now disused, since wards and liveries are taken away by the statute. Reg. Orig. 294.

Affeerers, (affectores) From the Fr. affirmer, to affirm. They are those that in courts-leet upon oath settle and moderate the fines and amercements imposed on such persons as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable, viz. that have no express penalty appointed by statute: and they are also appointed for moderating amercements in courts baron. The persons nominated to this office affirm upon their oaths what penalty they think in conscience ought to be inflicted on the offenders. This word is used Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 7. Where mention is made, that the justices before their rising in every sessions shall cause the amercements to be affeer'd. And this seems to be agreeable to Magna Charta, by which it is ordained, that persons are to be amerced after the manner of the fault; and the amercements shall be assessed by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage. 9 Hen. 3. cap. 14. Vide Com. Dig. 4 V. 139. tit. Leet, (O. 2.)

Affiance, The plighting of troth between a man and a woman, upon agreement of marriage: it is derived from the Latin word affidare, and signifies as much as fidem ad alium dare. Lit. sect. 39.

Affidare, To plight one's faith, or give, or swear fealty, i. e. fidelity. MS. Dom. de Farendon 22.

Affidatio Dominorum, An oath taken by the lords in parliament, anno 3 Hen. 6. Rot. Parl.

Affidatus, Signifies a tenant by fealty, also a retainer. — Affidatio accipitur pro mutua fidelitatis connexionem, tam in sponsaliis, quam inter dominum & vassallum—proles de affidato & non maritata, non est hæres. MS. Arth. Trevor Ar. Vide Spelm.

Affidari, seu affidari ad arma, to be mustered and inrolled for soldiers upon an oath of fidelity. Dom. de Farendon MS. 55.

Affidavit, Signifies in law an oath in writing; and to make affidavit of a thing, is to testify it upon oath. An affidavit, generally speaking, is an oath in writing, sworn before some person who hath authority to administer such oath: and the true place of habitation, and true addition of every person who shall make an affidavit, is to be inserted in his affidavit. 1 Lill. Abr. 44, 46: Affidavits ought to set forth the matter of fact only, which the party intends to prove by his affidavit; and not to declare the merits of the cause, of which the court is to judge. 21 Car. 1. B. R. The plaintiff or defendant may take affidavit in a cause depending; yet it will not be admitted in evidence at the trial, but only upon motions. 1 Lill. 44. When an affidavit hath been read in court, it ought to be filed, that the other may see it, and take a copy. Pasch. 1655. An affidavit taken before a master in Chancery will not be of any force in the court of King's Bench, or other courts, nor ought to be read there; for it ought to be made before one of the judges of the court wherein the cause is depending. Style's Rep. 455. But by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 5. The judges, &c. of the courts at Westminster by commission may empower persons in the several counties of England to take affidavits concerning matters depending in their several courts, as masters in Chancery extraordinary used to do. Where affidavits are taken by commissioners in the country, according to the statute 29 Car. 2. and 'tis express'd to be in a cause depending between two certain persons, and there is no such depending, those affidavits cannot be read, because the commissioners have no authority to take them; (and for that reason the party cannot be convicted of perjury upon them); but if there is such a cause in court, and affidavits taken concerning some collateral matter they may be read. Salk. 46f.

Affidavits are usually for certifying the service of process, or other matters touching the proceedings in a cause.

If a person exhibits a bill for the discovery of a deed, and prays relief thereupon, he must annex an affidavit to his bill, that he has not such deed in his possession, or that it is not in his power to come at it; for otherwise he takes away the jurisdiction of the common law courts, without shewing any probable cause why he should sue in equity. 1 Chan. Ca. 11, 231. 1 Vern. 59, 180, 247.

But if he seeks discovery of the deed only, or that it may be produced at a trial at law, he need not annex such affidavit to his bill; for it is not to be presumed that in either of these cases he would do so absurd a thing, as exhibit a bill, if he had the deed in his possession. 1 Vern. 180, 247.

In bills of interpleader, the party who prefers it must make affidavit that he does not collude with either of the other parties. 1 New Abr. 66.

An affidavit must set forth the matter positively, and all material circumstances attending it, that the court may judge whether the deponent's conclusion be just or not. 1 New Abr. 66.

And therefore, on motion to put off a trial for want of a material witness, it must appear that sufficient endeavours were made use of to have him at the time appointed, and that he cannot possibly be present, though he may on further time given. Farrer's. 121. Comb. 421, 422.

Upon a rule to shew cause, the plaintiff offered several new affidavits, and this diversity was taken, viz. where they contain new matter, and where they only confirm what was alledged and sworn when the rule was made; in the latter case they may be read, not in the former. 1 Salk. 461.

There being one affidavit against another relating to a judgment, the matter was referred to a trial at law upon a feigned issue, to satisfy the conscience of the court as to the fact alledged. Comberb. 399. See Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 7. for taking and swearing affidavits to be made use of in any of the courts of the county palatine of Lancaster. Vide as to modern determinations in several cases relative to affidavits, Wilson's Rep. part 1 231, 279, 335; part 2. 121, 124, 227, 371.

In what cases affidavits are made necessary by statute, see titles Statement, Wail.

Affinage, (Fr. affinage) Refining of metal, purgatio metalli; inde, fine and refine.

Affirm, (affirmare) Signifies to ratify or confirm a former law or judgment: so is the substantive affirmance used anno 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. And the verb itself by Wesl's Symbol. part 2. tit. Fines, sect. 152. 19 H. 7. cap. 20.

Affirmation, An indulgence allowed by law to the people called quakers, who in cases where an oath is required from others, may make a solemn affirmation that what they say is true; and if they make a false affirmation, they are subject to the penalties of perjury: but this relates only to oaths to the government, and on public occasions; for quakers may not give testimony in any criminal cause, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. and Stat. 22 G. 2. c. 46. See Quakers. But if a quaker will submit to take the usual oath, he may give evidence in a criminal cause.

Affixare, To set a value or price on a thing. Et quod amerciamen. predictor. tenentium afforentur & taxentur per sacramentum purum. Charta anno 1316. apud Thorn. Du Gange.

Affixatus, Appraised or valued, as things vendible in a fair or market. — Retinuit rex potestatem pardonandi et amerciamen. tam afforata, quam non afforata, id est de se quam de omnibus hominibus. Cartular. Glaston. MS. f. 58.

Afforciamen, (afforciamen) A fortress, strong hold, or other fortification. — Pro reparatione murorum & aliorum afforciamen. tam afforata, quam non afforata, id est de se quam de omnibus hominibus. Cartular. Glaston. MS. f. 58.

Affociare, To add, increase, or make stronger. — Cum iuratores in veritate dicenda sunt sibi contrarii, de consilio vrie affocietur assisa, ita quod apponantur alii iuxta numerum majoris partis quæ dissenserit. Bract. lib. 4. c. 19. viz. Let the witnesses be increased.

Afforest, (afforestare) To turn ground into a forest. Chart. de Forest. c. 1. When forest ground is turned from forest to other uses, it is called disafforested. Vide Forest.

Affray, Is derived from the Fr. word effrayer, to fright, and it formerly meant no more; as where portions appeared with armour or weapons not usually worn, to the terror of others. Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. But now it signifies a skirmish or fighting between two or more, and there must be a stroke given, or offered, or a weapon drawn, otherwise it is not an affray. 3 Inst. 158. An affray is a public offence to the terror of the king's subjects, and so called, because it affrighteth and maketh men afraid. 3 Inst. 158.

From this last definition it seemeth clearly to follow, that there may be an assault, which will not amount to an affray; as where it happens in a private place, out of the hearing or seeing of any, except the parties concerned, in which case it cannot be said to be to the terror of the people. 1 Hawk. 134.

Also it is said, that no quarrelsome or threatening words whatsoever shall amount to an affray; and that no one can justify laying his hands on those who shall barely quarrel with angry words, without coming to blows; yet it seemeth, that the constable may, at the request of the party threatened, carry the person who threatens to beat him before a justice in order to find sureties. 1 Hawk. 135.

Also, it is certain, that it is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge; or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight; as by dispersing letters to that purpose, full of reflections, and insinuating a desire to fight. 1 Hawk. 135.

But admitting that bare words do not, in the judgment of law, carry in them so much terror as to amount to an affray, yet it seems certain, that in some cases there may be an affray, where there is no actual violence; as where a man arms himself with dangerous and unusual weapons in such a manner as will naturally cause a terror to the people; which is said to have been always an offence at the common law, and is strictly prohibited by statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 3.

A constable may require affrayers to depart, and if they resist, he may call others to his assistance; who, if they refuse to assist him, may be fined and imprisoned: and a private person, or stander-by, may put a stop to an affray, and seize the offenders, where persons are assembled in a tumultuous manner to break the peace. 3 Inst. 158. H. P. C. 135. In case a person be dangerously wounded, any man may apprehend the offender, and carry him before a justice, in the same manner as a constable. Dalt. 35. In a very dangerous affray, a constable can justify commitment, till the offenders find sureties for the peace. Lamb. 139. He may likewise put the affrayers in the stocks till he can procure proper assistance to convey them to gaol. Dalt. 38.

If an affray be in an house, the constable may break open the doors to preserve the peace; and if affrayers fly to an house, and he follow with fresh suit, he may break open the doors to take them. 1 Hawk. 137.

But in cases of affrays, the constable must apprehend the persons offending before the affray is over, or else he may not do it without a warrant from a justice, except it be in an extraordinary case; as where a person is wounded dangerously. Dalt. 36. In case of a sudden affray, through passion or excess of drinking, the constable may put the persons in prison, if there be one in the vill, until the heat of their passion and intemperance is over, though he deliver them afterwards; or till he can bring them before a justice of peace, and that to avoid the present danger. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 90, 95. If a constable is hurt in an affray, he may have his remedy by action of trespass, and have good damages; but the affrayers, if they are hurt, shall have no remedy. Lamb. 141. And where any other persons receive harm from the affrayers, they may have remedy by action against them. Dalt. 35.

A justice of peace may commit affrayers, until they find sureties of the peace. And there is no doubt but that a justice of peace may and must do all such things to that purpose, which a private man or constable are either enabled or required by the law to do: but it is said, that he cannot without a warrant authorize the arrest of any person for an affray out of his own view; yet it seems clear, that in such case he may make his warrant to bring the offender before him, in order to compel him to find sureties for the peace. 1 Hawk. 137.

It is inquirable in the court leet; and punishable by justices of peace in their sessions, by fine and imprisonment. And it differs from assault, in that it is a wrong to the public; whereas assault is of a private nature. Lamb. lib. 2.

Affreightment, (affretamentum) The freight of a ship, from the French fret, which signifies the tons. Pat. 11 Hen. 4. See Charter-Party.

Affri, vel affra, Bullocks, or horses or beasts of the plough. — Viccomes liberet ci omnia catalla debitoris, exceptis bobus & affris caruæ. Westm. 2. c. 18. Et communiam pasturæ ad decem boves & duos affros in prædictis pasturis. Mon. Angl. par. 2. f. 291. And in the county of Northumberland, the people to this day call a dull or slow horse, a false aver or aser. Spelm. Gloss.

African Company, The royal African company of merchants established by king Charles II. for trading to Africa. And all persons may trade thither, as well as the company, paying 10 per cent. on exportation of goods, for maintaining the forts, &c. And the like duty upon importation; on payment of which duties they shall be protected in their trade. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. Vide Merchant. See Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 31. for extending and improving the trade to Africa, and Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 49. and also Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 40. for application of a sum of money therein mentioned, granted to his Majesty, for a compensation to the African company, for their charter, lands, forts, castles, slaves, military stores, and other effects; and to vest the lands, forts, castles, slaves, military stores, and other effects, in the company of merchants trading to Africa, &c.

Agalma, The impression or image of any thing on a seal: — ego Dunstanus hanc libertatem crucis agalmate consignavi. — Chart. Edg. Reg. pro Westminster. Eccles. anno 698.

Age, (ætas, Fr. age) In common acceptation signifies a man's life from his birth to any certain time, or the day of his death: it also hath relation to that part of time wherein men live. But in the law it is particularly used for those special times which enable persons of both sexes to do certain acts, which before through want of years and judgment they are prohibited to do. As for example; a man at twelve years of age ought to take the oath of allegiance to the king: at fourteen, which is his age of discretion, he may consent to marriage, and chuse his guardian; and at twenty-one he may alien his lands, goods and chattels: a woman at nine years of age is dowable; at twelve she may consent to marriage; at fourteen she is at years of discretion, and may chuse a guardian; and at twenty-one she may alienate her lands, &c. 1 Inst. 78.

If at the time of the marriage the husband be above fourteen, and the wife under twelve, when she attains the age of twelve years, the husband may disagree as well as the wife, and so vice versa. Co. Lit. 79.

A disagreement to the marriage, before the age of consent, is of no force; for, if the husband disagree before fourteen, and marry another, the issue of the second marriage is a bastard. 1 Rol. 341. Contra Dyer 13. a. in marg. If after the age of consent, the husband or wife disagree by parol, yet cohabit as husband and wife, this amounts to an agreement. 1 Rol. 341. Vide Com. D. V. 1. tit. Baron and Feme.

There are several other ages mentioned in our antient books, relating to aid of the lord, wardship, &c. now of no use. Co. Lit. The age of twenty-one is the full age of man or woman; which enables them to contract and manage for themselves, in respect to their estates, until which time they cannot act with security to those who deal with them; for their acts are in most cases either void or voidable. Perk. But a person under twenty-one may contract for necessities suitable to his quality, and it shall bind him; also one under age may be executor of a will. 1 Inst. 171. And at fourteen years of age a person may dispose of goods and personal estate by will; though not of lands till the age of twenty-one. It hath been adjudged, that if one be born on the first of February at eleven o'clock at night, and the last of January in the one and twentieth year at one o'clock in the morning, he makes his will of lands, &c. and dies; yet such will is good, for he then was of age. Mod. Caf. 260. A person under the age of twenty-one may make a purchase; but at his full age he may agree or disagree to it. 1 Inst. 2. 6. So where persons marry, the man under the age of fourteen, or the woman within twelve, they may disagree to the marriage at those ages: and the law is the same in other cases. Persons under the age of fourteen are not generally punishable for crimes; but if they do any trespass, they must answer for the damage. 1 Inst. 247. 2 Roll. Abr. 547. As to their not being generally punishable for crimes before the age of fourteen, the rule is general, yet hath its exceptions founded on the nature of the case, and the judgment of the infant. At Bury summer assizes, in 1748, a boy of ten years of age was convicted of murder, and that with great justice and propriety, he having done a variety of acts, with that deliberation, which shewed his judgment sufficiently ripe to render him accountable for his actions. Vide the case of William York. Forster's Rep. 70, &c. Fourteen is the age by law to be a witness; and in some cases a person of nine years of age hath been allowed to give evidence. 2 Hawk. 434. None may be a member of parliament under the age of twenty-one years; and no man can be ordained priest till twenty-four; nor be a bishop till thirty years of age.

Age-Prier, (etatem precari, or etatis precatio) Is when an action being brought against a person under age for lands which he hath by descent, he by petition or motion shews the matter to the court, and prays that the action may stay till his full age, which the court generally agrees to. Terms de Ley 30. This is called parol demurrer, i. e. a staying or delaying of the plea or suit. Parol signifies the plea or suit.—Demurrer, to stay or abide. But as a purchaser, a minor shall not have age-prier: nor in a writ of assise, because it is of his own wrong, and this writ shall not be delayed; or in a writ of dower; or of partition. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. 38 Ed. 3. Hob. 342. In a writ of debt against an heir, he shall have his age, for at full age he may plead riens per descent, or a release to his ancestor, and be discharged. Danv. Abr. 259. See Parol Demurrer.

Agensfrida, The true lord or owner of any thing.—Si porcus non fuerit ibi saepius quam semel det agensfrida unum solidum. Leg. Inæ, c. 50. apud Brompt. c. 45.

Agenhine, A guest at an inn after three nights, when accounted one of the family. See Hogbenhine.

Agent and Patient, Is when a person is the doer of a thing, and the party to whom done: as where a woman endows herself of the best part of her husband's possessions, this being the sole act of herself to herself, makes her agent and patient. Also if a man be indebted unto another, and afterwards he makes the creditor his executor, and dies, the executor may retain so much of the goods of the deceased as will satisfy his debt; and by this retainer he is agent and patient, that is, the party to whom the debt is due, and the person that pays the same. But a man shall not be judge in his own cause, quia iniquum est aliquem suæ rei esse judicem. 8 Rep. 138.

Agild, Signifies to be free from penalties, not subject to the customary fine or imposition. Sax. a gild, fine multa. Leges Aluredi, cap. 6. Si utlagata officiat et occidatur, pro eo quod contra Dei rectum & regis imperium stet—jaceat agild. In Leg. Hen. 1. c. 88. Agilde was a person so vile, that whoever kill'd him was to pay no mulct for his death.

Agiler, From the Sax. a gile, an observer or informer.

Agillarius, An hey-ward, herd-ward, or keeper of cattle in a common field. Towns and villages had their hey-wards, to supervise and guard the greater cattle, or common herd of kine and oxen, and keep them within due bounds; and if these were servile tenants, they were privileged from all customary services to the lord, because they were presumed to be always attending their duty, as a shepherd on his flock. And lords of manors had likewise their heywards, to take care of the tillage, harvest work, &c. and see that there were no incroachments made on their lordships: but this is now the business of bailiffs. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 534, 576.

Agist, (from the Fr. giste, a bed or resting-place) Signifies to take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather up the money due for the same. Chart. de Foresta, 9 H. 3. c. 9. The officers appointed for this purpose are called agisters, or gist-takers, and are made by the king's letters patent: there are four of them in every forest wherein the king hath any pawnage. Manw. For. Laws 80. They are also called agistators, to take account of the cattle agisted.

Agistment, (agistamentum) Is where other men's cattle are taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week: it is so called, because the cattle are suffered agister, that is, to be levant and couchant there; and many great farms are employed to this purpose. 2 Inst. 643. Our graziers call cattle which they thus take in to keep gisments; and to gise or juice the ground, is when the occupier thereof feeds it not with his own stock, but takes in the cattle of others to agist or pasture it. Agistment is likewise the profit of such feeding in a ground or field: and extends to the depasturing of barren cattle of the owner, for which tithes shall be paid to the parson. There is agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea. Terræ agistatæ are lands whose owners are bound to keep up the sea-banks. Spelm. in Romney-Marsh.

Agitatio Animalium in Foresta, The drift of beasts in the forest. Leg. Forest.

Agius, (Gr. i. e. holy)—Ego triumphalem trophæum agie crucis impressi. Mon. Angl. p. 15, 17.

Agnus Dei, A piece of white wax in a flat oval form, like a small cake, stamp'd with the figure of the lamb, and consecrated by the pope. Agnus Dei, crosses, &c. are not permitted to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of a præmunire. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2.

Agriaria Lex, A law made by the Romans for distribution of lands among the common people.

Agreement, agreementum (aggregatio mentium) Signifies a joining together of two or more minds in any thing done, or to be done. Plowd. 17.

But I. It is to be observed, that the persons whose minds are so joined together, should be such as are capable of binding themselves by their agreements. For

A person non compos is not capable of entering into any agreement, as an agreement is an act of the understanding which they are incapable of; and therefore they are to be under the care of their curators or guardians, by a commission from the publick. 1 New Abr. 67. See title Idiots and Lunatics.

Also an infant, for the same reason, is generally incapable of contracting, except for necessities, &c. See Infant.

A wife during the intermarriage is incapable of entering into any agreement in pais, being under power of her husband. See title Baron and Feme.

The ancestor seised in fee may by his agreement bind his heir; therefore if A. agrees to sell lands, and receives part of the purchase-money, but dies before a conveyance is executed, and a bill is brought against the heir, he will be decreed to convey, and the money shall go to the executor, especially if there are more debts due than the testator's personal estate is sufficient to pay. 2 Vern. 215. Abr. Eq. 265. But

If tenant in tail agrees to convey, or bargains and sells the lands for valuable consideration, without fine or recovery, and dies before the fine or recovery be levied or suffered, the issue is not bound either in law or equity; for equity cannot set aside the statute de donis; which says, ut voluntas donatoris observetur; nor can the court set up a new manner of conveyancing, and thereby supersede fines and recoveries; for thereby the king would lose the perquisites by fines, or the writs of entry and fines for alienation. Hob. 203. 1 Chan. Ca. 171. 1 Lev. 239. 2 Vent. 350. Yet

If there be tenant in tail in equity as of a trust, or under an equitable agreement, and he for valuable consideration bargains and sells the land without fine or recovery, this shall bind his issue, because the statute de donis doth not extend to it, being an intail in equity and a creature of the court. 1 Chan. Ca. 234. 2 Chan. Ca. 64. 1 Vern. 13, 440. 2 Vern. 133, 583, 702.

II. The agreement so entered into may be of different kinds, as,

1st, An agreement executed already at the beginning; as where money is paid for the thing agreed, or other satisfaction made. 2dly, An agreement after an act done by another; as where one doth such a thing, and another person agrees to it afterwards, which is executed alio: and 3dly, An agreement executory, or to be performed in futuro. This last sort of agreement may be divided into two parts; one certain at the beginning, and the other when the certainty not appearing at first, the parties agree that the thing shall be performed upon the certainty known. Terms de Ley 31. See titles Condition, Contract, Covenant.

Agreements likewise may be either in writing or by parol.

The common law required no other solemnity in passing lands or tenements, but that of livery and seisin, which being a translatiō of the feud coram paribus curiis, and testified by them, was held an act of sufficient notoriety to direct the lord of whom to demand his services, and strangers against whom to commence their actions; but now by the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. sect. 1. it is enacted, that "all leases, estates, interests of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interests of, in or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments made or created by livery and seisin only, or by parol, and not put in writing, and signed by the parties so making or creating the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, shall have the force and effect of leases or estates at will only, and shall not either in law or equity be deemed or taken to have any other or greater force or effect; any consideration for making any such parol leases or estates, or any former usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sec. 2. "Except leases not exceeding the term of three years from the making thereof, whereupon the reversion is reserved to the landlord, during such term, shall amount unto two third parts, at the least, of the full improved value of the thing demised."

Sec. 3. Also it is enacted, that "no leases, estates or interests, either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold or customary interest of, in, to or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments shall be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party so assigning, granting or surrendering the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized; by writing or by act or operation of law."

Sec. 4. And it is further enacted, that "no action shall be brought whereby to charge any executor or administrator, upon any special promise to answer damages out of his own estate, or whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriages of another person, or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage, or upon any contract or sale of lands, tenements or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized."

Sec. 17. It is enacted, that "no contract for the sale of any goods, wares and merchandises for the price of 10*l*. sterling, or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part of payment; or that some note or memorandum, in writing, of the said bargain be made and signed by the parties to be charged, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized."

In the construction of this statute, the following points have been resolved.

That if there be a parol agreement for the purchase of lands, and a bill brought for a specific execution thereof, and the substance of the agreement set forth in the bill, and confessed by the defendant's answer, that in such case the court will decree a specific execution; because there is no danger of perjury, which was the principal thing the statute intended to prevent. Abr. Eq. 19. sed q.

Also a parol agreement which is intended to be reduced into writing, but prevented by fraud, may be decreed in equity; as if upon a marriage-treaty, instructions are given by the husband to draw a settlement, and by him privately countermanded; and afterwards he draws in the woman, by persuasions and assurances of such settlement to marry him. Abr. Eq. 19.

So where a parol agreement was concerning the lending of money on a mortgage, and the conveyance proposed was an absolute deed from the mortgagor, and a deed of defeasance from the mortgagee, and after the mortgagee had got the deed of conveyance, he refused to execute the defeasance; yet it was decreed against him on the point of fraud. Abr. Eq. 20.

Every agreement ought to be perfect, full and compleat, being the mutual consent of the parties; and should be executed with a recompence, or be so certain as to give an action or other remedy thereon. Plowd. 5. Any thing under hand and seal, which imports an agreement will amount to a covenant: and a proviso, by way of agreement, amounts likewise to a covenant; and action may be brought upon them. 1 Lev. 155. An agreement being put in writing only for remembrance, doth not change its nature; but if it be put in writing sealed and delivered, it is of greater force. Hob. 79. Where an agreement for the purchase of lands, being in writing, and signed by both the parties, but not sealed; it was held good in Chancery, and decreed to be executed. Though where a person gives a guinea, &c. earnest, without agreement in writing it is otherwise. Preced. Canc. 16, 560.

A note of an agreement, sign'd by one party only, will bind both in equity: so it is of agreements in part executed, by delivering possession of the lands, though neither party sign them. Abr. Cas. Eq. 21. But if any estate in possession or reversion be made to me, I must agree to it, before it will be settled; for I may refuse, and so avoid it: a release, deed, or bond, is made and delivered to another to my use, this will vest in me without any agreement of mine; but if I disagree to it, I make the deed void. Dyer 167. And regularly where a man hath once disagreed to the party himself, he can never after agree: an obligation being made to my use, and tendered to me, if I refuse it, and after agree again and will accept it, now this agreement afterwards will not make the obligation good, that was void by the refusal. Co. Lis. 79. 5 Rep. 119.

An agreement may be as well in the party's absence, as in his presence; but a disagreement must be to the person himself to whom made. 2 Rep. 69. When an estate is made to a feme covert, it is good till disagreement without any agreement of the husband: though a new estate granted granted to the wife where she hath an estate before, as by the taking of a new lease, and making a surrender in law, will not vest till the husband agree to it. Hob. 204. A forced agreement of the party is accounted no agreement, and therefore he that did agree to the thing shall not be compelled to perform it. 1 Lill. 48.

If an agreement be in the nature of a penalty, the courts of equity will not relieve against it; for the terms shall be judged the measure of satisfaction to the parties. Preced. Can. 102.

III. As to a remedy, for a breach, &c.

In many cases the party injured by breach of an agreement, may have a remedy either by action at Common law, or have recourse to a court of equity; but here a general rule must be observed, that wherever the matter of the bill is merely in damages, there the remedy is at law, because the damages cannot be ascertained by the conscience of the chancellor, and therefore must be settled by a jury. See Abr. Eq. 16.

But if there be matter of fraud mixt with the damages; as if A. sues B. on a covenant at law for damages, and B. files a bill for an injunction upon this equitable suggestion, that the covenant was obtained by fraud, if A. files his cross bill for relief upon that covenant, the court will retain it, because the validity of the covenant is disputed in that court, and on a head properly cognizable there: if the validity of the deed be established, the court will direct an issue for the quantum of the damages. Abr. Eq. 17. 1 Chan. Rep. 158.

So where the agreement is to do something in specie, as to convey lands, execute a deed, &c. there it will be proper to apply to a court of equity for a specific execution to which the party is intitled, if the agreement be good and sufficiently proved, when otherwise he could only recover damages at law. 1 Chan. Ca. 42.

But here it must be observed, that agreements, out of which an equity can be raised for a decree in specie, ought to be obtained with all imaginable fairness, and without any mixture tending to surprize or circumvention; and that they be not unreasonable in themselves. Abr. Eq. 17.

As where by a marriage agreement the son's intended wife was to have more than would have been left for the father (though indebted), his wife and two daughters unpreferred; the court would not decree it, principally, by reason of the extremity of it, but lest the party to his remedy at law. 2 Chan. Ca. 17.

Also in equity voluntary conveyances are good against the parties, and cannot be revoked, nor will the court interpose in behalf of one volunteer against another; but if they affect creditors, purchasers or younger children, the court will set them aside. 1 Chan. Rep. 173. 1 Vern. 100, 464.

If there be a defective conveyance, without an equitable consideration, a court of equity will not oblige the party to make it good, tho' there be a covenant for further assurances; as if a man makes a feoffment to a stranger without livery, the feoffor or heir shall not be obliged to make good that feoffment, but it shall be construed in equity to be an estate at will, as it is in law. 2 Vent. 365. 2 Vern. 40. 2 Vern. 475.

Agri, In our law, denotes arable land in the common fields. Forfeiture.

Aid, (auxilium) Is all one with the French aide, and is generally understood to be a subsidy granted to the crown. By the antient law of the land, the king and any lord of the realm, might lay an aid upon their tenants, for knight- ing an eldest son, or marriage of a daughter; but this was taken away by the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. This imposition, which was often levied in former times, seems to have descended to us from Normandy, or rather from the feudal law. Grand Custom. c. 35. It is said to differ from tax in signification; for taxes were antiently levied at the will of the lord, upon any occasion whatsoever, but aids could not be levied but where it was lawful and customary so to do; as to make the eldest son a knight, marry the eldest daughter, or to redeem the lord from prison. By stat. 34 Ed. 1. c. 1. It is ordained that the king shall levy no aid or tax without his parliament.

Aid-Prayer, (auxilium petere) A word made use of in pleading, for a petition in court to call in help from another person that hath an interest in the thing contested: this gives strength to the party praying in aid, and to the other likewise, by giving him an opportunity of avoiding a prejudice growing towards his own right. As tenant for life, by the curtesy, for term of years, &c. being impleaded, may pray in aid of him in reversion; that is, desire the court that he may be called by writ to alledge what he thinks proper for the maintenance of the right of the person calling him, and of his own. F. N. B. 50. Aid shall be granted to the defendant in ejectione firme, when the title of the land is in question: lessee for years shall have aid in trespass; and tenants at will: but tenant in tail shall not have aid of him in remainder in fee; for he himself hath the inheritance. Danv. Abr. 292. If a writ of replevin, the avowry being for a real service, aid is granted before issue; and in action of trespass after issue join'd, if there be cause, it shall be had for the defendant, tho' never for the plaintiff. Jenk. Cent. 64. Fitz. Abr. 7. There ought to be privity between a person that joins in aid and the other to whom he is joined; otherwise joinder in aid shall not be suffered. Danv. 318. There is a prayer in aid of patrons, by parsons, vicars, &c. And between coparceners, where one coparcener shall have aid of the other to recover pro rata. Co. Lit. And also servants, having done any thing lawfully in right of their masters, shall have aid of them. Terms de Ley 34.

Aid of the King, (auxilium regis) Is where the king's tenant prays aid of the king, on account of rent demanded of him by others. A city or borough, that hold a fee-farm of the king, if any thing be demanded against them which belongs thereto, they may pray in aid of the king: and the king's bailiffs, collectors, or accountants shall have aid of the king. In these cases, the proceedings are stopp'd till the king's counsel are heard to say what they think fit, for avoiding the king's prejudice: and this aid shall not in any case be granted after issue; because the king ought not to rely upon the defence made by another. Jenk. Cent. 64. Terms de Ley 35. Stat. 4 Ed. 1. and 14 Ed. 3.

Aiel, (of the French aieul, i. e. avus) Signifies a writ which lies where a man's grandfather or great grandfather (called Befaille) being seized of lands and tenements in fee-simple, the day that he died, and a stranger abateth or entrench the same day, and dispossesses the heir of his inheritance. F. N. B. 222. The aunt and the niece shall join in a writ of aiel of the seisin of their grandfather. And the writ run thus: Rex vic. &c. Prac. A. B. quod juste, &c. redd. B. & D. unum messuagium, &c. de quo D. avus præd. B. & proavus præd. D. cujus hæred. ipsi sunt, fuit seistus, &c.

Alimenta, Includes any liberty of passage, open way, water-course, &c. for the ease and accommodation of tenants. Kitch.

Al, (ald) Words which begin with al or ald in the names of places, signify antiquity; as Alborough, Aldworth, &c.

Alanerarius, A manager and keeper of dogs, for the sport of hawking, from alanus, a dog, known to the ancients. Du Fresno. But Mr. Blount renders it a falconer. — Robertus de Chedworth vice-com. Linc. liberavit lvi s. viii d. Johanni de Bellovento, pro putura septem leporarium & trium falconum & alanerarii & pro vadiis unius bracenarii. 16 E. 1.

Alba, (the alb) A surplice or white sacerdotal vest, antiently used by officiating priests.

Alba firma, This word is used by my Lord Coke, and seems to signify a tenure. — Duplex est tenura in com. Westmorland, scilicet, una per albam firmam, & alia per cornagium, &c. 2 Inst. 10.

Albergellum, The same with halberga: omnis homo, &c. habet albergellum & capellum ferreum, lanceam & gladium. It here signifies a defence for the neck. Hoveden 611.

Album, Is a word made use of for white rent, paid in silver. Rot. Parl. 6 H. 3.

Alder, Signifies the first; as alder best, is the best of all; alder lieft, the most dear.

Alderman,

Alderman, (Sax. calderman, Lat. aldermanus) Hath the same signification in general as senator, or senior: but at this day, and long since, those are called aldermen who are associates to the civil magistrate of a city or town corporate. Stat. 24 H. 8. cap. 13. An alderman ought to be an inhabitant of the place, and resident where he is chosen; and if he removes, he is incapable of doing his duty in the government of the city or place, for which he may be disfranchiz'd. Mod. Rep. 36. Alderman Langham was a freeman of the city of London, and chosen alderman of such a ward, and being summoned to the court of aldermen he appeared, and the oath to serve the office was tendered to him, but he refused to take it, in contempt of the court, &c. whereupon he was committed to Newgate; and it was held good. March Rep. 179. The aldermen of London, &c. are exempted from serving inferior offices; nor shall they be put upon assizes, or serve on juries, so long as they continue to be aldermen. 2 Cro. 585. In Spelman's Glossary we find that we had anciently a title of aldermannus totius Angliæ; witness this inscription on a tomb in Ramsey abbey — Hic requiescit D. Ailwinus incliti regis Eadgari cognatus, totius Angliæ aldermannus, & hujus sacri canobii miraculosus fundator. And this officer was in nature of Lord Chief Justice of England. Spelm. Alderman was one of the degrees of nobility among the Saxons, and signified an earl; sometimes applied to a place, it was taken for a general, with a civil jurisdiction as well as military power; which title afterwards was used for a judge, but it literally imports no more than elder.

There was likewise aldermannus hundredi: which dignity was first introduced in the reign of Hen. 1. Among his laws, cap. 8. we read, præsit autem singulis hominum novenis decimus, et toti simul hundredo unus de melioribus, et vocatur aldermannus, qui dei leges et hominum jura vigilantibus fideat observantia promovere. Du Fresne. Cowel.

Alæ Ecclesiæ, The wings or side-issles of the church, from the French Les ailes de l'Eglise. — Ad bases pilæ murus erat tabulis marmoreis compositus, qui chorum cingens & presbyterium, corpus ecclesiæ lateribus, quæ alæ vocantur, dividebat. Gervas. Dorobern' in descript. eccl. Cantuar.

Alcenarium, A sort of hawk called a lanner. See Putura.

Alcet, (Sax. alsæt) A cauldron or furnace, wherein boiling water was put for a criminal to dip his arm in up to his elbow, and there hold it for some time. Du Cange.

Alehouses, Are to be licensed by justices of peace, who take recognizances of alehouse-keepers not to suffer disorders in their houses, and they have power to put down alehouses, &c. But the act is not to restrain selling of ale in fairs. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 25. Alehouse-keepers are liable to a penalty of 20s. for keeping alehouses without licence; not exceeding 40s. nor under 10s. for selling ale in short measure; and 10s. for permitting tipling, &c. and persons retailing ale or beer, alehouse-keepers, &c. shall sell ale by a full ale quart or pint, according to the standard in the Exchequer, marked from the said standard; and sub-commissioners, or collectors of excise, are to provide substantial ale quarts and pints in every town in their divisions; and mayors and chief officers to mark measures, or forfeit 5 l. by statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. 3 Car. 1. c. 3. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 15. See Brewers.

By the 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. sect. 18. A penalty is inflicted on alehouse-keepers having licence to retail spirituous liquors, exercising particular trades, during the continuance of such licence. And by the 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. sect. 14. A penalty likewise is inflicted on publicans permitting journeymen, &c. to game in their houses.

By the 2 Geo. 2. c. 28. sect. 11. Licences are to be granted at public meetings of the justices only.

By the stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 31. Justices on granting licences are to take recognizances in 10 l. with sureties in the like sum for the maintaining good order. Licences to be granted to none, not licensed the preceding year, unless they produce certificates of their good character. Licence only to be granted to that place for which it was granted. Licences to be granted on the first of September, or within twenty days after, yearly, and to be for one year only; penalty of selling ale, &c. without a licence, first offence 40s. second offence 4 l. third offence 6 l.

By the 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. sect. 56. Ale-licences are to be duly stamped, before recognizances taken.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. sect. 12. Justices being brewers, maltsters, distillers, or victuallers, are restrained from granting licences.

This stamp duty by stat. 9 Ann. c. 23. is one shilling, and by stat. 29 Geo. 2. sect. 1. every licence is charged with a further duty or stamp of 20s. And by last-mentioned act, sect. 20. If any person shall write any licence without such stamp, he shall forfeit 10 l. with costs, to be recovered as stamp penalties; and the licence shall not be available till the duty shall be paid, and also a penalty of 5 l.

By the statutes 16 Geo. 2. c. 8. sect. 8. and 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. sect. 9. No person shall retail any distilled spirituous liquors, without a licence from the officer of excise, taken out ten days before, for which he shall pay 40s. yearly. And by statutes 16 Geo. 2. c. 8. sect. 11. and 29 Geo. 2. c. 12. sect. 22. Such persons shall be first licensed to sell ale or spirituous liquors by two or more justices of the peace. And by statutes 9 Geo. 2. c. 23. sect. 14. and 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. sect. 28, 29. The justice's clerk shall have 2s. 6 d. and no more for such licence.

Aler san jour, (Fr.) To go without day, viz. to be finally dismissed the court, because there is no further day assigned for appearance. Kitch. 146.

Ale-Silver, A rent or tribute annually paid to the lord-mayor of London, by those that sell ale within the liberty of the city. Antiq. Purvey. 183.

Ale-stake, A may-pole called ale-stake, because the country people drew much ale there: but it is not the common may-pole, but rather a long stake drove into the ground, with a sign on it, that ale was to be sold.

Ale-taster, Is an officer appointed in every court leet, sworn to look to the assize and goodness of ale and beer, &c. within the precincts of the lordship. Kitch. 46. In London there are ale-conners, who are officers appointed to taste ale and beer, &c. in the limits of the city.

Alias, A second or further writ, issued from the courts at Westminster, after a capias, &c. sued out without effect.

Alias diffus, Is the manner of description of a defendant, when sued on any specialty, as a bond, &c. where after his name, and common addition, then comes the alias dict. and describes him again by the very name and addition, whereby he is bound in the writing. Dyer 50. Jenk. Cent. 119. 'Tis unnecessary to set forth the alias dict. therefore better to omit it, as a variance may be fatal. See Misnomer.

Alien, (alienus, alienigena) One born in a strange country, out of the allegiance of the king: but a man born out of the land, so as it be within the limits of the king's obedience beyond sea; or born of English parents out of the obedience of the king, if the parents at the time of the birth were of such obedience, is no alien.

If an English merchant goes beyond sea, and takes an alien wife, the issue shall inherit him; so it is if an Englishwoman goes beyond sea and takes an alien husband, the children there born shall inherit her; for though the statute 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. be in the conjunctive, yet it hath been construed in the disjunctive to hinder this disability; and the word and being taken instead of or, as sometimes it is, it being not reasonable that the child should not inherit the parent that is of ability, for the defect of the other that is not. Cro. Car. 601, 602. Lit. Rep. 22, 24. S. C. 1 Sid. 198. S. C. cited. See Lit. Rep. 27. and Bro. tit. Denizen 6.

There are two incidents regularly that are necessary to make a subject born; first, that his parents, at the time of his birth, be under the actual obedience of the king; Secondly, that the place of his birth be within the king's dominions. 7 Rep. 18. And it is the place of the birth that makes the disability of an alien to have lands, &c. The blood is not the disability, but the place where born. Cro. Jac. 539. And if one born out of the king's obedience come and reside in England, his children, begotten and born here, are not aliens but denizens. 7 Rep.

Children

Children of an ambassador in a foreign country, by a wife being an English woman, by the Common law, are natural-born subjects, and not aliens. 7 Rep. 11. And if an English merchant living beyond sea marries a wife there, and hath a child by her, and dies, this child is born a denizen, and shall be heir to him, notwithstanding the wife be an alien. Cro. Car. 605. March 91. Those who are born in the English plantations, are subjects born. Dawo. Abr. 324.

An alien cannot hold land by descent or purchase, or be tenant by the curtesy, or in dower. 5 Rep. 502. But all persons, being the king's natural-born subjects, may inherit, as heirs to their ancestors, though their ancestors were aliens, by statute 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6. In case an alien purchase land, the king upon office found, shall have it. 1 Inst. 2. So if an alien purchase any estate of freehold in houses, lands, tenements or hereditaments, the king upon office found shall have them. If an alien be made denizen and purchase land, and die without issue, the lord of the fee shall have the escheat, and not the king. But as to a lease for years, there is a difference between a lease for years of a house for the habitation of a merchant stranger being an alien, whose king is in league with ours, and a lease for years of lands, meadows, pastures, woods, and the like. For if he take a lease for years of lands, meadows, &c. upon office found the king shall have it. But of a house for habitation, he may take a lease for years as incident to commerce, for without an habitation he cannot merchandize or trade. But if he depart or relinquish the realm, the king shall have the lease. So it is if he die possessed thereof, neither his executors or administrators shall have it, but the king: for he had it only for habitation, as necessary to his trade or traffick, and not for the benefit of his executor or administrator. But if the alien be no merchant, then the king shall have the lease for years, tho' it were for his habitation, and so it is if he be an alien enemy. 1 Inst. 2. b. This doctrine is rather obsolete.

As an alien cannot inherit himself, so he cannot be inherited; the grandfather born in England, the son an alien, the grandson born in England, the grandson shall not inherit the grandfather, because he must then represent the father, who cannot be represented; but if the father be an alien, and two brothers born in England, they may inherit each other, because the descent is immediate, and they don't take by representation of the father. 1 Sid. 193, 198. 1 Vent. 413 to 429. Hard. 224. Co. Lit. 8. Cont.

If the eldest son be an alien, the younger brother born in England shall inherit the father; otherwise it were if the eldest son were attainted, because the eldest son and all his descendants are before the younger brother, and the younger cannot inherit before that line is extinct; and it is a foreign presumption, to suppose that any of that line should come over and have children in England; but the person attainted is supposed to have all his children residing in the kingdom under the king's allegiance; therefore there is a line continuing before that of the younger brother. 1 Vent. 417. 1 Inst. 8. a. 1 Sid. 195.

For the same reason, if an alien hath four sons, the two eldest aliens, and the two younger naturalized, and one of the younger sons purchase lands and dies, the eldest brother having issue born within the realm, the younger brother, and not the issue of the eldest, shall inherit. Hard. 224.

If an alien hath a son an alien, and afterwards is made a denizen, and hath a second son, the second son shall inherit though the eldest son be alive. Cro. Jac. 539. Vide 1 Inst. 8. a. &c. very full on this subject.

If an alien enemy comes here sub salvo conductu, he may maintain an action. So if an alien amy come hither in time of peace per licentiam domini regis, as the French protestants did, and lives here sub protectione, and a war afterwards happens between the two nations, he may maintain an action, for suing is but a consequential right of protection; and therefore an alien enemy, that is here in peace under protection, may sue a bond; aliter of one commorant in his own country. 1 Salt. 46.

Aliens may obtain goods and personal estate, by trade, &c. And may maintain actions for the same; they may also have actions of assault and battery, and for support of their credit. 2 Bull. 134. But they cannot bring any real action, unless it be for an house for necessary habitation, being for the benefit of trade. 7 Rep. And an alien enemy cannot maintain any action whatsoever, nor get any thing lawfully within this realm. Terms de Ley 36.

An alien friend may be an administrator, and shall have administration of leases, as well as personal things, because he hath them in another's right, and not to his own use. Cro. Car. 8. 1 Vent. 417. S. C. cited.

But it has been long doubted, whether an alien enemy should maintain an action as executor; for on the one hand it is said, that by the policy of the law, alien enemies shall not be admitted to actions to recover effects which may be carried out of the kingdom, to weaken ourselves and enrich the enemy; and therefore public utility must be preferred to private convenience; but on the other hand it is said, that these effects of the testator are not forfeited to the king by way of reprisal, because they belong not to the alien enemy, for he is to recover them for others; and if the law allows such alien enemies to possess the effects as well as an alien friend, it must allow them power to recover, since in that there is no difference, and by consequence he must not be disabled to sue for them; if it were otherwise it would be a prejudice to the king's subjects, who could not recover their debts from the alien executor, by his not being able to get in the effects of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 683. Molloy 870. Carter 49, 191. Skin. 370.

An alien enemy coming into this kingdom, and taken in war, shall suffer death by the martial law; and not be indicted at the Common law, for the indictment must conclude contra ligeantiam suam, &c. And such was never in the protection of the king. Molloy de jur. Marit. 417. Aliens, living under the protection of the king, may have the benefit of a general pardon. Hob. 271. No alien shall be returned on any jury, nor be sworn for trial of issues between subject and subject, &c. but where an alien is party in a cause depending, the inquest of jurors are to be half denizens, and half aliens: but in cases of high treason, this is not allowed. 2 Inst. 17. An alien shall not have any vote in choice of knights of the shire, or burgesses to parliament. Hob. 270. And persons that are aliens, or born out of the realm, are incapable to be members of parliament, enjoy offices, &c. Stat. 12 W. 3. cap. 2. Aliens are to take an oath to be true to the king, and obedient to his laws. Vide 14 H. 8. 21 H. 8. cap. 16. 32 H. 8. c. 16. No alien shall be a factor abroad, in the English plantations, under penalties. Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 18. See Artificers. See Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6. for enabling subjects to inherit, notwithstanding their father and mother were aliens. And Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39. for obviating some doubts thereupon. See farther titles Denizen, Naturalization.

The most usual and best pleading in actions brought by an alien, is both exclusive and inclusive, viz. extra ligeantiam domini regis, &c. et infra ligeantiam alterius regis. 7 Rep. 16. b. cites 9 E. 4. 7. et Lib. Intrat. fo. 244. But for the pleadings under this title see title Abatement, And Com. Dig. 1 V. same title.

Alienation, (from alienare to alien) A transferring the property of a thing to another: it chiefly relates to lands and tenements; as to alien land in fee, is to sell the fee-simple thereof, &c. And to alien in mortmain, is to make over lands or tenements to a religious house or body politic; for which the king's licence is to be obtained. Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 5. Fines for alienations are taken away by statute; except fines due by particular customs of manners. 12 Car. 2. Dawo. Abr. 327. All persons who have a right to lands may generally alien them to others: but some alienations are forbidden: as an alienation by a particular tenant, such as tenant for life, &c. which incurs a forfeiture of the estate. 1 Inst. 118. For if lessee for life, by livery alieneth in fee, or makes a lease for the life of another, or gift in tail, it is a forfeiture of his estate: so if tenant in dower, tenant for another's life, tenant for years, &c. do alien for a greater estate than they lawfully may make. 1 Inst. 233, 251. Conditions in feoffments, &c. that the feoffee shall not alien, are void. 1 Inst. 206. Hob. 261. And it is the same where a man possessed of a lease for years, or other thing, gives and sells his whole property therein; upon such condition: but one may grant an estate in fee, on condition that the grantee shall not alien to a particular person, &c. And where a reversion is in the donor of an estate, he may restrain an alienation by condition. Lit. 361. Wood's Inst. 141. Estates in tail, for life, or years, where the whole interest is not parted with, may be made with condition not to alien to others; for the preservation of the lands granted in the hands of the first grantee.

Alimony, (alimonia) Signifies nourishment or maintenance; and in a legal sense, it is taken for that allowance which a married woman sues for and is entitled to; upon any occasional separation from her husband. Terms de Ley 38. Where a woman is divorced a mensa & thoro, she may sue her husband in her own name for alimony or maintenance out of the husband's estate, during the separation, either in the Chancery or Spiritual court; and it will be allowed, except it be in cases of elopement and adultery. 1 Inst. 235. a. But the Spiritual court is the proper court to sue in for alimony; and the not allowing a wife maintenance is not an offence within the statute 1 Eliz. but a neglect of the husband's duty, and a breach of his vow. 12 Rep. 30. A man may be sued in the Spiritual court for beating his wife, and he may be ordered to pay her so much per week alimony; but a prohibition hath been granted by B. R. in such a case; and the wife may have fureties of the peace for unreasonable beating her. Trin. 11 Jac. 1. Moor 874. Alimony was antiently expressed by rationabile estoverium, reasonable maintenance.—Rex vic. Bucks salutem. Præcipimus tibi quod de maritagio Emmæ de Pinkney uxoris Laurentii Penire, qui excommunicatus est, eo quod prædictam Emmam affectione maritali non trahat, eidem Emmæ rationabile estoverium suum invenias, donec idem Laurentius vir suis eam tanquam uxorem suam traxerit, ne iteratus clamor ad nos inde perveniat.—Rot. 7 Hen. 3.

Alaunds, ab alanis, Scythia gente, Hare-hounds.

Alloy, (Fr. in Lat. allaya) A word used for the tempering and mixture of other metals with silver or gold. Stat. 9 H. 5. This alloy is to augment the weight of the silver or gold, so as it may defray the charge of coining, and to make it the more fusile. A pound weight of standard gold, by the present standard in the mint, is twenty-two carats fine, and two carats alloy; and a pound weight of right standard silver consists of eleven ounces two-penny weight of fine silver, and eighteen penny weight of alloy. Lownd's Essay upon Coins, pag. 19. One penny weight of angel gold is worth four shillings and two-pence; of crown gold, three shillings and ten-pence; and one ounce of pure silver is worth five shillings and four-pence; and with alloy, five shillings. Med. Jus. tit. Coin, pag. 120.

Allegiance, allegiantia—(formerly called ligeance, from the Latin alligare & ligare, i. e. ligamen fidei) Is the sworn allegiance, or faith and obedience, which every subject owes to his prince. It is either perpetual, where one is a subject born; or where one hath the right of a subject by naturalization, &c. or it is temporary, by reason of residence in the king's dominions. To subjects born, it is an incident inseparable; and as soon as born they owe by birth-right obedience to their sovereign; and cannot be confined to any kingdom, but follows the subject wheresoever he goeth. The subjects are hence called liege people, and are bound by this allegiance to go with the king in his wars, as well within as without the kingdom. 1 Inst. 2, 329. 2 Inst. 741. All persons above the age of twelve years are to be required to take the oath of allegiance in courts-leet. And there are several statutes requiring the oath of allegiance and supremacy, &c. to be taken under penalties: justices of peace may summon persons above the age of eighteen years to take these oaths. 1 Eliz. 1 W. & M. &c. Absolving any persons from their allegiance is high treason, by 1 & 2 Eliz. For the other statutes respecting allegiance see 5 Eliz. c. 1. Feb. 5.—11 El. c. 1.—3 Jac. 1. c. 4.—7 Jac. 1. c. 6. Feb. 25 Car. 2. c. 2.—7 & 8 W. 3. c. 24. & 27.—13 &

Allegiate, To defend or justify by due course of law:—Si quis se velit allegiare secundum regis Weregildum hoc faciat. Leges Alured, cap. 4. Speint.

Aller Good, The word aller is used to make what is added to signify superlatively; as aller good is the greatest good.

Allebiare, Signifies to levy or pay an accustomed fine: Some of our antient historians mention such fines paid by persons to their lords for redemption of their daughters, or for a licence to marry them. Brady's Pref. to Eng. Hist. 64.

Allocation, (allocatio) In a legal sense is an allowance made upon account in the Exchequer; or more properly a placing or adding to a thing.

Allocations facienda, A writ for allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office; directed to the lord treasurer, and barons of the Exchequer, upon application made. Reg. Orig. 206.

Allocare Comitatu, Is a new writ of exigent allowed; before any other county court holden; on the former not being fully served, or complied with; &c. Fitz. Exig. 14.

Allodial, This is where an inheritance is held without any acknowledgment to any lord or superior; and therefore is of another nature from that which is feudal. Allodial lands are free lands, which a man enjoys without paying any fine, rent, or service to any other. See Allodium.

Alumines, (from the Fr. allumer, to lighten) Is used for one who coloureth or painteth upon paper or parchment; and the reason is, because he gives light and ornament by his colours to the letters or other figures. The word is used stat. 1 R. 3. c. 9.

Almanack, Is part of the law of England, of which the courts must take notice, in the returns of writs, &c. but the almanack to go by is that annex'd to the Book of Common Prayer. Mod. Caf. 41, 81. See Year and Stat. 24 G. 2. c. 23. and 25 Geo. 2. c. 30. for correcting the calendar and regulating the commencement of the year.

The diversity of fixed and moveable feasts was condemned per tot. cur. for we know neither the one nor the other but by the almanacks, and we are to take notice of the course of the moon. 6 Mod. 150, 160. Pasch. 3 Ann. B. R. in the case of Harvey v. Broad.—ibid. 196. S. C. and Holt Ch. J. said, that at the council of Nice they made a calculation moveable for Easter for ever, and that is received here in England, and become part of the law; and so in the calendar established by act of parliament.—2 Salk. 626. pl. 8. S. C. accordingly; per cur.

Whether such a day of the month was on a Sunday or not, and so not a dies juridicus, is triable by the country or the almanack. Dyer 182. pl. 55.

It was said that the court might judicially take notice of almanacks, and be informed by them; and cited Robert's case in the time of Lord Castine; and Coke said, that so was the case of Galery v. Banbury, and judgment accordingly. 1 Leo. 242. pl. 328. Pasch. 29 Eliz. B. R. Page v. Fawcett.—Cro. Eliz. 227. pl. 12. S. C. and held that examination by almanacks was sufficient, and a trial per pais not necessary, tho' the error assigned, viz. that the 16 Feb. on which day judgment was said to be given, was on a Sunday, was an error in fact; and the judgment was reversed.

Almaria, for armaria: The archives of a church; a library.—Omnia etiam ecclesie almaria confregit, chartas & privilegia quædam igne cremavit. Gervasi Dorob. in R. 2.

Almoner, or Almoner, (elemosynarius) An officer of the king's house, whose business it is to distribute the king's alms every day. He ought to admonish the king to bestow his alms, especially upon saints days and holidays; and he is likewise to visit the sick, widows that are poor, prisoners and other necessitous people, and to relieve them under their wants; for which purpose he hath the forfeitures of deodands, and the goods of seignior de se, allowed him by the king. Flota, lib. 2. cap. 22. The lord

Almoner has the disposition of the king's dish of meat, after it comes from the table, which he may give to whom he pleases; and he distributes four-pence in money, a two-penny loaf of bread, and a gallon of beer; or instead thereof three-pence daily at the court gate to twenty-four poor persons of the king's parish, to each of them that allowance. This officer is usually some bishop.

Almshouse, or almshouse, Saxon for alms money: It has been taken for that we call Peter Pence, first given by Ina king of the West Saxons, and antiently paid in England on the first of August. It was likewise called romekeob, rome-scot, and beorthpeneing. Selden's Hist. Tithes 217.

Almutium, A garment which covered the head and shoulders of priests. Quæruit episcopus in quali habitu esset? Responsum est, quod in tunica de Burneto & almutio sine cuculla. W. Thorn. 1330.

Alnage, (Fr. aulnage) Signifies a measure, particularly the measuring with an ell. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. cap. 5.

Alnager, or aulnager, (Fr. alner, Lat. ulniger) Is properly a measurer by the ell; and the word aulne in French significeth an ell. An aulnager with us is a public sworn officer of the king's, whose place it is to examine into the assise of all cloths, made throughout the land, and to fix seals upon them; and another branch of his office is to collect a subsidy or alnage duty granted to the king. He hath his power by Stat. 25 Ed. 3. and several other antient statutes; which appoint his fees, and inflict a punishment for putting his seal to deceitful cloth, &c. viz. a forfeiture of his office, and the value. 27 Ed. 3. 3 R. 2. But there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of clothing, who bear the distinct names of searcher, measurer, and aulnager; all which were formerly comprised in one person. 4 Inst. 31. And because the subjects of this kingdom should not be abused, an office of searching is established by act of parliament.

By 11 & 12 W 3. c. 20. Alnage duties are taken away.

Alnetum, A place where alders grow; or a grove of alder trees.—Alnetum est, ubi alni arbores crescunt.—Domesday-Book.

Alodium, In Domesday signifies a free manor: and alodarii lords of manors, or lords paramount. Quando moritur alodarius, rex inde habet relevationem terre, &c. Domesday, tit. Kent. 1 Inst. 1, 5. See Fee, and Dalrymple's Feudal Tenures.

Alroberium, A purse. This word is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2. c. 82. par. 2.

Altarage, (altaragium) The offerings made upon the altar, and also the profit that arises to the priest by reason of the altar, obventio altaris. Mich. 21 Eliz. It was declared that by altarage is meant tithes of wool, lambs, colts, calves, pigs, chickens, butter, cheese, fruits, herbs, and other small tithes with the offerings due: the case of the vicar of West-Haddon in Northamptonshire. But the word altarage at first is thought to signify no more than the casual profits arising to the priest, from the people's voluntary oblations at the altar; out of which a portion was assigned by the parson to the vicar: since that, our parsons have generally contented themselves with the greater profits of glebe, and tithes of corn and hay; and have left the small tithes to the officiating priests: and hence it is that vicarages are endowed with them. Termes de Ley 39. 2 Cro. 516.

It seems to be certain, that the religious, when they allotted the altarage in part or in whole to the vicar or chaplain, did mean only the customary and voluntary offerings at the altar, for some divine office or service of the priest, and not any share of the standing tithes, whether predial or mixt. Kenn. Paroch. Antiq. Gloss.

In the case of Franklyn and the master and brethren of St. Cross, T. 1721, it was decreed, that where altaragium is mentioned in old endowments, and supported by usage, it will extend to small tithes, but not otherwise. Bunb. 79.

Alteration, (alteratio) Is the changing of a thing: and when witnesses are examined upon exhibits, &c. they ought to remain in the office, and not to be taken back into private hands, by whom they may be altered. Hob.

Alto e Basso. By this is meant the absolute submission of all differences. Pateat universis per presentes quod Willielmus T. de Y. & Thomas G. de A. posuerunt se in alto & basso in arbitrio quatuor hominum, viz.—de quadam querela pendente, &c. Et prædicti quatuor homines judicaverunt, &c. Dat. anno 2 Hen. 5.

Amabyr, vel Amabyr, A custom in the honour of Clun, belonging to the earls of Arundel: Pretium virginittatis domina solvendum. LL. eccl. Gul. Howeli Dha, regis Walliz. Puella dicitur esse desertum regis, & ob hoc regis est de ea amvabyr habere. This custom Henry earl of Arundel released to his tenants. Anno 3 & 4 P. & M.

Amabius, A servant or client. Cowel.

Ambassador, (legatus) Is a servant of the state, representing the king in a foreign country, to take care of the public affairs. And ambassadors are either ordinary, or extraordinary; the ordinary ambassadors are those who reside in the place whither sent; and the time of their return being indefinite, so is their business uncertain, arising from emergent occasions; and commonly the protection and affairs of the merchants is their greatest care: the extraordinary ambassadors are made pro tempore, and employed upon some particular great affairs, as condolences, congratulations, or for overtures of marriage, &c. Their equipage is generally very magnificent; and they may return without requesting of leave, unless there be a restraining clause in their commission. Molloy 144.

An agent represents the affairs only of his master; but an ambassador ought to represent the greatness of his master, and his affairs. Ibid. By the laws of nations, none under the quality of a sovereign prince can send any ambassador: a king that is deprived of his kingdom and royalty, hath lost his right of legation. No subject, though ever so great, can send or receive an ambassador; and if a vice-roy does it, he will be guilty of high treason: the electors and princes of Germany have the privilege of sending and reception of ambassadors; but it is limited only to matters touching their own territories, and not of the state of the empire. It is said there can be no ambassador without letters of credence from his sovereign, to another that hath sovereign authority: and if a person be sent from a king or absolute potentate, though in his letters of credence he is termed an agent, yet he is an ambassador, he being for the public. 4 Inst. 153.

Ambassadors may, by a precaution, be warned not to come to the place where sent; and if they then do it, they shall be taken for enemies: but being once admitted, even with enemies in arms, they shall have the protection of the laws of nations, and be preserved as princes. Moll. 146. If a banished man be sent as an ambassador to the place from whence he is banished, he may not be detained or molested there. 4 Inst. 153. The killing of an ambassador has been adjudged high treason. 3 Inst. 8. Some ambassadors are allowed, by concession, to have jurisdiction over their own families; and their houses permitted to be sanctuaries: but where persons who have greatly offended fly to their houses after demand and refusal to deliver them up, they may be taken from thence. Ambassadors cannot be defended when they commit any thing against the state, or the person of the king with whom they reside. 4 Inst. 152. An ambassador, guilty of treason against the king's life, may be condemned and executed: but for other treasons, he shall be sent home, with demand to punish him, or to send him back to be punished. 4 Inst. 152. 1 Roll. Rep. 185.

If a foreign ambassador commits any crime here, which is contra jus gentium, as treason, felony, &c. or any other crime against the law of nations, he loseth the privilege of an ambassador, and is subject to punishment as a private alien; and he need not be remanded to his sovereign, but of courtesy. Dawv. Abr. 327. But if a thing be only malum prohibitum by an act of parliament, private law, or custom of the realm, and it is not contra jus gentium, an ambassador shall not be bound by them. 4 Inst. 153. And it is said ambassadors may be excused of practices against the state where they reside, (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations) because it doth not appear whether they have it in mandatis; and then they are excused by necessity of obedience. Bar. Max. 26.

By the civil law, the person of an ambassador may not be arrested; and the moveable goods of ambassadors, which are accounted an accession to their persons, cannot be seized on, as a pledge; nor for payment of debts; tho' by leave of the king or state where they are resident; but on refusal of payment, letters of request are to go to his master, &c. Molloy 157. Dawv. 328.

By our statute law, an ambassador, or public minister, or his domestic servants, registered in the secretary's office, and thence transmitted to the sheriff's office of London and Middlesex, are not to be arrested; if they are, the process shall be void, and the persons suing out and executing it shall suffer such penalties and corporal punishment as the lord chancellor or either of the chief justices shall think fit. Stat. 7 Ann. cap. 12. Also the goods of an ambassador, or of his servants, shall not be distrained. Stat. ibid.

4 Geo. 2. Widmore v. Alvarez: In the case of the French ambassador, it was ruled, that the person need not lie in the house, but he must do some actual service there.

Upon a motion to supersede a process against the defendant, upon the statute 7 Ann. as being in the service of a foreign ambassador; the court held, that to be a privileged servant within the act, it is not required that the party actually live in the ambassador's house; yet it is not enough that the party be registered in the secretary's office as a servant; but when he comes for the benefit of the act, he must shew the nature of his service, that the court may judge, whether he be a domestic servant within the meaning of the act of parliament. In this case, it was objected against the defendant, that he was a trader, and so expressly excluded from privilege by the statute: to which Mr. Solicitor General, who was counsel for the defendant, answered, that by traders within this act, must be understood such as may have the benefit of the statutes concerning bankrupts, which infants are not intitled to, as it was determined in one Whitlock's case; and that the defendant could prove he had exercised no trade since his full age. Fitzgib. Rep. 200.

A chaplain to an ambassador, who does not do any duty in the ambassador's house, shall not be protected. Seacomb v. Bowlsby. Wilf. Rep. part 1. 20.

The court of B. R. refused to allow Caroline protection, as interpreter to the ambassador from the Bay of Tripoly, not appearing that he was a domestic servant. Wilf. Rep. part 1. 78, 79.

Ambidexter, (Lat.) One that can use his left hand as well as his right; or that plays on both sides. But in a legal sense, it is taken for a juror or embracore, who takes money of both parties for giving his verdict; and such a one shall be imprisoned, never more be of a jury, and further punished at the king's pleasure. 5 Ed. 3. c. 10. Crompt. Just. 156. See Decies tantum.

Ambra, (Sax. amber, Lat. ambra) A vessel among the Saxons contained a measure of salt, butter, meal, beer, &c. Leg. Ina West Sax.

Ambry, The place where the arms, plate, vessels, and every thing which belong'd to housekeeping were kept; and probably the ambry at Westminster is so called, because formerly set apart for that use: or rather the almonery, from the Latin elemosynaria, an house adjoining to an abbey, in which the charities were laid up for the poor.

Amenable, (Fr. amener) To bring or lead unto: or amenable (from the Fr. Main, a hand) signifies tractable, that may be led or governed: and in our books it is commonly applied to a woman, that is governable by her husband. Cow. Interp. It also, in the modern sense, signifies to be responsible, or subject to answer, &c. in a court of justice.

Amendment, (emendatio) The correction of an error committed in any process, which may be amended after judgment; and if there be any error in giving the judgment, the party is driven to his writ of error; though where the fault appears to be in the clerk who writ the record, it may be amended. Terms de Ley 39.

At common law there was little room for amendments, which appears by the several statutes of amendments and jeofails, and likewise by the constitution of the courts; for, says Britton, the judges are to record the parols [or pleas] deduced before them in judgment; also, says he, Ed. 1. granted to his justices to record the pleas pleaded before them; but they are not to erase their records, nor amend them, nor record against their inrolment; nor any way suffer their records to be a warrant to justify their own misdoings, nor erase their words, nor amend them; nor record against their inrolment. This ordinance of Ed. 1. was so rigidly observed, that when justice Ingham, in his reign, moved with compassion for the circumstances of a poor man who was fined 13s. 4d. erased the record, and made it 6s. 8d. he was fined 800 marks, with which, 'tis said, a clock-house at Westminster was built, and furnished with a clock; but as to the clock, it has been denied by authors of credit. Notwithstanding what is mentioned above, there were some cases that were amendable at Common law.

Original writs are not amendable at Common law, for if the writ be not good, the party may have another: judicial writs may and have been often amended. 8 Rep. 157.

Whatever at Common law might be amended in civil cases, was at Common law amendable in criminal cases, and so it is at this day; resolved by Holt Ch. J. Powell and Powis J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Tho' misawarding of process on the roll might be amended at Common law the same term, because it was the act of the court; yet if any clerk at Common law issued out an erroneous process on a right award of the court, that was never amended in any case at the Common law. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Statutes of amendment extend only to pleadings of record, therefore pleadings while in paper, are amendable by the Common law. Antiently all pleas were ore tenor at the bar; and then, if any error was spied in them it was presently amended. Since that custom is changed, the motion to amend because all in paper, succeeded in the room of it; and it is a motion that the court cannot refuse: but they may refuse it if the party desiring it refuse to pay costs, or the amendment desired should amount to a new plea. 10 Mod. 88.

But the law respecting amendments has been much extended by the following statutes: By Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 6. It is assented, that by the misprision of a clerk in any place wheresoever it be, no process shall be annulled or discontinued, by mistaking in writing one syllable, or one letter too much or too little; but as soon as the thing is perceived, by challenge of the party, or in other manner, it shall be hastily amended in due form, without giving advantage to the party that challengeth the same, because of such misprision.

By this statute the justices had liberty, on challenge of the party, to amend the process where the clerk had mistaken one syllable or letter, and the judges afterwards construed the statute so favourably, that they extended it to a word; but they were not so well agreed, whether they could make these amendments, as well after as before judgment; for they thought their authority was determined by the judgment; and therefore to put an end to the diversity of opinions by the following statute, vin. 9 H. 5. c. 4. It is declared that the judges shall have the same power, as well after as before judgment, as long as the record in process is before them. Gill. H. C. B. 110.

This statute is confirmed by statute 4 Hen. 6. c. 3. with an exception, that it shall not extend to process on outlawry, or to records or processes in Wales. But according to 2 Sand. 40. this last exception, and the like exception in 3 Hen. 6. c. 15. seem to be annulled by the statute 22 Hen. 8. c. 26. by which it is enacted, that the laws of England shall be used, practised and executed in Wales.

Though the foregoing statutes gave the judges a greater power than they had before, yet it was found that they were too much cramped, having authority to amend nothing but process, which they did not construe in a large signification, so as to comprehend the whole proceedings in real and personal actions, and criminal and common pleas, but confined it to the issue process and jury process. 8 Co. 157. e. And therefore to enlarge the authority of the courts, the statute 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. gives power to amend amend what they shall think in their discretion to be the misprision of their clerks in any record, process, and plea, warrant of attorney, writ, panel, or return. Gilb. H. C. B. 110.

There are only two statutes of amendments, viz. the 14 Ed. 3. and 8 H. 6. the rest are reckoned to be statutes of jeofails, and not of amendments; per Powell J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14. Mich. 3 Ann. B. R. in case of The Queen v. Tutchin. — And ibid. he held that the 8 H. 6. was only to enlarge the subject-matter of 14 Ed. 3. and that 14 E. 3. extends only to process out of the roll, viz. writs that issue out of the record, and not to proceedings in the roll itself; but that the 14 E. 3. extends not to the king, because of these words (challenge of the party) and that the statute 8 H. 6. has always been construed in imitation of the act of Ed. 3. and the exception in the statute of H. 6. was only ex abundanti cautela; and all judges and sages of the law in all ages have taken it not to extend to the crown; and the cases on the other side are not to be relied upon.

Farther by Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. "The King's justices, before whom any misprision shall be found, be it in any records and processes depending before them, as well by way of error as otherwise, or in the returns of the same, by sheriffs, coroners, bailiffs of franchises, or any other, by misprision of the clerks of any of the said courts, or of the sheriffs, coroners, their clerks, or other officers clerks, or other ministers whatsoever, in writing one letter or one syllable too much or too little, shall have power to amend the same.

As these statutes only extended to what the justices should interpret the misprision of their clerks, and other officers, it was found by experience, that many just causes were overthrown for want of form, and other failings, not aided by this statute, though they were good in substance; and therefore the statutes of jeofail were made. Gilb. H. C. B. 111. See Jeofail.

By the foregoing statutes the faults and mistakes of clerks are in many cases amendable: the misprision of a clerk in matter of fact is amendable; though not in matter of law. Palm. 258. If there be a mistake in the legal form of the writ, it is not amendable: there is a diversity between the negligence and ignorance of the clerk that makes out writs; for his negligence (as if he have the copy of a bond, and do not pursue it) this shall be amended; but his ignorance in the legal course of original writs is not amendable. 8 Rep. 159. A party's name was mistaken in an original writ; and it appearing to the court that the curfitor's instructions were right, the writ was amended in court; and they amended all the proceedings after. 2 Vent. 152. Cro. Car. 74. If a thing which the plaintiff ought to have entered himself, being a matter of substance, be totally omitted, this shall not be amended; but otherwise it is if omitted only in part and misentered. Danv. Abr. 346. By the Common law a writ of error, returned and filed, could not be amended; because it would alter the record: but now by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. cap. 13. Writs of error, wherein there shall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the court where returnable. When the award of a writ of inquiry on the roll is good, the writ shall be amended by the roll. Carth. 70. The court cannot amend to make a new writ; or to alter a good writ, and adapt it to another purpose, &c. only when the writ is bad and vicious on the face of it. Mod. Caf. 263, 310.

With respect to declarations, a declaration grounded on an original writ may not be amended, if the writ be erroneous: though if it be on a bill of Middlesex or a latitat, it is amendable. 1 Lill. Abr. 67. Declarations upon any penal statutes, qui tam, &c. may not be amended after issue joined. 2 Mod. 144. And indictments of treason, and felony, writs of appeal, &c. are excepted out of the statutes of amendments; though some things in them are amendable at Common law. Mod. Caf. 269. A plaintiff may amend his declaration in matter of form after a general issue pleaded, before entry thereof, without payment of costs: if he amend in substance, he is to pay costs, or give imparlance; and if he amend after a special plea, though he would give imparlance, he must pay costs. 1 Lill. 58. A declaration in ejectment, laid the demise before the time; this was not amendable, for it would alter the issue, and make a new title in the plaintiff. 1 Salk. 48. The plaintiff declared on the statute of Winton for a robbery done to himself, when it should have been of his servants; he had leave to amend. 3 Lew. 347. If a defendant pleads a plea to the right, or in abatement, the plaintiff may amend his declaration; but not where he demurs, for this fault may be the cause of the demurrer. 1 Salk. 50. A plea, when only on paper, upon notice and payment of costs, may be amended; but if the plea be entered on parchment, it is not amendable, being a plea of record: after demurrer, and after issue joined, a plea may not be amended. A demurrer may be amended, after the parties have joined in demurrer, if it be only in paper. Styl. 48. Where a plea shall be amended, when in paper, or on record, &c. see the statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 26.

As to the amendments of records, &c. an issue entered upon record, with leave of the court may be amended, but not in a material thing, or in that which will deface the record. 1 Lill. Abr. 61. A record may be amended by the court in a small matter, after issue joined, so as the plea be not altered. Danv. Abr. 338. If on a writ of error a record is amended in another court in affirmance of the judgment, it must be amended in the court where judgment was given. Hardr. 505. Where the record of nisi prius does not agree with the original record, it may be amended after verdict, provided it do not change the issue: but a record shall not be amended to attain the jury, or prejudice the authority of the judge. Mich. 8 W. A general or special verdict may be amended by the notes of the clerk of assize in civil causes; but not in criminal actions. 1 Salk. 47. The issue roll shall be amended by the imparlance roll, which is precedent: but a roll may not be amended after verdict, when there is nothing to amend it by; tho' surplusage may be rejected, and so make it good. Cro. Car. 92. 1 Sid. 135.

A mistake of the clerk in entering a judgment; as where it was that the defendant recovered, instead of the plaintiff, &c. was ordered to be amended. Cro. Jac. 631. Hutt. 41. A judgment may be amended by the paper book signed by the master. 1 Salk. 50. At Common law, the judges may amend their judgments of the same term; and by statute of another term. 8 Rep. 156. 14 J. 3. If judgments are not well entered, on payment of costs they will be ordered to be so: when judgments are entered, 'tis said the defects therein being the act of the court, and not the misprision of the clerk, are not amendable. Golb. 104. Mistakes in returns of writs, fines and recoveries, made by mutual assent of parties may be amended. 5 Rep. 45. Judgment shall not be staid after verdict, for that an original wants form, or varies from the record in point of form, which are amendable. 5 Rep. 45. After verdict given in any court of record, there shall be no stay of judgment for want of form in any writ, or insufficient returns of sheriffs, variance in form between the original writ and declaration, &c. Stat. 32 H. 8. 18 Elix. Vide 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. Where judgment shall not be reversed for defects in form or substance. And see title Jeofail.

In the case of Newcomb v. Green, B. R. the posse was amended by the judges notes. Wilf. Rep. part 1. 33. 2 Stra. 1197. S. C.

As to amendment, and the statutes relative thereto, vide Blackst. Com. 3 V. 406, &c. And see Bathurst's Nisi Prius, 296, &c.

Amendments are usually made in affirmance of judgments; and seldom or never to destroy them: and where amendments were at Common law, the party was to pay a fine for leave to amend. 3 Salk. 29. Vide Com. D. 1 V. tit. Amendment.

Amerciament, amerciamentum, (from the Fr. merci) signifies the pecuniary punishment of an offender against the king or other lord in his court, that is found to be in miseriordia, i. e. to have offended, and to stand at the mercy of the king or lord. The author of Terms de Ley saith, that amerciament is properly a penalty assessed by the peers or equals of the party amerced, for the offence done; for which he putteth himself at the mercy of the lord.

lord. Terms de Ley 49. And by the statute of Magna Charta, a freeman is not to be amerced for a small fault, but proportionable to the offence, and that by his peers. 9 H. 3. c. 4. Amerciaments are a more merciful penalty than a fine: for which, if they are too grievous, a release may be sued by an antient writ called moderata misericordia. The difference between amerciaments and fines, is this; fines are said to be punishments certain, and grow expressly from some statute; but amerciaments are such as are arbitrarily imposed. Kitch. 78. Also fines are imposed and assessed by the court: amerciaments by the country: and no court can impose a fine, but a court of record: other courts can only amerce. 8 Rep. 39, 41.

A court-leet can amerce for public nuisances only. 1 Saund. 135. For a fine and all amerciaments in a court-leet, a distress is incident of common right: but for amerciament in a court baron, distress may not be taken but by prescription. 11 Rep. 45. When an amerciament is agreed on, the lord may have an action of debt, or distrain for it, and impound the distress, or sell it at his pleasure: but he cannot imprison for it. 8 Rep. 41, 45. Vide the case of the Duke of Bedford v. Alcock, B. R. Wilf. Rep. part 1. 248. In courts baron the amerciaments ought to be assessed; but 'tis otherwise of fines imposed by a court of record. 2 Inst. 27. An amerciament of a freeholder must be assessed by freeholders of the manor, or debt will not lie for it. Baldwin v. Judge, Wilf. Rep. 2—20. In the court baron, tenants not doing suit of court, persons making any incroachments, not performing what is ordered, or for other misdemeanors there punishable, are to be amerced: these amerciaments are made upon presentment of the jury; and if they are grounded upon a void presentment, the amercements are also void. 1 Lill. Abr. 72.

There is also amercement in pleas in the courts of record, when a defendant delays to tender the thing demanded by the king's writs, on the first day. 1 Inst. 116. And in all personal actions without force, as in debt, detinue, &c. if the plaintiff be nonsuited, barred, or his writ abate for matter of form, he shall be amerced: but if on judicial process, founded on a judgment and record, the plaintiff be nonsuited, barred, &c. he shall not be amerced. 1 Nelf. Abr. 206. And an infant, if nonsuited, is not to be amerced: 'tis otherwise when at age. Jenk. Cent. 258.

Sheriffs are to be amerced for the faults of their officers; and clerks of the peace are amercable in B. R. for gross faults in indictments removed thither. Hill. 21 Car. The amercement of the sheriff, or other officer of the king, is called amercement royal. Terms de Ley. A town shall be amerced for the escape of a murderer, in the day-time: and if the town be walled, 'tis said, it shall be subject to amercement, whether by day or night. 3 Inst. 53. Amerciaments are likewise in several other cases. See Blackst. Com. 3 V. 159.

Amicia, (the same with almutium) A cap made with goats or lambs skins: that part whereof which covered the head was square, and one part of it hung behind, and covered the neck. Monasticon, 3 tom. p. 36.

Amicus Curie, If a judge is doubtful or mistaken in matter of law, a stander-by may inform the court, as amicus curie. 2 Co. Inst. 178. In some cases, a thing is to be made appear by suggestion on the roll by motion; sometimes by pleading, and sometimes as amicus curie. 2 Keb. 548. Any one as amicus curie may move to quash a vicious indictment; for if there were a trial and verdict, judgment must be arrested. Comberb. 13. A counsel urg'd, that he might, as amicus curie, inform the court of an error in proceedings, to prevent giving false judgment; but it was denied, unless the party was present. 2 Sbourn. Rep. 297.

mous, renders a person incapable of being an evidence. Vide Glanvil, lib. 2. And see the statute 5 Eliz. cap. 9. against perjury. So a man that is outlawed, &c. is said to lose his law, i. e. is put out of the protection of the law, at least so far as relates to the suing in any of his majesty's courts of justice, tho' he may be sued.

Amortization, (amortizatio, Fr. amortissement) Is an alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain, viz. to any corporation or fraternity, and their successors, &c. And the right of amortization is a privilege or licence of taking in mortmain. Jus amortizationis est privilegium seu licentia capiendi in manum mortuam. In the statute de libertatibus perquirendis anno 27 Ed. 1. the word amortissement is used.

Amortize, (Fr. amortir) Is to alien lands in mortmain. See Mortmain, and the Stat. 7 Ed. 1. of amortizing lands.

Ampliation, (ampliatio) An enlargement, but in sense of law it is a referring of judgment, till the cause is further examined.

Amy, (amicus) In law prochein amy is the next friend to be trusted for an infant. And infants are to sue by prochein amy (i. e. next friend) or guardian, and defend by guardian. Alien amy is a foreigner here subject to some prince in friendship with us.

An, Four & waste, (Fr.) Year, day and waste; a forfeiture of lands to the king by tenants committing felony, and afterwards the land falls to the lord.

Ancestor, (antecessor) Signifies as much as predecessor, or one that has gone before in a family: but the law makes a difference between what we commonly call an ancestor and a predecessor; the one being applied to a natural person and his ancestors, and the other to a body politic and their predecessors. Co. Lit. A prepossessor of an estate hath been called ancestor.

Ancestrel, What relates to or hath been done by one's ancestors; as homage, ancestrel, &c.

Anchoy, Is a measure of brandy, &c. containing ten gallons. Lex Mercat.

Anchorage, (ancoragium) A duty taken of ships for the use of the haven where they cast anchor. MS. Arth. Trevor, Ar. The ground in ports and havens belonging to the king, no person can let any anchor fall thereon, without paying therefore to the king's officers.

Ancients, Gentlemen of the inns of court. In Gray's inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, such as have gone through, or are past their readings, are termed ancients; the inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks; and from the ancients one is yearly chosen the principal or treasurer.

Ancient Demesne, or demean (vetus patrimonium domini) Is a tenure whereby all the manors belonging to the crown in the days of St. Edward, and William, called the Conqueror, were held. The number and names of all manors, after a survey made of them, were written in the book of Domesday; and those which by that book appear to have at that time belonged to the crown, and are contained under the title terra regis, are called ancient demesne. Kitch. 98. The lands which were in the possession of Edward the Confessor, and were given away by him, are not at this day ancient demesne, nor any others, except those writ down in the book of Domesday; and therefore, whether such lands are ancient demesne or not, is to be tried only by that book. 1 Salk. 57. 4 Inst. 269. Hob. 188. 1 Brownl. 43.

But if the question is, whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demesne, this shall be tried by a jury. Salk. 56, 774. Vide Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Abatement.

Ancient demesne is pleaded as to such a manor, and issue is taken whether 'tis so or not, this shall be tried by the book of Domesday; but if issue be taken, that certain acres are parcel of the manor of H. which is ancient demesne, that shall be tried by a jury; for parcel or not parcel is matter of fact, which cannot be tried by that book. 9 Rep. case of the abbot of Strata Marcella.

Fitzherbert tells us, that tenants in ancient demesne had their tenures from ploughing the king's lands, and other works towards the maintenance of the king's freehold, on which account they had liberties granted them. F. N. B. 14, 228. And there were two sorts of these tenures and tenants; one that held their lands freely by charter; the other by copy of court-roll, according to the custom of the manor. Brit. c. 66. The tenants holding by charter cannot be impleaded out of their manor; for if they are, they may abate the writ by pleading their tenure: they are free from toll, for all things bought and sold concerning their substance and husbandry. And they may not be impanelled upon any inquest. F. N. B. 14. If tenants in ancient demesne are returned on juries, they may have a writ de non ponendis in assis, &c. and attachment against the sheriff. 1 Rep. 105. And if they are disturbed by taking duties of toll, &c. they may have writs of monstraverunt, to be discharged. These tenants are free as to their persons; and their privileges are supposed to commence by act of parliament; for they cannot be created by grant at this day. 1 Salk. 57.

Lands in ancient demesne are extendible upon a statute merchant, staple, or elegit. 4 Inst. 270. No lands ought to be accounted ancient demesne but such as are held in socage; and whether it be ancient demesne or not, shall be tried by the book of Domesday. A lessee for years cannot plead in ancient demesne: nor can a lord in action against him plead ancient demesne, for the land is frank-fee in his hands. Danv. Abr. 660. In real actions, ejectment, replevin, &c. ancient demesne is a good plea; but not in actions merely personal. Danv. 658. If in ancient demesne a writ of right close be brought, and prosecuted in nature of a formedon; a fine, levied there by the custom, is a bar: and if this judgment be reversed in C. B. that court shall only judge, that the plaintiff be restored to his action in the court of ancient demesne; unless there is some other cause, which takes away its jurisdiction. Jenk. Cent. 87. Dyer 373. A fine in the king's courts will change ancient demesne to frank-fee at Common law; so if the lord enfeoffs another of the tenancy; or if the land comes to the king, &c. 4 Inst. 270. See Fine.

But if the lord be not a party, he may have a writ of disceit, and avoid the fine or recovery; for lands in ancient demesne were not originally within the jurisdiction of the courts of Westminster; but the tenants thereof enjoy this amongst other privileges, not to be called from the business of the plough by any foreign litigation. 7 Hen. 4. 44. 1 Roll. Abr. 327.

But if the lord be party, then the lands become frank-fee, and are within the jurisdiction of the courts of Westminster, for the privilege of ancient demesne being established for the benefit of lord and tenant, they may destroy it at pleasure. 2 Roll. Abr. 324. 1 Salk. 57.

With respect to pleading, it is to be observed, that in all actions wherein if the demandant recovers, the lands would be frank-fee, ancient demesne is a good plea. 8 Hen. 35. 1 Roll. Abr. 322.

Therefore in all actions real, or where the realty may come in question, ancient demesne is a good plea; as assise, writ of ward of land, writ of account against a bailiff of a manor, writ of account against a guardian, &c. See 4 Inst. 270. 1 Roll. Abr. 322, 323.

In replevin ancient demesne is a good plea, because by indentment the freehold will come in question. Gad. 64. 1 Bulst. 108.

In an ejectiōis firmæ ancient demesne is a good plea; for by common indentment the right and title of the land will come in question; and if in this action it should not be a good plea, the ancient privileges of those tenants would be lost, inasmuch as most titles at this day are tried by ejectment. Hob. 47. 1 Bulst. 108. Hell. 177. Cro. Eliz. 826.

But in all actions merely personal, as debt upon a lease, trespass quare clausum fregit, &c. ancient demesne is no plea. Hob. 47. 5 Co. 105. Vide Com. D. 1 V. tit. Abatement.

Ancient, (Fr. ancienness, Lat. antiquitas) Eldership or seniority. This word is used in the stat. of Ireland, 14 Hen. 3.

Andena, A swath in mowing: it likewise signifies as much ground as a man can stride over at once.

Anelacius, A short knife or dagger.—Loricæ erat indutus, gestans anelacium ad lumbare. Mat. Paris 277.

Anfeldtyhde, or ansfaltible, A simple accusation; for the Saxons had two sorts of accusation, viz. simplex and triplex: that was called single, when the oath of the criminal and two more was sufficient to discharge him; but his own oath, and the oaths of five more were required to free him a triplici accusatione. Sommer. In the laws of Adelfan we read—Et si anfeldtyhde sit, immergatur manus post lapidem, vel examen usque ad Wriste. Leg. Adelfani, cap. 19. apud Brompton.

Angaria, (from the Fr. angarie, i. e. personal service) Is a troublesome vexatious duty or service which tenants were obliged to pay their lords; and they performed it in their own persons.—Terram liberam ab omniibus angariis & exactionibus, &c. MS. Elia Ashmole, arm.—Præstationes angariarum & perangariarum, plaustrorum & navium. Impressing of ships. Blount.

Angelica Vestis, A monkish garment which laymen put on a little before their deaths, that they might have the benefit of the prayers of the monks. It was from them called angelicus, because they were called angeli, who by their prayers animæ salutis succurrebant. And the word succurrendum, in our old books, is understood of one who had put on the habit, and was near death: si quis ad succurrendum metu mortis se loco præterminato dederit, illic recipitur. Monasticorum, 1 tom. p. 632.

Angel, Signifies, in the computation of money, ten shillings of English coin.

Angild, (angildum) The bare single valuation or compensation of a criminal; from the Sax. an one, and gild, payment, mulct, or fine. Una solutio, si villanus furatus fuerit, &c. Et habeas plegium, admonsas eum de angildo. Twigild was the double mulct or fine; and trigild the treble, according to the rated ability of the person. Law of Ina, c. 20. Spelm.

Anblote, A single tribute or tax. The words anblote and anset are mentioned in the laws of William the Conqueror; and their sense is, that every one should pay according to the custom of the country, his part and share, as scot and lot, &c. Leg. W. 1. c. 64.

Aniens, (Fr.) Void, being of no force. F. N. B. 214.

Annales, Yearlings, or young cattle of the first year.—Vituli primo anno postquam nati sunt, vituli vocantur; secundum compoto annales vocantur; tertio bovici; quarto bovetti.—Regule compoti domus de Wyndon, MS.

Annats, (annates) This word has the same meaning with first-fruits, anno 25 H. 8. c. 20. The reason of the name is, because the rate of the first-fruits paid for spiritual livings, is after the value of one year's profit. Annates more sua appellant primos fructus unius anni sacerdotii vacantis, aut dimidium eorum partem. Pol. Virgil de Invent. rer. lib. 8. c. 2.

Annealing of Tile, (anno 17 Ed. 4.) From the Sax. analan, accendere, signifies the burning or hardening of tile.

Anniented, (from the Fr. annentir) Abrogated, frustrated, or brought to nothing. Lit. 3. c. sect. 741.

Anniversary Days, (dies anniversarii) Solemn days appointed to be celebrated yearly in commemoration of the deaths or martyrdom of saints; or the days whereon, at the return of every year, men were wont to pray for the souls of their deceased friends, according to the custom of the Roman Catholics, mentioned in the statute of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 14. and 12 Car. 2. cap. 13. This was in use among our ancient Saxons, as you may see in Lib. Rames. sect. 134.—Anniversaria dies ideo repetitur defunctis, quoniam nescimus qualiter eorum causa habeatur in alia vita. Alcuinus's Divine Offices. The anniversary, or yearly return return of the day of the death of any person, which the religious register'd in their obituary or martyrology, and annually observ'd in gratitude to their founders and benefactors, was by our forefathers called a year-day and a mind-day, i. e. a memorial day: and tho' this proceeded from one of the trading arts of the priests, who got many a legacy for thus continuing the memorial of their friends; yet abating the superstition of it, we must confess this practice of theirs has been a great advantage to the history of men and times, by fixing the obits of great and good men.

Infant Nubile, (Lat.) When a woman is under 12 years of age, her age to marry, she is said to be infra annos nubile, and unmarried; so that it signifies the marriageable age of a woman. 2 Co. Inst. 434.

Incipit Domini, The computation of time from the incarnation of our Saviour; which is generally inserted in the dates of all public writings, with an addition of the year of the king's reign, &c. The Romans began their era of time from the building of Rome: the Grecians computed by olympiads; and the Christians reckon from the birth of Jesus Christ.

Innocentia, Innujance, or nuisance, is a word used for any hurt done to a public place, as a highway, bridge, river, &c. or to any private place, by laying any thing therein that may breed infection, by incroachments, or such like means; and it is also taken for the writ brought upon such a transgression. This word is mentioned anno 22 H. 8. c. 5. Vide Nuisance and Highways.

Inquisitio Penstone, An ancient writ for providing the king's chaplain unprovided with a pension. It was brought where the king had due to him an annual pension from an abbot or prior, for any of his chaplains whom he should nominate, (being unprovided of livings) to demand the same of such abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 165, 307.

Annuit, A word signifying the yearly rent or income of a prebendary.

Annuitus, A yearly stipend assigned to a priest for celebrating an anniversary, or for saying continued masses one year, for the soul of a deceased person. Inhibemus quoque districtius ne aliquis rector ecclesie faciat hujusmodi pactum cum suo sacerdote, addidit: quod ipse sacerdos, prater cetera stipendia poterit recipere annualia & triennalia. Conf. Rob. Grostest Episcopi Lincoln. in Append. ad Fascic. P. 411.

Annuitus, (annuus redditus) Is a yearly rent, payable for term of years, life, or in fee; and it is used for a writ that lies against a person for recovery of such rent. Reg. Orig. 158. Annuitus hath also been defined to be a yearly payment of a certain sum of money, granted to another for life, &c. to be received of the grantor or his heirs, so that no freehold be charged therewith; whereof a man shall never have assize or other action, but a writ of annuitus. Terms de Ley 44. Comm. D. 1 V. tit. Action, &c.

To make a good grant of an annuitus, no particular technical mode of expression is necessary. For if a man grants an annuitus another, to be received out of his coffers, or to be received out of a bag of money, or to be received of a stranger, yet this is sufficient to charge his person, and the subsequent words shall be rejected. 1 Roll. Abr. 227.

So, if a man grant a rent out of his manor, when he has not any manor; this is a good annuity. 1 Roll. Abr. 227.

Or, if he grant a rent of 20l. per annum, to be received of his tenants in D. when he has not any tenant there. 1 Roll. Abr. 227.

If a man grant a rent out of land, in which he has nothing, proviso that he be not charged for this in a writ of annuitus, it shall be a good annuity; for the proviso, being repugnant, is void. Co. Lit. 146. a. 2 Bull. 149.

If a man grant a rent-charge out of his land, the grantee has an election to take it as a rent, or as an annuity. Lit. Abr. 219. 2 Bull. 148.

The transitive called Doctor and Student, dial. 1. cap. 3. shows several differences between a rent and an annuity, viz. that every rent is issuing out of land; but an annuity chargeth the person only, as the grantor and his heirs, who have assize by default: for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuitus; but of a rent the same remedy lies as for lands; and an annuity is never taken for assize, because it is no freehold in law; nor shall it be put in execution upon a statute merchant, staple, or elegit, as a rent issuing out of land may. Dyer 345. 2 Rep. 144. If no lands are bound for the payment of an annuity, a distress may not be taken for it. Dyer 65.

And hence it is, that if a rent be granted out of lands, with a proviso that the person of the grantor shall not be charged, that this proviso is void, because the grantee, having no distress given by the deed for the recovery of the rent, would be without any manner of remedy, if the proviso took place. 6 Co. 58. b.

But if an annuity issue out of land, (which of late it often doth) the grantee may bring a writ of annuitus, and make it personal, or an assize, or distress, &c. so as to make it real. 1 Inst. 144. And if the grantee take a distress; yet he may afterwards have writ of annuitus, and discharge the land, if he do not avow the taking, which is in nature of an action. 1 Inst. 145. But if the grantee of a rent bring an assize for it, he shall never after have writ of annuitus; he having elected this to be a rent: so if the grantee of an annuity avow the taking of a distress, in a court of record. Darv. Abr. 486. And if the grantee purchase part of the land out of which an annuity is issuing, he shall never after have a writ of annuitus. Co. Lit. 148. Where a rent-charge, issuing out of lands, granted by tenant for life, &c. determines by the act of God; as an interest was vested in the grantee, it is in his election to make it a rent-charge, and so charge the lands therewith, or a personal thing to charge the person of the grantor in annuity. 2 Rep. 36. A. seised of lands in fee, he and B. grant an annuity or rent-charge to another; this prima facie is the grant of A. and confirmation of B. But the grantee may have a writ of annuitus against both. If two men grant an annuity of 20l. per ann. although the persons be several, if the deed of grant be not for them severally, yet the grantee shall have but one annuitus against them. 1 Inst. 144.

When a man recovers in a writ of annuitus, he shall not have a new writ of annuitus for the arrears due after the recovery, but a scire facias upon the judgment, the judgment being always executory. 2 Rep. 37. No writ of annuitus lies for arrearages only when an annuity is determined, but for the annuity and arrearages. 1 Inst. 285. Though if a rent-charge be granted out of a lease for years, it hath been adjudged that the grantee may bring annuitus when the lease is ended. Moor, cap. 450. Where an annuity is granted to one for life, during the term he shall have a writ of annuitus; and when that is determined, his executors may have action of debt; for the realty is then resolved into the personality. 4 Rep. 49. New Nat. Br. 278. Upon a rent created by way of reservation, no writ of annuitus lies. Darv. 483. If a man grants a rent out of his manor, or lands, or to be received of his tenants, and he hath no manor, lands, or tenants, yet it may be a good annuity, though void as to a rent. Darv. Abr. 485. A person grants to me 10l. every year, that I shall be resident in such a parish; an annuity lies for this, it being annual at my will; and it is the same if a rent be granted payable at the end of a certain number of years, though it be not annual. Ibid. 452. A grant is made by a person of an annuity to another and his heirs, without the grantor's saying for him and his heirs, this is determinable by the death of the grantor. Darv. Abr. 482. Writ of annuitus may not be had against the grantor's heir, unless the grant be for him and his heirs; and there must be assets to bind the heir, by grant of an annuity by his ancestor, when he is named. 1 Inst. 144. 1 Roll. Abr. 226. But it is otherwise in case of the grant of a rent out of land, or a grant of a rent whereof the grantor is seised, for this charges the land, but an annuity charges the person only. Br. Charge, pl. 54.

An annuity granted by a bishop with confirmation of dean and chapter, shall bind the successor of the bishop. New Nat. Br. 340. If the king grant an annuity, it must be expressed by whose hands the grantee shall receive it, as the king's bailiff, &c. or the grant will be void; for the king may not be sued, and no person is bound to pay it if not expressed in the patent. 9 H. 6. New Nat. Br. 341. If where an annuity is granted pro decimis, the grantor grantor is disturbed of his tithes, the annuity ceaseth; and so it is where any annuity is granted to a person pro consilio, and the grantee refuseth to give counsel: for where the cause and consideration of the grant amounts to a condition, and the one ceases, the other shall determine. 1 Inst. 204.

There are now very few, if any, grants of annuities, without a covenant for payment, expressed or implied; and therefore, where a distress can't be made, or is not approved of, the grantee may bring an action of covenant, and recover the arrears in damages, with costs of suit. And that action is now usually brought, real actions and writs of annuity being much out of use.

See more concerning this head under title Grant.

Ansel, or ansul. See ansel weight — De pede, pollice, cubito, & palma, de ansul, balancibus & mensuris. Thorn. Chron.

Antejuramentum, and præjuramentum. By our ancestors called juramentum calumnie; in which both the accuser and the accused were to make this oath before any trial or purgation, viz. the accuser was to swear that he would prosecute the criminal; and the accused was to make oath on the very day that he was to undergo the ordeal, that he was innocent of the crime of which he was charged. Leg. Athelstan. apud Lambard 23. If the accuser failed to take this oath, the criminal was discharged; and if the accused did not take his, he was intended to be guilty, and not admitted to purge himself. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 66.

Antistitium. A word used for monastery in our old histories. Blount.

Antisthetarius. Signifies where a man endeavours to discharge himself of the fact of which he is accused, by recriminating and charging the accuser with the same fact. This word is mentioned in the title of a chapter in the laws of Canutus, capite 47.

Apatifatio. An agreement or compact made with another. Upton, lib. 2. c. 12. — De officio militari, viz. concedimus per presentes bonum & saluum conductum, ac saluam guardiam sive securitatem apatificationis.

Apostare. To be brought to poverty. — Permisit suos spoliare patriam, apostiare vulgus. Walsingham in R. 2. It hath been used sometimes to signify, shun or avoid.

Apostare. To violate: apostare leges, and apostatate leges, wilfully to break or transgress the laws. — Qui leges apostabit terræ suæ, reus sit apud regem. Leg. Edw. Confessoris, c. 35.

Apostata Capiendo. A writ that formerly lay against one who having entered and professed some order of religion, broke out again, and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order: it was directed to the sheriff for the apprehension of the offender, and delivery of him again to his abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71, 267.

Apothecaries. Are exempted from serving offices, &c. Their medicines are to be searched and examined by the physicians chosen by the college of physicians, and if faulty shall be burnt, &c. 32 Hen. 8. c. 40. 1 M. Stat. 2. c. 9. And apothecaries to the army are to make up their chests of medicines at Apothecaries Hall, there to be openly viewed, &c. under the penalty of 40*l.* Stat. 10 Ann. cap. 14. Vide 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 4. See Physicians.

Apparator, or Apparitor. A messenger that serves the process of the spiritual court. His duty is to cite the offenders to appear; to arrest them; and to execute the sentence or decree of the judges, &c. Anno 21 Hen. 8. cap. 5. In the year 1316 Walter archbishop of Canterbury granted the following commission to an apparitor of his consistory court. — Walterus Dei gratia Cant. archiep. totius Angliæ primas, dilecto filio Willielmo de Graftone in apparitoris officio, in curia nostra Cantuar', videlicet, in consistorio ac decanatu nostro ecclesiæ beatæ Mariæ de arcubus London, ministranti salutem, gratiam & benedictionem. Personam tuam, eo quod de fidelitate in dicto officio per laudabile testimonium apud nos multipliciter commendaris, volentes prosequi cum favore, dictum apparitoris officium in curia, consistorio & decanatu prædictis perpetuo possidendum tibi conferimus per presentes: ita tamen quod te fideliter geras in officio prædicto memorato. Volentes & tibi specialiter concedentes, ut cum in ministerio dicti officii per teipsum personaliter vacare non poteris, vel absens fueris a curia, consistorio &

decanatu prædictis, nihilominus per aliam idoneam personam, quem ad hoc assignandum omnia & singula quæ dicto incumbunt officio — facere valeas, & jugiter exercere. — Dat. apud Lambith. 8 Id. Mart. 1316.

If a monition be awarded to an apparitor, to summon a man, and he upon the return of the monition avers that he had summoned him, when in truth he had not, and the defendant be thereupon excommunicated; an action on the case at Common law will lie against the apparitor for the falsehood committed by him in his office, besides the punishment inflicted on him by the ecclesiastical court for such breach of trust. Ayl. Parerg. 70. 2 Bull. 264.

Apparator, Comitatus. An officer formerly called by this name; for which the sheriffs of Buckinghamshire had a considerable yearly allowance; and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, there was an order of court for making that allowance: but the custom and reason of it are now altered. Hale's Sber. Acco. 104.

Appartement. (from the Fr. parcillement, i. e. in like manner) Signifies a resemblance or likelihood; as appartement of war. 2 R. 2. Stat. 1. c. 6.

Apparura. Furniture and implements; appertinet. dominus clamat habere omnes carrucas ferro non ligatas, & omnes carrucas cum tota apparura. Placit. in Itin. apud Cestriam 14 Hen. 7. Carrucarum apparura is plough-tackle, or all the implements belonging to a plough.

Appeal, appellum. (from the Fr. appel or appeller to accuse) Is a word used in our law for the removal of a cause from an inferior court or judge to a superior: but more commonly for the accusation of a murderer, by a party who had interest in the person killed; or of a felon by one of his accomplices. 1 Inst. 287. It signifies as much as accusatio with the Civilians; for as in the Civil law, cognizance of criminal causes is taken either upon inquisition, denunciation or accusation; so in the Common law, it is upon indictment, or appeal, indictments comprehending both inquisition and denunciation. And accusation or appeal is a lawful declaration of another man's crime, (being felony at least) before a competent judge, by one that sets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may ensue of the contrary. Bract. lib. 3. Brit. c. 22, 25. Staundf. lib. 2. cap. 6.

There were anciently several kinds of appeals, which seem obsolete at this day; as appeals of treason, which might be sued before the parliament and other courts of law, as well as before the constable and marshal, and were determinable by battle. 2 Inst. 132. Bract. 118. 2 Hawk. P. C. 161.

But appeals before the parliament are taken away by 1 H. 4. cap. 14. and those before other law-courts are become obsolete.

But as to the jurisdiction of the constable and marshal, in relation to treasons committed out of the realm, it seems to continue still in force: for in the 7th year of Charles the first, an appeal of treason, supposed to be committed beyond sea, was actually commenced before the constable and marshal; who, for want of sufficient proof to clear the truth, awarded that a duel should be fought between the parties, for the final determination of the matter. See Rushworth's Collect. part. 2. vol. 1. p. 112.

Appeals de pace, de plagis, and de imprisonment are out of use, and have been turned to actions of trespass for many hundred years past; also the whole learning of appeals of arson seems obsolete at this day. 1 Inst. 288. a.

The kinds of appeals, therefore, that seem to require any consideration at this day, are those of death, larceny, and rape, which are capital appeals, and that of mayhem, which is considered as a trespass. 1 New Abr. 122.

An appeal of death, which is now chiefly in use, is a vindictive action which the law gives a wife against her husband's murderer, and to the heir at law against one who kills his ancestor, which being the suit of the subject, the king cannot pardon. 1 New Abr. 122. And see 9 Hen. 3. c. 34. and 3 Hen. 7. c. 1.

An appeal of murder is for retribution, or satisfaction, as far as the law can give it; i. e. life for life.

By Magna Charta, c. 34. a woman can't sue an appeal for the murder of any one, but her husband.

At the Common law, before the statute 9 Hen. 3. a woman as well as a man might have had an appeal of death of any of her ancestors, and therefore the son of a woman shall at this day have an appeal, if he be heir at the death of the ancestor, for the son is not disabled, but the mother only, for the statute says, propter appellum feminæ. 2 Inst. 68.

The judges are so far bound to take notice of this statute, that if a woman brings an appeal of death of her father, or of any other besides her husband, they ought ex officio to abate it, tho' the defendant takes no exception to it. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 166. cap. 23. f. 42.

A feme shall have appeal where she shall have no dower, as where she elopes from her baron. Br. Appeal, pl. 17. cites 50 E. 3. 15. per Ingleby.

The wife is to be a wife de facto to be intitled to appeal; and if she marries again, before the appeal is brought, or whilst the same is depending, her appeal will be gone. 2 Inst. 68, 317. When a woman has judgment in appeal, of the death of her husband, she cannot have execution if she do not personally pray it: a judge went to a woman great with child, to know if she would have execution? She said, Yes, and the appellee was hanged. Jenk. Cent. 137. But if she marry after the judgment, she cannot pray execution. 2 Hawk. P. C. 164.

For the death of an ancestor who leaves no wife, the heir only can bring an appeal, and such heir must himself be innocent of the fact, he must be heir general according to the course of the Common law, and also heir male, and in his count must set forth how he is heir to the deceased. 2 Hawk. P. C. 165.

The husband shall not have an appeal for the death of his wife; but the heir only. Danv. Abr. 488. An heir shall not have appeal for the death of a man married, except the wife kill the husband; in which case the heir may prosecute the appeal. 1 Leon. 326. 1 Inst. 33.

If a wife dies within the year, the heir shall have no appeal. Keilw. 120. And if after the death of the ancestor the heir male dies, 'tis said another heir shall not have appeal. H. P. C. 182. For a person that prosecutes an appeal must be immediate heir to the ancestor killed, or his suit shall not be received. Stamdf. 59. But where an appeal lies against an heir, the next heir shall bring it. H. P. C. 182. An infant may prosecute an appeal: and it is to be brought where the felony is done, and the party wounded shall die. Stamdf. 63.

But an idiot, or person born deaf and dumb, or one attainted of treason or felony, or outlawed in a personal action, so long as such attainder or outlawry continues in force, cannot bring any appeal whatsoever. 2 Hawk. 168. H. P. C. 183. 2 Hawk. P. C. 162.

The appellant is to commence his appeal in person; but he may proceed by attorney, having a special warrant of attorney filed. 1 Salk. 60. The appeal must be brought in a year and a day after the death of the person murdered: and the count must set forth the fact, and the length and depth of the wound, the year, day, hour, place where done, and with what weapon, &c. And that the party died in a year and a day. 2 Inst. 665. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9. Principal and accessaries before and after are to be joined in appeal. Danv. Abr. 493. And this is to be observed, though the accessory is guilty in another county. 3 H. 7. c. 1.

An appeal is prosecuted two ways; either by writ, or bill: appeal by writ is when a writ is purchased out of Chancery by one for another, to the intent he appeal a third person of some felony committed by him, finding pledges that he shall do it: appeal by bill is where a man of himself gives up his accusation in writing, offering to undergo the burden of appealing the person therein named. Bracton.

This appeal may be brought by bill before the justices in the King's Bench; before justices of gaol delivery, and commissioners of oyer and terminer, &c. or before the sheriff and coroner, in the county court: but the sheriff and coroner have only power to take and enter the appeal and count; for it must be removed by Certiorari into B. R.

In appeal by original, principals and accessaries are generally charged alike without distinction, till the plaintiff counts: but 'tis otherwise in appeals by bill. Danv. 494.

There is to be but one appeal against the principal and accessory; if the principal is acquitted, it shall acquit the accessory; and both shall have damages against the appellant on a false appeal, or the accessory may bring a writ of conspiracy. 33 Hen. 6. cap. 2. 2 Inst. 383. Though where a person is acquitted on a just appeal, he may be arraigned upon indictment at the king's suit: and if a murderer be acquitted upon indictment, or found guilty and pardoned by the king, the wife or heir may bring appeal. Wood 629.

When a person is indicted for murder, and acquitted thereupon, he is to be bailed till the year and day is past, allowed for bringing the appeal, if an appeal be intended. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1.

If the defendant in appeal is attaint, or acquit: or the plaintiff nonsuit after appearance, which is peremptory, no other appeal lies. H. P. C. 188. But if the appeal is good and well taken, and afterwards fails, the defendant shall be arraigned at the suit of the king; 'tis otherwise if the appeal was never good or well taken; as if it abates for misnomer, &c. Stamdf. 147, 148. If there be an indictment and appeal depending at the same time against the same person, the appeal shall be tried first, if the appellant be ready. Kel. 107. Otherwise the king would destroy the suit of the party; for this reason the king by his pardon cannot bar an appeal. Jenk. 160. pl. 4.

The case of other appeals than of murder, as of robbery, rape, &c. are not within the statute, 3 H. 7. c. 1. And therefore auterfoits acquit, upon an indictment within the year, stands as at Common law a good bar to an appeal of robbery, or any offence other than murder or manslaughter; and yet the judges at this day never forbear to proceed upon an indictment of robbery, rape, or other offence, though within the year, because appeals of robbery especially are very rare, and of little use, since the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 11. gives restitution to the prosecutor as effectually as upon an appeal. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 250.

Where the appellant doth not prosecute his appeal; or in case he release to the defendant; the appellee may be arraigned at the king's suit. If the defendant on an indictment is convicted of manslaughter, and allowed his clergy, it will bar an appeal: though some of our books tell us the heir may lodge an appeal immediately before clergy had: and others say clergy ought to be granted, and that it is unreasonable an appeal should interpose presently to prevent judgment. 3 Inst. 131. If a person, immediately after the verdict of manslaughter, put in an appeal of murder, and before the appeal is arraigned, the defendant demands his benefit of clergy; this is a good bar to appeal, and praying of clergy, is having of clergy, though the court delay calling the party to judgment, &c. 1 Salk. 60, 62. Kel. 93. But formerly it was held, that the court might delay the calling a convict to judgment, and thereby hinder him from his clergy, and make him liable to an appeal, especially if the appeal were depending; and where the record of a conviction of manslaughter is erroneous, or insufficient, &c. the offender cannot plead the conviction and clergy had therein, in bar of an appeal or second indictment, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 378, 379. A charter of pardon is no bar of an appeal: and if the party be outlawed, &c. in appeal, and the king pardon him, a scire facias shall issue against the appellant, who may pray execution, notwithstanding such pardon; but if returned sci. fac. and he appears not, then the appellee shall upon the pardon be discharged. H. P. C. 251. A peer in appeal of murder shall not be tried by his peers, but by a common jury; though he shall upon an indictment for murder. Vide Stat. 5 H. 7. c. 1. directing appeals before the sheriff and coroner, or at King's Bench, or gaol delivery. No appeals to be pursued in parliament. 1 H. 4. c. 14.

No cessum is allowed the appellant, in appeal of death. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. In appeal the court can grant no imparlance, but it may be adjourned. 1 Sid. 325. And where where appeal of death is brought, the defendant cannot justify se defendendo; but must plead Not guilty, and the jury are to find the special matter. Bro. App. 122. 3 Salk. 37. Appeal is the nicest suit in law, for any small matter will abate it; the process must bear date the same day with the return of the writ; if it be a day afterwards, it is a discontinuance; and it varies from all other proceedings, for there can be no amendment of the writ, nor is the discontinuance of it helped by any statute. Nelf. Abr. 215.

The court ex officio will quash the writ for apparent faults appearing on the face of the writ; as where the sense is defective for want of a material word, or where it wants those words of art which the law has appropriated for the description of the offence. 2 Hawk. P. C. 184.

Also the court will abate the writ when the declaration varies from the writ in some material point, either as to the reign of the king, or as to the county wherein the fact is laid, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 184.

The declaration must set forth the offence with the utmost certainty, and likewise describe it by such words of art as the law has appropriated to the purpose; therefore if the word felonice in any appeal, murdravit in an appeal of murder, rapuit in an appeal of rape, cepit in an appeal of larceny, mayhemavit in an appeal of mayhem, be omitted, they cannot be supplied by any circumlocution.

A release of all manner of actions, or of all actions criminal, or of all actions concerning pleas of the crown, or of all appeals, or of all demands, is a good bar of any appeal; but a release of all personal actions does not bar an appeal of felony, being an action of an higher nature. Cro. Jac. 283. Yelv. 204. 2 Hawk. P. C. 196.

If the appellee pleads a special plea, which does not amount to a confession of the fact, he must at the same time plead over to the felony, except in special cases; as where such plea would be prejudicial to him, or where such plea declines the jurisdiction of the court. 2 Hawk. P. C. 196. Carth. 56.

In appeal of murder brought by the wife for the death of her husband; the appellee pleaded, that she was never lawfully married to her husband, but did not plead over to the felony; adjudged, that this plea being to be tried by the ordinary upon his certificate, whether the marriage was lawful or not, in such case the defendant need not plead over to the felony; but where the plea is triable by the Common law, he must plead over to the felony. Cro. Eliz. 224.

By statute an appellant, bringing a false appeal, shall suffer a year's imprisonment, yield damages to the party grieved, and pay a fine to the king; and being unable, those that abetted him shall be punished in like manner. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 12.

The form of an appeal of murder.

WILTS. BE it remember'd, That at the general delivery of the gaol of the lord the king, in the county of W. held for the said county at, &c. in the county aforesaid, the day, &c. in the first year of the reign of our sovereign lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, &c. before Sir F. P. and A. D. esq; &c. justices of our said lord the king assigned to hold pleas, &c. and justices of the said lord the king, his gaol there of the prisoners in the same being to deliver assigned, &c. J. B. son and heir of T. B. deceased, in his proper person, by bill earnestly appealed R. D. late of, &c. and T. E. &c. in the custody of W. C. esq; sheriff of the county aforesaid, to the bar there brought in their proper persons, of the death of the said T. B. his father; and there are pledges of prosecuting his said bill, that is to say, John Doe and Richard Roe; which said bill follows in these words: Wilts ff. J. B. son and heir of T. B. late of, &c. in the county of W. esq; in his proper person, earnestly appeals R. D. late of, &c. gentleman, and T. E. late of, &c. in custody of W. C. esq; sheriff of the county of W. aforesaid, being to the bar brought in their proper persons, of the death of the said T. B. his said father; for that the said R. D. not having God before his eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, on the day, &c. in the year of the reign, &c. with force and arms, &c. at the parish of, &c. in the county of W. aforesaid, that is to say, in a certain place called, &c. in the king's highway there, upon the said T. B. in the peace of God and of our said lord the king then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice forethought, made an assault, and the said R. D. a certain pistol of the value of ten shillings, then and there charged with gunpowder and a leaden bullet, which pistol the said R. D. in his right hand then and there had, feloniously, wilfully, and of his forethought malice, directed against the said T. B. he shot off and discharged, and with the said leaden bullet, by force of the said gunpowder out of the pistol aforesaid, so as aforesaid directed, shot and discharged, the said T. B. in and upon the right side of the breast of him the said T. B. near his right shoulder, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice forethought, struck, pierced and wounded, and then and there the said R. D. with the said bullet, so shot and discharged from the said pistol as aforesaid, in and upon the said right side of the breast of him the said T. B. near his said right shoulder, feloniously, wilfully, and of malice forethought, gave to the same T. B. one mortal wound, of the length and depth, &c. of which said mortal wound the said T. B. then and there instantly died. And the said T. E. the said day, &c. in the same year, at, &c. aforesaid, in the place aforesaid, and in the king's highway aforesaid, there feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice forethought, was present, abetting, aiding, comforting and maintaining the said R. D. the felony and murder aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, to do and commit: and so the said R. D. and T. E. the said T. B. in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of their malice forethought, killed and murdered, against the peace of our said lord the king, his crown and dignity, &c. And as soon as the said felons the said felony and murder had committed, they fled; and the said J. B. son and heir of the said T. B. made fresh pursuit after the said felons, &c. And if the said R. D. and T. E. the felony and murder aforesaid so as aforesaid done, are willing to avow and affirm, then the said J. B. is ready the said felony and murder against them the said R. D. and T. E. to prove, according as the court of our said Lord the now king here shall consider thereof, and hath found pledges to prosecute his Appeal, &c.

Appeal of Mayhem, Is the accusing one that hath maimed another: but this being generally no felony, it is in a manner but an action of trespass; and nothing is recovered by it but damages. In an action of assault and maiming, the court may increase damages, on view of the maim, &c. And though maim is not felony, in appeals and indictments of maim, the words felonice maimavit are necessary. 3 Inst. 63. Bracton calls appeal of maim appellum de plagis et maimis, and writes a whole chapter upon it. Lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 24. In an appeal of maim, the defendant pleads that the plaintiff had brought an action of trespass against him, for the same wounding, and had recovered, and damages given, &c. And this was a good plea in bar of the appeal; because in both actions damages only are to be recovered. 4 Rep. 43. And where there is a recovery in assault and battery, &c. the jury give damages according to the hurt, which was done, and it shall be intended a maim at that time; and therefore appeal of maim doth not lie. Hob. 94. 1 Leon. 318. In appeal of maim, the appellant ought not to plead in abatement of the writ, and likewise over to the maim; if he doth, he will lose the benefit of his plea to the writ. Moor 457.

Appeal of Rape, Lies where a rape is committed on the body of a woman. 3 Inst. 30. A feme covert, without her husband, may bring appeal of rape: and the Stat. 11 Hen. 4. cap. 13. gives power where a woman is ravished, and afterwards consents to it, for a husband; or a father, or next of kin, there being no husband, to bring appeal of rape: also the criminal, in such case, may be attainted at the suit of the king. 3 Inst. 131. 6 R. 2. cap. 6.

If a woman be ravish'd by her next of kin, and consents to him, and has neither husband nor father, the next of kin to him shall have the appeal; for he has disabled himself by the rape, whereby he becomes a felon. 2 Inst. 434. — Hale's Hist. P. C. 632. S. P. cites 28 H. 6. Corone 459. — 2 Hawk. P. C. 173. c. 23. f. 64. S. P.

If there be no husband, nor father, then the appeal is given to the heir, whether male or female. Hale's P. C. 186.

In appeal of rape of his feme, the defendants pleaded, Ne unques accouple in lawful matrimony, because one was affianced to the feme, and after another married her, and after she came to him who affianced her, and he married her, and she is afterwards ravished. The first who married her shall have the appeal of rape, for the first espousals are good till they are divorced for the precontract, and the opinion here is that, Ne unques accouple, &c. in this case is not a good plea; for the statute gives it to the barons, si viros habuerint; so that baron in possession shall have it, where espousals are not void. Br. Appeal, pl. 32. cites 11 H. 4. 13.

This statute, as to the husband, shall be construed strictly, and be intended of a husband in possession, tho' there be good cause of divorce; for he is her husband till a divorce be had. Contra where the marriage is void; for there he is not vir ejus, and therefore, in that case, Ne unques accouple, &c. is no plea by the best opinion, tho' contra in appeal of the death of the husband, or in demand of dower, because they are by the Common law. Br. Parliament, pl. 89. cites 11 H. 4. 14. — 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 173. cap. 23. s. 62. says, that Ne unques accouple, &c. is a good plea, and shall be tried by the bishop's certificate, who, if the marriage were unlawful by reason of a pre-contract, ought to certify against the appellant.

The statute of Westm. 1. c. 13. enacts that appeal of rape shall be brought within forty days: but by Stat. Westm. 2. c. 34. relating to this offence, no time is limited for the prosecution; so that it may be brought in any reasonable time. H. P. C. 186. Appeal of rape is to be commenced in the county where committed: and if a woman be assaulted in one county, and ravished in another, the appeal of rape lies in that county where she was ravished. H. P. C. 186. It is held, that though formerly the defendant might have his clergy, 'tis taken away by the Stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 17. Dyer 201.

Form of an Appeal of Rape.

A. B. of, &c. in his proper person earnestly appeals to the form of the statute made in the parliament of the lord Richard the second, king of England, in the sixth year of his reign hold, &c. for that, that is to say, that the said C. D. the day and year, &c. at, &c. in the county aforesaid, M. B. wife of the said A. B. feloniously ravished, and her carnally knew, against the form of the statute aforesaid, &c. And as soon as, &c. And this (the felony and rape aforesaid) the said A. B. is ready to prove against him the said C. D. as the court, &c.

Appeal of Robbery. A remedy given by the Common law, where a person is robbed of his goods, &c. to have restitution of the goods stolen: as they could not be restored on indictment at the king's suit, this appeal was judged necessary. 3 Inst. 242. If a man robbed make fresh pursuit after, and apprehend and prosecute the felon, he may bring appeal of robbery at any time afterwards. Staundf. 62.

An infant shall have an appeal of robbery. St. P. C. 60. b. cap. 9.

Appeal of felony lies against a feme covert without her baron. St. P. C. 62. cap. 11.

So it lies against an infant; and so of all others who may commit felony. St. Pl. C. 62. cap. 11.

A woman at this day may have an appeal of robbery, &c. for she is not restrained thereof. 2 Inst. 68.

Adjudged, that an appeal of robbery may be brought by the party robbed twenty years after the offence committed, and that he shall not be bound to bring it within a year and a day, as he must do in appeal of murder. 4 Leon. 16. But the courts of law would now scarce permit a prosecution after such a length of time, unless good cause could be shewn why it had not been sooner commenced, as that the offender had fled the kingdom, and was but just returned, &c. If one man robs several persons, every one of them may have appeal: likewise if the robber be attainted at the suit of one, he shall be tried at the suit of the rest, so as their appeals were commenced before the attainder;

Danw. Abr. 494. In appeal of robbery, the plaintiff must declare of all the things whereof he is robbed, or they shall be forfeited to the king; for the appellants can have restitution for no more than is mentioned in his appeal. 3 Inst. 227. By the Year-book 21 Ed. 1. 16. Restitution of goods was granted upon an outlawry, in appeal of robbery; but a person having preferred an indictment against a robber, and afterwards an appeal, on which he was outlawed, the plaintiff moved to have restitution of his goods, and it was denied. 2 Leon. 108. If the count or declaration in appeal of burglary be sufficient, and the defendant is convicted at the suit of the party upon the appeal; he shall not be again impeached for the same offence at the king's suit. 4 Rep. 39. By Stat. 21 H. 8. cap. 11. the like restitution of stolen goods may be had on indictments after attainder, as on appeals: and appeals of rape and robbery are now much out of use; but the appeal of murder still continues, and is sometimes brought. Vide as to appeal Black. Com. 4 V. 308, &c. and Hawk. Pleas of the Crown, tit. Appeal, where the subject is fully treated, and in a very masterly manner.

Appeal to Rome. This was ever esteemed so great an interruption to national justice, that even at the time the Roman Catholic religion was the religion of this kingdom it was prohibited. By the Stat. 24 Hen. 8. appealing to Rome incurs the penalty of a præmunire: and it is made treason by 13 Eliz. cap. 2.

Where an appeal in an ecclesiastical cause is made before the bishop, or his commissary, it may be removed to the archbishop; and if before an archdeacon, to the Court of Arches, and from the Arches to the archbishop; and when the cause concerns the king, appeal may be brought in fifteen days from any of the said courts to the prelates in convocation. 24 H. 8. c. 12. And the Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 19. gives appeals from the archbishop's courts to the king in Chancery, who thereupon appoints commissioners finally to determine the cause; and this is called the Court of Delegates: there is also a court of commissioners of review; which commission the king may grant as supreme head, to review the definitive sentence given on appeal in the Court of Delegates. On taking away the supremacy of the pope in this kingdom, this power was lodged in the crown, as originally belonging to it. 4 Inst. 340. The dean of Wells was deprived of his deanery, by the commissary of the bishop of Bath and Wells, from which sentence the dean appealed to the archbishop, who affirmed it; and thereupon he exhibited an appeal to the king in Chancery, but found no relief, for the king granted the deanery to one Turner. But anno 1 Mar. the deprived dean obtained another commission to the Delegates, and by their sentence was restored to his deanery; and after the death of queen Mary, 1 Eliz. Turner had a commission of review, and he was restored, though it was insisted there ought to be no farther appeal. Dyer 273. In the 39th year of queen Eliz. sentence being given in an ecclesiastical cause, the party against whom had, appealed to the archbishop, &c. who affirmed the sentence; then he appealed to the Delegates, and they repealed both the former sentences: on which the queen granted a commission ad revivendum the sentence of the Delegates, and it was held lawful. Cro. Eliz. 571. The bishop of Winchester is made visitor of Magdalen college in Oxford, by whom the president of the said college was deprived, who appealed to the queen in Chancery: resolved, that the appeal doth not lie, for 'tis out of the statutes 24 & 25 H. 8. Dyer 209. See 4 Mod. 106. See Admiral.

Appearance. In the law signifieth the defendant's filing common or special bail, when he is arrested on any process out of the courts at Westminster: and there can be no appearance in the court of B. R. but by special or common bail. There are four ways for defendants to appear to actions; in person, or by attorney; by persons of full age; and by guardians, or next friend, by infants. Show. 165.

By the Common law, the plaintiff or defendant, demandant or tenant, could not appear by attorney without the king's special warrant by writ or letters patent, but ought to follow his suit in his own proper person; by reason whereof there were but few suits. Co. Lit. 128. 2 Inst. 249. But it is now the common course for the plaintiff

Plaintiff or defendant, in all manner of actions where there may be an attorney, to appear by attorney, and put in his warrant without any writ from the king for that purpose. And therefore, generally, in all actions real, personal, and mixt, the demandant or plaintiff, tenant or defendant, may appear by attorney. F. N. B. 26.

But in every case, where the party stands in contempt, the court will not admit him to appear by attorney, but oblige him to appear in person. As if he comes in by a cepi corpus upon an exigent. F. N. B. Or, if he be outlawed. 2 Cro. 462, 616.

But by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. Persons outlawed in any case, except for treason or felony, may appear by attorney to reverse the same without bail; except where special bail shall be ordered by the court.

In all cases where process issues forth to take the person's body, if a common appearance only, and not special bail is required, there every such person may appear in court in his proper person, and file common bail. 1 Lill. Abr. 85. Hill. 22 Car. B. R.

In a capital case the party must always appear in person, and cannot plead by attorney: also in criminal offences, where an act of parliament requires that the party should appear in person; and likewise in appeal, or on attachment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 141, 373.

On an indictment, information or action, for any crime whatsoever under the degree of capital, the defendant may, by the favour of the court, appear by attorney; and this he may do as well before plea pleaded, as in the proceeding after, till conviction. 1 Lev. 146. Kelw. 165. Dyer 346. Cro. Jac. 462.

If husband and wife are sued, the husband is to make attorney for her. 2 Saund. 213.

If an idiot doth sue or defend, he cannot appear by guardian, prochein amis, or attorney, but must appear in proper person; but otherwise of him who becomes non compos mentis; for he shall appear by guardian if within age, or by attorney if of full age. Co. Lit. 135. b. 2 Inst. 390. 4 Co. 124.

A corporation aggregate of many persons cannot appear in person, but by attorney, and such appearance is good. 10 Rep. 32. in the case of Sutton's Hospital.

If a man is bound to appear in court on the first day of the term, it shall be intended the first day in common understanding, viz. the first day in full term. 1 Lill. 83. 2 Leon. 4. In case the defendant's attorney doth receive a declaration against his client from the plaintiff's attorney; this obliges the attorney to appear to it: and if an attorney has a warrant from the defendant to be his attorney in a suit depending in B. R. and he files common bail accordingly; it has been held, that he must appear by that warrant in all suits against the defendant in the same term; provided declarations are filed in the office, and copies delivered to the defendant, or his attorney, who filed the bail, before the end of the term his bail is filed. For the defendant being, after appearance and bail put in, supposed to be in custody of the marshal, the attorney that appears for him is bound to receive any declaration that is brought against him during that term. Comp. Attorn.

Attornies subscribing warrants to appear, are liable to a penalty of 5*l.* and attachment, upon non-appearance. And where an attorney promises to appear for his client, the court will compel him to appear and put in common bail, in such time as is usual by the course of the court; and that although the attorney say he hath no warrant for appearance: nor shall repealing a warrant of attorney, to delay proceedings, excuse the attorney for his not appearing, who may be compelled by the court. 1 Lill. 83, 84. The defendant's attorney is to file his warrant the same term he appears, and the plaintiff the term he declares, under penalties by Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16.

An attorney is not compellable to appear for any one, unless he take his fee, or back the warrant; after which the court will compel him to appear. 1 Salk. 87.

If an attorney appears, and judgment is entered against his client, the court will not set aside the judgment, tho' the attorney had no warrant, if the attorney be able and responsible; for the judgment is regular, and the plaintiff is not to suffer when in no default; but if the attorney be not responsible or suspicious, the judgment will be set aside; for otherwise the defendant has no remedy, and any one may be undone by that means. 1 Salk. 86.

Attachment denied by the court against an attorney, who appeared for the plaintiff without a warrant; but said an action on the case lies. Comb. 2.

In actions by original, appearances must be entered with the Filazer of the county; and if by bill, they shall be entered with the Prothonotary: and appearances and common bail are to be entered and filed by the defendant within eight days after the return of the process, on which he was arrested, &c. on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* to the plaintiff, for which the court shall forthwith award judgment and execution. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 21. If the defendant does not appear and find bail, the plaintiff's attorney is to call upon the sheriff for the return of the writ, whether the defendant be arrested, or not; and proceed accordingly.

On two nibils returned upon a scire facias scire facias, they amount to a scire feci, and the plaintiff giving role, the defendant is to appear, and judgment shall be had against him by default: and where a defendant doth not plead after appearance, judgment may be had against him. Style 208. Upon a party's appearing, errors in writs are in many cases salved, and the party may be obliged to answer as if there had been no such error. 2 Hawk. 302. Where the first process in an inferior court is a capias which ought not to be, it is salved and made good by appearance; for the defendant hath by his appearing admitted the writ to be legal. Lutw. 954. For, in inferior courts, regularly a plaint should be levied, and summons issued, and returned before suing forth the capias. On appearance, a writ hath had its end, and the plaintiff shall declare: also an appearance takes away all discontinuance, and had process before it. Jenk. Cent. 57.

By late statutes, where a defendant is served with a copy of process, in actions of debt, &c. under 10*l.* a common appearance shall be entered, or common bail filed by the plaintiff, if the defendant doth not appear within eight days after the return of the writ; on affidavit made of the service of the process. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 26. And a notice shall be indorsed on the copy of the process, of the intent and meaning of the service, for the defendant to appear, &c. by 5 Geo. 2. c. 17.

A wife may appear without her husband. Wilf. Rep. part 1. 264. A man may appear before the return of a capias ad respondendum. Id. 39. For the appearance is to the suit.

Appendant, (appendens) Is a thing of inheritance, belonging to another inheritance that is more worthy. As an advowson, common, court, &c. may be appendant to a manor: common of fishing, appendant to a freehold: land appendant to an office: a seat in a church to a house, &c. But land is not appendant to land, both being corporeal, and one thing corporeal may not be appendant to another that is corporeal; but an incorporeal thing may be appendant to it. 1 Inst. 121. 4 Rep. 86. Daw. Abr. 500. A forest may be appendant to an honour; and waifs and estrays to a leet. 1 Co. Inst. 367. And incorporeal things, advowsons, ways, courts, commons, and the like, are properly parcel of and appendant to corporeal things; as houses, lands, manors, &c. Plowd. 170. 4 Rep. 38. If tenant in tail of a manor whereunto an advowson is appendant is disseised, and the disseisor suffers an usurpation; by the disseisee's entering into the manor, he is restored to the advowson. 1 Inst. 49. But if one disseise me of common appendant belonging to my manor, and during the disseisin I sell the manor; by this the common is extinct for ever. 4 E. 3. 21. 11 Rep. 47. Common of estovers cannot be appendant to land; but to a house to be spent there. 1 Inst. 120. By the grant of a messuage, the orchard and garden will pass as appendant.

Appendants are ever by prescription, and this makes a distinction between appendants and appurtenances, for appur-appurtenances may be created in some cases at this day; as if a man at this day grant to a man and his heirs, common in such a moor for his beasts, levant or couching upon his manor; or if he grant to another common of shevers or turbary in fee-simple, to be burnt or spent within his manor; by these grants, these commons are appurtenant to the manor, and shall pass by the grant thereof; in the Civil law it is called adjunctum. Appannage, or apannage, (Fr.) Is derived from appendendo; or the German word apanage, signifying a portion. It is used for a child's part or portion; and is properly the portion of the king's younger children in France, where, by a fundamental law, called the law of apennages, the king's younger sons have duchies, counties, or baronies granted to them and their heirs, &c. the reversion being reserved to the crown, and all matters of regality as to coinage, and levying taxes in such territories. Spelman Gloss.

Appportionment, (apportionamentum) Is a dividing of a rent, &c. into parts, according as the land out of which it issues is divided among two or more. If a stranger recovers part of the land, a lessee shall pay, having regard to that recovered, and what remains in his hands. Where the lessor recovers part of the land: or enters for a forfeiture into part thereof; the rent shall be apportioned, 1 Inst. 148. If a man leases three acres, rendering rent, and afterwards grants away one acre, the rent shall be apportioned. 1 Inst. 144. Lessee for years leases for years, rendering rent, and after devises this rent to three persons, this rent may be apportioned, Danv. Abr. 505. If a lessee for life or years under rent, surrenders part of the land, the rent shall be apportioned: but where the grantee of a rent-charge purchases part of the land, there all is extinct. Moor, 231. A rent-charge, issuing out of land, may not be apportioned: nor shall things entire, as if one holds lands by service to pay yearly to the lord, at such a feast, a horse, &c. 1 Inst. 149. But if part of the land, out of which a rent-charge issues, descends to the grantee of the rent, this shall be apportioned. Danv. 507.

A grantee of a rent releases part of the rent to the grantor, this doth not extinguish the residue, but it shall be apportioned: for here the grantee dealeth not with the land, only the rent. Co. Lit. 148. On partition of lands out of which a rent is issuing, the rent shall be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 507. And where lands held by lease rendering rent are extended upon eject, one moiety of the rent shall be apportioned to the lessor. Nid. 503. If part of lands leased is surrounded by fresh water, there shall be no apportionment of rent: but if it be surrounded with the sea, there shall be an apportionment of the rent. Dyer 56. A man purchases part of the land where he hath common appurtenant, the common shall be apportioned: of common appurtenant it is otherwise, and if by the act of the party, the common is extinct. 3 Rep. 79. Common appurtenant and appurtenant may be apportioned on alienation of part of the land to which it is appendant or appurtenant. Wood's Inst. 199. If where a person has common of pasture sans number, part of the land descends to him, this being intire and uncertain cannot be apportioned: but if it had been common certain, it should have been apportioned. 1 Inst. 149. Conditions generally are intire, and cannot be apportioned by the act of the party. 1 Nels. Abr. 227. A contract may not be divided or apportioned, so as to subject a man to two actions. 1 Salt. 65.

Apportum, (from the Fr. apport) Signifies properly the revenue or profit which a thing brings in to the owner: and it was commonly used for a corody or pension. Apprentice, (apprenticus, Fr. apprenti, from apprendre to learn) Signifies a young person bound by indentures to a tradesman or artificer, who upon certain covenants is to teach him his mystery or trade: these apprentices are a kind of bond-men, differing only in that they are servants by covenant, and for a certain term, usually seven years; and they live for the most part more reputably. Smith's Rep. Adel. lib. 3. cap. 3.

It will be proper under this head to explain—

- I. Who may be bound apprentices, and in what manner; and who are compellable to receive them.
- II. How they are to be provided for and governed during their apprenticeship, and in what manner they are to be assigned, &c.
- III. What trades may not be exercised without having served an apprenticeship.
- IV. How apprentices may acquire settlements.
- V. For what offences they are punishable, and how.

I. It seems clearly agreed, that by the Common law infants, or persons under the age of twenty-one years, cannot bind themselves apprentices, in such a manner as to intitle their masters to an action of covenant, or other action against them for departing from their service, or other breaches of their indentures; which makes it necessary, according to the usual practice, to get some of their friends to be bound for the faithful discharge of their offices, according to the terms agreed on. 1 Co. 89. b. 2 Inst. 379, 380. 3 Leon. 63. Parish 15. And notwithstanding the fifth of Eliz. c. 4. enacts, that although persons bound apprentices shall be within age at the time of making their indentures, they shall be bound to serve for the years in their indentures contained, as if they were at full age at the time of making of them; it hath been held, that although an Infant may voluntarily bind himself an apprentice, and if he continue an apprentice for seven years, he may have the benefit to use his trade; yet neither at the Common law, nor by any words of the abovementioned statute, can a covenant or obligation of an infant, for his apprenticeship, bind him; but if he misbehaves himself, the master may correct him in his service, or complain to a justice of peace, to have him punished according to the statute: but no remedy lieth against an Infant upon such covenant. Cris. Car. 179. Cris. Jac. 104. S. P.

But if any one entices an apprentice from his master's service, or harbours him after notice, the master may maintain a special action on the case, against the person so doing. Vide 1 Salt. 380.

By the custom of London, an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London, by indenture with proper covenants;

A freeman's widow may take a maid apprentice for seven years, and inroll her as a youth; if she be above fourteen years old: and if an exchange woman, that hath a husband free of London, ~~and~~ such apprentice, she shall be bound to the husband; and may be made free, at the end of the apprenticeship, if she be then unmarried. lex Londonen. 48.

By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. sect. 35. The justices may compel certain persons under age to be bound as apprentices, and on refusal may commit them, &c. And by Statute 42 Eliz. c. 2. Churchwardens and overseers of the poor may bind out poor apprentices, by assent of two justices of peace. And persons receiving money with poor apprentices, where money is given for placing such out, are to give security for repayment in seven years, for the binding out others, &c. 7 Jac. 1. c. 3. And if any person refuse to accept a poor apprentice, he shall forfeit 10 l. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. Also justices of peace and churchwardens, &c. may put out poor boys apprentice to the sea-service. 2 Ann. c. 6.

As to the manner of their being bound—

By the Statute 5 El. c. 4. sect. 25. An apprentice must be bound by deed indented.

And as an apprentice can only be bound by deed, so it is necessary, according to the custom of some places, that such deed or indenture be inrolled; as in London, if the indentures be not inrolled before the chamberlain within a year, upon a petition to the mayor and aldermen, &c. a scire fac shall issue to the master, to shew cause why not inrolled; and if it was through the master's default, the apprentice may sue out his indentures, and be discharged; otherwise if through the fault of the apprentice: as if he would not come to present himself before the chamberlain, &c. for it cannot be inrolled, unless the apprentice be in court and acknowledge it. 2 Rel. Rep. 305. Palm. 361. 1 Mod. 271.

Indentures are likewise to be stamped, and are chargeable with several duties by act of parliament.

A duty of 6 d. in the pound under 50 l. and 12 d. in the pound for sums exceeding it, given with apprentices (except poor apprentices) is granted by statute; to be paid in a month, within the weekly bills of mortality, and in any other part of Great Britain, within two months after indentures executed, &c. And if the full sum agreed be not inserted, or the duty not paid, indentures shall be void, and apprentices not capable of following trades; also the masters are liable to penalties. 8 Ann. c. 9. 9 Ann. c. 21.

By the Stat. 9 Ann. c. 21. If the master shall neglect to pay the duties within the time limited, he shall forfeit 50 l. half to the king, and half, with full costs, to him who shall sue.

And by the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. cap. 22. sect. 23, 24. If he shall neglect to pay the same as aforesaid, he shall, besides all other penalties, forfeit double duty.

But there are several statutes allowing further time to pay the duties, and stamp indentures, thro' neglect omitted, &c. Stat. 6 & 7 Geo. 1. c. 2. 3 Geo. 2, &c. And acts of indemnity of this nature are usually passed every two or three years.

By the 20 G. 2. cap. 45. sect. 5. If any master, having forfeited the double duty, shall pay the same, and tender the indenture to be stamped, within two years after the determination of the apprenticeship, and before suit hath been commenced for the penalties, the indenture shall be valid, and the penalties discharged.

Se. 6, 7. And if after the master shall have forfeited the double duty, the apprentice shall in the presence of, or by writing under his hand signed in the presence of one witness, require his master to pay the same, and the master shall not do it in three months; and such apprentice shall at any time within two years after the determination of his apprenticeship pay the double duty, he may in three months after such payment, demand of his master double the sum contracted for in the indenture; and, if not paid in three months after, may recover the same by action at law, with full costs. And the apprentice immediately after payment of the said double duties, (if his apprenticeship shall not be then expired) and signifying by writing under his hand, that he desires to be discharged from his apprenticeship, shall be discharged accordingly, and shall have the same benefit of the time he hath served as he would have had in case he had been assigned, or turned over to a new master.

Se. 8. And where any prosecution shall be commenced against the master for the penalties, if the apprentice shall pay the double duty at any time in two years after the end of his apprenticeship, he may thereupon exercise his trade, and the indenture shall be valid, and may be given in evidence.

II. With regard to their being procured for, &c.

As by the Stat. 5 Eliz. the justices of peace have a power of imposing an apprentice on a master, in consequence thereof an indictment lies for disobedience to their orders, either in not receiving, or receiving and after turning off, or not providing for such apprentice; for tho' an act of parliament prescribes an easier way of proceeding by complaint; yet that does not exclude the remedy by indictment. 6 Mod. 163. 1 Salk. 381.

The justices of peace may discharge an apprentice not only on the default of the master, but also on his own default; for in such case it is but reasonable that the contracts, which were made by their authority, should be dissolved by the same power. Salk. 108. 5 Mod. 139. 2 Salk. 471.

Justices may not only discharge apprentices, but may oblige the master to refund part of the money.

It hath been held, that an order on the master to return money is good, tho' it is not averred that he had any with the apprentice; for the order being to return money, is as necessary a proof of the receipt of it, as if it had been expressly alleged: and in this case the court seemed to be of opinion, that the justices had jurisdiction as to discharging and obliging the master to refund, as well in other trades as those mentioned in the statute; and that the justices are not obliged in their orders to set forth all the steps they take in their proceeding, there being nothing in the act which makes it necessary, and that there was a known and established distinction between orders and convictions. Trin. 7 Geo. 2. in B. R. The king v. Amies.

Justices have likewise a power to settle differences between masters and apprentices.

By the Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. Any two justices, upon complaint of any apprentice put out by the parish, or with whom no more than 5 l. was paid, of any misusage, refusal of necessary provision, cruelty, or other ill treatment by his master, may summon the master to appear before them, and upon proof of the complaint on oath to their satisfaction, (whether the master be present or not, if service of the summons be proved) to discharge such apprentice by warrant or certificate, for which no fee shall be paid: and on complaint of the master against any such apprentice, touching any misdemeanour, miscarriage, or ill behaviour, the justices may punish the offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to be corrected and kept to hard labour, not exceeding a calendar month; or otherwise by discharging such offender. Either party may appeal to the sessions, and the determination there is to be final. By 31 G. 2. c. 11. This act is extended to servants in husbandry, though hired for less than a year.

With regard to the assigning of apprentices, it hath been held, that an apprentice is not assignable. He cannot be bound nor discharged without deed. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7, Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R.

But though an apprentice is not assignable, yet such assignment amounts to a contract between the two masters, that the child should serve the latter. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7. Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R. Caster v. Eccles parish.

L'kewife

Likewise, by the custom of the city of London, an apprentice may be turned over from one master to another: and if the master refuse to make the apprentice free at the end of the term, the chamberlain may make him free: in other corporations, there must be a mandamus to the mayor, &c. to make him free in such case. Danv. Abr. 421. Wood's Inst. 51.

But it hath been held, that tho' justices of peace have a jurisdiction of discharging apprentices, and may bind them to other masters, that they cannot turn them over; and therefore an order that an apprentice, whose master was dead, should serve the remainder of his time with his master's widow's second husband, was quashed; because the justices have nothing to do about turning over an apprentice; and that tho' he applied to them, that could not give them a jurisdiction. Comb. 324.

It seems agreed, that if a man be bound to instruct an apprentice in a trade for seven years, and the master dies, that the condition is dispensed with, being a thing personal; but if he be bound further, that in the mean time he will find him in meat, drink, and cloathing and other necessities, here the death of the master doth not dispense with the condition, but his executors shall be bound to perform it as far as they have assets. 1 Sid. 216. 1 Keb. 761, 820. 1 Lew. 177.

But if a person is bound apprentice by a justice of peace, and the master happens to die before the term expired, the justices have no power to oblige his executor, by their order, to receive such apprentice and maintain him; for by this method the executor is deprived of the liberty of pleading plene administravit, which he may do, in case covenant be brought against him, and must maintain the apprentice, whether he hath assets or not. Carth. 231. 1 Salk. 66. 1 Show. 405. It is said, however, that the executor or administrator may bind him to another master for the remaining part of his time. Burn 38.

But it is said, that in this case of the master's dying, by the custom of London, the executor must put the apprentice to another master of the same trade. 1 Salk. 66. per Holt Ch.]

Whatever an apprentice gains is for the use of his master; and whether he was legally bound or no, is not material, if he was an apprentice de facto. Salk. 68. For enticing an apprentice to imbezil goods, indictment will lie. 1 Salk. 330. A master may be indicted for not providing for, or turning away an apprentice. If a master gives an apprentice licence to leave him, it cannot afterwards be recalled. Mod. Caf. 70. An apprentice marries, without the master's privity, that will not justify his turning him away, but he must sue his covenant. 2 Vern. 492. By the custom of the city of London, a freeman may turn away his apprentice for gaming. Ibid. 241. Though if a master turns an apprentice away on account of negligence, &c. equity may decree him to refund part of the money given with him. 1 Vern. Rep. 460. As no apprentice can be made without writing; so none may be discharged by his master, but by writing under his hand, and with the allowance of a justice of peace, by statute. Salk. 121.

III. As to the exercising of trades.

By the Common law no man may be prohibited to work in any lawful trade, or in more trades than one, at his pleasure. 11 Co. 53.

So that without an act of parliament no man may be restrained, either from working in any lawful trade, or using diverse mysteries or trades; therefore an act of parliament made to restrain any person herein, must be taken strictly, and not favourably as acts made in affirmance of the Common law. Burn 39.

It is enacted by the 5 Eliz. cap. 4, sect. 31. "That it shall not be lawful to any person or persons, other than such as now do lawfully use or exercise any art, mystery, or manual occupation, to set up, occupy, use or exercise any craft, mystery or occupation, now used or occupied within the realm of England or Wales, except he shall have been brought up therein seven years, at the least, as an apprentice, in manner and form aforesaid; nor to set any person on work in such mystery, art or occupation, being not a workman at this day, except he shall have been apprentice, as is aforesaid; or else having served as an apprentice, as is aforesaid, shall or will become a journeyman, or hired by the year; upon pain that every person willingly offending, or doing the contrary, shall forfeit and lose for every default forty shillings for every month."

It hath been ruled, that there are many trades within the general words and equity of this act, besides those which are particularly enumerated therein; yet it seems agreed, and hath frequently been adjudged, that in every indictment, &c. it must be alledged, that it was a trade at the time of making the statute, for the words thereof are, any craft, mystery or occupation, now used, &c. from whence it seems to follow, that a new manufacture, which to all other purposes may be called a trade, is yet not a trade within this statute. 2 Salk. 611. Palm. 528. 1 Sid. 175.

Also it seems agreed, that the act only extends to such trades as imply mystery and craft, and require skill and experience; that therefore merchants, husbandmen, gardeners, &c. are not within the statute; and on this foundation it hath been held, that a hemp-dresser is not within the statute, as not requiring much learning or skill, and being what every husbandman doth use for his necessary occasions. 8 Co. 136. 2 Bull. 190. Cro. Car. 499.

It is clearly agreed, that the following the common trade of a brewer, baker, or cook, is within the statute, as unskillfulness herein may be very prejudicial to the lives and healths of his majesty's subjects; but it is at the same time agreed, that the exercising of any of these trades in a man's own house or family, or in a private person's house, is not within the restraint of the statute. 11 Co. 54. m. Cro. Car. 499. Hob. 183, 211. Moor 886. 8 Co. 129. Palm. 542. Lit. Rep. 251. Bridg. 141.

But it hath been held, that this statute doth not restrain a man from using several trades, so as he had been an apprentice to all; wherefore it indemnifies all petty chapmen in little towns and villages; because their masters kept the same mixed trades there before. Carth. 163.

A man may exercise as many trades as he hath worked at, or served as an apprentice to, for seven years. Wils. Rep. part 2. 168.

It hath been resolved, that there is no occasion for any actual binding, but that the following a trade for seven years, is a sufficient qualification within the statute. 1 Salk. 67. 2 Salk. 613.

By the statutes 2 P. & M. c. 11. 5 Eliz. c. 4. Aliens and denizens are restrained to use any handicraft or trade therein mentioned, unless they have served seven years apprenticeship within the realm, under the penalty of 40s. per month. Hurt. 132. But it hath been adjudged, that if an apprentice serve seven years beyond sea, he shall be excused from the penalties of the statute. 5 Eliz. And so if he serves seven years, tho' he was never bound. 1 Salk. 76. And apprentices going into the army in the wars, and set up their trades in the county where born, tho' they did not serve out their times. Stat. 10 & 11.

So it hath been held, that serving five years to a trade out of England and two in England, is sufficient to satisfy the statute; but that there must be a service of a full time either in England, or out of England; and therefore serving five years in any country, where by the law of the country more is not required, will not qualify a man to use the trade in England. Ca. in Law and Eq. 70.

By the statute 31 Eliz. cap. 5, sect. 7. It is enacted, "That all suits for using a trade without having been brought up in it, shall be laid and prosecuted in the general quarter sessions of the peace, or assizes in the same county where the offence shall be committed, or otherwise inquired of, heard and determined in the assizes, or general quarter sessions of the peace in the same county where such offence shall be committed, or in the leet within which it shall happen, and not in any wise out of the same county where such offence shall happen or be committed."

In the construction of this statute it hath been held, that it remains not a suit in the King's Bench or Exchequer, for such offence happening in the same county where these courts are sitting; for the negative words of the the statute are not, that such suits shall not be brought in any other court, but that they shall not be brought in any other county; and the prerogative of these high courts shall not be restrained without express words. Cro. Jac. 178. Hob. 184. 1 Salk. 373.

But where the offence is in a different county, such suits in these, or any other courts out of the proper county seem to be within the express words of the statute. Hob. 184, 327. Cro. Jac. 85.

Infants voluntarily binding themselves apprentice, and continuing seven years, shall have the benefit of their trades; but a bond for their service shall not bind them. Cro. Car. 179.

IV. As to apprentices acquiring settlements, it will be necessary to consider the following statutes.

By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. On complaint by the churchwardens or overseers within 40 days after any person shall come to settle in any parish, on any tenement, under 10l. a year; two justices (one of whom to be of the quorum) may remove him to the place where he was last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice or servant, for the space of 40 days at the least.

By 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. and 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. The said 40 days shall be reckoned, not from the time of his coming to inhabit, but from the time of his delivering notice in writing, and of the publication of such notice in the church.

And by the said statute of 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11. sect. 8. If any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture, and inhabit in any town or parish, such binding and inhabitation shall be adjudged a good settlement, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published.

By 31 Geo. 2. c. 11. No apprentice bound by any deed, writing or contract, not indented, being first legally stamped, shall be liable to be removed from the town, parish or place where he or she shall have been so bound an apprentice, and resident forty days, by virtue of any order of removal, granted by two justices of the peace of any county, &c. or by virtue of any order of the justices at their general or quarter sessions, by reason or on account of such deed, writing or contract, not being indented only.

By Statute 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 18. sect. 2. If any person shall be an apprentice bound by indenture, to any person residing under a certificate, in any parish, township, or place, and not afterwards having gained a legal settlement in such parish, &c. such apprentice, by virtue of such apprenticeship, &c. shall not gain any settlement in such parish, &c. but every such apprentice shall have his settlement in such parish, &c. as if he had not been bound apprentice.

And by the 9 & 10 W. c. 11. No person, who shall come into any parish by a certificate, shall be adjudged by any act whatsoever to gain a settlement in such parish, unless he shall bona fide take a tenement of 10l. a year, or execute an annual office in such parish. (And consequently not by apprenticeship.) Vide (however) Ca. of Settlements 58.

Where one is bound apprentice by indenture, it cannot be discharged but by deed or by sessions, and a hiring after he is bound, or any consequences arising upon such hiring, are intirely void whilst the indenture subsists, and till it is defeasanced; for when an apprentice serves 40 days, by virtue of the indenture, he cannot gain another settlement, tho' his master consents, because he had a settlement by the service under the indenture. Admitted per cur. 8 Mod. 236. Pasch. 10 Geo. Buckington parish v. Sewington.

But binding an apprentice and serving will not make a settlement; but the settlement must be by inhabiting, which cannot be but where the party lodges; per Fortescue and Raymond J. 2 Ld. Raym. Rep. 1731, S. C. by name of The Inhabitants of St. John Baptist in Dewizes v. The Inhabitants of Bishops Cannings. Vide Cases of Settlements 118. pl. 159. Trin. 1724. B. R.

A poor child being bound apprentice at A. was assigned over to another master that lived in B. held he should gain a settlement at B. where his second master lived. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7. Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R. Caster v. Aicles parish.

Upon a special order of sessions the case was stated, that an apprentice was bound to A. in one parish, but by agreement served B. in another parish, and the sessions settled him with B. and by the court; He gains a settlement in the last place; for a person may serve his master in another parish or place; and altho' he serves another man, yet it is by consent of his master, and the benefit accrues to his master. Stran. 554. Cases of S. 153. Trin. 9 Geo. 1. Between the parishes of Allhallows on the Wall and St. Olave in Surry.

The son was bound an apprentice to his father, and the father gave up his indenture to the son, and bound him out to a service into another parish for a year, where he served, but did not cancel the indenture, and becoming poor the justices ordered him last legally settled in the parish where the father lived, because the indenture being still in force, his apprenticeship continued; per cur. The indenture not being cancelled, the obligation of the apprentice continues. 6 Mod. 190, 191.

V. As to their punishment for particular offences, it is to be observed, That

At Common law, a servant or apprentice, without any regard to age, may be guilty of felony in feloniously taking away the goods of their master, tho' they were goods under their charge, as a shepherd, butler, &c. and may at this day for any such offence be indicted, as for felony at Common law; but at Common law, if a man had delivered goods to his servant to keep, or carry for him, and he carried them away animo furandi; this was considered only a breach of trust, but not felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 505, 666.

But now by the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 7. It is enacted, that servants guilty of a breach of trust in imbeziling money, goods, &c. delivered to them to the value of 40s. or above, are guilty of felony: with a proviso nevertheless, that the act do not extend to apprentices, nor to persons under the age of eighteen years.

By the act of 27 H. 8. cap. 17. Clergy was taken away in this case, if the indictment were laid specially upon the act of 21 H. 8. and pursuant to the same, and by the act 38 H. 8. cap. 2. this act of 21 H. 8. was made perpetual; but by the act of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12. these acts were both repealed; but again, by the act of 5 Eliz. cap. 10. this act of 27 H. 8. was re-enacted and revived; but it did not revive the act of 27 H. 8. for taking away clergy. But now by 12 Ann. cap. 7. clergy in such case is taken from facts committed in any house or out-house, except as to apprentices under the age of fifteen years robbing their masters. 1 Hale's P. C. 666, 667.

The statute however extends only to such as were servants to the owner of the goods, both at the time they were delivered, and also at the time when they were stolen. 1 Hawk. P. C. 92.

Therefore a receiver, who having received his master's rents runs away with them; or a servant, who being intrusted to sell goods, or to receive money due on a bond, sells the goods, &c. and departs with the money, is not within the statute; but that a servant who receives his master's goods from another servant, to keep for the master, is as much guilty as if he had received them from the master's own hands; because such delivery is looked upon as a delivery by the master. Dyer 5. pl. 2, 3. 3 Inst. 105. 1 Hawk. P. C. 92.

As to apprenticeship, vide Black. Com. 1 V. 427, 8.

Appropriation, (appropriatio, from the Fr. approprier) Is the annexing of a benefice, originally juris divini & in patrimonio nullius, to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house, bishoprick, college, or spiritual person, to enjoy for ever. And when appropriation is made, the patron is perpetual parson, and hath perpetual institution and induction; for the appropriation alone is a sufficient admission, &c. Plowd. 499. To make an appropriation, the king's licence is to be obtained in Chancery, the consent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, where the church is full, and of the diocesan, and patron, if the benefice is void. Plowd. 496. 15 R. 2. c. 6. Appropriation made during the vacancy of the benefice is executed immediately; and when the church is full, by apt words, the patron is constituted parson, after it becomes become void. 11 Rep. 11. An appropriation may be by the king alone, where he himself is patron: as when by letters patent he grants the advowson which he is seised of in right of his crown to a dean and chapter, &c. Plowd. 499. No appropriation can be made without licence of the king. 8 Rep. 11. Nor may it be properly, unless to a spiritual person capable of the cure: it may be to a bishop, &c. and his successors. Danv. Abr. 511.

The act of endowment by the bishop might be made, either in the act of appropriation, or by a subsequent act and a separate instrument; which is mentioned in this place, that in searching for endowments in the registries of bishops, or the court of augmentations, neither the one nor the other should be neglected; for altho' a separate act or instrument of endowment may not be found, yet it is possible the endowment may have been made in the act of appropriation. Gibf. 719.

Upon the making an appropriation, an annual pension was reserved to the bishop and his successors, commonly called an indemnity, and payable by the body to whom the appropriation was made. The ground of which reservation, in an antient appropriation in the registry of the archbishop of Canterbury, is expressed to be, for a recompence of the profits which the bishop would otherwise have received during the vacation of such churches. Gibf. 719.

Where appropriations are made, a vicar is to be endowed to serve the cure: and formerly in licences of appropriation, it was expressed that the diocesan should also provide a convenient sum of money to be yearly paid out of the fruits, towards the sustentation of the poor of the parish. Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 6. A vicarage endowed may not be appropriated; but it may be united to another church, or to a dean and chapter, or college, with the king's consent. Hob. 307.

A vicarage by endowment becomes a benefice distinct from the parsonage. As the vicar is endowed with separate revenues, and is now enabled by the law to recover his temporal rights, without aid of parson or patron; so hath he the whole cure of souls transferred to him, by institution from the bishop. It is true, in some places, both the parson and the vicar do receive institution from the bishop to the same church, as it is in the case of finecures; the original of which was thus: the rector (with proper consent) had a power to intitle a vicar in his church, to officiate under him; and this was often done; and by this means, two persons were instituted to the same church, and both to the cure of souls, and both did actually officiate. So that however the rectors of finecures, by having been long excused from residence, are in the common opinion discharged from the cure of souls, (which is the reason of the name); and however the cure is said in the law-books to be in them habitualliter only; yet in strictness of law, and with regard to their original institution, the cure is in them actualiter, as much as it is in the vicar. Gibf. 719.

The parson, by making the endowment, acquires the patronage of the vicarage. For in order to the appropriation of a parsonage, the inheritance of the advowson was to be transferred to the corporation to which the church was to be appropriated; and then, the vicarage being derived out of the parsonage, the parson of common right must be patron thereof. So that if the parson makes a lease of the parsonage, (without making a special reservation to himself of the right of presenting to the vicarage) the patronage of the vicarage passeth as incident to it. But it was held in the 21 Ja. that the parishioners may prescribe for the choice of a vicar. And before that, in the 16 Ja. in the case of Stirley and Underhill, it was declared by the court, that tho' the advowson of the vicarage of common right is appendant to the rectory, yet it may be appendant to a manor; as having been reserved specially upon the appropriation. Gibf. 719.

An appropriation cannot regularly be granted over, neither can it endure longer than the body spiritual to which it was at first appropriated, because by the appropriation not only the glebe and tithes do pass, which might be granted away if that could be granted over, but it also giveth the person, to whom the appropriation is made, a spiritual function; it makes him parson of the church, and supplieth institution and induction, which being the highest parts of a trust, cannot for that reason be assigned over, and therefore every instrument of appropriation runs thus, (viz.) That they and their successors shall be parsons; and not they and their assigns; for by the usual words, that they shall hold the church to their own use, they are made parsons. Hob. 307. Wright versus Gerard.

But those to whom granted may make leases of the profits. Plowd. 499. If after an appropriation a clerk is presented to the bishop, and instituted and inducted, the benefice returns to its former nature, and the appropriation is dissolved. 7 Rep. 13. But if lessee for years of an appropriation presents thereto, this disappropriation shall not bind him in the reversion. Danv. 513. If a feme endowed of an advowson appropriate presents to it, the appropriation is dissolved. 1 Inst. 46. If a man recovers the advowson in writ of right, this disappropriates the church: and dissolution of the spiritual corporation disappropriates an appropriation. Though appropriation cannot properly be made, except to spiritual persons, and their successors; yet by the statute 31 H. 8. the king's patentees (although laymen) are rendered capable of parsonages appropriate of dissolved monasteries; but these are generally called impropriations. Appropriations have been judged an abuse and robbery of the church and parish priests, &c. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 433.

Approve, (approbare) To augment a thing to the utmost: to approve land is to make the best benefit of it, by increasing the rent, &c. 2 Inst. 474.

Approvement Is where a man hath common in the lord's waste, and the lord makes an inclosure of part of the waste for himself, leaving sufficient common with egress and regress for the commoners. Reg. Jud. 8, 9. If there be not sufficient common left for the tenant, he may have a writ of assize, and shall recover treble damages. Stat. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 3. And a commoner may break down an inclosure, if the lord doth inclose part of the common, and not leave sufficient room in the residue. But if any, upon just title of approvement, do make a hedge or ditch for that purpose, which afterwards is thrown down in the night by persons unknown, the towns adjoining may be distrained to make such hedge, &c. for which there is a noctanter writ. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 46. 2 Inst. 474. Approvement is to be only by inclosure; and the lord may not, by the statutes of approvement, dig pits for gravel, or coal, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 90.

Approver, or Prober, (approbator) Is one that confessing felony committed by himself, appealeth or accuseth others to be guilty of the same crime. He is called approver in this sense, because mult prove what he hath alledged; and that proof was by battle, or the country, at the election of him appealed: and the form of this accusation you may find in Crom. 1. Iust. 250. See also Braddon, lib. 3. Staundf. Pl. Cor. 52. If a person indicted of treason or felony, not disabled to accuse, upon his arraignment, before any plea pleaded, and before competent judges, confesseth the indictment, and takes an oath to reveal all treasons and felonies that he knoweth of; and therefore prays a coroner to enter his appeal, or accusation against those that are partners in the crime contained in the indictment; such a one is an approver. 3 Iust. 129. H. P. C. 192. Though the approver is sworn to discover all treasons and felonies, he is not to be an approver but of the offence whereof he is indicted: and this accusation of himself, and oath, makes his accusation of another of the same crime to amount to an indictment; and if his partners are convicted, the king is to pardon him, as to his life: but he ought not to be suffered to continue in the kingdom. Coroners may award process to the sheriff against appellees in the same county, on the discovery of the approver: and the justices of gaol-delivery, &c. have power to award process in any county to apprehend and try them. 2 Harwk. Pl. Cor. 208. A man may be an approver against any person within the realm, if there be such a person, and he be named of the county where he dwells; but if there be no such person, the approver shall be hanged for his false appeal. Ibid. 206. When a person hath once pleaded Not guilty, he cannot be an approver. 3 Iust. 129. And persons attainted of treason or felony shall not be approvers; their accusation will not then be of such credit as to put a man upon his trial. 2 Harwk. 205. Vide 5 H. 4. cap. 2. as to charters of pardon.

Infants under age of discretion may not be approvers: and it being in the discretion of the court to suffer one to be an approver, this method of late hath seldom been practised. But we have, in cases of burglary and robbery on the highway, what seems to amount to the same, by statute; it being ordained, that where persons charged with such crimes, out of prison, discover two others concerned in the crime, they shall have a pardon, &c. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 31.

Approvers, Anno 9 H. 6. Bailiffs of lords in their franchises are called their approvers: and approvers in the marches of Wales were such as had licence de vendre & acheter beasts, &c. But by the Statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 12. approvers are such as are sent into counties to increase the farms of hundreds, &c. held by sheriffs. Such persons as have the letting of the king's demesnes, in small manors, are called approvers of the king (approbatores regis) anno 51 H. 3. And in the Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 8. Sheriffs are called the king's approvers.

Appuare, To take to his own use or profit, viz. domini vasorum & bestiarum, &c. Appuare se possunt de vastis, &c. W. 2. c. 20.

Appurtenances, (pertinentia) Derived from the French appartenir, to belong to, signify things both corporeal and incorporeal appertaining to another thing as principal: as hamlets to a chief manor; and common of pasture, piscary, &c. Also liberties and services of tenants. Brit. cap. 39. If a man grant common of estovers to be burnt in his manor, these are appurtenant to the manor; for things appurtenant may be granted at this day. Co. Lit. 121. Common appurtenant may be to a house, pasture, &c. Outhouses, yards, orchards, and gardens are appurtenant to a messuage; but lands cannot properly be said to be appurtenant to a messuage. 1 Lill. Abr. 91. And one messuage cannot be appurtenant to another. Ibid. Lands cannot, in the true sense of the words cum pertinentiis, be appurtenant to the house; but the word pertinentis may be taken in the sense of usually letten or occupied with the house. Plowd. 170. Lands shall pass in a lease or devise of a house with the appurtenances, as pertaining to the same, when it hath been used and occupied with it ten years or more; which is judged a sufficient time to make it appertaining to the house. Cro. El. 704.

By the later authorities, lands will not pass by the word appurtenances, but only such things which do properly belong to the house; as where a man was seised of two houses and of eighty acres of land belonging to one of them, known by a particular name, and made a feoffment of the house and eighty acres to B. B. who made another feoffment to the said feoffor, by which he took back the same house and lands, and forty acres more by another name; and about ten years afterwards he devised this house and all the lands thereunto appertaining, to his youngest son; adjudged, that tho' he used those forty acres with the house for ten years and more, yet it would not pass by these words thereunto appertaining, because they were conveyed to him by a new name. Palm. 375. Loftus versus Baker. Godb. 352. S. C. reported by the name of Knight's case. Cro. Car. 57. Hearn versus Allen, S. P. Hutt. 85. S. C. Litt. Rep. 8. S. C.

Lands, a common, &c. may be appurtenant to a house; though not a way. 3 Salk. 40. Grant of a manor, without the words cum pertinentiis, 'tis said will pass all things belonging to the manor. Owen's Rep. 31. Where a person hath a messuage, &c. to which estovers are appurtenant, and it is blown down or burnt by the act of God; if the owner re-edify it, in the same place and manner as before, he shall have the antient appurtenances. 4 Rep. 86. A turbary may be appurtenant to a house; to a seat in a church, &c. but not to land; for the things must agree in nature and quality. 3 Salk. 40. Vide tit. Appendant, and see Plowd. Com. 103. b. 104. b. 170. Arbitrator, (Lat.) Is a private extraordinary judge between party and party, chosen by mutual consent, to determine controversies between them. West. Symb. sect. 21. And arbitrators are so called, because they have an arbitrary power; for if they observe the submission, and keep within due bounds, their sentences are definitive, from which there lies no appeal. 1 Roll. Abr. 251. The award of arbitrators is definitive, and being chosen by the parties, they are not tied to such formalities of law as judges in other cases are; and yet they have as great power as other judges to determine the matters in variance; but their determination must be certain, and it is to be according to the express condition of the bond by which the parties submit themselves to their judgment. 1 Nels. Abr. 234. Dyer 356. The Chancery will not give give relief against the award of the arbitrators, except it be for corruption, &c. And where their award is not strictly binding by the rules of law, the court of equity can decree a performance. Chanc. Rep. 279. 1 Vern. 24. But when arbitrators make their award upon one day, they cannot make another award between the parties on any other day; nor can they do it part at one time, and part at another, altho' all the times are within the submission. 26 Hen. 6. 52. 39 Hen. 6. 12. Yet the arbitrators may agree upon a thing one day, and of another thing another time, and at last make an award of the whole. 47 Ed. 3. 21. 2 Mod. Entr. Engl. 262.

When there is but one arbitrator, which happens where the matter is referred to two, and they cannot agree, but leave it to be determined by a third person, it is called an umpirage. 8 Rep. 98. But the arbitrators are to refuse, and declare they will make no award, before the umpire shall proceed: though an umpire's award shall be good when the arbitrators make a void award, which is no award. Lill. Abr. 170. It is said an umpirage cannot be made till the arbitrators time is out; and if any other power be given to the umpire it is not good, for two persons cannot have a several jurisdiction at one time. 1 Mod. Rep. 15.

The arbitrators are persons indifferently chosen, to determine the matters in controversy according to their own minds, whether they be matters of law or fact; infants, persons excommunicate, outlawed, &c. may be arbitrators; for every person must use his own discretion in the choice of his judges, and being at liberty to chuse whom he likes best, cannot afterwards object the want of honesty or understanding to them, or that they have not done him justice. West. Symb. 2 part, sect. 27.

The arbitrators are persons trusted with the authority, and it is not within their power to assign it.

Neither natural nor legal disabilities do hinder any one from being an arbitrator; if they are incompetent judges, the fault is in those that chuse them.

Before we dismiss this article, it will be necessary briefly to consider, what things may be submitted to arbitration, and by whom.

It is held clearly, that all chattels personal, and personal actions, such as trespass, conspiracy, maintenance, and things of an uncertain nature, may be determined by arbitration, and the right transferred by naked award, though the submission were not by deed; for these being transferrable by the party himself without any solemnity, whatever the parties themselves could do, may be done by the arbitrators, who are their substitutes, and stand in their place; and if on these submissions without deed, the arbitrators award one party a sum certain, he may bring an action of debt for it; but if the award be of doing some other thing, which is beneficial to him, he must have his action on the case. 22 Hen. 6. 39. 9 Co. 78. 1 Roll. Abr. 242.

Bonds are generally executed and exchanged between the parties at variance, to perform the award, for the nonperformance of which action of debt may be brought on the bond. The defendant may prayoyer of the bond and condition, and then plead according to the nature of his case, and the plaintiff reply thereto, or demur, as occasion requires; so that the whole of the case will by these means come before the court.

A debt on a specialty or record, tho' certain, may be submitted and transferred by an award, amongst other things, but not by itself. 1 Lev. 192. But freehold, or inheritance of lands, cannot be determined by arbitration; and therefore there cannot be a partition by an award; for freehold doth not pass without livery. 1 Roll. Abr. 242. So the interest of an estate for years cannot be transferred by an award; for it is a chattel real. 1 Roll. Abr. 242. Contr. Dyer 183. a. in marg. 2 Leon. 104. Cro. Eliz. 223.

If a man be bound to stand to an award, and the arbitrators make an award, that land shall be conveyed; if the party refuses the conveyance, he forfeits the obligation. 1 Roll. Abr. 244. So, if an award be, that one shall pay so much in satisfaction of a specialty; though the specialty is not thereby discharged, yet if he commences an action upon the specialty afterwards, he forfeits his obligation. 1 Roll. Abr. 242. 2 Cro. 447.

An annuity is not determinable by award, for it is reckoned in nature of a freehold, and therefore cannot pass without the deed of the party. 9 Hen. 6. 60. 14 Hen. 4. 19. 3 Hen. 4. 6. 1 Roll. Abr. 266.

It has been doubted, whether leases for years, being chattels real, could be transferred by award; therefore it seems safest when the controversy relates to these, that the parties be bound in mutual obligations to perform the award, and then if the arbitrators award that one shall assign, transfer, &c. the lease to the other, if he refuses, he forfeits his obligation. 1 Roll. Abr. 242. 9 Co. 78. 6 Co. 41.

Causes criminal are not arbitrable, because they ought to be punished for the common good. West. Symb. part 2. sect. 33.

Also causes matrimonial seem not arbitrable, because marriage ought to be free, and religion disallows the severing those whom the church hath joined. West. Symb. part 2. sect. 33. *1 Roll. A certain and fixed debt is not discharged by an award, but the end and design of an arbitration is to reduce uncertain debts and duties to a certainty; and to award a man a certain debt is to give him no more, nor do any greater thing for him than was done before, for now he can have but an action, and that he might have had before, and to give him less than he had before is to do him a manifest injustice, which the arbitrator cannot do. *Cro. Submissions are likewise general; as of all controversies, debts, dues, &c. and here the arbitrators are not obliged to determine all matters disclosed, but their arbitration of some things will be good, tho' they leave other things undone; but where the submission is special or conditional, ita quod an award be made of all controversies depending, they ought to determine all matters whereof they have notice, because here by the express words of the authority, I do not own his determination, unless all matters in controversy are settled; and therefore to determine one without the others, is to act contrary to the authority; but if upon such a submission, the arbitrators make an award but of one thing, it shall be intended there were no others to make an award of, unless the other side shew there was, and that the arbitrators had notice thereof. *Cro. If several persons do a trespass, and one of the wrongdoers and the party to whom it is done submit to arbitration, and an award is made, the other persons shall take advantage of it by way of extinguishment of the trespass; the same law where the party releases to one of them; for in both cases a satisfaction really is, or is presumed to be made, and a man cannot receive a double compensation for the same wrong. 1 Salk. 70. Carth. 412. 20 Hen. 6. 12. a. 41. a. *Roll. Arbitrament, (arbitrium) Is the sentence or determination pronounced by arbitrators, and published when they have heard all parties. And arbitrament is either general, of all actions, demands, quarrels, &c. or special, of some certain matters in controversy: it may be also absolute, or conditional. 8 Rep. 98. To every arbitrament five things are incident. 1. Matter of controversy. 2. Submission. 3. Parties to the submission. 4. Arbitrators. 5. Giving up the arbitrament. Hardr. 44. Arbitrators can't refer arbitrament to others, if the submission be not so: but an arbitrament that one shall release to another, by advice of a certain person, this is good; because 'tis a reference only for the execution of it. *Jenk. Submissions to arbitrament are usually by bond; and the parties who bind themselves are obliged to take notice of the award at their peril: but things relating to a freehold; debts due on bond; or on certain contract; criminal offences, &c. are not arbitrable. *Danv. Archbishop, (archiepiscopus) Is the chief of the clergy in his province, and is that spiritual secular person, who hath supreme power under the king in all ecclesiastical causes: and the manner of his creation and consecration, by an archbishop and two other bishops, &c. you may find in the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 20. An archbishop is said to be introned, when a bishop is said to be intalled; and there are four things to compleat a bishop or archbishop, as well as a parson: first, election, which resembles presentation; the next is confirmation, and this resembles admission; next, consecration, which resembles institution; and the last is installation, resembled to induction. 3 Salk. 72. In antient times the archbishop was bishop over all England, as Austin was, who is said to be the first archbishop here; but before the Saxon conquest the Britains had only one bishop, and not any archbishop. 1 Roll. Rep. 328. 2 Roll. 440.

But at this day, the ecclesiastical state of England and Wales is divided only into two provinces or archbishopricks, to wit, Canterbury and York. Each archbishop hath within his province bishops of several dioceses. The archbishop of Canterbury hath under him within his province, of ancient foundations, Rochester, London, Winchester, Norwich, Lincoln, Ely, Chichester, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath and Wells, Worcester, Coventry and Litchfield, Hereford, Landaff, St. David's, Bangor, and St. Asaph; and four founded by king Henry 8. erected out of the ruins of dissolved monasteries, viz. Gloucester, Bristol, Peterborough, and Oxford. The archbishop of York hath under him four, viz. the bishop of the county palatine of Chester, newly erected by king Hen. 8: and annexed by him to the archbishoprick of York; the county palatine of Durham; Carlisle; and the isle of Man, annexed to the province of York by king Hen. 8. but a greater number this archbishop antiently had, which time hath taken from him. 1 Inst. 94.

The archbishop of Canterbury is now styled metropolitanus & primas totius Angliæ; and the archbishop of York styled primas & metropolitanus Angliæ. They are called archbishops in respect of the bishops under them; and metropolitans, because they were consecrated at first in the metropolis of the province. 4 Inst. 94. Both the archbishops have distinct provinces, wherein they have suffragan bishops of several dioceses, with jurisdiction under them. And each hath two concurrent jurisdictions, one as ordinary, or the bishop himself within his diocese; the other as superintendant throughout his whole province of all ecclesiastical matters, to correct and supply the defects of other bishops. The archbishop of Canterbury hath the privilege to crown all the kings of England; and to have prelates to be his officers; as for instance; the bishop of London is his provincial dean; the bishop of Winchester, his chancellor; the bishop of Lincoln, his vice-chancellor; the bishop of Salisbury, his precentor; the bishop of Worcester, his chaplain, &c. It is the right of the archbishop to call the bishops and clergy of his province to convocation, upon the king's writ: he hath a jurisdiction in cases of appeal, where there is a supposed default of justice in the ordinary; and hath a standing jurisdiction over his suffragans: he confirms the election of bishops, and afterwards consecrates them, &c. And he may appoint coadjutors to a bishop that is grown infirm. He may confer degrees of all kinds; and censure and excommunicate, suspend or depose, for any just cause, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 223. And he hath power to grant dispensations in any case, formerly granted by the see of Rome, not contrary to the law of God: but if the case is new and extraordinary, the king and his counsel are to be consulted. Stat. 25 H. 8. He may retain eight chaplains: and during the vacancy of any see, he is guardian of the spiritualties. Stat. ibid. and 21 H. 8.

The archbishop of Canterbury hath the precedency of all the clergy; next to him the archbishop of York; next to him the bishop of London; next to him the bishop of Durham; next to him the bishop of Winchester; and then all the other bishops of both provinces after the seniority of their consecration; but if any of them be a privy counsellor, he shall take place next after the bishop of Durham. 1 Inst. 94. 1 Ought. Ord. Jud. 486.

The first archbishop of York, that we read of, was Paulinus, who, by pope Gregory's appointment, was made archbishop there, about the year of our Lord 622. Godol. 14.

The archbishop of York hath the privilege to crown the queen consort, and to be her perpetual chaplain. Chamberlain's Present State 65.

The archbishop of Canterbury is the first peer of the realm, and hath precedence, not only before all the other clergy, but also (next and immediately after the blood royal) before all the nobility of the realm: and as he hath the precedence of all the nobility, so also of all the great officers of state. God. 13.

The archbishop of York hath the precedence over all dukes, not being of the blood royal; as also before all the great officers of state, except the lord chancellor. God. 14.

Archdeacon, (archidiaconus) Is one that hath ecclesiastical dignity, and jurisdiction over the clergy and laity next after the bishop throughout the diocese, or in some part of it only. Archdeacons had antiently a superintendant power over all the parochial clergy in every deanery in their precincts; they being the chiefs of the deacons; though they have no original jurisdiction, but what they have got it from the bishop, either by prescription or composition; and Sir Simon Degg tells us, that it appears an archdeacon is a meer substitute to the bishop; and what authority he hath is derived from him, his chief office being to visit and inquire, and episcopo nunciare, &c. In antient times archdeacons were employed in servile duties of of collecting and distributing alms and offerings; but at length, by a personal attendance on the bishops, and a delegation to examine and report some causes, and commissions to visit the remoter parts of the dioceses, they became, as it were, overseers of the church; and by degrees advanced into considerable dignity and power. Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, was the first prelate in England who instituted an archdeacon in his diocese, which was about the year 1075. And an archdeacon is now allowed to be an ordinary, as he hath a part of the episcopal power lodged with him. He visits his jurisdiction once every year: and he hath a court, where he may inflict penance, suspend, or excommunicate persons, prove wills, grant admittations, and hear causes ecclesiastical, &c. subject to appeal to the bishop of the diocese. It is one part of the office of an archdeacon to examine candidates for holy orders, and to induct clerks within his jurisdiction, upon receipt of the bishop's mandate. 2 Cro. 556. 1 Lev. 193. Wood's Inst. 30.

Archdeacons are commonly given by bishops, who do therefore prefer to the same by collation: but if an archdeaconry be in the gift of a layman, the patron doth present to the bishop, who institutes in like manner as to another benefice; and then the dean and chapter do induct him, that is, after some ceremonies, place him in a stall in the cathedral church to which he belongeth, whereby he is said to have a place in the choir. Watf. c. 15.

Archdeacons, by the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. are to read the Common Prayer and declare their assent thereunto, as other persons admitted to ecclesiastical benefices; and also must subscribe the same before the ordinary: but they are not obliged by the 13 Eliz. to subscribe and read the thirty-nine articles; for altho' an archdeaconry be a benefice with cure, yet it is not such a benefice with cure as seems to be intended by that statute, but only such benefices with cure as have particular churches belonging to them. Watf. c. 15. And they are to take the oaths at the sessions, as other persons qualifying for offices.

The judge of the archdeacon's court (where he doth preside himself) is called the official. Wood's Inst. 30.

By the statute of the 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. An appeal lieth from the archdeacon's to the bishop's court.

And it hath been also held, that where the archdeacon hath a peculiar jurisdiction, he is totally exempt from the power of the bishop, and the bishop cannot enter there, and hold court; and in such case, if the party who lives within the peculiar be sued in the bishop's court, a prohibition shall be granted; for the statute intends that no suit shall be per sultum: but if the archdeacon hath not a peculiar, then the bishop and he have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may commence his suit either in the archdeacon's court or the bishop's, and he hath election to choose which he pleaseth: and if he commence in the bishop's court, a prohibition shall be granted; for if it should, it would confine the bishop's court to determine nothing but appeals, and render it incapable of having any causes originally commenced there. L. Raym. 123.

An archdeacon is a ministerial officer, and cannot refuse a churchwarden elected by the parish. Rex v. Martin Rice, 1 L. Raym. 138.

Arches Court, (curia de archibus) The chief and most antient consistory court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury for the debating of spiritual causes. It is so called from the church in London, commonly called St. Mary Le Bow, (where it was formerly held) which church is named Bow Church from the steeple which is raised by pillars, built archwise, like so many bent bows. Cowel. The judge of this court is styled the Dean of the Arches, or Official of the Arches court: he hath extraordinary jurisdiction in all ecclesiastical causes, except what belong to the prerogative court; also all manner of appeals from bishops or their chancellors or commissaries, deans and chapters, archdeacons, &c. first or last are directed hither: he hath ordinary jurisdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, in case of appeals; so that upon any appeal made, he, without any farther examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the appellee, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal was made.

Of this see more 4 Inst. 337. But he cannot cite any person out of the diocese of another, unless it be on appeal, &c. 23 H. 8. c. 9. In another sense the dean of the arches has a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, called a deanery, (being exempt from the authority of the bishop of London) of which the parish of Bow is the principal. The persons concerned in this court, are the judge, advocates, registers, proctors, &c. And the foundation of a suit in these courts, is a citation for the defendant to appear; then the libel is exhibited, which contains the action, to which the defendant must answer; whereupon the suit is contested, proofs are produced, and the cause determined by the judge, upon hearing the advocates on the law and fact; when follows the sentence or decree thereupon.

This court (as also the court of peculiars, the admiralty court, the prerogative court, and the court of delegates for the most part) is now held in the hall belonging to the college of Civilians, commonly called Doctors Commons. Floy. 21.

From this court the appeal is to the king in Chancery; by the 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

Archives, (archiva, from arca, a chest) The Rolls, or any place where antient records, charters, and evidences, belonging to the crown and kingdom, are kept; also the Chancery, Exchequer office, &c. And it hath been sometimes used for repositories in libraries.

Arrestant, The edict of the king, commanding all his tenants to come into the army: if they refuse, then to be deprived of their estates.

Arentate, To rent out, or let at a certain rent. — Richardus de Armeitone ballivus manerii de Kingsford militasse & per violentiam dictos religiosos de eadem piscaria ejecit, & ipsum domino suo arentari fecit in 12 sol. quos idem dominus per 6 annos recepit. Consuetud. Domus de Farendon, MS. fol. 53.

Argentum Album, Silver coin, or pieces of bullion that antiently passed for money. By Domesday tenure, some rents to the king were paid in argento albo, common silver pieces of money; other rents in libris urfis & pen-satis, in metal of full weight and purity: in the next age, that rent which was paid in money, was called blanch searm; and afterwards rubite-rent; and what was paid in provision, was termed black mail. Spelm. Gloss.

Argentum Dei, God's money; i. e. money given in earnest upon the making of any bargain; hence comes arles, earnest. — Adam de Holt vendidit quintam partem manerii de Berterton Henrico Scot, & cepit de prædicto Henrico tres denarios de argento Dei præ manibus. Placit. apud Cast. 2 Ed. 3.

Argill, or Argoil, Clay, lime, and sometimes gravel; also the lees of wine, gathered to a certain hardness. Lav. Fr. Diæ.

Argumentosus, A word which signifies ingenious, mentioned by our historian Neuburgensis. In picturis quoque opera argumentosa vocamus. Lib. 1. c. 14.

Arma moluta, Sharp weapons that cut, opposed to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise. Braet. lib. 3. Arma moluta plagam faciunt, sicut gladius & hujusmodi: Ligna vero & lapides, brusuras, orbis & icūs, qui judicari non possunt ad plagam, ad hoc ut inde venire possit ad duellum. They are called arma simulata by Flores, lib. 1. c. 33. par. 6.

Arma Reversata: This was when a man was convicted of treason or felony: thus our historian Knibton, speaking of Hugh Spenser, tells us, Primo vestierunt eum uno vestimento cum armis suis reversatis. Lib. 3. p. 2546.

Armscote, Is a sort of punishment decreed or imposed on an offender by the judge. Malmsh. lib. 3. p. 97. Walsingham, p. 430. At first it was to carry a saddle at his back in token of subjection, viz. Nudis vestigiis equestrem sellam ad satisfaciendum humeris ferret. Brompton says, that in the year 1176, the king of Scots promised king Hen. 2. at York, Lanceam & sellam suam super altare Sancti Petri ad perpetuam hujus subjectionis memoriam offerre.

Armigeri, A title of dignity, belonging to such gentlemen that bear arms: and these are either by curtesy, as sons of noblemen, eldest sons of knights, &c. Or by creation, such as the king's servants, &c. The word armigeri has been also applied to the higher servants in convents. Paroch. Antiq. 576. See Esquire.

Armour and Arms, In the understanding of law, are extended to any thing that a man wears for his defence, or takes into his hands, or useth in anger to strike or cast at another. Crompt. Just. 65. Arms are also what we call in Latin insignia, ensigns of honour; as to the original of which, it was to distinguish commanders in war; for the ancient defensive armour being a coat of mail, &c. which covered the persons, they could not be distinguished, and therefore a certain badge was painted on their shields, which was called arms; but not made hereditary in families till the time of king Rich. 1. on his expedition to regain Jerusalem from the Turks: and besides shields with arms, they had a silk coat drawn over their armour, and afterwards a stiff coat, on which their arms were painted all over, now the herald's coat of arms. Sid. Rep. 352. By the Common law, it is an offence for persons to go or ride armed with dangerous and unusual weapons: but gentlemen may wear common armour according to their quality, &c. 3 Inst. 160, &c. St. de defens. part. arm. The king may prohibit force of arms, and punish offenders according to law; and herein every subject is bound to be aiding. Stat. 7 Ed. 1. None shall come with force and arms before the king's justices, nor ride armed in an affray of the peace, on pain to forfeit their armour, and suffer imprisonment, &c. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3.

Imbezilling the king's armour felony. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 10. Armour may be exported. 12 Car. 2. c. 4. sect. 10. Unless prohibited by proclamation. 12 Car. 2. c. 4. sect. 12. Importing arms or ammunition prohibited. 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.

Arnalia, arable grounds. This word is mentioned in Domesday, tit. Essex.

Arnaldia, arnaldia; A sort of disease that makes the hair fall off, like the alopecia, or like unto a distemper in foxes.—Deinde uterque rex incidit in agriitudinem quam arnaldiam vocant, in qua ipsi ad mortem usque laborantes capillos suos deposuerunt. Rog. Hoveden, p. 693.

Armatarius, (Lat.) A word often used for a grocer, but held not good in law proceedings. 1 Vent. 142.

Arpen, or arpent, Signifies an acre or furlong of ground: and according to the old French account in Domesday-book, 100 perches make an arpent. The most ordinary acre, called l'arpent de France, is one hundred perches square: but some account it but half an acre.—Septem acres terre & unum arpentum quæ me contingebant per eschietam. Ex Reg. Priorat. de Wormsley, fol. 7. where arpen seems to be some quantity less than an acre.

Arpentator, a measurer or surveyor of land.

Arquebuss, (Fr. arquebuse) A short hand-gun, a caliver or pistol: mentioned in some of our ancient statutes. Law. Fr. Diâ.

Arack. The same duty and excise payable for brandy and foreign spirits, and no more, shall be paid for arack imported from the East-Indies; and the like allowance to be made on exportation, &c. St. 7 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Arasatio Peditum, Is used in Pat. 1 Ed. 2. for the arraying of foot-soldiers.

Araters, (arraiatores) Such officers as had the care of the soldiers armour, and whose business it was to see them duly accounted. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 6. In several reigns commissioners have been appointed for this purpose.

Aratun, (from the Fr. arranger, to set a thing in order) Hath the same signification in law: but the true derivation is from the French arraisonner, i. e. ad rationem ponere, to call a man to answer in form of law. A prisoner is arraigned, when he is indicted and brought to trial: and to arraign a writ of assise, is to cause the demandant to be called to make the plaint, in such manner as the tenant may be obliged to answer. 1 Inst. 262. But no man is properly arraigned but at the suit of the king, upon an indictment found against him, or other record wherewith he is to be charged; and this arraignment is to take care that the prisoner do appear to be tried, and hold up his hand at the bar, for the certainty of the person, and plead a sufficient plea to the indictment. 1 Inst. 262, 263. The prisoner is to hold up his hand only in treason and felony; but this is only a ceremony: if he owns that he is the person, it is sufficient without it; and then upon his arraignment his fetters are to be taken off; and he is to be treated with all the humanity imaginable. 2 Inst. 315. 3 Inst. 35. If in action of slander for calling one thief, the defendant justifies that he stole goods, and issue is thereon taken; if it be found for the defendant in B. R. and for felony in the same county where the court sits, or before justices of assise, &c. he shall be forthwith arraigned upon this verdict of twelve men, as on an indictment. 2 *Hale's Hist. P. C. 151. The pleas upon arraignment are either the general issue, Not guilty; plea in abatement, or in bar; and the prisoner may demur to the indictment; he may also confess the fact, but then the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him. If he stands mute, and doth not put himself upon trial, he shall suffer the penance pain fort & dure, in cases of felony, &c. 3 Inst. 217. Standing mute, or not answering directly, in certain cases, excludes offenders from clergy. See 25 H. 8. c. 3.—1 Ed. 6. c. 12.—4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4.—3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9.—1 Ann. c. 9.

By the Common law, if a principal is acquitted, or is pardoned, or dies, the accessory shall not be arraigned. But vide Stat. 1 Ann. cap. 9. and word Accessory. For the solemnity of the arraignment and trial of a prisoner, see Dalt. chap. 185. p. 515.

Array, (arraya live arraiaementum) An old French word, signifying the ranking or setting forth of a jury of men impanelled upon a cause. 18 H. 6. c. 14. And when we say to array a panel, that is, to set forth the men impanelled one by another. F. N. B. 157. To challenge the array of the panel, is at once to except against all the persons arrayed or impanelled, in respect of partiality, &c. 1 Inst. 156. If the sheriff be of affinity to either of the parties; or if any one or more of the jurors are returned at the nomination of either party; or for any other partiality; the array shall be quashed. The word array also relates, in a particular manner, to military order, as to conduct persons armed, &c. Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 3.

Arrearage, (arveragia, from the French arriere, retro, behind) Is taken for money unpaid at the due time, as rent behind; the remainder due on an account, or a sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant. When arrears of rent are presumed in law to be satisfied, vide Acceptance.

Arrestatus, One suspected of any crime.—Si autem aliquis arrestatus fuerit de morte alicujus periclitantis capietur & imprisonetur.—Offic. Coronat. Spelm. Gloss.

Arrenatus, arraigned, accused.—Stephanus Raban, vic. Leicestr. arrenatus & ad rationem positus de hoc quod, &c. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 1.

Arrentation, (from the Spanish arrendar) Is as much as ad certum redditum dimittere; and it signifies the licensing the owner of lands in the forest, to inclose them with a low hedge and small ditch, according to the assize of the forest, under a yearly rent: saving the arrentations is a saving power to give such licences. Ordin. Forestæ, 34 Ed. 1.

Arrest,

(arrestum) Cometh of the Fr. word arrestar, to stop, or stay. It is a restraint of a man's person, obliging him to be obedient to the law: and it is defined to be the execution of the command of some court of record, or officer of justice. An arrest is the beginning of imprisonment, where a man is first taken, and restrained of his liberty, by power or colour of a lawful warrant: also it signifies the decree of a court, by which a person is arrested. 2 Shep. Abr. 299.

Arrests are either in civil or criminal cases.

An arrest in a civil cause is defined to be the apprehending or restraining one's person by process in execution of the command of some court, or officer of justice. Wood's Inst. 575.

There are several statutes, securing the liberty of the subject, against unlawful arrests. See Magna Charta, c. 29. 3 Ed. 1. 43.

There are statutes likewise protecting the clergy from arrests while attending divine service. See 50 Ed. 3. c. 5. 1 R. 2. c. 15. 1 Mar. sess. 2. c. 3.

Several persons are likewise by the Common and Statute law of the land privileged from arrests. Peers of the realm, members of parliament, &c. may not be arrested, unless it be in criminal cases; but the process against them is to be summons, distress infinite, &c. 12 W. 3. c. 3. But see 2 Ann. c. 18. Also corporations and companies must be made to appear by distringas, and cannot be arrested. Finch 353. 3 Salk. 46. Persons attending upon any courts of record, on business there, are to be free from arrests. 3 Inst. 141. A clerk of the court ought not to be arrested for any thing which is not criminal, because he is supposed to be always present in court to answer the plaintiff. 1 Lill. 94. Arrests are not to be made within the liberty of the king's palace: nor may the king's servants be arrested in any place, without notice first given to the lord chamberlain, that he remove them, or make them pay their debts. Ambassadors servants, &c. freed from arrests. Vide Ambassador.

Seamen in the king's service privileged from arrests for debts under 20 l. 1 Geo. 2. c. 14. sect. 15. 14 Geo. 2. c. 38. sect. 3.

Soldiers or marines not liable to arrests for a debt of less than 10 l. 30 Geo. 2. c. 6. sect. 64. 30 Geo. 2. c. 11. sect. 37.

There is this difference between arrests in civil and criminal cases, that none shall be arrested for debt, trespass, &c. or other cause of action, but by virtue of a precept or commandment out of some court: but for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, any man may arrest without warrant or precept. Terms de Ley 54.

There are several statutes likewise regulating the issuing and execution of warrants for arrests, and ascertaining the fees to be taken on such occasions.

The bailiff's fee for an arrest, by an ancient statute, is but four-pence, and the sheriff's twenty-pence: and bailiffs cannot legally take any thing but what is allowed by this statute, and other subsequent acts. For taking fees not warranted by law, they shall render treble damages to the party grieved, and incur a forfeiture of 40 l. Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 10. Sheriffs are not to grant warrants for arrests before the receipt of the writs; if they do, they shall forfeit 10 l. and damages, and pay a fine to the king. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 5. And every warrant to issue upon any writ to arrest any person, shall have the same day and year set down thereon as on the writ, under the like penalty of 10 l. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 21.

No bailiff, or other officer, shall carry any person under arrest to any tavern, alehouse, &c. without his consent; so as to charge him with any beer, ale, wine, &c. but what he shall freely call for: nor shall demand or receive more from him for the arrest or waiting than by law ought to be, until an appearance procured, bail found, &c. Nor take or exact any more for keeping such person out of prison, than what he shall of his own voluntary accord truly give: nor take more for lodging than what is reasonable, or shall be adjudged so by the next justice of peace. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 2. And by a late act bailiffs, &c. are not to carry any person arrested to a tavern, alehouse, &c. or the private house of such officers, without the free and voluntary consent of the party; nor carry such person to prison within twenty-four hours from the time of the arrest; nor take any reward for keeping him out of gaol, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 22. And see 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. a new act on this subject. But if a person arrested refuse to be carried to some convenient house of his own nomination, &c. to be kept in safe custody during the twenty-four hours before carried to prison, then the sheriff's officers, &c. may immediately convey him to gaol, to prevent an escape. 3 Geo. 2. c. 27. By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. No writ, process, warrant, &c. (except in cases of treason, felony, or for breach of the peace) shall be served on a Sunday; on pain that the person serving them shall be liable to the suit of the party grieved, and answer damages, as if the same had been done without writ: an action of false imprisonment lies for arrest on a Sunday, and the arrest is void. 1 Salk. 78. A defendant was arrested on a Sunday by a writ out of the Marshalsea; and the court of B. R. being moved to discharge him, it was denied; and he was directed to bring action of false imprisonment. 5 Mod. Rep. 95. The defendant being taken upon a Sunday, without any warrant, and locked up all that day; on Monday morning a writ was got against him, by which he was arrested; it was ruled, that he might have an action of false imprisonment, and that an attachment should go against those who took him on the Sunday. Mod. Caf. 96. Attachments have been often granted against bailiffs for making arrests on Sunday: but affidavit is usually made, that the party might be taken upon another day. 1 Mod. 56. A person may be retaken on a Sunday, where arrested the day before, &c. Mod. Caf. 231. And a man may be taken on a Sunday on an escape warrant: when he goes at large out of the rules of the King's Bench or Fleet prison, &c. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 9. Also bail may take the principal on a Sunday, and confine him till Monday, and then render him. 1 Nelf. 258.

No special writ shall be sued out of the superior courts, unless the cause of action be 10 l. or above, on pain of 10 l. and the proceedings thereon to be void, by Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. This statute, and the Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. are made perpetual by the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 3.

When a person is apprehended for debt, &c. he is said to be arrested: and writs express arrest by two several words capias and attachias, to take and catch hold of a man; for an officer must actually lay hold of a person, besides saying he arrests him, or it will be no lawful arrest. 1 Lill. Abr. 96. If a bailiff be kept off from making an arrest, he shall have an action of assault: and where the person arrested makes resistance, or assaults the bailiff, he may justify beating of him. If a bailiff touches a man, which is an arrest, and he makes his escape, it is a rescous, and attachment may be had against him. 1 Salk. 79. If a bailiff lays hold of one by the hand, (whom he had a warrant to arrest) as he holds it out at the window, this is such a taking of him, that the bailiff may justify the breaking open of the house to carry him away. 1 Vent. 306.

When a person has committed treason or felony, &c. doors may be broke open to arrest the offender; but not in civil cases, except it be in pursuit of one arrested; or where a house is recovered by real action, to deliver possession to the person recovering. Plowd. 5 Rep. 91. So in ejectment, action of trespass, &c. lies for breaking open a house to make arrest in a civil action. Mod. Caf. 105. But if it appears a bailiff found an outer door, &c. open, 'tis said he may open the inner door to make an arrest. Cumbr. 327. An arrest in the night, as well as the day, is lawful. 9 Rep. 66. And every one is bound by the Common law to assist not only the sheriff in the execution of writs, and making arrests, &c. but also his bailiff, that hath his warrant to do it. 2 Inst. 193. A bailiff upon an arrest ought to shew at whose suit, out of what court the writ issues, and for what cause, &c. but this is when the party arrested submits himself to the arrest: a bailiff, sworn and known, need not shew his warrant, though the party demands it; nor is any other special bailiff bound to shew his warrant, unless it be demanded. 9 Rep. 68, 69. An arrest without shewing the warrant, and without telling at whose suit, until the other other demanded it, was held legal; and that this need not be done until the party obeyed and demanded the same. Cro. Jac. 485. If an action is entered in one of the compters of London, a city serjeant may arrest the party without the sheriff's warrant. 1 Lill. Abr. 94. And by the custom of London, a debtor may be arrested before the money is due, to make him find sureties: but not by the Common law. 1 Nels. Ab. 258.

If a wrong person is arrested; or one for felony, where no felony is done, &c. it will be false imprisonment, liable to damages. Attornies, &c. for vexation, maliciously causing any person to be arrested, where there is no cause of suit, &c. shall suffer six months imprisonment, and before discharged pay treble damages, and forfeit 10*l.* Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2. A bailiff having a writ to arrest A. B. comes up to another person, and asks him if his name be A. B. and he answers that it is, whereupon the bailiff arrests him, it will be a false arrest, for which action lies. Lanc. 49. Sed quere? And if a warrant be to take A. the son of B. and the bailiff makes an arrest on the son of D. who indeed is the right person intended, but not the party within his warrant, it will be false imprisonment. Ibid.

Sheriffs in Wales, and the counties palatine, shall not hold to bail on process from Westminster, unless the debt be sworn to be 20*l.* 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9. sect. 2.

By Glynn Ch. J. Mich. 1658. If one be arrested by the sheriff of the county, within a liberty, without a non omittas, yet the arrest is good; for the sheriff is sheriff of the whole county, but the bailiff of the liberty may have his action against the sheriff, for entering of his liberty. But upon a quo minus, a sheriff may enter any liberty, and execute it impune. Pract. Reg. 72.

With regard to arrests in criminal cases, it hath already been observed, that for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, any person may arrest without warrant or precept. But the king cannot command any one by word of mouth to be arrested; for he must do it by writ, or order of his courts, according to law: nor may the king arrest any man for suspicion of treason, or felony, as his subjects may; because if he doth wrong, the party cannot have an action against him. 2 Inst. 186.

Arrests by private persons are in some cases commanded. Persons present at the committing of a felony must use their endeavours to apprehend the offender, under penalty of fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 117. 4 Inst. 177.

And for this cause, by the Common law, if any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with, or without malice, or even by misadventure or self-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day time, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced, and if out of a town, the hundred shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53.

And since the statute of Winchester, c. 5. which ordains that walled towns shall be kept shut from sun-setting to sun-rising; if the fact happen in any such town by night, or by day, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53.

And, as private persons are bound to apprehend all those who shall be guilty of any of the crimes above mentioned in their view, so also are they, with the utmost diligence, to pursue and endeavour to take all those who shall be guilty thereof, out of their view, upon a hue and cry levied against them. 3 Inst. 117.

By the vagrant act 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. Every private person may apprehend beggars and vagrants.

And every private person is bound to assist an officer, requiring him to apprehend a felon.

Arrests also by private persons are, in some cases, permitted only; and arrests of this kind are either on suspicion of crimes already done, or supposed to have been done, or to prevent their being committed.

Many sufficient causes of suspicion to justify the arrest of an innocent person for felony are enumerated in 2 Hawk. 76. Yet it is holden by some, that none of the causes there specified will justify the arresting of a man for the suspicion of crimes, unless a crime was actually committed; but out of this rule, the apprehending a person upon hue and cry must be excepted. 2 Hawk. 76.

As to the arresting of offenders by private persons of their own authority, permitted by law for the prevention of treason or felony only intended to be done; it seems any one may lay hold of a person, whom he sees upon the point of committing treason, or felony, or doing an act which would manifestly endanger the life of another, and detain him, till it may be reasonably presumed he has changed his purpose. 2 Hawk. 77. Indeed the law of reason says thus, and we want not the authority of books to justify the position.

As to arrests for inferior offences, no private person can arrest another for a bare breach of the peace after it is over; but it is held, that a private man may arrest a night-walker, or a common cheat going about with false dice, and actually caught playing with them in order to have him before a justice of peace; and the arrest of any other offenders, by private persons, for offences in like manner scandalous, and prejudicial to the public, seems justifiable. 2 Hawk. 77.

In some cases likewise arrests by private persons are rewarded by law.

By 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. Persons apprehending highwaymen, and prosecuting them to conviction, are intitled to a reward of 40*l.* and if they are killed in the attempt, their executors, &c. are intitled to the like reward.

By the 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. Persons apprehending counterfeiters and clippers of the coin, and prosecuting them to conviction, are intitled to 40*l.*

By the 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. Persons apprehending shoplifters, and prosecuting them to conviction, shall have a certificate thereof gratis from the judge, which certificate (before any benefit has been made of it) may be once assigned over, and no more, and the original proprietor, or assignee, shall by virtue thereof be discharged from all parish and ward offices, within the parish or ward wherein the felony was committed.

By 5 Ann. c. 31. Persons who shall take any one guilty of burglary, or the felonious breaking and entering any house in the day-time, and prosecute them to conviction, shall receive, above the reward given by the above mentioned statute of 10 & 11 W. 3. the sum of 40*l.* within one month after such conviction.

With regard to arrests by public officers, they may be made either with or without process.

Arrests without process may be made by watchmen, constables, bailiffs of towns, or justices of peace. For the power of watchmen, see Stat. Winchester, c. 4. It has been holden, that this statute was made in affirmance of the Common law, and that every private person may by the Common law arrest any suspicious night-walker, and detain him till he give a good account of himself. 2 Hawk. 80.

As to arrests by constables, they are either made by their own authority, which differs but little from the power of a private person, or they are made by a warrant from a justice of peace.

As to the justifying arrests by constables, by virtue of a warrant from a justice of peace, it seems clear, that an arrest, unlawfully made by a constable without a warrant, cannot be made good by a warrant taken out afterwards; also it hath been holden, that if a constable, after he hath arrested the party by force of any such warrant, suffer him to go at large upon his promise to come again at such a time, and find sureties, he cannot afterwards arrest him by force of the same warrant; however, if the party return and put himself again under the custody of the constable, the constable may lawfully detain him, and bring him before the justice, in pursuance of the warrant. 2 Hawk. 80. Dyer 244. 6.

A constable cannot justify any arrest by force of a warrant from a justice of peace, which expressly appears on the face of it, to be for an offence whereof a justice of peace hath no jurisdiction, or to bring the party before him at a place out of the county for which he is a justice. 2 Hawk. 82.

As to the doctrine of general warrants, 'tis now sufficiently exploded. See the case of The King and John Wilkes, Esq; Wilf. Rep. part 2. 151, &c.

'Tis the better opinion at this day, that any constable, or even a private person, to whom a warrant shall be directed directed from a justice of peace, to arrest a particular person for felony, or any other misdemeanor within his jurisdiction, may lawfully execute it, whether the person mentioned in it be, in truth, guilty or innocent, and whether he were before indicted of the same offence or not: for, however the justice himself may be punishable for granting such a warrant, without sufficient grounds, it is reasonable that he alone be answerable for it, and not the officer, who is not to examine or dispute the reasonableness of his proceeding. Id.

With regard to arrests by bailiffs of towns, their power is founded on the above mentioned statute of Winchester, c. 4. And as to arrests by justices of peace, arrests by their command are either by word of mouth or by warrant.

A justice of peace may, by word of mouth, authorise any one to arrest another, who shall be guilty of an actual breach of the peace in his presence, or shall be engaged in a riot in his absence. 2 Hawk. 83. Dalr. c. 117.

And a justice of peace may lawfully grant a warrant for apprehending, or arresting persons charged with treason, felony, premunire, or any other offence against the peace; and generally, wherever a statute gives one or more justices of peace a jurisdiction over any offence, any one justice of peace may, by his warrant, cause such offenders to be arrested and brought before him. 2 Hawk. 84.

But it is said, that antiently no one justice of peace could legally make out a warrant for an offence against a penal statute, or other misdemeanor; cognizable only by a sessions of two or more justices; for that one single justice of peace hath no jurisdiction of such offence, and regularly those only who have jurisdiction over a cause can award process concerning it. Yet the long, constant, universal, and uncontrolled practice of justices of peace seems to have altered the law in this particular, and to have given them an authority, in relation to such arrests, not now to be disputed. Ibid.

A justice of peace may justify the granting a warrant for the arrest of any person upon strong grounds of suspicion of felony, or misdemeanor, but he seems to be punishable, as well at the suit of the king, as of the party grieved, if he grant any such warrant groundlessly, or maliciously, without such a probable cause as might induce a candid and impartial man to suspect the party to be guilty. 2 Hawk. 84.

Every warrant ought to be under the hand and seal of the justice of peace, and specify the day it was made out: if it be for the peace or good behaviour, it is advisable to set forth the special cause upon which it is granted, but if it be for treason or felony, or other offences of an enormous nature, it is said that it is not necessary to set it forth, and it seems to be rather discretionary than necessary to set it forth in any case. 2 Hawk. 85.

We apprehend the meaning of this doctrine is, that the warrant need not express the species, but we conceive it absolutely necessary to express the genus, as for treason or felony, or suspicion of treason or felony.

The warrant may be directed to the sheriff, bailiff, constable, or to any indifferent person by name, who is no officer; for, tho' the justice may authorise any one to be his officer, whom he pleases to make such, yet it is most advisable to direct to the constable of the precinct wherein it is to be executed; for that no other constable, and a fortiori no private person, is compellable to serve it. 2 Hawk. 85.

A bailiff or constable, if they be sworn, and commonly known to be officers, and act within their own precincts, need not shew their warrant to the party, notwithstanding he demand the sight of it; but that these and all other persons whatsoever making an arrest, ought to acquaint the party with the substance of their warrant; and all private persons to whom such warrants shall be directed, and even officers, if they be not sworn and commonly known; and even these, if they act out of their own precincts, must shew their warrants if demanded. 2 Hawk. 86.

The sheriff, having such warrant directed to him, may authorise others to execute it; but every other person, to whom it is directed, must personally execute it, yet, it seems, that any one may lawfully assist him. 2 Hawk. 86.

If a warrant be generally directed to all constables, no one can execute it out of his own precinct; but if it be directed to a particular constable by name, he may execute it any where within the jurisdiction of the justice. 2 Hawk. 86.

Where one is authorised to arrest a person who shelters himself in a house; if entrance be denied, the officer may justify the breaking open the doors, particular instances of which are enumerated by Serjeant Hawkins. V. Pleas of the Crown, p. 86. & 87.

Also it is enacted by the 3 & 4 Jac. 1. par. 35. That upon any lawful writ, warrant or process awarded to any sheriff or other officer, for the taking of any popish recusant, standing excommunicated for such recufancy, it shall be lawful, if need be, to break any house. 2 Hawk. 87.

But it hath been resolved, that where justices of peace are, by virtue of a statute, authorised to require persons to come before them to take certain oaths prescribed by such statute, the officer cannot lawfully break open the doors. 2 Hawk. 87.

After presentment or indictment found in felony, &c. the first process is a capias, to arrest and imprison the offender: and if the offender cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded in order to outlawry. H. P. C. 209.

Arrest of Judgment. To move in arrest of judgment, is to shew cause why judgment should be itaid, notwithstanding verdict given; for in many cases, though there be a verdict, no judgment can be had. And the causes of arrest of judgment are, want of notice of trial; where the plaintiff before trial treats the jury; the record differing from the deed pleaded; for material defect in pleading; where persons are misnamed; more is given and found by the verdict than laid in the declaration; or the declaration doth not lay the thing with certainty, &c. And here all matters of fact are to be made out by proper affidavits. Comp. Atorn. 329, &c. Judgment may be arrested for good cause in criminal cases, as well as civil; if the indictment be insufficient, &c. 3 Inst. 210. Four days are allowed to move in arrest of judgment; and the defendant hath all the term wherein the verdict was given to speak any thing to arrest it, if the plaintiff hath not given his four days rule, and signed his judgment; after which defendant is put to his writ of error. 2 Lill. 93. On motion in arrest of judgment, if the court be divided, two judges against two, the plaintiff must have his judgment; unless a rule be made at first to stay all proceedings, until the court otherwise order, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 118. See Jeofails and Judgment.

Arrest of enquest is to plead in arrest of taking the enquest, upon the former issue, and to shew cause why an enquest should not be taken. Bro. tit. Replead. Vide on this subject Black. Com. 3 V. 393. What causes are not sufficient. Id. 394, &c.

Arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur, A writ which lies for a man whose cattle or goods are taken by another, who during the contest doth or is like to make them away, not being of ability to render satisfaction. Reg. Orig. 126.

Arrestande ipsum qui Pecuniam Recepit, &c. Is a writ that lieth for apprehending a person who hath taken the king's prest-money to serve in wars, and hides himself when he should go. Reg. Orig. 24.

Arresto factio super bonis mercatorum alienigenorum, A writ that lies for a denizen against the goods of alien found within this kingdom, in recompence of goods taken from him in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. Reg. Orig. 129. This the antient civilians called clario gatio; but by the moderns it is termed reprisalia.

Arrested, arrestatus, quasi, ad rectum vocatus, Is where a man is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. Naunf. Pl. Co. 45. And it is sometimes used for imputed or laid unto; as no folly may be arrested to one under age. Littleton, cap. Remitter. Chaucer useth the verb arresteth, that is, lays blame, as it is interpreted. Bracton says, ad rectum habere malefactorem, i. e. to have the malefactor forth coming, so as he may be charged, and put to his trial. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10.

And in another place, reatus de morte hominis, charged with the death of a man. From hence it may with some reason seem, that the word is the same with reatum.

Arrows. By an ancient statute, all heads for arrows shall be well brazed, and hardened at the point with steel, on pain of forfeiture and imprisonment: and to be marked with the mark of the maker. Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 7.

Arrura.—In the black book of Hereford, De Operationibus Arruræ, signifies days work of ploughing; for anciently customary tenants were bound to plough certain days for their lord. Una arrura, one day's work at the plough; and in Wiltshire, earing is a day's ploughing. Paroch. Antiq. p. 41.

Arson, (from ardeo, to burn) Is house burning, which is felony at Common law. 3 Inst. 66. It must be maliciously, voluntarily, and an actual burning: not putting fire only into a house, or any part of it, without burning; but if part of the house is burnt; or if the fire doth burn, and then goeth out of itself, it is felony. 2 Inst. 188. H. P. C. 85. The burning of a frame of a house is not accounted house-burning, because the frame of a house cannot come under the word domus, necessary in every indictment for arson: this was when the law proceedings were in Latin; now, of course, the word house is requisite; and it must be the house of another, for if a man burns his own house only, though with intention to burn others, it was not at Common law felony, but a great misdemeanour, punishable with fine, pillory, &c.

If a house is fired by negligence or mischance, it cannot amount to arson. 3 Inst. 67. H. P. C. 85. Where one burns the house of another, if it be not wilful and malicious, 'tis no felony, but only trespass: therefore if A. shoot unlawfully in a gun at the cattle or poultry of B. and by means thereof sets another's house on fire, this is not arson; for though the act he was doing was unlawful, yet he had no intent to burn the house. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 569. By Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 11. Burning of houses, or barns wherein any corn is, is felony without benefit of clergy. And the Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7. makes it felony to set barns, stables, stacks of corn, hay, &c. on fire in the night-time, or any out-houses, or buildings: but the offender may be transported for seven years.

By 6 Annæ, c. 31. Servants through negligence or carelessness, setting on fire any dwelling-house, or out-house, shall forfeit 100*l.* to be levied by warrant of two justices, and paid to the churchwardens of the parish, to be distributed to the sufferers by the fire; or on default shall be sent to the house of correction, and there kept to hard labour eighteen months, &c. By 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. (made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42.) Setting fire to any house, barn, or out-house, or to any hovel, cockmow, or stack of corn, straw, or wood, is made felony without benefit of clergy.

N. B. This must be of course a wilful act to render it felony.

See farther on this subject 3 Ed. 1. c. 15.—37 Hen. 8. c. 6.—4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4.—43 Eliz. c. 13.—1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 48.—6 Geo. 1. c. 16.—20 Geo. 2. c. 52. & 28 Geo. 2. c. 19. And vide also Black. Com. 4 V. 220, &c.

Arser in le main, Burning in the hand, is the punishment of criminals that have the benefit of clergy. Terms de Ley.

Arura, The trial of money by fire, after it was coined. In Domesday we read, *reddis 50*l.* ad arsuram*, which is meant of lawful and approved money, whose alloy was tried by fire.

Art and Part, Is a term used in Scotland and the north of England; when one charged with a crime, in committing the same, was both a contriver of, and acted his part in it.

Arthel, A British word, and more truly written arddel, signifying to avouch; as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his hands, he was to be allowed a lawful arthel (or vouchee) to clear him of the felony: it was part of the law of Howel Dda; according to whose laws every tenant holding of any other than of the prince or the lord of the fee, paid a fine pro defensione regia, which was called arian ardbet. The privilege of arthel occasioning a delay and exemption of criminals from justice, provision was made against it by Statute 26 H. 8. c. 6.

Articuli Cleri, (articles of the clergy) Are statutes containing certain articles relating to the church and clergy, and causes ecclesiastical. 19 E. 2. and 14 E. 3.

Articulus, An article, or complaint, exhibited by way of libel, in a court Christian. Sometimes the religious bound themselves to obey the ordinary, without such formal process: as An. Dom. 1300. The prior and convent of Burcester, submitted themselves to the official of Lincoln, &c.—Quod possint ees et eorum successores per omnem censuram ecclesiasticam ad omnium & singulorum premissorum observationem absque articuli, seu libelli, petitione, & quocunque strepitu judiciali compellare. Paroch. Antiq. p. 344.

Artificers, Are taken for such as are masters of their arts, or whose calling and employment doth consist chiefly of bodily labour. We might, with Mr. Harris, more elegantly and scientifically define an artist to be “A man possessing an habitual power of becoming the cause of some effect, according to a system of various and well-approved precepts.” But to the law—

If artificers or workmen conspire not to do any work but at certain prices, &c. they are liable to penalties by the Statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15. A stranger, artificer in London, &c. shall not keep above two strangers servants; but he may have as many English servants and apprentices as he can get. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 16. Artificers in wool, iron, steel, brals, or other metal, &c. persons contracting with them to go out of this kingdom into a foreign country, shall be fined not exceeding 100*l.* and be imprisoned three months: and English artificers going abroad, not returning in six months after warning given by our ambassadors, &c. shall be disabled to hold lands by descent or devise, be incapable to take any legacy, &c. and deemed aliens. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27. By the Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13. Persons convicted of seducing artificers in the manufactures of Great Britain or Ireland, out of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain, to forfeit 500*l.* and to be imprisoned for twelve months; for the second offence to forfeit 1000*l.* and be imprisoned two years. Prosecution to be commenced within twelve months after the offence committed. Vide as to seducing and transporting of artists, Black. Com. 4 V. 160.

Arundinetum, A ground or place where reeds grow. 1 Inst. 4. And it is mentioned in the book of Domesday.

Arvil-Supper, A feast or entertainment made at funerals, in the north part of England: arvil bread is the bread delivered to the poor at funeral solemnities. Cowell. And arvil, arval, arsal, are used for the burial or funeral rites; as,

Come, bring my jerkin, Tibb, I'll to the arvil,
You man's dea Seny Scoun, it makes me marvil.

Acisterium, (archisterium, arcisterium, acisterium, alcisterium, architrium) Is a Greek word, and signifies a menastery. It often occurs in our old histories. Du Cange.

Affach, or affath, Was a custom of purgation used of old in Wales, by which the party accused did clear himself by the oaths of 300 men. It is mentioned in ancient MSS. and prevailed till the time of Hen. 5. when it was abrogated. 1 H. 5. c. 6.

Affart, (assartum) Fr. affartir, To make plain. Assartum est quod redactum est ad culturam. Fleta, lib. 4. cap. 21. And the word assartum is by Spelman derived from exertum, to pull up by the roots; for sometimes 'tis wrote effart. Others derive it from exaratum or exartum, which signifies to plough or cut up. Manwood, in his Forest Laws, says it is an offence committed in the forest, by pulling up the woods by the roots, that are thickets and coverts for the deer, and making the ground plain as arable land: this is esteemed the greatest trespass that can be done in the forest to vert or venison, as it contains in it waste and more; for whereas waste of the forest is but the felling down the coverts which may grow up again, assart is a plucking them up by the roots, and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterwards spring up again. And this is confirmed out of the red book book in the Exchequer, in these words—Affarta vero dicuntur quæ apud Isidorum occisiones nuncupantur, quando forissem nemora vel dumeta, pascuis & latibulis ferarum opportuna, succiduntur: quibus succisis & radicibus avulsis, terra subvertitur & excolitur.—But this is no offence if done with licence; and a man may, by writ of ad quod damnum, sue out a licence to assart ground in the forest, and make it several for tillage. Reg. Orig. 257. Hence lands are called assarted: and formerly assart rents were paid to the crown for forest lands assarted. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 6. Affartments seem to be used in the same sense in Rot. Parl. Of assarts you may read more in Crompt. Juris. p. 203. And Charta de Foresta, anno 9 H. 3. c. 4. Manwood, part 1. p. 171.

Affault, (assultus) from the Fr. verb assayer, Signifies a violent injury offered to a man's person, of a more extensive nature than battery; for it may be committed by offering a blow, or by a terrifying speech. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. cap. 3. But it is said that at this day no words whatsoever, be they ever so provoking, can amount to an assault, notwithstanding the many ancient opinions to the contrary. 1 Hawk. P. C. 134.

The feudists define assault thus: assultus est impetus in personam aut locum, siue hoc pedibus fiat, vel equo, aut machinis aut quacunq; alia re affiliatur. Zafius de Feud. p. 10. num. 38. And assilire est vim adferre. Lib. Feud. 1. tit. 5. sect. 1. Also the Lat. assultus is used in this sense in the laws of Edw. Confes. cap. 12. To strike a man, though he be not hurt with the blow, is an assault: and to strike at a person, notwithstanding he be neither hit nor hurt, hath been so adjudged. 22 Lib. Aff. pl. 60. For assault doth not always necessarily imply a hitting, or blow; because, in trespasss for assault and battery, a man may be found guilty of the assault, and excused of the battery. 25 Ed. 3. c. 24. If a person in anger lift up or stretch forth his arm, and offer to strike another; or menace any one with any staff or weapon, it is trespasss and assault in law: and if a man threaten to beat another person, or lie in wait to do it, if the other is hindered in his business, and receives loss thereby, action lies for the injury. Lamb. lib. 1. 22 Aff. pl. 60. Where a man assaults any person, beats, or doth him any manner of violence, either with hand, foot, or weapon; or throws any thing at him, drink in his face, &c. whereby he is hurt; it is such an assault for which action may be brought, and damages recovered. Comp. Astorn. 133. So spitting in a man's face, or treading on his toes.

In many cases a man may justify an assault; thus, to lay hands gently upon another, not in anger, is no foundation of an action of trespasss and assault: the defendant may justify molliter manus imposuit in defence of his person, or goods; or of his wife, father, mother, or master; or for the maintenance of justice. Bract. 9 E. 4. 35 H. 6. c. 51.

A servant, &c. may justify an assault in defence of a master, &c. but not cont. Bath. Ni. Pri. p. 18. L. Raym. 62.

If an officer, having a warrant against one who will not suffer himself to be arrested, beat or wound him in the attempt to take him, he may justify it; so if a parent in a reasonable manner chastise his child, or master his servant, being actually in his service at that time, or a schoolmaster his scholar, or a gaoler his prisoner, or even a husband his wife (for reasonable and proper cause); or if one confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him, &c. in such manner as is proper in his circumstances; or if a man force a sword from one who offers to kill another; or if a man gently lays his hand on another, and thereby stay him from inciting a dog against a third person; if I beat one (without wounding him, or throwing at him a dangerous weapon) who wrongfully endeavours with violence to dispossess me of my lands or goods, or the goods of another delivered to me to be kept for him, and will not desist upon my laying my hands gently on him and disturbing him; or if a man beat, wound or maim one who makes an assault upon his person, or that of his wife, parent, child, or master; or if a man fight with, or beat one who attempts to kill any stranger; in these cases it seems the party may justify the assault and battery. See 1 Hawk. P. C. 130. and the several authorities there cited.

And on an indictment the party may plead Not guilty, and give the special matter in evidence; but in an action he must plead it specially. 6 Mod. 172. Supposing it matter of justification.—If of excuse, 'tis said it may be given in evidence, on the general issue. Vide Bath. Ni. Pri. 16.

Also in cases of assault, for the assault of the wife, child, or servant, the husband, father, and master, may have action of trespasss. Peſ quod servitium amissi. Otherwise in case of a wife, husband and wife should join in the action for the personal abuse of the wife, (the husband not having sustained any damage.) If the husband has been damaged, as by tearing her cloaths, &c. for that peculiar injury to himself he alone must sue.

As to parent and child, master and servant, unless injury accrues to the parent or master, the child or servant must sue.

For assaults the wrong-doer is subject both to an action at the suit of the party, wherein he shall render damages; and also to an indictment at the suit of the king, wherein he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. 1 Hawk. 134.

Where a man is assaulted, and he hath no witnesses to prove the same, or in other cases, the party assaulted may bring an information in the crown-office; and not have common action of trespasss. Vide Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. which requires recognizances to be taken to prosecute with effect, &c. And Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. enacting, That where there are several defendants to any action of assault, &c. and one or more acquitted, the person so acquitted shall recover costs of suit, unless the judge certify that there was a reasonable cause for making such person a defendant or defendants to such action.

If any person assault a privy counsellor, in the execution of his office, it is felony. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 16.

Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. sect. 11. If any person shall wilfully and maliciously assault any person in the public streets or highways, with an intent to tear, spoil, cut, burn or deface, and shall tear, spoil, cut, burn, or deface the garments, &c. of such person, 'tis felony; and the offender may be transported for seven years.

Assaulting persons in a forcible manner, with intent to commit robbery, is made felony and transportation, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. And assaulting or threatening a counsellor at law, or attorney employed in a cause against a man; or a juror giving verdict against him; his adversary for suing him, &c. is punishable on an indictment, by fine and imprisonment, for the contempt. 1 Hawk. 58.

Assay of weights and measures, (from the Fr. essay, i. e. a proof or trial) Is the examination of weights and measures, by clerks of markets, &c. Reg. Orig. 279.—Ac assiam & assiam Panis, Vini, & Cervisie. Paten. 37 H. 8. Tho. Marrow.

Assayer of the king, (Assayator regis) An officer of the king's mint, for the trial of silver; he is indifferently appointed between the master of the mint and the merchants that bring silver thither for exchange. Anno 2 H. 6. cap. 12. Vessels of gold shall be assayed. 28 Ed. 1. c. 20. and 18 Car. 2. c. 5.—*Mandatum est Will. Assayers, of plate made by goldsmiths, &c. These are for assaying and marking thereof, of whom with their fees; and how the assay offices are regulated by statute, see 12 Geo. 2. c. 26. and Goldsmiths.

Assayflare, A word used in old charters for to take fellow judges. — Henricus Dei gratia rex Angl. &c. Dilecto & fideli suo Nicholao de la Tour salutem. Sciatis quod constituimus vos iusticiarium nostrum una cum hiis quos vobis duxeritis assayflandos ad assisam novae disseisinae capiendam.—Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. f. 57.

Asscurate, (adsecurare) To make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith. In the charter of peace between Hen. 2. and his sons, this word is mentioned. Hoveden, anno 1174.

Asssembly unlawful, (from the Fr. asssembler, i. e. aggregare) To flock together. It is the meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful act, altho' they do it not: as to assault or beat any person; enter into houses, or lands, &c. West. Symb. part 2. sect. 65. Their meeting and abiding together makes the crime, where they do not execute their intentions: if the intention be to redress public grievances, and be executed, it is adjudged treason. 3 Inst. 9. The late riot act ordains, that where twelve persons, or more, unlawfully assembled, continue together an hour after proclamation to depart, they shall be guilty of felony. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. See Rebellious Assembly and Riot. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 146.

Assent, or consent. To a legacy of goods, the assent of the executor is necessary, before the legatee may take the same; but to a devise of lands that are freehold, it is not required. Co. Lit. 111. The assent of an executor to a devise of a legacy, or of any personal thing, is so necessary, that if the legatee or devisee take the thing without the delivery and assent of the executor, he may have an action of trespass against them. Keilw. 128. 1 Nelf. Ab. 260. The Common law takes notice of the assent of the executor to the legacy, and doth give him time to consider of the value of the goods, and state of the debts of the testator, that he may pay a legacy with safety; the executor being to pay debts before legacies. Perk. 570. No property can be transferred to the legatee without the assent of the executor: but if the executor doth once assent to the legacy, the legatee hath such a property vested in him that he may take it, though the executor revokes his assent afterwards. And there may be an assent implied, as well as express; as if the executor offers the legatee money for what is bequeathed him; or directs others to the legatee to buy it, &c. Plowd. 543. 4 Rep. 28. When there are many executors, the assent of one to a legacy is sufficient: and one executor may take a legacy without the assent of his co-executors. Perk. 572. Assent may be before or after probate of the will. An infant executor, at the age of seventeen years, may assent to a legacy: but it has been doubted, whether an administrator durante minori etate can assent. Cro. Eliz. 719. A husband is to give assent where his wife is executrix. A court of equity, or the spiritual court, may compel an executor to assent to a legacy. March 97. But an assent to a void devise will be also void. Plowd. 525. Assent of dean and chapter in making leases of church lands; vide Leases. Of the major part of corporations, in making by-laws, vide By-laws. And see Assets.

Assessors, Those that assess public taxes; as two inhabitants in every parish were assessors for the royal aid, to rate every person according to the value of his estate. Anno 16 & 17 Car. 2. There are assessments of parish duties, for raising money for the poor, repairing of highways, &c. made and levied by rate on the inhabitants; as well as assessments of public taxes, &c. See Assessors.

Assets, (Fr. asset, i. e. satiss) Signifies goods enough to discharge that burden which is cast upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the debts and legacies of the testator or ancestor. Bro. tit. Assets. Assets are real, or personal; where a man hath lands in fee simple, and dies seised thereof, the lands which come to his heir are assets real: and where he dies possessed of any personal estate, the goods which come to the executors are assets personal: assets are also divided into assets per descent, and assets inter maines; assets by descent is where a person is bound in an obligation, and dies seised of lands which descend to the heir, the land shall be assets, and the heir shall be charged as far as the land to him descended will extend: assets inter maines is when a man indebted makes executors, and leaves them sufficient to pay his debts and legacies; or where some commodity or profit ariseth to them in right of the testator, which are called assets in their hands. Terms de Ley 56, 77.

As to assets by descent it is to be observed, that by the Common law, if an heir had sold or aliened the lands which were assets, before the obligation of his ancestor was put in suit, he was to be discharged, and the debt was lost: but by statute, the heir is made liable to the value of the land by him sold, in action of debt brought against him by the obligee, who shall recover to the value of the said land, as if the debt was the proper debt of the heir; but the land which is sold or aliened bona fide before the action brought, shall not be liable to execution upon a judgment recovered against the heir in any such action. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 14. Where a man binds himself and his heirs in a bond; and dies, leaving issue two sons, if the eldest son enters on the lands by descent as heir to the father, and die without issue; and then the youngest son enters, he shall be charged with assets as heir to the father. Dyer 268. Lands which come to the heir by purchase shall not be assets; for 'tis only lands by descent that are assets. 1 Danv. Abr. 577. A reversion in fee, depending upon an estate-tail, is not assets; because it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it by fine, &c. 6 Rep. 56. But after the tail is spent, it is assets. 3 Mod. 257. And a reversion on an estate for life or years shall be assets. A reversion expectant upon the determination of an estate for life is assets, and ought to be pleaded specially by the heir; and the plaintiff in such case may take judgment of it cum acciderit. Dyer 371. Carthew's Rep. 129. An advowson is assets; but not a presentation to a church actually void, which may not be sold. Co. Lit. 374. Lands of cestuy que trust shall be assets by descent. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. f. 12. Also

"Estate pur auter vie shall be assets in the hands of the heir, if it come to him by reason of a special occupancy, and where there is no special occupant, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and shall be assets in their hands."

And lands by descent in antient demesne will be assets in debt. But a copyhold estate descending to an heir is not assets; nor is any right to an estate assets, without possession, &c. till recovered and reduced into possession. Danv. 577.

An annuity is no assets, for it is only a chose en action. Br. Assets per Descent, pl. 26.

Equity of redemption of an estate mortgaged, and a term for years to attend the inheritance are assets. 3 Leon. 32. An heir may plead riens per descent, but the plaintiff may reply that he had lands from his ancestor; and special matter may be given in evidence, &c. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14. 5 Rep. 60. A special judgment against assets only shall have relation to, and bind the lands from the time of the filing the original writ or bill. Carth. Rep. 245. As to the heir being bound, vide Co. L. 209, 376, 383, 384, 386.

As to assets inter maines, money decreed in a court of equity by reason of executorship, or arising by sale of lands by executors; and damages recovered by executors; also interest of the testator's money lent by executors, shall be assets. 2 Chan. Rep. 152. Those goods and chattels, which belonged to the testator at his death, and which do come to the hands of the executor, are assets, to make the executor chargeable to creditors, &c. 6 Rep. 47. But such things as are not valuable shall not be assets: and debts, &c. when recovered by the executor after the death of the testator, shall be accounted assets; and not before recovered, for the executor shall not be charged for a debt, if he cannot recover it. Wood's Inst. 323. A release of a certain debt due to the testator makes it assets in the executor's hands; because it shall be intended he would not have made the release, unless the money had been paid to him. 1 Nelf. Abr. 262.

If an obligee or creditor is made executor, the debt is assets; but he may pay himself before any other in equal or inferior degree. 1 Inst. 264. Office of Ex. ch. 2. p. 43, 63.

If an executor of his own wrong, to whom 20*l.* is owing, doth seize goods to the value of 20*l.* intending to pay himself a debt of that value, this shall be assets in his hands to make him chargeable to any creditor or legatee. 5 Rep. 30.

Tho' a plantation be an inheritance, yet, being in a foreign country, it is a chattel to pay debts, and a thing that is testamentary. Vent. 358.

Leases are assets to pay debts, notwithstanding the assent of the executor to the devise of them. 1 Lill. Abr. 99. Where an executor of lessee for years receives the profits of the land, they are appropriated to the use of the lessor; but what is over and above the rent shall be assets. 1 Salk. 79. If an executor surrenders a term of years which he had as executor, to him in reversion; or if he purchases the reversion, 'tis not extinct as to him, but shall still remain assets to the executor to satisfy debts and legacies. 1 Rep. 87.

Assets in the hands of one executor is assets in the hands of others; and if an executor hath goods of the testator in any part of the world, he shall be charged in respect of them. 6 Rep. 47. In actions against executors, the jury must find assets of what value; for the plaintiff shall recover only according to the value of the assets found. 1 Rol. Rep. 58.

Assewiare, To draw or drain water from marsh grounds.—Quod ipsi mariscum prædictum assewiare, & secundum legem Marisci, Wallis includere & in culturam redigere. — Et Mariscum illum sic assewiatum, inclusum & in culturam redactum tenere. Mon. Ang. 2 Vol. f. 334.

Assidere, or assedere, To tax equally. Provisum est generaliter quod præd. quadragesima hoc modo assideatur & colligatur. Mat. Paris. anno 1232. Sometimes it hath been used to assign an annual rent, to be paid out of a particular farm, &c. As, manerium rex Stephanus dedit & assedit eis pro centum marciis.

Assign, (assignare) Hath two significations; one general, as to set over a right to another, or appoint a deputy, &c. And the other special, to set forth or point at, as we say to assign error, assign false judgment, waste, &c. And in assigning of error, it must be shewn where the error is committed; in false judgment, wherein the judgment is unjust; in waste, wherein especially the waste is done. F. N. B. 19, 112. Reg. Orig. 72. Also justices are said to be assigned to take assises. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 2. And see Assignee and Assignment.

Assignee, (assignatus) Is he that is deputed or appointed by another to do any act, perform any business, or enjoy any commodity. And assignees may be by deed, or in law: assignee by deed is when a lessee of a term, &c. sells and assigns the same to another, that other is his assignee by deed: assignee in law is he whom the law so makes, without any appointment of the person; as an executor is assignee in law to the testator. Dyer 6. But if there be assignee in deed, assignee in law is not allowed: if one covenant to do a thing to J. S. or his assigns by a day, and before that day he dies; if before the day he name any assignee, the thing must be done to his assignee named; otherwise to his executor or administrator, who is assignee in law. 27 H. 8. 2. A. leased lands to B. for nine years, the remainder after his death to the executors or assigns of the said B. for forty years, then B. dies intestate, and his wife administers to him; in this case the administrators are not assignees. Owen 125. He is called assignee, who hath the whole estate of the assignor: and an assignee, though not named in a condition, may pay the money to save the land; but he shall not receive any money, unless he be named. 1 Inst. 215. Assignees may take advantage of forfeitures on conditions, when they are incident to the reversion, as for rent, &c. 1 And. 82. And regularly every assignee of the land may take advantage of inherent covenants; also assignees are bound by such covenants, as a covenant to repair, &c. But if it concerns a thing not in being at the time of the demise, as to make a new edifice, &c. the assignee is not bound, except he be named in express words; nor is he when named, if the thing to be done does not concern the thing demised, but is collateral to it; or in contracts merely personal. 1 Cro. 552. 1 Rol. Abr. 915. Plowd. 284.

Under the word assigns, the assignee of an assignee in perpetuum, the heir of an assignee, or the assignee of an heir, shall take. Co. Lit. 384. b. So, if a man covenant with another, his executors and assigns, the assignee of an assignee, and his executors, and the assignee of an executor or administrator of every assignee are included, and shall have covenant. 5 Co. 17. b. But if an obligation be, to pay such persons as he shall name by his will, or writing; there must be an express nomination, and his executor shall not take as assignee. Mo. 855.

A devisee is an assignee in law; per cur. 2 Show. 59.

Where a power is coupled with an interest, an assignee of an executor of an assignee may take as assignee. 2 Show. 57.

An assignee is he that possesses or enjoys a thing in his own right; and deputy is he that does it in the right of another. Perkins. See Condition, Covenant, &c.

Assignment, (assignatio) Is the setting over or transferring the interest a man hath in any thing to another. For the better explaining this head, it will be proper to consider,

I. What things are assignable.

II. Where an assignee shall take advantage of the covenant of an assignor.

III. Where an assignee shall be bound by the covenant of an assignor.

I. Assignments may be made of lands in fee, for life, or years; of an annuity, rent-charge, judgment, statute, &c. but as to lands they are usually of leases and estates for years, &c. And no estate of freehold, or term for years, shall be assigned but by deed in writing signed by the parties; except by operation of law. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. A possibility, right of entry, title for condition broken, a trust, or thing in action, cannot be granted or assigned over. 1 Inst. 214.

But though a bond, being a chose in action, cannot be assign'd over so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name, yet he has by the assignment such a title to the paper and wax, that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232. And bonds, &c. are assigned by power of attorney to receive and sue in the assignor's name: but bills of exchange are assignable by indorsement, and the assignees may recover in their own names by Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9.

Also in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignee alone becomes intitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595.

An assignee must take it subject to the same equity that it was in the hands of the obligee; as if on a marriage treaty the intended husband enters into a marriage-brotherage bond, which is afterwards assigned to creditors, yet it still remains liable to the same equity, and is not to be carried into execution against the obligor. 2 Vern. 428.

Where there is a bond for the performance of covenants in a lease, if the lessee assigns the lease, he may likewise assign the bond; but this must be before any of the covenants are broken; but if any of the covenants are broken, and the lessee afterwards assigns the lease and bond, and the assignee puts the bond in suit, 'tis maintenance. Godb. 81.

'Tis enacted by the statute 7 Jac. 1. c. 15. That a debtor to the king shall not assign any debts to him, but such as did originally grow due to the debtor; afterwards there was a debtor to the husband in 2000*l.* by a statute; the husband made his wife executrix, and died; she married again one G. D. who was indebted to the king, and then the husband and wife assigned this statute to the king in satisfaction of the debt due to him; adjudged, that the assignment was good, for tho' the second husband had the statute in right of his wife, and by consequence the debt was not originally due to him; yet because he might release the statute 'tis the same thing as if it had been originally taken in his name. 2 Cro. 324.

An office of trust is not grantable or assignable to another; and therefore it was adjudged, that the office of a flawer, which which was an office of trust, could not be assigned, and if it could not be assigned, it cannot be extended upon a statute. Dyer 7.

A possibility, right of entry, or thing in action, or cause of suit, or title for a condition broken, cannot be granted or assigned over by law; for if this were permitted, it would promote maintenance, and prove prejudicial to such as, being able to contend with those with whom the original contract was, might find themselves depressed by a powerful adversary. Co. Lit. 214. 1 Rol. Abr. 376. Skin. 6, 26.

A bare power is not assignable, but where it is coupled with an interest it may be assigned: agreed per cur. as where a lease was made with power for lessor, his heirs and assigns, to cut down, grub up, and sell trees; and lessor granted some of the trees to defendant who with his servants entered and cut them down; and it was objected, that this was a power annexed to the reversion only, and not assignable; and that he might have justified under the lessor, but not in his own right. But judgment quod quercus nil capiat. The liberty is annexed to the trees, and as incident to them, assignable with them. 2 Jon. 206. The lessor might sever the trees from the reversion. 2 Mod. 317.

Arrears of rent, &c. is a chose in action, and not assignable. See Skin. 6.

It hath been doubted if a lease for years before entry and possession be assignable. See Show. 291.

A lessee out of possession cannot make any assignment of his term off from the land; but must first enter, and recontinue his possession; or seal and deliver the deed upon the land, which puts the assignee into actual possession. Dalif. 81. But it has been adjudged, that where lessee for years of the crown is put out of his estate by a stranger, yet he may assign the term, tho' he is not in possession; because the reversion being in the crown, he cannot lawfully be put out of possession, but at his own will. Cro. Eliz. 275.

If lessee for years assigns all his term in his lease to another, he cannot reserve a right in the assignment; for he hath no interest in the thing by reason of which the rent reserved should be paid; and where there is no reversion there can be no distress: but debt may lie upon it, as on a contract. 1 Lill. Abr. 99. Lessee for term of years assigns over his term and dies, his executors shall not be charged for rent due after his decease. Noy's Max. 71. Where the executor of a lessee assigns the term, debt will not lie against him for rent incurred after the assignment; because there is neither privity of contract, nor estate between the lessor and executor: but if the lessee himself assigns his lease, the privity of contract remains between him and the lessor, although the privity of estate is gone by the assignment, and he shall be chargeable during his life; but after his death, the privity of contract is likewise determined. 3 Rep. 14. 1 Nelf. Abr. 271. Although a lessee make an assignment over of his term, yet debt lies against him by the lessor or his heir, (not having accepted rent from the assignee;) but where a lessee assigns his term, and the lessor his reversion, the privity is determined, and debt doth not lie for the reversioner against the first lessee. Moor 472. Vide Barker v. Dormer. 1 Sho. 191.

In case of action of debt for rent by the assignee of a reversion, the defendant, a lessee may plead, that, before any rent became due, he assigned the term to another; but he must set forth in his plea that he gave notice to the plaintiff of the assignment made. Raym. 163. A man made a lease, provided that the lessee or his assigns should not alien the premises without licence of the lessor, &c. who after gave licence to the lessee to alien; by this the lessee or his assigns may alien in infinitum. 4 Rep. 119.

Adjudged, that some things in respect of their nature are not assignable, or to be granted over; as for instance, if the donee in tail holdeth of the donor by fealty, he cannot assign it over to another, because fealty is incident to, and inseparable from the reversion; so if the founder of a college grant his foundation, tho' it be to the king, the grant is void, because 'tis inseparable from his blood. 11 Rep. in Magdalen College's case.

Several things are assignable by acts of parliament, which seem not assignable in their own nature; as promissory notes, by the 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. bail-bonds by the sheriff, by 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. a judge's certificate for taking and prosecuting a felon to conviction, by 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. a bankrupt's effects by the several statutes of bankruptcy.

II. As to what cases give the assignee advantage of the assignor's covenant, it is to be observed, in general, that

If the remainder of a term of years be assigned to another, the assignee shall have the benefit of a lessee; and of re-entry upon a lease made by the grantor for fewer years, &c. by the Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 34. And the assignee of a reversion of a term shall take advantage of a covenant against the lessee of a shorter term; as where lessee for twenty years makes a lease for four years. Moor 694, 695. The word heir is sufficient to make an assignee; and the grantee of a common person is assignee to have benefit of a covenant, grant, &c. Plowd. 173. A lease was made for years of lands, excepting the woods; the lessor grants the trees to the lessee, and he assigns the land over to another: the trees do not pass by this assignment to the assignee. Goldsb. 188.

The lessor demised land, and covenanted with the lessee, his executors and assigns, that if he were disturbed or forced to pay any charge, &c. he should retain so much of the rent; afterwards the lessee made an assignment of his term: and it was held, that his assignee might have remedy upon the covenant by way of retainer against the assignee of the reversion. Plowd. 72.

Lessee for years made an assignment of part of his term, and the assignee covenanted to repair; afterwards the lessee devised the reversion of the whole term to another, and died, and the devisee brought an action of covenant against the assignee; adjudged, that this devisee of the reversion was an assignee to take the benefit of this covenant or condition within the statute 32 H. 8. c. 34. of conditions. Godb. 161.

An assignee of an assignee, an executor or administrator of an assignee, or an assignee of an executor, are comprehended under the word assigns, and these shall have an action of covenant for a breach of any covenant which runs with the land. 5 Rep. 16. Spencer's case.

Lessee for years covenanted for himself and his assigns, that he would not lop the trees, &c. afterwards the lessee died intestate, and administration was granted to W. R. who lopped the trees, &c. adjudged, that it was a breach of the covenant, for an administrator is an assignee as well as an executor. Moor 44.

Lessee for life made a lease for seventeen years, who in the next year assigned the term to B. who made a lease to W. R. for fourteen years, rendering rent on certain days, and if he should for three days after, being lawfully demanded, and not paid, the lease to be void; he in the reversion for seventeen years, granted all his estate and interest by deed parol to one Rouland, who demanded the rent, and entered for non-payment; one question was, whether at Common law, without the help of the statute 32 H. 8. c. 34. of conditions, the assignee of him in reversion could take the same advantage of this lease, being void, as the assignee of the term himself might have done, who granted the lease for fourteen years? and adjudged, that he might by the grant of all his estate, if it had been in writing, and that by the statute 32 H. 8. c. 34. the grantee of the reversion of a term, shall have the benefit of a condition annexed to a lesser term derived out of a larger. Moor 525.

III. With respect to the cases in which the assignee is bound by the covenant of the assignor.

As the rent issues out of the land, the assignee generally who has the land, and is privy in estate, is debtor in respect thereof. 3 Rep. 32.

The assignee of a term is bound to perform all the covenants annexed to the estate; as if A. leases lands to B. and B. covenants to pay the rent, repair houses, &c. during the said term, and B. assigns to J. S. the assignee is bound bound to perform the covenants during the life of the first lessee, though the assignee be not named, because the covenant runs with the land being made for the maintenance of a thing in esse at the time of the lease made. 1 Roll. Abr. 521. Cro. Eliz. 457. Moor 399. 5 Co. 24.

But if A. leases for years to B. and B. for himself, his executors and administrators, covenants with A. to build a wall upon a part of land demised, and after B. assigns, the assignee is not bound by this covenant; for the law will not annex the covenant to a thing not in esse. 5 Co. 15. Yet vide post.

But if B. had covenanted for him and his assigns to build the wall, &c. this would have bound the assignee, because it is to be done upon the land, and the assignee is to have the benefit thereof. 5 Co. 15.

The lessee covenanted for himself, his executors and administrators, to leave fifteen acres every year for pasture, without ploughing it, and afterwards he assigned his lease to the defendant, against whom an action of covenant was brought for not leaving fifteen acres in pasture, &c. and upon a demurrer to the declaration it was insisted for the defendant, that he was not bound by this covenant, because he was not assignee of the lessee, who had covenanted only for his executors and administrators, and not for his assigns, for they were not named in the covenant; but adjudged this covenant binds him, though not named, because it is for the benefit of the estate; but it had been otherwise if it had been to do a collateral act as to build de novo, or the like, for in such case the assigns of the covenantor are not bound, unless named. 2 Cro. 125.

Where the executor of a lessee assigns the term, debt will not lie against him for rent incurred after the assignment, because there is neither privity of contract between the lessor and the executor, before the assignment, nor privity of estate, after the assignment, and this was Verton and Syddalis's case; but where the lessee himself assigns his lease, in such case the privity of contract still remains between him and the lessor, though the privity of estate is gone by the assignment, and therefore notwithstanding that assignment, he shall be chargeable during his life, but after his death the privity of contract is likewise determined. 3 Rep. 24.

If an assignment is made by an assignee, the first assignee is not suable for the rent; for if he be accepted by the lessor, the admission of one assignee is the admission of twenty. Comp. Attorn. 491. Assignment by an assignee dischargeth him, because he was only chargeable as having the land; and there is no occasion for giving notice to the lessor of his assignment over. Comerb. 192.

Lessee for years rendering rent, covenants to build a house on the land in ten years; within which time he assigns his term, action lies on the covenant against the assignee. Godb. 60. But where a lessee covenanted for himself and his assigns to rebuild a house before such a time, which he did not do, but after the time expired he assigned the term; adjudged that this covenant will not bind the assignee, because it was broken before the assignment. 1 Salk. 199.

Also though the covenant be for him and his assigns, yet if the thing to be done be merely collateral, and no way concern the thing demised, the covenant shall not bind the assignee; as if it be to build an house upon other land of the lessor, or to pay a collateral sum. 5 Co. 15.

The statute 32 H. 8. c. 34. enables grantees of reversions to enter for conditions broken, and to bring actions of covenant, &c. and also enables the tenants of particular estates as for life, &c. to have actions of covenant against their grantees; the question was, if a lessee for life covenant for himself, his executors and administrators, to build a wall on the lands, and afterwards he assigns the estate to W. R. whether he or the grantee of the reversion may have an action of covenant against W. R. the assignee, if the wall is not built; and adjudged, that he may, though the word assigns was not in this covenant, but only executors and administrators; for by the acceptance of the possession he had made himself subject to all the covenants which run with the land, and are inherent to it. Such as paying rent, repairing, building walls, &c. and to such he is bound without the special word assigns, but not to any collateral covenants. Moor 159.

Where tenant for years assigns his estate, no consideration is necessary; for the tenant being subject to payment of rent, &c. is sufficient to vest an estate in the assignees: in other cases some consideration must be paid. 1 Mod. 263. The words required in assignments are, grant, assign, and set over; which may amount to a grant, feoffment, lease, release, confirmation, &c. 1 Inst. 301. In these deeds the assignor is to covenant to save harmless from former grants, &c. That he is owner of the land, and hath power to assign; that the assignee shall quietly enjoy, and to make further assurance; and the assignee may covenant to pay the rent, and perform the covenants, &c. See farther Assignee, Condition, Covenant.

An assignment of chambers in an inn of court.

THIS indenture, made the day, &c. in the year of our Lord, &c. Between A. B. of, &c. esq; of the one part, and C. D. of, &c. gent. of the other part: Whereas in and by a certain writing made and dated, &c. at Lincoln's Inn, the benchers of the said inn did order that the said A. B. should have a lease of all that chamber up one pair of stairs, number, &c. belonging to Lincoln's Inn aforesaid, for the term of twenty-one years, to commence, at, &c. under the yearly rent of, &c. as by the said recited writing or order may more fully appear: and whereas in pursuance of the said order, a lease of the said chamber hath been since made and granted to the said A. B. for the said term of twenty-one years, &c. Now this indenture witnesseth, That the said A. B. for and in consideration of the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, to him in hand paid by the said C. D. at and before the sealing and delivery hereof, the receipt whereof he doth hereby acknowledge, Hath granted, bargained, sold, assigned and set over; and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell, assign and set over unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators and assigns, All that the chamber aforesaid with the appurtenances, and all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of him the said A. B. of, in and to the same, or any part thereof: To have and to hold the said chamber, with the appurtenances, to the said C. D. his executors, administrators and assigns, from henceforth, for and during all the rest and residue of the said term of twenty-one years, therein to come and unexpired. And the said A. B. doth by these presents, for himself, his executors and administrators, covenant and grant to and with the said C. D. his executors, administrators, and assigns, in manner following; (that is to say) that he the said A. B. hath good right, full power and lawful authority, to grant and assign the said chamber and premises above mentioned, in manner and form aforesaid: And that the same is free and clear of all former grants, assignments, incumbrances, arrears of rent, and all other duties payable to the said society of Lincoln's Inn, or any the officers or ministers thereof, or otherwise howsoever: And also that he the said C. D. his executors, administrators and assigns, shall and lawfully may at all times hereafter, during the rest and residue now to come and unexpired of the said term of twenty-one years, peaceably and quietly have, hold, occupy, possess and enjoy the said chamber and premises above mentioned, and hereby granted and assigned, without any let, suit, trouble, eviction, ejection, claim or demand, of or by the said A. B. his executors, administrators, or assigns, or any other person or persons whatsoever: And further, that he the said A. B. his executors and administrators shall and will, from time to time, and at all times hereafter, upon the reasonable request, and at the costs and charges of the said C. D. his, &c. make do, and execute, or cause to be made, done, and executed, all and every such further acts and assurances, for the better assigning and assuring of the said chamber, and premises to the said C. D. as by him the said C. D. or his counsel learned in the law, shall be reasonably devised, advised or required. In witness whereof the parties above named have hereunto put their hands and seals the day and year above written.

Form of an assignment of a bond.

TO all people to whom these presents shall come, greeting: Whereas A. B. of, &c. in and by one bond or obligation, obligation, bearing date, &c. became bound to C. D. of, &c. in the penal sum of, &c. conditioned for the payment of, &c. and interest at a day long since past, as by the said bond and condition thereof may appear: And whereas there now remain due to the said C. D. for principal and interest on the said bond, the sum of, &c. Now know ye, That the said C. D. for and in consideration of the said sum of, &c. of lawful British money to him in hand paid by E. F. of, &c. the receipt whereof the said C. D. doth hereby acknowledge; he the said C. D. hath assigned and set over, and by these presents doth assign and set over unto the said E. F. the said recited bond or obligation, and the money thereupon due and owing, and all his right and interest of, in and to the same. And the said C. D. for the consideration aforesaid, hath made, constituted and appointed, and by these presents doth make, constitute and appoint the said E. F. his executors and administrators, his true and lawful attorney and attorneys irrevocable, for him and in his name, and in the name and names of his executors and administrators, but for the sole and proper use and benefit of the said E. F. his executors, administrators and assigns, to ask, require, demand and receive of the said A. B. his heirs, executors and administrators, the money due on the said bond; and on non-payment thereof, be the said A. B. his heirs, executors and administrators, to sue for, and recover the same; and on payment thereof to deliver up and cancel the said bond, and give sufficient releases and discharges therefore, and one or more attorney or attorneys under him to constitute; and whatsoever the said E. F. or his attorney or attorneys, shall lawfully do in the premises, the said C. D. doth hereby allow and affirm. And the said C. D. doth covenant with the said E. F. that be the said C. D. hath not received, nor will receive the said money due on the said bond, or any part thereof; neither shall or will release or discharge the same, or any part thereof; but will own and allow of all lawful proceedings for recovery thereof; he the said E. F. saving the said C. D. harmless, of and from any costs that may happen to him thereby. In witness, &c.

Assimulare, To put highways together: 'tis mentioned in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 8.

Assa Cadere. This word signifies to be nonsuited; as when there is such a plain and legal insufficiency in a suit, that the complainant can proceed no further on it. Fleta, lib. 4. cap. 15. Bracon, lib. 2. cap. 7.

Assa cadit in Juratam, Is where a thing in controversy is so doubtful, that it must necessarily be tried by a jury. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 15.

Assa continuanda, A writ directed to the justices of assize for the continuation of a cause, when certain records alleged cannot be produced in time by the party that has occasion to use them. Reg. Orig. 217.

Assa Proroganda, Is a writ directed to the justices assigned to take assizes, for the stay of proceedings, by reason of the party's being employed in the king's business. Reg. Orig. 208.

Assise, (Fr. assise) According to our antient books is defined to be an assembly of knights, and other substantial men, with the justice, in a certain place, and at a certain time appointed. Custum. Normand. cap. 24. This word is properly derived from the Latin verb assideo, to sit together; and is also taken for the court, place or time, when and where the writs and processes of assise are handled or taken. And in this signification assise is general; as when the justices go their several circuits with commission to take all assises; or special, where a special commission is granted to certain persons (formerly oftentimes done) for taking an assise upon one or two disseisins only. Bracon. lib. 3. Concerning the general assise, all the counties of England are divided into six circuits, and two judges are assigned by the king's commission to every circuit, who hold their assises twice a year in every county, (except Middlesex, where the king's courts of record do sit, and where his courts for his counties palatine are held) and have five several commissions. 1. Of oyer and terminer, directed to them and many other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to try treasons, felonies, &c. and this is the largest commission they have. 2. Of gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of assise associate, which gives them power to try every prisoner in the gaol committed for any offence whatsoever, but none but prisoners in the gaol; so that one way or other they rid the gaol of all the prisoners in it. 3. Of assise, directed to themselves only and the clerk of assise, to take assises, and do right upon writs of assise brought before them by such as are wrongfully thrust out of their lands and possessions: which writs were heretofore frequent, but now men's possessions are sooner recovered by ejectments, &c. 4. Of nisi prius, directed to the judges and clerk of assise, by which civil causes grown to issue in the courts above, are tried in the vacation by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and on return of the verdict of the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment. 5. A commission of the peace, in every county of the circuits; and all justices of the peace of the county are bound to be present at the assises; and sheriffs are also to give their attendance on the judges, or they shall be fined. Bacon's Elem. 15, 16, &c. There is a commission of the peace, oyer and terminer and gaol-delivery of Newgate, held several times in a year, for the city of London and county of Middlesex, at Justice Hall in the Old Bailey, where the lord mayor is the chief judge. In Wales there are but two circuits, North and South Wales; for each of which the king appoints two persons learned in the laws to be judges. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8. If justices sit by force of a commission, and do not adjourn the commission, it is determined. 4 Inst. 265. The constitution of the justices of assise was begun by Hen. 2. though somewhat different from what they now are: and by Magna Charta justices shall be sent through every county once a year, who, with the knights of the respective shires, shall take assises of novel disseisin, &c. in their proper shires, and what cannot be determined there shall be ended by them in some other place in their circuit; and if it be too difficult for them, it shall be referred to the justices of the bench, there to be ended. 9 Hen. 3. c. 12. Justices of assise, &c. are to hold their sessions in the chief towns of the county; and their records to be sent into the Exchequer. 6 R. 2. 9 Ed. 3. By the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 12. The summer assises in Buckinghamshire shall be held at the town of Buckingham. Assise is likewise used for a jury, where assises of novel disseisin are tried: the panels of assises shall be arrayed, and a copy indented delivered by the sheriff, &c. to the plaintiffs and defendants six days before the sessions, &c. if demanded, on pain of 40*l.* by Stat. 6 Hen. 6. cap. 2. And assise is taken for a writ for recovery of possession of things immovable, whereof any one and his ancestors have been disseised. Likewise in another sense, it signifies an ordinance or statute. Reg. Orig. 279. The writs of assise are the four sorts following:

Writ of Novel Disseisin, (assisa nova disseisina).

An assise of novel disseisin is a remedy maxime festinam, for the recovery of lands or tenements, of which the party was disseised. 2 Inst. 410. And it is called novel disseisin, because the justices in eyre went their circuits from seven years to seven years; and no assise was allowed before them, which commenced before the last circuit, which was called an antient assise; and that which was upon a disseisin since the last circuit, an assise of novel disseisin. Co. Lit. 153. b.

An assise is called festinum remedium. 1. Because the tenant shall not be effoined. 2. Shall not cast a protection. 3. Shall not pray in aid of the king. 4. Shall not vouch any stranger, except he be present, and will enter presently into warranty; so of receipt. 5. The parol shall not demur for the nonage of the plaintiff or defendant. 8 Co. 50. Booth 262.

It lies where tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, is put out and disseised of his lands, or tenements, rents, common of pasture, common way, or of an office, toll, &c. Glawv. lib. 10. Reg. Orig. 197. Assise must be of an actual freehold in lands, &c. and not a freehold in law; it lieth of common of pasture, where the commoner hath a freehold in it, and the lord or other persons feed it so hard, that all the grass is eat up; but then the plaintiff must count and set forth how long the land was fed, and alledge per quod proficuum suum ibidem amisit, &c. 9 Rep. 113. One may have an assise of land and rent, or of several rents, and offices and profits in his soil, all in one writ: and if it be of a rent-charge, or rent-sock, it shall be be general de libero tenemento in such a place, and all the lands and tenants of the tenements charged ought to be named in the writ; but in assise for rent service it is otherwise. Dyer 31. An assise may be brought for an office held for life; but then it must be an office of profit, not of charge only: of the toll of a mill, or market, assise lieth; though it may not be brought of suit to a mill. 8 Rep. 46, 47.

Seisin of an office may be alledged by taking money for the business done, and the place where the officer sat be put in view. Dyer 114.

An assise was brought of the office of a flaxer of the court of Common Pleas, and the demandant counted de libero tenemento, and alledged seisin, by taking money for a capias, and the post was put in view where the officer sat. Dyer 114.

An assise lieth of the office of register of the admiralty, and the demandant laid a prescription to it, viz. quod quilibet hujusmodi persona, who should be named by the admiral, should be register of the admiralty for life. Dyer 153.

It lieth of offices of woodward, park-keeper, and keeper of chases, warrener, &c. but these are not at Common law; but by the statute of Westm. 2. because they are of profits to be taken in alieno solo: it likewise lieth of all other offices and bailiwicks in fee. 8 Rep. 47.

In an assise of a new office, it ought to be shewed what profits belong to it; but it is otherwise of an ancient office, because it is presumed, that the profit thereof is sufficiently known. 8 Rep. 45.

Tenants in common shall each have a several assise for his moiety, or part, because they are seised by several titles; but twenty jointenants shall have but one assise in all their names, because they have but one joint title; so if there are three jointenants, and one of them releaseth all his right to one of his companions, and then the other two are disseised of the whole, they shall have but one assise in both their names, for the two parts, because they had a joint title to it at the time of the disseisin, and he to whom the release was given shall have an assise in his own name, because of that part he is tenant in common. 1 Inst. 196.

If lessee for years, or tenant at will, be ousted, the lessor, or he in remainder, may have assise, because the freehold was in him at the time of the disseisin. Kel. 109. Assise lies for tithes, by Stat 32 Hen. 8. c. 7. Cro. Eliz. 559. But not for an annuity, pension, &c. In some cases an assise will lie, where ejectment will not; for instance, de uno crofto, because it may be put in view to the jury. 2 Bull. 214. Ejectment will not lie de piscaria, by reason the sheriff cannot deliver possession of it; but an assise will lie for it, as it may be viewed by the recognitors. Cro. Car. 534. Assise will sometimes lie where trespass vi & armis doth not; as where a lord enters and distrains his tenant so often, when nothing is due, that the tenant is disturbed in manuring his lands; in such case he may have assise de siveit suis distrays, but he cannot have trespass vi & armis against his lord. 8 Rep. 47. 1 Nels. Abr. 276.

By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. cap. 12. assises of no disseisin, &c. shall be taken in the proper counties, by the King's justices: and for estovers of wood, profit taken in woods, corn to be received yearly in a certain place; and for toll, tonnage, &c. and of offices in fee, an assise shall be; also for common of turbary, and of fishing, appendant to freehold, &c.

In an assise, the plaintiff must prove his title, then his seisin and disseisin: but seisin of part of a rent is sufficient to have assise of the whole; and if a man who hath title to enter set his foot upon the land and is ousted, that is a sufficient seisin. Comp. Attorn. 267.

As the writ of assise restores the party to the actual seisin of his freehold, for so are the words of the writ, viz. facias tenementum illud seiseri, &c. consequently the party that brings the writ must found it upon an actual seisin, which he has been deposed of, for otherwise this remedy is not commensurate to his case. See 2 Rol. Abr. 463.

Therefore if there be lord and tenant by rent-service, and the lord grants the services to another, and the tenant attorns by a penny, this being given by way of attornment, is not sufficient seisin to ground an assise on; secus if the penny had been given by way of seisin of the rent. Lit. fea. 565. Co. Lit. 315. 4 Co. 9. 10 Co. 127.

The first process in this action is an original writ issued out of Chancery, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to return a jury, who are called the recognitors of the assise. An assise is to be arraigned on the day the writ is returnable, on which day the defendant is to count; and the tenant is to appear and plead instantly, unless the court thinks proper to allow him an imparlance, which is said cannot be without shewing good cause. Style Reg. 88.

If in an assise no tenant of the freehold be mentioned, the defendant may plead it; and where one defendant pleads, no tenant of the freehold named in the writ, if this is found, the writ shall abate quoad all. Dyer 207. On such a plea of the defendant, the plaintiff says that he hath made a feoffment to persons unknown, and he himself hath continually taken the profits; if then they are at issue upon the taking of the profits, and it be found against the defendant, it shall not be inquired of the points of the assise, for the disseisin is acknowledged. 1 Danv. Abr. 584. And if the deed of the ancestor of the plaintiff be pleaded in bar, and this is denied, and found for the plaintiff; the assise shall not inquire of the points of the writ, but only of the damages. Ibid. 585.

In an assise for an office newly erected and constituted, the demandant in his plaint must shew what fee or profit is granted for the exercise thereof; for this office cannot have a fee or profit appurtenant to it as an ancient office may; and for an office without fee or profit no assise lies. 8 Co. 49.

But in an assise for an ancient office, the demandant in his plaint need not shew what fee or profit is belonging to it, for it shall be intended there is some fee or profit. 8 Co. 49.

In this suit, if the defendant fail to make good the exception which he pleads, he shall be adjudged a disseisor, without taking the assise; and shall pay the plaintiff double damages, and be imprisoned a year. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 25. In assise the tenant pleads in bar, and the plaintiff makes title, but the tenant doth neither answer nor traverse the title; in this case the assise shall be awarded at large. Cro. Eliz. 559. And if any other title is found for the plaintiff, he shall recover. Bro. Ass. 281. If a tenant pleads in abatement in an assise, he must at the same time plead over in bar; and no imparlance shall be allowed, without good cause: and where there are several defendants, and any of them do not appear the first day, the assise shall be taken against them by default. Pasch. 5 W. 3. If assise be brought against a lessee, he may not plead assisa non; for that is the form of the plea in bar for tenant of the freehold: he ought to plead the special matter, viz. his lease, the reversion in the plaintiff, and that he is possessed, and so in without wrong. Jenk. Cent. 142. An assise is to be first arraigned, and the plaintiff's counsel prays the court that the defendant may be called; whereupon he is called; and if the defendant appears, then his counsel demand oyer of the writ of assise, and the return of it; which is granted; and then he prays leave to imparl to a short time after, and the jury is adjourned to that day: at the day given by the court, the defendant is again called, and upon his appearance, he pleads to the assise; and upon this an issue is joined between the parties, and the jurors are sworn to try the issue, the counsel proceeding to give them their evidence: after the trial the court gives judgment, and the plaintiff recovering is to have writ of seisin, &c. 1 Lill. Abr. 105, 106.

The jurors that are to try the assise are to view the thing in demand: by writ of assise the sheriff is commanded, Quod faciat duodecim liberos & legales homines de vicineto, &c. Videre tenementum illud, & nomina eorum imbrevari, & quod summoneat eos per bonas summonitiones, quod sint coram justitiariis, &c. parati inde facere recognitionem, &c.

By Westm. 2. cap. 25. A certificate of assise is given, which is a writ for the party grieved, by a verdict or judgment given against him in an assise, when he had something to plead, as a record or release, which could not have have been pleaded by his bailiff; or when the assise was taken against himself by default, to have the deed tried, and the record brought in before the justices, and the former jury summoned to appear before them at a certain day and place, for a further examination and trial of the matter. See Booth 215, 287. 4 Co. 4. b. 2 Inst. 26.

The plaint need not be so certain in assise as in other writs; the judgment being to recover per visum recognitorum; and if the plaint be but so certain as that the recognitors may put the demandant into possession, it is sufficient. Dyer 84. The demandant in an assise may abridge his plaint at any time after the jury are charged, before verdict. 1 Danv. 580. For proceedings in writ of assise of novel disseisin, see Plowd. 411, 412.

Where an assise concerns the king and his prerogative, the judges may be prohibited to proceed therein, by writ de non ulterius proseguendo rege inconsulto. Ibid. 277. The court of Common Pleas or King's Bench may hold plea of assises of land in the county of Middlesex; by writ out of Chancery. 1 Lill. Abr. 105. And in cities and corporations an assise of fresh force lies for recovery of possession of lands, within forty days after the disseisin, as the ordinary assise in the county. F. N. B. 7.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the sheriff of W. greeting.

A. B. hath complained to us, that C. D. unjustly and without judgment hath disseised him of his free tenement or freehold in, &c. within thirty years now last past; and therefore we command you, that if the said A. makes you secure in prosecuting his claim, then that you cause the said tenement to be resealed of the chattels which in it were taken, and the same tenement with its chattels to be in peace, until the next assises, when our justices into those parts shall come; and in the mean time do you cause twelve free and lawful men of that venue or neighbourhood to view the said tenement, and their names to be impanelled, and summon them by good summoners, that they be before our said justices at the said assises, ready to make recognisance thereof; and put by sureties and safe pledges the said C. or his bailiff, if he shall not be found, that he then be there to hear that recognisance; and have you there the summoners, the names of the pledges, and this writ. Witnesses, &c.

A count, or declaration, with a plea, issue, and judgment in an assise.

WILTS, ff. THE assise come to recognise, whether C. D. unjustly and without judgment did disseise A. B. of his freehold in, &c. within thirty years now last past, &c. And whereupon the said A. by T. E. his attorney complains, that he the said C. disseised him of one messuage, twenty acres of land, and, &c. with the appurtenances, in, &c. And for his title to the tenements and assise aforesaid, the said A. saith, that T. B. father of him the said A. long before the obtaining of the said original writ of assise, was seised of the tenements aforesaid with the appurtenances, in his demesne as of fee; and being so seised thereof, the day and year, &c. at, &c. aforesaid, by his indenture, made between him the said T. of the one part, and, &c. of the other part, which one part thereof with the seal of the said T. affixed thereto and by him signed, the said A. here brings into this court, the date whereof is the same day and year aforesaid, he for himself his heirs and assigns did covenant, grant, &c. (here reciting a deed of covenants to levy a fine of the tenements, among other things, and the fine levied accordingly) to the use of A. and his heirs, &c. By virtue of which fine so levied, the said A. into the said tenements with the appurtenances entered, and was thereof seised in his demesne as of fee, until the aforesaid C. D. him the said A. thereof unjustly, and without judgment did disseise as aforesaid; and this he is ready to verify; whereupon he prays the assise, &c. And the said C. by, &c. his attorney comes, &c. and saith, that he has nothing in the said tenements with the appurtenances, to put in view of the recognitors of the said assise, and in the plaint or declaration aforesaid specified, nor had at the day of bringing the original writ of assise aforesaid, or ever after, nor any injury or disseisin did to the said A. And of this he puts himself upon the assise; and the said C. does so likewise: therefore let the assise thereof between them be taken, &c. (here follows the verdict of the recognitors or jury, for the plaintiff A.) Therefore it is considered, that the said A. do recover against the said C. his seisin of the tenements aforesaid, with the appurtenances, and also, &c. And the said C. is in mercy, &c. And hereupon the said A. prays the writ of the lord the king, to be directed to the sheriff of the county aforesaid, to cause to be delivered to him full seisin of the tenements aforesaid with the appurtenances; and it is granted to him, returnable here, &c.

Assise of Mort d'Ancestor, (assisa mortis antecessoris) is a writ that lieth where a man's father, mother, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, &c. died seised of lands, tenements, rents, &c. that were held in fee, and after their deaths a stranger abateth. Reg. Orig. 223. It is good as well against the abator, as any other in possession of the land: but it lies not against brothers or sisters, &c. where there is privity of blood between the person prosecuting and them. Co. Litt. 242. And it must be brought within the time limited by the statute of limitations, or the right may be lost by negligence. If the ancestor were seised the day that he died, of any lands, or other estate in fee simple, although a stranger entereth and disseiseth him of that land the day that he died, so that he dieth not seised of the said land; yet the person who is his heir shall have the assise of mort d'ancestor, because the writ doth not suppose that the ancestor died seised; but saith parati sacramento recogn. Si W. B. Pater, &c. suit seifitus die quo obiit, &c. And the same is sufficient, although he died not seised. Fitz. Nat. Br. 433. If a man go beyond sea in pilgrimage, and dieth there; or if he enter into religion, &c. his heir shall have a writ of assise of mort d'ancestor, and it sufficeth that the ancestor was seised the day he went out of the land, although it was not the day of his death. Ibid. 434, 435. By the statute of Gloucester, if tenant by the curtesy alien his wife's inheritance, and dieth, the heir of the wife shall have an assise of mort d'ancestor, if he have not assets by descent from the tenant by the curtesy; and the same shall be as well where the wife was not seised of land the day of her death, as where she was seised thereof. 6 Ed. 1. New Nat. Br. 489. A warden of a college, &c. shall have assise of mort d'ancestor of rent where his predecessor was seised. And a man may have assise of mort d'ancestor of rents, against several persons in several counties; having in the end of the writ several summons against the tenants: and the process in this writ, is summons against the party; and if he makes default at the day of the assise returned, then the plaintiff ought to sue out a resummons; and if he makes default again, the assise shall be taken, &c. Bro. Assis. 88. In a mort d'ancestor, if the tenant says, the plaintiff is not next heir, and this is found against him, the points of the writ shall be inquired of: and in this case, the assise may find, that though the plaintiff be the next heir, yet he is not next heir as to this land; for this is in regard of their inquiry at large. Br. Mort. d'An. 47. 1 Danv. Abr. 584. Damages shall be recovered in the assise of mort d'ancestor; but it lieth not of an estate tail, only where the ancestor was seised in demesne as of fee. Bro. Assis. If a man be barred in assise of novel disseisin, upon shewing a descent, or other special matter, he may have mort d'ancestor, or writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. 4 Rep. 43.

Form of a writ of assise of mort d'ancestor.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the sheriff of W. Greeting. If A. B. shall make you secure, that he will prosecute his claim, then summon, &c. Twelve free and lawful men of the neighbourhood of, &c. that they be before our justices at the first assises, when into those parts they shall come; or before our justices at Westminster on the day, &c. or before our trusty and beloved, &c. and those whom to them we shall associate, at a certain day and place, which the said justices shall cause you to know (or to be known to you) ready upon oath to recognise, if W. B. father of the said A. &c. was seised in his demesne as of fee, of one messuage, and one yard-land with the appurtenances in D. the day which he dy'd; and whether he dy'd, &c. And if the said A. be his next heir; and in the mean time, let them see the said messuage and land, and do you cause their names to be impanelled; and summons by good summoners C. D. who who now holdeth the said messuage and lands, that he be there to hear the recognition: and have you there the summoners, and this writ. Witness, &c.

Writ of Darrein Presentment, (assisa ultimæ presentationis) a writ lying where a man and his ancestors have presented a clerk to a church, and after, the church being void, a stranger presents his clerk to the same church, whereby the person having right is disturb'd. Reg. Orig.

20. And a man shall have assise of darrein presentment, although neither he nor his ancestors did present to the last avoidance: as if tenant for life or years, or in dower, or by the curtesy, suffer an usurpation in a church, &c. and die; he in reversion who is heir unto the ancestor who last presented, shall have assise of darrein presentment, if he be disturbed: but if a man present; and then grant the advowson unto another for life, and he suffer one usurpation, or two, or three usurpations; now at the next avoidance he in the reversion shall not have an assise of darrein presentment, if he be disturbed to present. 10 Ed. 3. In this case he is put to his writ of right. If a disturber present to an advowson, and the patron bring an assise of darrein presentment, and pending the writ, the incumbent dieth, if the disturber presenteth again and dies, yet the patron shall have an assise of darrein presentment upon the first disturbance against the heir of the disturber by journeys accounts. New Nat. Br. 71. Assise of darrein presentment doth not lie for one coparcener against the other: the church is never litigious between parceners; for if they cannot agree, the ordinary ought to admit the presentee of the eldest: contra of jointenants. Mich. 15 Ed. 3. If a man present to a church, and afterwards the parson doth resign, &c. and the patron presents again and is disturbed, he shall have this writ, although the former presentee be living; and the writ shall suppose, that the defendant doth deforce him of the advowson; and yet the plaintiff by his declaration counteth that he or his ancestors last presented, by which he supposeth that he is in possession, &c. New Nat. Br. 74. A person presents to an advowson, and after the incumbent dies, and the ordinary doth present another by lapse, on that incumbent's death the right patron shall present; and if he be disturbed, he shall have an assise of darrein presentment, notwithstanding the mean presentment: but one cannot make title to a presentment in time of war. Ibid. A tenant in tail of an advowson may have this writ, as well as tenant in fee thereof, and is not put to a quare impedit: and 'tis said a lessee for years may bring it, if he hath presented before, although he hath no freehold; for this assise is not like an assise of novel disseisin. F. N. B. 31. Though he who will generally bring the assise of darrein presentment, ought to have the same estate or part thereof, which he had at the time of the first presentment: therefore if such lessee for years of an advowson presents, and after his estate is enlarged for life, or in fee; and then the church becomes void, he shall not have this writ, because he hath a new estate by enlargement, and no part of his former estate. Kelw. 118. Mallor. Qu. Imped. 162. By Magna Charta 9 H. 3. c. 13. These assises of darrein presentment are to be always taken before the justices of the bench, and there shall be determined. In assise of darrein presentment, the process is summons and re-summons, habeas corpus, &c. And if the writ be brought in Middlesex, at the return the assise shall be there arraigned at the bar, and the tenant demanded; if the tenant doth not appear, a re-summons shall be awarded; and if upon that he appeareth not, the assise is to be taken against him by default, &c. In this assise six of the jury ought to have the view of the church, to the intent that they may put the plaintiff in possession, if he recovers; and the judgment is to recover the presentation and damages, and the value of the church for half a year; and if six months be past, two years value of the church shall be recovered, by Stat. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 5.

Form of a writ of assise of darrein presentment.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the sheriff of W. greeting. If A. B. shall secure you, &c. then do you summon by good summoners twelve free and lawful men of the venue or neighbourhood of D. that they be before our justices, &c. ready to recognise upon their oaths what patron in the time of peace presented the last parson, or incumbent, who is dead, to the church of, &c. which is vacant, as 'tis said, and the advowson whereof the said A. saith belongs to him; and in the mean time the church let them view, and do you cause their names to be returned, and summon C. D. who deforced him of that advowson, that he be there to hear, &c. And have you then there the summoners and this writ. Witness, &c.

Writ de utrum, (assisa utrum) Lieth for a parson against a layman, or a layman against a parson, for lands or tenements doubtful, whether they be lay-fee, or free alms belonging to the church. Braz. lib. 4. It is a writ of the highest nature that a parson can have: and if a parson, prebendary, &c. lose by default in a real action, he may have this writ; for it is his writ of right. 6 Rep. 8. These are the four kinds of writs of assise, used in actions possessory; and are called petit assises, in respect of the grand assise: for the law of fees is grounded upon two rights, one of possession, the other of property; and as the grand assise serves for the right of property, so the petit assise serveth to settle the right of possession. Horn's Mirr. At Common law there are but two forms of writs of assise, viz. assise de libero tenemento, and assise de communia pasturæ. 8 Rep. 45. The assises of novel disseisin, &c. and de communia pasturæ, were instituted by Hen. 2. in the place of duels: and therefore Glanville tells us, that Magna assisa est regale beneficium clementia principis de consilio procerum populis indultum, a quo vitæ hominum et status integritati tam salubriter consulitur, ut in jure, quod quis in libero soli tenemento possidet, retinendo, duelli casum homines declinare possunt ambiguum, &c. Glanv. lib. 2. cap. 7.

Writ of the Forest, (assisa de foresta) Is a statute touching orders to be observed in the King's forest. Mannwood 35. The statute of view of frank-pledge, anno 18 Ed. 1. is also called the assise of the King: and the statute of bread and ale, 51 H. 3. is termed the assise of bread and ale. And these are so called, because they set down and appoint a certain measure, or order, in the things they contain. There is further an assise of nuisance, assisa nocu-menti, where a man maketh a nuisance to the freehold of another, to redress the same. And besides Littleton's division of assises, there are others mentioned by other writers, viz. assise at large, brought by an infant to enquire of a disseisin, and whether his ancestor were of full age, good memory, &c. when he made the deed pleaded, whereby he claims his right. Assise in point of assise (assisa in modum assisæ) which is when the tenant as it were setting foot to foot with the demandant, without any thing further, pleads directly to the writ, no wrong, no disseisin. Assise out of the point of assise, is when the tenant pleadeth something by exception; as a foreign release, or foreign matter triable in a foreign county; which must be tried by a jury, before the principal cause can proceed. Assise of right of damages, is where the tenant confesseth an ouster, and referring it to a demurrer in law, whether it were rightly done or not, is adjudged to have done wrong; whereupon the demandant shall have a writ of assise to recover damages. Braz. lib. 4. F. N. B. 105. Assises are likewise awarded by default of tenants, &c.

Assises, (assiores) Sunt qui assisas condunt, aut taxationes imponunt.—In Scotland, (according to Skene) they are the same with our jurors; and their oath is this;

We shall leil swith say,
And na swith conceal, for naething we may,
So far as we are charg'd upon this assise,
Be God himself, and be our part of paradise,
And as we will answer to God, upon
The dreadful day of dome,

Assise, Rented or farmed out for such an assise, or certain assessed rent in money or provisions, terra assisa was commonly opposed to terra dominica; this last being held in demain, and occupied by the lord, the other let out to inferior tenants. So among the lands of the Knight's Templars, belonging to their preceptor of Sandford. Cam. Oxon. Apud corvele de dono Matildis regine habentur quatuor hide, bidæ, quarum duæ sunt in dominico, & duæ assisæ ab hominibus apud, &c.—Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 141. And hence comes the word to assise or allot the proportion and rates in taxes and payments by assessors.

Assithment, A wiregeld, or compensation, by a pecuniary mulct: from the preposition ad, and the Sax. sithbe, vice: quod vice supplicii ad expiandum delictum solvitur.

Association, (associatio) Is a writ or patent sent by the King, either at his own motion, or at the suit of a party plaintiff, to the justices appointed to take assises, or of oyer and terminer, &c. to have others associated unto them. And this is usual where a justice of assise lies; and a writ is issued to the justices alive to admit the person associated: also where a justice is disabled, this is practised. F. N. B. 185. Reg. Orig. 201, 206, 223. The clerk of the assise is usually associate of course; in other cases, some learned serjeants at law are appointed. It has been holden, that an association after another association allowed and admitted, doth not lie; nor are the justices then to admit other association in that writ afterwards, so long as that writ and commission stand in force. Br. Assise 386. Mich. 32 H. 6. The king may make an association unto the sheriff upon a writ of redisseisin, as well as upon assise of novel disseisin. New Nat. Br. 416, 417.

Association of Parliament, In the reign of king William III. the parliament entered into a solemn association to defend his majesty's person and government against all plots and conspiracies: and all persons bearing offices civil or military, were enjoined to subscribe the association, to stand by king William, on pain of forfeitures and penalties, &c. By Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 27.

Affoile, (absolvere) To deliver from excommunication. Staundf. Pl. Cr. 72.—The defendant shall remain in prison till the plaintiff is affoiled; that is, delivered from his excommunication: and in Stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 10. Mention being made of K. Edw. 3. it is added, whom God affoil.

Assumpsit (from the Lat. assumo) Is taken for a voluntary promise, by which a man assumes or takes upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: it comprehends any verbal promise, made upon consideration, and the Civilians express it diversly, according to the nature of the promise, calling it sometimes pactum, sometimes promissionem, or constitutum, &c. Terms de Ley.

Here it is to be considered,

- I. In what cases an assumpsit is the proper action.
- II. What words will create an assumpsit.
- III. What consideration is sufficient.
- IV. Of the proceedings.

I. In every action upon assumpsit, there ought to be a consideration, promise, and breach of promise. 1 Leon 405. For

An assumpsit is an action the law gives a party injured, for the breach or non-performance of a contract legally entered into; it is founded on a contract either express or implied by law, and gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92. Moor 667.

But here it must be observed, that the law distinguishes between a general indebitatus assumpsit and a special assumpsit: for though they come under the denomination of actions on the case, and the party is to be recompensed in damages alike in both, yet the first seems to be of a superior nature, and will lie in no case but where debt will lie; but for a particular undertaking, or collateral promise to discharge the debt or duty of another, a special assumpsit must be brought. 1 New Abr. 163.

Action of the case on assumpsit lies for not making a good estate of land sold, according to promise; not paying money upon a bargain and sale, according to agreement; not delivering goods upon promise, on demand; this is by express assumpsit; and implied assumpsit is where goods are sold, or work is done, &c. without any price agreed upon; on action of the case by quantum meruit, the law implies a promise and satisfaction to the value.

When one becomes legally indebted to another for goods sold, the law implies a promise that he will pay this debt; and if it be not paid, indebitatus assumpsit lies.

1 Daru. Abr. 26. And indebitatus assumpsit lies for goods sold and delivered to a stranger ad requisitionem of the defendant. Ibid. 27. But on assumpsit for goods sold, you must prove a price agreed on, otherwise the action will not lie; though this is helped by laying a quantum meruit with the indebit. assumpsit, wherein if you fail in proof of the price agreed, you may recover the value. Wood's Inst. 536.

If A. and B. having dealings with each other, make up their accounts, and B. is found in arrear, and promises to pay the balance, an assumpsit lies against him, and A. need not bring a writ of account. Cro. Jac. 69. Yelv. 70. S. P. 1 Robt Abr. 7. S. P. 1 Robt. Rep. 396. Bulst. 208. Moor 854.

So if A. gives money, or delivers goods to B. to merchandize therewith, and B. promises to render an account, assumpsit lies on this express promise as well as account. 1 Salk. 9.

So if a tenant, being in arrear for rents, settles an account of arrears with his landlord, and promises to pay him the sum in which he is found in arrear, an assumpsit lies on this promise. 1 Robt. Abr. 7. Bro. Account 81. Raym. 211. 2 Keb. 813. Vide Style 131, 283. Cro. Jac. 602.

But if the obligor in a bond, without any new consideration, as forbearance, &c. promises to pay the money, an assumpsit will not lie, but the obligee must still pursue his remedy by action of debt. 1 Robt. Abr. 8. Hutt. 34. Cro. Eliz. 240. seems contra.

Where a man comes to buy goods, and they agree upon a price and a day for the payment, and the buyer takes them away, an assumpsit for the money is the proper action, for trover will not lie for the goods, because the property was changed by a lawful bargain, and by that bargain the buyer was to convert the goods before the money was due; but if a man comes to buy goods, and they agree upon a price for present money, and the buyer takes the goods away without payment, trover lies, because the property is not altered, and therefore the taking away the goods, without payment of the money, is an injurious taking, for which the action lies; but if a man sells goods on payment of money on a day to come, and the money be paid, and the goods not delivered, trover lies, because the property is in the buyer. 1 New Abr. 167.

If a man and a woman, being unmarried, mutually promise to marry each other, and afterwards the man marries another woman, by which he renders himself incapable of performing his contract, an assumpsit lies, in which the woman shall recover damages; for though matrimonial causes are regularly cognizable in the spiritual courts, yet the contract in the present case being executory, and revoked by the husband by the subsequent marriage, could not be enforced by ecclesiastical censures, as a contract in presenti may; hence therefore, there being no adequate remedy in the spiritual courts, and marriage being an advantage, and the loss of it a temporal loss, it is fit there should be a remedy in the temporal courts, otherwise there would be a failure in justice. Carter 232. Dickenson and Holcroft.

An indebitatus assumpsit lies for money by custom due for scavage; adjudged upon a special verdict, by which it was found, that the sum demanded was due by custom, but that there was no express promise to pay it. 2 Lev. 174.

Indebitatus assumpsit will not lie upon a bill of exchange accepted; but action upon the custom only. 1 Vent. 152.

If one receives my rent, under pretence of title, I may have an indebitatus assumpsit against him. 2 Mod. 263.

So where A. took out administration to a person supposed to have died intestate, and appointed J. S. his attorney, who received money, &c. and paid it to the administrator; afterwards a will appearing, the letters of administration were called in, and the executor brought an indebitatus assumpsit against the attorney; who objected, 1. That he acting only as attorney for him, who in fact was administrator, the receipt of the money was not his but the administrator's: and 2dly, That the action ought to have been a special assumpsit, the money being received by by special authority, and that expressly to the use of another; but the court held, that the authority being void, it was a receipt of so much money for the use of the plaintiff on an implied contract, for which an indebitatus assumpsit well lies. 1 Salk. 27.

If a feme sole marries a man, who in truth is married to another woman, and he makes a lease of her lands and receives the rents, she may bring an indebitatus assumpsit ainst him for so much money received to her use; adjudged after verdict, though objected, that he having no right to receive, the tenant remained still liable, and he had his remedy over against the husband; but the court held, that he being visibly a husband, the tenant was discharged, at least that the recovery in this action would discharge the tenant, as it would be a satisfaction to the true lessor. 1 Salk. 28.

Where action is brought upon a contract, if the plaintiff mistakes the sum agreed upon, he fails in his action; but if he brings it upon the promise in law, arising from the debt, there, though he mistakes the sum, he shall recover. Alley 29. Every contract made between parties, implies a mutual promise for performance: and yet an action may be brought on a reciprocal promise by one against the other, although he who brings it hath not performed on his side. Dyer 30, 75. When an assumpsit or promise is the ground of the action, it must be precisely set forth. 3 Lev. 319. If a promise be made without limitation of time for its performance, reasonable time shall be allowed, if there be an immediate consideration for it; and not time during life. 1 Lill. Abr. 112. On promise to deliver a thing such a day, the party is bound to do it without request. 1 Lev. 284. But if a promise be to do any thing upon request, the request is necessary to intitle the plaintiff to the action, on which it shall arise. 1 Lev. 48. For the difference between an assumpsit in deed and in law, vide Gilb. Evid. 172, 193. and vide ib. 204, 5. Every executory contract, and debt that is not upon record, or on a specialty, which may be turned into damage, imports in it an assumpsit in law, and one may have debt or action on the case upon it at his election; for when a man doth agree to pay money, or to deliver any thing, he thereby promiseth to pay or deliver it. Plowd. 128. 1 Cro. 94.

Every contract executory implies an assumpsit to pay money at the day agreed, or immediately, if no time be limited; but it is not so of an indeb. assump. because the cause does not appear. Said by Popham to be the opinion of all the justices of England. Mo. 667.

The assumpsit in an agreement that will be binding and give action, must be compleat and perfect, and duly pursued and observed: and if the party that makes the assumpsit, and he to whom it is made, agree together, and a bond is given and taken for what is promised; by this the assumpsit is discharged. Also where an assumpsit is to stand to an award, if the award made be void; it will make the assumpsit void. Yelv. 87. 2 Leon. ca. 223. 1 Leon. 170. Indeb. assump. lies by a prothonotary against an attorney, for fees for work done for defendant as attorney. Holt's Rep. 20. Where money is over paid, this action will lie for the surplus. Arg. 11 Mod. 147. Vide Burr. Rep. tit. Action on the Case. An indebitatus assumpsit will lie for meat and drink for a bastard child; per Pemberton, Ch. J. 2 Show. 184.

A. promises B. that when A. receives 100*l.* which C. owes A. that he will pay B. 20*l.* indebitatus assumpsit lies not. Otherwise if the money had been originally the money of B. Skin. 196. For there was not any consideration. Indebitatus assumpsit lies for a customary fine, super mortem domini. Show. 35. Indebitatus assumpsit lies upon a personal contract for a sum in groats, as pro rebus venditis; per Holt, Ch. J. Show. 36.

Indebitatus lies for fees for being knighted. Show. 78.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for money paid by mistake, on an account or deceit; but not for money paid knowingly on illegal consideration, as an usurious bond. Salk. 22.

Indebitatus assumpsit will lie in no case but where debt lies, therefore it lies not on a wager, nor upon a mutual assumpsit, nor against the acceptor of a bill of exchange; for his acceptance is but a collateral engagement: but lies against the drawer himself; for he was really a debtor by the receipt of the money. 1 Salk. 23.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies not on collateral engagements. See the preceding case; and 1 Salk. 23. Butcher and Andrews, which was an indebitatus assumpsit against the father, for money lent the son at the father's request, and so judgment was arrested; for this was a collateral promise. But per Holt, Ch. J. if it had been for so much money paid by the plaintiff at the request of the defendant the father to the son, it might have been good; for then it would be the father's debt, and not the son's. Carth. 446.

Though as hath been said, assumpsit lies not for rent usually reserved on leases; yet if a man promise to pay, without a lease, so much a week as long as A. B. &c. permits him to enjoy a Warehouse, &c. which is a special cause of promise, this action may lie. 2 Cro. 592. And if one receive any rent on pretence of title, assumpsit lies; as it does also for the receipt of profits of an office, &c. 2 Mod. 260. Now, by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. §. 14. where the demise is not by deed, the landlord may recover his rent in an action on the case, for use and occupation. Where a person pays money upon a mistake; or if he receives more from another in a reckoning than he ought, or more fees than should be taken, an assumpsit lies. 1 Salk. 22. Comb. 447. If a man receives money for the use of another person, assumpsit may be had against him as bailiff or receiver, which supplies the place of action of account: and where money was deposited on a wager, an indebitatus lay for money received to a man's use. Show. 117.

If where a promise is made, one part of it is against law, and another part of it lawful, this is ground sufficient for assumpsit. 4 Rep. 94.

The person to whom a promise is made, shall have the action; and not those who are strangers, or for whose benefit it is intended. Danv. 64. Nor shall action be brought against one for what another receives, nor at his request, &c. 1 Salk. 23. But if a man delivers money to A. B. to my use, I may have an action on the case against him for this money. If a man accounts, and upon the account is found in arrear to a certain sum, and presently in consideration thereof assumes to pay the debt at a day; action on the case lies for this after the day. Yelv. 70. And on a promise to pay a sum of money at so much a month, an action of the case may be brought before the whole is payable; for it is grounded upon the promise, which is broken by every Non-payment, and damages may be recovered: 'tis not like the case of a bill of debt, which is founded on the specialty, and cannot be demanded until the intire sum is due. 2 Cro. 504.

II. As to the words by which an assumpsit may be created.

The intent of the parties by and to whom the promise or assumpsit is made, is more to be regarded than the form of words, and this intent and meaning is to be followed, not in the letter, but the substance of it: if a promise be to provide wedding clothes for a woman, this shall be taken for such clothes to be worn the wedding or feast-day according to the dignity of the person. Poph. 182. Yelv. 87. 3 Cro. 53.

All promises and contracts are to receive a favourable interpretation; and such construction is to be made, where any obscurity appears, as will best answer the intent of the parties; otherwise a person, by obscure wording of his contract, might find means to evade and elude the force of it. Hence it is a general rule, that all promises shall be taken most strongly against the promisor, and are not to be rejected, if they can by any means be reduced to a certainty: Therefore,

If A. in consideration that B. will marry his daughter, assumes and promises to give with her a child's part, and that at the time of his death he will give to her as much as to any of his children, except his eldest son; this is a good promise; for though a child's part in itself is altogether uncertain, yet being to give as much as to any of his children, the promise is certain enough, it being averred what the younger son had. 1 New Abr. 168. Poph. 148. 2 Rel. Rep. 104.

But if there be a discourse between the father of A. and B. in relation to a marriage between the said A. and the daughter of B. and B. tunc & ibidem affirms and publishes lishes to the father of A. quod daret ei qui maritaret his said daughter with his consent 100*l.* and after A. marries the daughter of B. with his consent; yet this affirmance and publication of B. shall raise no promise upon which an action upon an assumpsit may be brought, because these words do not include any promise. 1 Roll. Abr. 6.

If a man promises another, in consideration that he will assign to him a certain term, to pay him 10*l.* this is a good assumpsit, though the time of assignment and payment be not appointed; for the 10*l.* shall be paid in a convenient time after the assignment, which also must be done in a convenient time, and he shall not have time during his life. 1 Roll. Abr. 14, 15.

If the plaintiff declares, that whereas there was a communication between the plaintiff and defendant, concerning the bark of certain wood, and that thereupon it was agreed that the defendant should give to the plaintiff two shillings per seam for all the bark of such wood as the plaintiff should cut, and that thereupon the defendant assumed and promised to have ready upon a certain day, articles purporting the agreement, and an obligation for the performance thereof, &c. the declaration is not good, because not said in what sum the obligation was to be; and a certain sum cannot be intended, because the number of seams are altogether uncertain; but being after verdict upon the general issue, it was adjudged for the plaintiff; but per cur. upon demurrer, or special issue, it had been naught. 1 Sid. 270. 1 Keb. 776.

But if there be an agreement to enter into an obligation for performance of a thing of a certain value, without mentioning in what sum, it shall be according to the value. 1 Sid. 240.

III. What Consideration is sufficient.

The consideration is the ground of the common action on the case: and no action on the case lieth against a man for a promise where there is no consideration why he should make the promise. 1 Danv. 53.

A consideration altogether executed and past, is not good to maintain an assumpsit, for it is not reasonable that one man should do another a kindness, and then charge him with a recompence; for this would be obliging him whether he would or no, and a bringing him under an obligation without his own concurrence; but if it were moved by a precedent request, it is good, and doth amount to a promise. 1 Roll. Abr. 11, 12.

Therefore if the servant of A. be arrested in London, for a trespass, and J. S. who knows A. bails him, and after A. for his friendship, promises to save him harmless, and J. S. comes to be charged, yet this is no consideration to ground an assumpsit on, because the bailing, which was the consideration, was past, and executed before. Dyer 272. 1 Roll. Abr. 11. 2 Leon. 225. Owen 144.

But it had been otherwise if the master had before requested him to become bail for his servant, and the bailing had been after. Dyer 172.

In consideration that he had paid money for the defendant, and obtained a release of his debt, was held a continuing consideration, because the benefit of it was continuing to the party. 2 Keb. 99.

Where a plaintiff by the defendant's appointment paid a little before 20*l.* for a debt of the defendant, he promised to repay it on demand; that consideration shall be held to be past, and the judgment in the action stayed. Cro. Eliz. 741.

Assumpsit, in consideration that N. the plaintiff, had paid for B. the defendant, and at his request, 10*l.* at such a day, (which was a year before) he promised to repay it, cum inde requisitus esset. It was objected, that this consideration was for a thing past, and therefore not good. Sed non allocatur; for the payment being laid to be at his request, the consideration continues, and so is the common course. Cro. Eliz. 282. *

If a man promise to do a thing by such a day, without any consideration or reward, and doth it not, no action will lie; but if he actually enters upon the performance of the thing, and then neglects it to the deceit of the plaintiff, action on the case lies. Trin. 2 Ann. 3 Salk. 11.

If A. undertakes to do a thing without hire, as to take brandies out of one cellar, and to lay them down in another cellar, no action lies for the non-feasance; but if he enters on the doing it, action lies for a misfeasance, if it be through his own neglect, or mismanagement, because it is a deceit; but not if by mere accident; per Holt. 1 Salk. 26.

Where the doing a thing will be a good consideration, a promise to do that thing will be so too; per Holt. Ch. J. 12 Mod. 459.

Parting with my note to the defendant is a good consideration. 7 Mod. 12, 13.

A consideration upon which a promise begins cannot be discharged without some other consideration and consideration that if a person will forbear to sue another upon a bond, &c. may be a good consideration to pay a debt, on promise to do it. Cro. Jac. 620, 683. But we conceive there should be a note in writing to avoid the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. Vide the case of Buckmyr v. Darnall. 2 L. Ray. 1085. And the case of Read executor v. Nash. Wilf. Rep. par. 1. 305. There 'tis laid down, that with respect to this statute, an original promise is not within the statute. A collateral promise, is; when it's to pay the debt of another already contracted. Two persons go to an inn-keeper, one hires an horse, and the other promises that if the inn-keeper will deliver the horse, he will see it forthcoming, this promise for another, is not good without note in writing: but the person is chargeable upon the special bailment, and so good without a note. 1 Lill. 118. Vide 2 L. Ray. 1085. An infant having bought goods and wares died, and made his wife executrix; she being asked for the money says, forbear me till such a time, and I will pay it you; this was held no good assumpsit, for it wanted a consideration. 1 Leon. Ca. 156. But where an executrix, in consideration the plaintiff would not molest her, but give her a day, promised to pay money due from the testator; action lay without shewing that she had assets; for that shall be intended, and her promise, and the plaintiff's forbearance of the suit, was good cause of action. 2 Cro. 273. An administratrix promised to pay the plaintiff money, if he would forbear suit till she had taken out letters of administration; this was not a good assumpsit, for the defendant was not liable to the suit as administratrix till administration had, so there was no consideration. Style 248, 395.

If one, in consideration I will be bound for him, or for his friend, promise to save me harmless; this is a good consideration and promise: but if one promise to another to save harmless, and say not for what, or against whom, these assumpsits are uncertain and insensible, and therefore void; though if any certainty can be made of them, they may be good. 10 Rep. 102. Dyer 356. In case a promise be, that he who hath the fee simple of land, shall not alien it; or that a man shall not take the profit of his lands, or use the thing he hath bought; or if it be to save a man harmless whatsoever he shall do, &c. the promises so made will not bind or bear an action. 10 Rep. 101. Co. Litt. 206. Dyer 304. Plowd. 64. Where a man promises me, that if I will travel with him to London, to help him to search for the will of J. S. he will pay me 5*l.* for my pains; if I sue for the money, I must shew that I did travel with him to London, and help him to search for the will, &c. 2 Cro. 620.

An assumpsit may be upon a general consideration; but it doth not lie where the plaintiff has an obligation to pay the money, which is a stronger Lien than assumpsit; nor when the party has a recognizance for the duty, &c. Jenk. Cent. 293.

Love or friendship are not considerations to ground actions upon. 2 Leon. 30. Also—

Idle and insignificant considerations are looked upon as none at all; for where-ever a person promises without a benefit arising to the promisor, or loss to the promisee, it is looked upon as a void promise. 2 Bulst. 269.

Lastly, It is to be observed that considerations may be void as being against law, for if they are wicked and ill in themselves, or unlawful, by being prohibited by some act of parliament, they are void; therefore if an officer, the duty of his office, is obliged to execute writs, promises in consideration of money paid him, to serve a certain process, an assumpsit will not lie on this promise; for the receipt of the money was extortion, and the consideration is unlawful. 1 Roll. Abr. 16.

So if an executor sues execution by elegit, and B. a stranger, as a friend to the executor, in consideration that the sheriff would forthwith execute the said elegit, and of six-pence to him by the sheriff paid, promises to pay him 60*l.* upon which the sheriff executes the writ, yet no action lies, because the consideration is against law; for the sheriff ought to do his duty without reward, and his 60*l.* is no discharge of the fees due to the sheriff, being given by a stranger, and not expressed for them. 1 Roll. Abr. 16.

But if a man brings a capias that he has against A. to the sheriff, and prays him that he will make J. S. his special bailiff, and promises him that if he will make J. S. his special bailiff that if A. escapes from the bailiff, that he will bring no action for the escape against him, this is an assumpsit upon which an action lies, if he brings any action against the sheriff for the escape. 1 Roll. Abr. 16. 1 Leon. 132. 3 Leon. 227. Cro. Eliz. 178.

So where the sheriff takes goods in execution upon a feri facias, and a stranger promises the officer to pay him the debt, in case he will restore them, this is a lawful consideration; for by the feri facias, he may sell the goods, and this in effect is doing no more. 1 Salk. 28. Vide the law of considerations very judiciously treated. Black. Com. 2 V. 444, &c.

IV. As to the proceedings in Assumpsit.

The plaintiff must set forth every thing essential to the gift of the action, with such certainty, that it may appear to the court that there were sufficient grounds for the action; for if any thing material be omitted, it cannot appear to the court whether the damages given by the jury were in proportion to the demand, or whether the party was at all intitled to a verdict. And therefore in an action upon the case, the plaintiff cannot declare quod cum the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in such a sum, and that the defendant, in consideration thereof, super se assumpsit to pay, &c. without shewing the cause of the debt. 10 Co. 77.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, quod cum there were several reckonings and accounts between the plaintiff and defendant; and at such a day, &c. in simul computaverunt for all debts, reckonings and demands; and the defendant upon the said account was found to be in arrear the sum of 20*l.* in consideration whereof the defendant promised to pay, &c. this is a good declaration, without shewing it was pro mercimoniis, or otherwise, wherefore he should have an account; for an account may be for divers causes, and several matters and things may be included and comprised therein, which in pede computi are reduced to a sum certain, and thereupon being indebted to the plaintiff, it is sufficient to ground an action. Cro. Car. 116.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, that the defendant did assume and promise to pay to the plaintiff so much money, and also to carry away certain wood before such a day; the defendant as to the money cannot plead that he paid it, and as to the carriage of the wood non assumpsit, for the promise being intire cannot be apportioned. March 100. On an assumpsit in law, payment, or any other matter that excuses payment, may be given in evidence, on the general issue. In an assumpsit in deed, it must be pleaded. Gilb. Evid. 204, 5.

If the plaintiff declares upon an indebitatus assumpsit, and upon a quantum meruit, and the defendant pleads, that after the said several promises made, and before the action brought, the plaintiff and defendant came to an account concerning divers sums of money, and that the defendant was found in arrear to the plaintiff 30*l.* and thereupon, in consideration that the defendant promised to pay the said 30*l.* the plaintiff likewise promised to release and acquit the defendant of all demands, this is a good plea; for by the account the first contract is merged. 2 Mod. 43, 44.

The defendant cannot plead that he revoked his promise; as if A. is in execution at the suit of B. and J. S.

desires B. to let him go at large, and that he will satisfy him; to which B. agrees; though J. S. before any thing is done in pursuance of this promise and agreement, comes to B. and tells him, that he revokes his promise, and that he will not stand to it; yet such revocation cannot be pleaded in bar to the action. 1 Roll. Abr. 32.

In assumpsit the plaintiff declared, that in consideration that he had done the defendant multum & gratissimum servitium, he promised to pay the plaintiff 10*l.* and also in consideration that he had done him multa beneficia, he promis'd, &c. it was moved in arrest of judgment, that neither of these considerations were sufficient, especially the last, because there ought to have been some service particularly express'd; and the court for that reason held it merely void, and judgment quod querens nil capiat, &c. Vent. 27.

In an action upon an assumpsit, if the consideration be executory; as if one promises to do something for me, in consideration of something to be done before by me, to or for him, if I will sue him for that he is to do for me, I must aver, that I have done that which was first to be done by me, for till that be done I may not maintain an action upon the promise. 2 Cro. 583. Pain v. Baswick.

And where it is executory, and averred that it is executed, when indeed it is not, the defendant may shew it specially, and may take issue as well for not performing the consideration executory, as upon the promise; but if he pleads generally non assumpsit, he can not call the performance of the consideration executory, and so it is upon a promise to do any thing upon condition. 1 Mod. Ent. 320.

Attach, (attachiare, from the Fr. attacher) Signifies to take or apprehend by commandment of a writ or precept. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. cap. 16. It differs from arrest, in that he who arresteth a man carrieth him to a person of higher power to be forthwith disposed of; but he that attacheth keepeth the party attached, and presents him in court at the day assigned; as appears by these words of the writ, Præcipimus tibi quod attachias talem & habeas eum coram nobis, &c. Another difference there is, that arrest is only upon the body of a man; whereas an attachment is oftentimes upon his goods. Kitch. 279. A capias taketh hold of immoveable things, as lands or tenements, and properly belongs to real actions: but attachment hath place rather in personal actions. Bract. lib. 4. Attachiamantum est districtio personalis, & Cape magnum districtio realis. Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 24.

Attachment,

Attachment, (from attach) is a process that issues at the discretion of the judges of a court of record, against a person for some contempt, for which he is to be committed, and may be awarded by them upon a bare suggestion, or on their own knowledge, without any appeal, indictment or information; for though by the statute of Magna charta, none are to be imprisoned sine iudicio parium vel per legem terræ; yet this summary method of proceeding being absolutely necessary to the furtherance and execution of justice, seems to have been long practis'd, and is certainly now established as part of the law of the land. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 16. 1 New Abr. 180. See West. 2. c. 3. But we apprehend it must be for a contempt in the face of the court: or in the cases after mentioned; and if for a contempt in the face of the court, the commitment is by rule of court, not on process, unless the party escape out of court, before he is secured.

All courts of record have a discretionary power over their own officers, and are to see that no abuses be committed by them, which may bring disgrace on the courts themselves; therefore if a sheriff or other officer shall be guilty of a corrupt practice in not serving a writ; as if he refuse to do it, unless paid an unreasonable gratuity from the plaintiff, or receive a bribe from the defendant, or give him notice to remove his person or effects, in order to prevent the service of any writ; the court which awarded it may punish such offences in such manner as shall seem proper by attachment. Dyer 218. 2 Hawk. P. C. 142.

But if there be no palpable corruption, nor extraordinary circumstance of wilful negligence or obstinacy, the judgment whereof is to be left to the discretion of the court; it seems not usual to proceed in this manner, but to leave the party to his ordinary remedy against the sheriff, either by action, or by rules to return the writ, or by an alias and pluries, which if he have no excuse for not executing, an attachment goes of course. Hob. 62. 264. Noy 101. F. N. B. 38. Finch 237. 5 Mod. 314, 315.

Generally an attachment doth lie for any contempt done against the courts at Westminster: but the court of B. R. will not grant attachment against one for disobeying an order made by justices of assize, or a judge at his chamber, except it be entered and made a rule of court; for it is no contempt to the court, but to the judge that made the order. 1 Lill. Abr. 121. Attachment lies against attorneys for injustice, and base dealing by their clients, in delaying suits, &c. as well as for contempts to the court. 2 Hawk. 144. If affidavits to ground an attachment are full as to the charge; yet if the party being an attorney, &c. deny such charge by as plain and positive affidavits, he shall be discharged; but if he takes a false oath, he may be indicted of perjury. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 81. Against sheriffs making false returns of writs, and against bailiffs for frauds in arrests, and exceeding their power, &c. attachment may be had. For contempts against the king's writs; using them in a vexatious manner; altering the teste, or filling them up after sealed, &c. attachment lies. And for contempts of an enormous kind, in not obeying writs, &c. attachment may be issued against peers. 2 Hawk. 152, 153. But in some cases the court doth not generally grant attachments against persons for misdemeanors, but will send a tipstaff for them, if they live near the town. 21 Car. B. R. For persuading jurors not to appear on a trial, attachment lies against the party, for obstructing the proceeding of the court. 1 Lill. 121. The court of B. R. may award attachments against any inferior courts usurping a jurisdiction, or acting contrary to justice. Salk. 207. Though 'tis usual first to send out a prohibition. Attachment lies for proceeding in an inferior court, after a habeas corpus issued, and a superfedeas to stay proceedings. 21 Car. B. R. And attachment may be granted against justices of peace, for proceeding on an indictment after a certiorari delivered to them to remove the indictment. 1 Lill. 121. But it doth not lie against a corporation. Attachment lies against a lord that refuses to hold his court, after a writ issued to him for that purpose, so that his tenant cannot have right done him. New Nat. Br. 6, 27.

An attachment is the proper remedy for disobedience of the rules of court; as of those made in ejectment, arbitrament, &c. So where a defendant in account, being adjudged to account before the auditors, refuses to do it, unless they will allow matter disallowed by the court before, or where one refuses to pay costs taxed by the master, whose taxation the law looks upon as a taxation by the court. 1 Mod. 21. 1 Salk. 71.

But an attachment is not usually granted for disobedience of a rule of Nisi prius, unless it be first made a rule of court; nor for disobedience of a rule made by a judge at his chamber, unless it be entered; nor for disobedience of any rule without personal service. 1 Salk.

Also an attachment is proper for abuses of the process of the court; as for suing out execution where there is no judgment, bringing an appeal for the death of one known to be alive, making use of the process of a superior court, as a stale to bring a defendant within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, and then dropping it, using such process in a vexatious, oppressive, or unjust manner, without colour of serving any other end by it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 154.

Attachments are usually granted on a rule to shew cause, unless the offence complained of be of a flagrant nature, and positively sworn to; in which last case the party is ordered to attend, which he must do in person, as must every one against whom an attachment is granted; and if he shall appear to be apparently guilty, the court in discretion, on consideration of the nature of the crime, and other circumstances, will either commit him immediately, in order to answer interrogatories to be exhibited against him, concerning the contempt complained of, or will suffer him to enter into recognizance to answer such interrogatories; which if they be not exhibited within four days, the party may move to have the recognizance discharged; otherwise he must answer them, tho' exhibited after the four days; but in all cases, if he fully answer them, he shall be discharged as to the attachment, and the prosecutor shall be left to proceed against him for the perjury, if he thinks fit; but if he deny part of the contempts only, and confess other part, he shall not be discharged as to those denied, but the truth of them shall be examined, and such punishment inflicted as from the whole shall appear reasonable; and if his answer be evasive as to any material part, he shall be punished in the same manner as if he had confessed it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 141. 1 Salk. 84. 6 Mod. 73. 2 Jones 178.

Attachment out of chancery may be had of course upon affidavit made that the defendant was served with a subpoena, and appeared not; or upon non-performance of any order or decree; also after the return of this attachment, that the defendant non est inventus, &c. Attachment with proclamation issues against him, &c. West. Symb. And for contempts, when a party appears, he must upon his oath answer interrogatories exhibited against him; and if he be found guilty, he shall be fined. But this mode of proceeding by examining a person accused, on oath, is such an inducement to perjury, and so repugnant to nature, (by calling on a man to accuse himself) that tho' long practised, the propriety, if not the legality of such a procedure may justly be called in question.

Attachment of privilege is where a man by virtue of his privilege calls another to that court whereto he himself belongs, and in respect thereof is privileged, there to answer some action: or it is a power to apprehend a man in a place privileged. Book Entr. 431. Corporation courts have sometimes power by charter to issue attachments, and some courts-baron grant attachments of debt. Kitch. 79.

Attachment foreign, is an attachment of the goods of foreigners, found in some liberty, to satisfy their creditors within such liberty. Carth. Rep. 66. And by the custom of some places, as London, &c. a man may attach money, or goods, in the hands of a stranger. But a foreign attachment cannot be had when a suit is depending in any of the courts at Westminster; which makes the matter not to be meddled with by any other court. Cro. Eliz. 691. And nothing is attachable but for a certain and due debt: though by the custom of London money may be attached before due, as a debt; but not levied before due. Sid. 327. 1 Nelf. Abr. 282,

Foreign attachments in London, upon plaint of debt are made after this manner; A. oweth B. 100*l.* and C. is indebted to A. 100*l.* B. enters an action against A. of 100*l.* and by virtue of that action a serjeant attacheth 100*l.* in the hands of C. as the money of A. to the use of B. which is returned upon that action. The attachment being made, and returned by the serjeant, the plaintiff is immediately to see an attorney before the next court holden for the compt; or the defendant may then put in bail to the attachment, and nonsuit the plaintiff: four court days must pass before the plaintiff can cause C. the garnishee, in whose hands the money was attached, to shew cause why B. should not condemn the 100*l.* attached in the hands of C. as the money of A. the defendant in the action (though not in the attachment) to the use of B. the plaintiff: and the garnishee C. may appear in court by his attorney, wage his law, and plead that he hath no money in his hands of the defendant's, or other special matter; but the plaintiff may hinder his waging of law, by producing two sufficient citizens to swear that the garnishee had either money or goods in his hands of A. at the time of the attachment, of which affidavit is to be made before the lord mayor, and being filed, may be pleaded by way of estoppel. Then the plaintiff must put in bail, that if the defendant come within a year and a day into court, and he can discharge himself of the money condemned in court, and that he owed nothing to the plaintiff at the time in the plaint mentioned, the said money shall be forth-coming, &c. if the garnishee fail to appear by his attorney, being warned by the officer to come into court to shew cause as aforesaid, he is taken by default for want of appearing, and judgment given against him for the goods and money attached in his hands, and he is without remedy either at Common law or in equity; for if taken in execution, he must pay the money condemned, though he hath not one penny, or go to prison; but the garnishee appearing to shew cause why the money or goods attached in his hands ought not to be condemned to the use of the plaintiff, having seen an attorney, may plead as aforesaid, that he hath no money or goods in his hands of the party's against whom the attachment is made, and it will then be tried by a jury, and judgment awarded, &c. but after trial, bail may be put in, whereby the attachment shall be dissolved, but the garnishee, &c. and his security will then be liable to what debt the plaintiff shall make out to be due, upon the action: and an attachment is never thoroughly perfected, till there is a bail, and satisfaction upon record. Privileg. Lond.

Where a foreign attachment is pleaded to an action, the custom is to set forth, that he who levied the plaint shall have execution of the debt owing by himself, and by which he was attached, if the plaintiff in the original action shall not disprove it within a year and a day; now if the plaintiff in the action below doth not set forth such conditional judgment given by the court, 'tis wrong, because he doth not bring his case within the custom. Vide 2 Lutw. 985.

In assumpsit, &c. there was evidence given, that the debt was attached by the custom of London before the action brought, and that it was condemned there before the plea pleaded; and this evidence was given upon the general issue non assumpsit, and it being insisted for the defendant, that this should relate so as to defeat the plaintiff's action; it was adjudged, that where there is an attachment and condemnation before the action brought, it may be given in evidence upon the general issue, because there is an alteration of the property; but if the attachment be only before the action brought, and the condemnation afterwards, the attachment may be pleaded in abatement, and the condemnation may be pleaded in bar, but shall not be given in evidence on the general issue, because by the condemnation the property is altered, but not before. 1 Salk. 280.

In assumpsit, the defendant in discharge of the note upon which the action was brought, produced the record of a foreign attachment, wherein the said debt was attached and condemned; and Trevor, Ch. Just. of C. B. held this a good discharge; but if the plaintiff could have shewed an original precedent to the attachment, so that it might appear, that the court was possessed of the action before the attachment, the plaintiff might have recovered, notwithstanding the debt was attached and condemned; but in this case the declaration was between the time of the attachment and the condemnation. 1 Salk. 291.

Action of debt, &c. the defendant pleaded in bar, that there was a custom in London to attach the debt before the day of payment came; et per curiam, such a custom may be good, but to have judgment to recover the debt before the day of payment is come, cannot be a good custom, because the debtee himself could not recover in such case, and therefore he who made the attachment shall not. This custom was pleaded, that the debtee in person, or by his attorney, may swear that the debt is due; but this cannot be good as to the attorney; it was agreed, that goods might be attached by a foreign attachment, and that the value thereof ought to be found before judgment; but that this plea was ill, because the defendant did not aver it, viz. et hoc paratus est verificare. W. Jones 406.

Case by administrator, in which the case was, that Tenant was indebted to the intestate by bond, and the intestate was indebted to Heydon upon a contract, and that he (the administrator) intending to put the bond in suit against Tenant, he promised, that if the administrator would forbear, &c. he the defendant would pay, &c. afterwards Heydon brought an action of debt upon the contract against the administrator in London, and the money which Tenant owed to the intestate was attached in Tenant's hands; and now the administrator brought an action on the promise against Tenant, who pleaded all this matter; and upon a demurrer it was insisted for the plaintiff, that this debt was not attachable by a foreign attachment, because the promise being to pay at a day to come, rests altogether in damages, and nothing is attachable but a certain and due debt: sed per curiam, this debt is attachable, for it is a due and certain debt before the promise made, because the promise was to pay the debt due to the intestate by bond; but it might have been otherwise if the debt had arisen upon a promise. 1 Roll. Rep. 105.

In an action on the case the plaintiff had judgment against the defendant, and he owing 60*l.* to one G. D. he entered a plaint against him in London, and attached the 60*l.* in the hands of the said defendant, against whom the plaintiff had recovered as aforesaid, and had execution according to the custom; afterwards the plaintiff brought a sci. fa. against the defendant, to shew cause why he should not have execution upon the judgment which he had recovered, to which the defendant pleaded the execution upon the attachment; and upon demurrer to that plea it was adjudged against the defendant, because a duty which accrue by matter of record, cannot be attached by the custom of London; for judgments obtained in the king's courts shall not be defeated or avoided by such particular customs, they being of so high a nature, that they cannot be reached by attachment. 1 Leon. 29.

Debtor and creditor being both citizens of London, the debtor delivered several goods to the Exeter carrier then in London, to carry and deliver them at Exeter, and the creditor attached them in the hands of the carrier for the debt due to him from his debtor; adjudged, that the action should be discharged, because the carrier is privileged in his person and goods, and not only in the goods which are his own, but in those of other men, of which he is in possession, for he is answerable for them. 1 Leon. 189.

An executor submitted to an award, and the arbitrators awarded, that the defendant should pay the executor 350*l.* This money is not attachable in his hands by any creditor of his testator, though it is assets in his hands when recovered, because it was not due to the testator tempore mortis, and the custom of foreign attachments extends only to such debts. 1 Vent. 111.

A sum of money was to be paid at Michaelmas, and it was attached before that day; adjudged, that a foreign attachment cannot reach a debt before it is due; therefore, though the judgment on the attachment was after Michaelmas, yet the money being attached before it was due, it is for that reason void. Cro. Eliz. 184.

Attachment of the forest. Is one of the three courts held there. Manwood 90, 99. The lower court is called the attachment; the middle one, the swainmote; the highest, the justice in Eyre's seat. The court of attachment seemeth to be so called, because the wardens of the forest have therein no other authority, but to receive the attachments of offenders against Vert and Venison, taken by the rest of the officers, and to enroll them, that they may be presented and punished at the next justice seat. Manwood 93. And this attaching is by three means; 1. By goods and chattels. 2. By the body, pledges, and mainprise. 3. By the body only. This court is kept every forty days. See Crompton, in his Court of the Forest.

Attainder, (attinēla and attinēlura) Is when a man hath committed treason, &c. and after conviction sentence is passed on him: or where a person is attainted of treason, and condemned by parliament.

A man is attained by appearance, or by process: attainder on appearance is by confession, or verdict, &c. Confession, when the prisoner upon his indictment being asked whether Guilty or Not guilty, answers Guilty, without putting himself upon his country; (and formerly confession was allowed before the coroner in sanctuary; whereupon the offender was to abjure the realm, and this was called attainder by abjuration.) Attainder by verdict is when the prisoner at the bar pleadeth Not guilty, and is found Guilty by the verdict of the jury of life and death. And attainder by process, (otherwise termed attainder by default or outlawry) is when the party flieth, and is not found, until he have been five times publickly called or proclaimed in the county, on the last whereof he is outlawed upon his default. Staudf. Pl. Co. 44, 122, 182. Also persons may be attained by act of parliament.

Acts of attainder of criminals have been passed in several reigns, on the discovery of plots and rebellions, from the reign of king Charles II. when an act was made for the attainder of several persons guilty of the murder of king Charles I. to this time; among which, that for attainting Sir John Fenwick, for conspiring against king William, is the most remarkable; it being made to attaint and convict him of high treason on the oath of one witness, just after a law had been enacted, That no person should be tried or attainted of high treason where corruption of blood is incurred, but by the oath of two lawful witnesses, unless the party confess, stand mute, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 3. But in the case of Sir John Fenwick, there was something extraordinary; for he was indicted of treason, on the oaths of two witnesses; though but one only could be produced against him on his trial.

Attainder of a criminal is larger than conviction; a man is convicted when he is found guilty by verdict, or confesses the crime, before judgment had; but not attainted till judgment is also passed upon him. 1 Inst. 390. A person attainted of high treason forfeits all his lands, tenements and hereditaments; his blood is corrupted, and he and his posterity are rendered base; and this corruption of blood cannot be taken off but by act of parliament. Co. Lit. 391. But if one commits treason, and dies before attainder, he forfeits nothing: and one slain in open rebellion, shall forfeit nothing, if he be not attainted by parliament. 3 Inst. 12. And collateral blood may inherit on an attainder; though the lineal blood is barred. If an attainted person marries an heiress, and has issue by her; 'tis said that issue shall inherit, for he claims only from the mother. Jenk. Cent. 3. In the case of felony, where land is given in tail to A. and the heirs male of his body, under the statute of Westm. 2. and he commits murder, or any felony, his heir shall have the land, and the blood is not corrupted: though in case of treason, where the father hath lands, and is attainted, it is otherwise by the 26 H. 8. c. 13. Ibid. 82. Vide 1 & 2 Pb. & M. c. 10.

Grandfather, father and son; the grandfather was tenant in tail, the father was attainted of treason; ~~here,~~ though the blood is corrupted, yet the son would formerly inherit per formam doni; but since the statute 26 H. 8. which gives the forfeiture of the lands of tenant in tail for treason, the law is otherwise, and by the attainder of the tenant in tail the issue in tail is barred. 8 Rep. in Digley's case.

In treason for counterfeiting the coin, although by a late statute corruption of blood is saved; yet the lands of the offender are forfeited immediately to the king on attainder, it being a distinct penalty from corruption of blood: for the corruption may be saved, and the forfeiture remain, &c. And accordingly so it is provided by some statutes. 1 Salk. 85.

Adjudged, that an attainder of felony makes a forfeiture of the estate to the lord only by way of escheat pro defectu tenentis, and the not descending is the consequence of the corruption of blood. 1 Salk. 85.

T. S. having an estate for three lives, was attainted on the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. of treason for counterfeiting the coin, by which statute corruption of blood is saved; and for that reason it was a question, whether the lands were forfeited to the king, which were given to Baron Lovell as forfeited, who brought a bill in the Exchequer to redeem, and had a decree, from which there was an appeal to the house of lords, where the judges held, that in treason the lands came to the king as an immediate forfeiture, which was a distinct penalty from corruption of blood, for the corruption may be saved, and the forfeiture still remain. 1 Salk. 85.

Husband and wife were tenants in special tail; they had issue a son, the husband was attainted of treason, and died, the wife continued in possession as tenant in special tail, and the son was restored by act of parliament, and made inheritable to his father, saving to the king all advantages which he might have by the attainder; the wife died; adjudged, that the father had not any estate forfeitable, for the wife being likewise tenant in special tail, the estate survived to her, and was not impeached by the attainder, and she dying, the son is then inheritable to the estate tail, which might certainly have been barred by a common recovery suffered by the wife, and in such case the king would have been bound. 1 Leon. 157.

Covenant to stand seized to the use of himself for life, remainder to Thomas Palmer, the eldest son of his brother John Palmer for life, remainder to the eldest son of Sir Thomas Palmer in tail male, remainder to his own right heirs; afterwards the covenantor was attainted of treason, and executed before the birth of any son of Thomas; adjudged, that this attainder was a bar to the after-born son, and that the fee simple was vested in the crown, discharged of all remainders. Moor 815.

Attainders may be reversed or falsified, (i. e. proved to be false) by writ of error, or by plea; if by writ of error, it must be by the king's leave, &c. And when by plea, it may be by denying the treason, pleading a pardon by act of parliament, &c. 3 Inst. 232. By a king's taking the crown upon him, all attainders of his person are ipso facto purged, without any reversal. 1 Inst. 43. Wood 17. This is a very peculiar doctrine, tho' the declaration of parliament, viz. made in favour of Henry the 7th. If the intelligent reader will consider it a moment, a comment must appear unnecessary.

Lands coming to the king by attainder of treason, afterwards granted to another, shall be holden as if there were no attainder. 7 Ed. 4. c. 5. The 8 W. 3. c. 5. requires Sir George Barclay, major general Holmes, and other persons, to surrender themselves to the lord chief justice, or secretaries of state; or to be attainted. By the 13 W. 3. the pretended Prince of Wales is under attainder of treason, &c. And by 1 Geo. 1. c. 16. the late duke of Ormond and others are attainted. And besides these acts of attainder, we have lately had bills for inflicting pains and penalties, as those against the late bishop of Rochester, &c. Stat. 10 Geo. 1. In passing bills of attainder, no evidence is necessary. See Evidence.

Attachmenta bonorum, A distress taken upon goods or chattels, where a man is sued for personal estate or debt, by by legal attachiators or bailiffs, as security to answer an action. There is likewise attachiamenta de spinis & bosco, a privilege granted to the officers of a forest, to take to their own use, thorns, brush, and wind-fall within their precincts.—John Fitz Nygel, forester of Bermwood, H. D. 1230, debet habere feodum in Bosco domini regis; videlicet attachiamentum de spinis, de Bosco suo, & de Bosco qui vento profuitur. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 209.

Attaint, (attinēda) Is a writ that lieth after judgment against a jury that have given false verdict in any court of record, in an action real or personal, where the debt or damages amount to above 40*s*. Stat. 5 & 34 Ed. 3. c. 7. It is called attaint, because the party that obtains it endeavours thereby to stain or taint the credit of the jury with perjury, by whose verdict he is grieved: and if the verdict be found false, then the punishment by the Common law was, that the jurors meadows should be plough'd up, their houses broke down, woods grubb'd up, and all their lands and tenements be forfeited to the crown: but if it passed against him that brought the attaint, then he was to be imprisoned and ransomed at the king's will. Glanv. lib. 2. By the Statute 23 H. 8. c. 3. the severity of the Common law is mitigated, where a petty jury is attainted; for that statute enacts, That upon untrue verdicts before judges of record, the thing in demand extending to 40*l*. value, attaints shall be granted against the petty jury; the process to be summons, resummons, and distress infinite, &c. but the defendants may plead, they gave a true verdict, &c. to bar the attaint: and the grand jury is to try the verdict of the petty jury on the attaint; and if such petty jury be found to have given an untrue verdict, they shall each forfeit 20*l*. to be divided between the king and the plaintiff, and incur several fines at the discretion of the justices, and be disabled to give testimony in any court. Also an attaint shall lie for a personal thing under the value of 40*l*. in manner as aforesaid; but here the forfeiture of each petty juror shall be 5*l*. &c. Stat. Ibid.

It may be material, however, under this head, to state more particularly,

- I. By and against whom attaint may be brought.
- II. In what cases it will lie.
- III. Of the proceedings in attaint.

I. The party grieved may have writ of attaint against the other party, (whether plaintiff or defendant) and against the jurors, or such of them as shall be then living: it is said any one that is hurt by the false verdict may bring this writ; and if the verdict be for matter of land, the remedy commonly runs with the land, so that any party or privy, as an heir or executor may have it. F. N. B. 109. Co. Lit. 294.

Attaint was brought upon the statute 23 H. 8. c. 3. against the executors of Sir John Barker, whereas the verdict was in a cause between him and one Austin, and the statute gives an attaint between the parties, and doth not mention heirs or executors, yet this attaint was held good; so an executor shall have restitution upon the statute 21 H. 8. tho' that statute does not mention executors. 1 And. 24, 25.

Where trespass is brought against baron and feme, and the plaintiff recovers, the baron alone shall not have attaint, for it shall be brought according to the record. Br. Baron and Feme, pl. 22. Successors of a person shall have error or attaint of judgment against the predecessor. Br. Attaint, pl. 110. If a man has issue a son by one woman, and a daughter by another, and intails the lands to him and his second feme, and the heirs of their two bodies, and recovery is had against them by false oath, the attaint is given to the son and not to the daughter; per Fortescue. Br. Attaint, pl. 40. None shall have attaint but he that may be restored to the thing lost by the judgment; per Bramstone Ch. J. Mar. 210. Reversioners may have an attaint upon a false verdict, &c. against a particular tenant, who shall be restored to his possession, and the reversioner to his arrears. Stat. 9 R. 2. c. 3. This action must be brought against the jurors, and the parties to the first suit; or if the parties be dead, their heirs, or executors, or any other for the most part that recovered by the first judgment. Dyer 201.

If all the jurors but one are dead, the action is gone, and no attaint can be brought; and where any one dies depending the suit, it is gone; but not by the death of the defendant that recovered in the first action. Dyer 139. Hob. 227.

II. As to the cases in which an attaint lies.

Attaint lies where a jury gives verdict contrary to evidence; and where a judge declares the law erroneously, judgment may be reversed; but in this case the jury shall be excused. Vaugh. 145. Attaint lies not for that which is not given in evidence; nor upon an inquest of office, &c. or when a thing found is impertinent to the issue. Hob. 53. Co. Lit. 355. And no attaint lieth where the king is sole party, and the jury find for him. 4 Leon. 46. It lies upon a false verdict given in cases of felony, 6 Rep. in the case of pardons; but where the queen is sole party, and the jury find for her, no attaint lies; aliter where the suit is tam pro domino rege quam pro seipso. 4 Leon. 46. An attaint may be brought where any material falsehood is found, though some truth may be found with it; as where a jury shall find a man guilty of many trespasses, who is guilty but of one trespass. So if a jury find any thing against the Common or Statute law, that all men are to take notice of, this may make them chargeable in attaint. Bro. 44. Hob. 227.

Where the evidence given to the jury is false in part, tho' it be in a point not material, yet this is sufficient excuse for their not giving him credit in any other part of his evidence, and so had no cause to find their verdict upon this oath against the party against whom it was given. Cro. Eliz. 309, 310. It lies against a jury, for finding the bond of Edward the bond of Edmond. Palm. 286. The jury may be attainted two ways; 1st, where they find contrary to evidence; 2dly, where they find out of the compass of the allegata. But to attaint them for finding contrary to evidence is not easy, because they may have evidence of their own conscience of the matter by them, or they may find upon distrust of the witnesses, or their own proper knowledge; but if they find upon evidence that does not prove the allegata, there it is easy to subject them to an attaint, because it is manifest that what is so found is an evidence not corresponding to their issue, and this was the only curb they had over the jurors; for the judge being best master of the allegata, if they did not follow his direction touching the proof, they were then liable to the danger of an attaint; and therefore since the judges, from the difficulty of attainting the jury have granted new trials, whereby jurors have been freed from the fear of attaint, they have taken a great liberty in giving verdicts; but since the attaint is only disused, and not taken away, 'tis necessary that a certain matter should be brought before them; and therefore in irregularities, the quantity and value of the thing demanded must be so conveniently described, that if the jury find damages beyond such quantities and value, it may be apparently excessive, and they subject to the attaint; and so on special contracts, they must be set forth so precisely, that if evidence be given of another contract, and not in the allegations, and get the jury find for the plaintiff, they may be subject to an attaint; and were it otherwise, if the plaintiff had a jury to his turn, and the judge should direct that the plaintiff be nonsuit, yet if the plaintiff would stand the trial, the judge must give positive directions to find for the defendant, there would be no means of compelling the jury to find according to the direction of the judge, if they were not under the terror of an attaint, if they did otherwise; so this is the only curb that the law has put in the hands of the judges to restrain jurors from giving corrupt verdicts. Gilb. H. C. B. 128. But this doctrine does not imply that a jury are at all events to follow the direction of a judge. They are to use their own discretion. They are (as every man is) supposed to know the law, and are therefore judges of the law, as well as of the fact. Vide Hawles on Juries.

Where a jury finds a thing which is out of the issue, there a verdict is void, because they are sworn to try the issue between the parties, according to the evidence given; so that whatsoever they try besides the issue, is not per juratores; and therefore if that matter so tried is false,

'tis no perjury, nor doth an attaint lie against them. Hob. 53.

III. With regard to the proceedings in attaint.

The process to be issued is directed by the 23 H. 8. c. 3. already mentioned: and by the said statute if any of the petit jury appear at the return of the writ of attaint, the plaintiff shall assign the false oath of the verdict untrue given. And if the defendant, or any of the petit jury appear not on distress, the grand inquest shall be taken by default.

The petit jury can plead no plea, but such as may excuse them of the false oath. 1 Rol. Abr. 285.

The petit jury cannot plead that the plaintiff in the attaint was tenant after the attaint purchased. 1 Rol. Abr. 285. The plaintiff in attaint may not produce more witnesses, nor give further matter in evidence, than what was deposed in the first action; but the defendant in attaint may give new matter in evidence to inforce the first verdict, and the plaintiff shall have time to disprove it. Dyer 59. 1 Nels. Abr. 288. 1 Rol. Abr. 285.

In an attaint the plaintiff cannot give in evidence a record which was not given to the petit jury; for they were not bound to find it, if it was not shewn to them. 1 Rol. Abr. 285.

In the court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and the court of Hustings of London, attaint may be brought; and the plaintiff setting aside the verdict, shall have restitution, &c. But if the first verdict be affirmed, the plaintiff shall be imprisoned and fined. 11 H. 7. c. 21.

In attaint the parties and the jury appeared and demandedoyer of the record upon which the attaint was founded, which record being in the Common Pleas, they had it, and thereupon the plaintiff assigned the false oath; the defendants pleaded, that they made a good and lawful oath; upon which they were at issue, and in the same term the record was removed by a writ of error into the King's Bench; adjudged, that notwithstanding it was thus removed, the court of Common Pleas might proceed if the process for the grand jury were returned. Dyer 284.

Attaint was brought in the Common Pleas against a jury, for a verdict given in the King's Bench, whereupon the record was removed from that court to the Common Pleas, and there the verdict was affirmed; adjudged, that the plaintiff in the action shall have execution according to the verdict, for the record is in the King's Bench, and nothing but the tenor thereof in the Common Pleas; but if the verdict had been set aside, and execution had been put upon it before it was set aside, then the court of Common Pleas might have awarded restitution to the party grieved. Cro. Eliz. 371.

A nonsuit in attaint is peremptory: and no superfedeas is grantable upon attaint. Co. Lit. 227.

An attaint as well as a writ of error shall follow the nature of the action upon which 'tis founded; so that if summons and severance lies in the first action, it shall do so likewise in the attaint, but this is not a superfedeas as a writ of error is; adjudged likewise, if damages are recovered against several in an action of conspiracy, all of them must join in an attaint, and the nonsuit of one of them shall not hurt the rest. 6 Rep. 25.

But adjudged, that where an assise was brought against three coparceners, who all pleaded that there was no tenant of the freehold named in the writ, and the jury found that two of them were disseisors and tenants, &c. and that the third had nothing, &c. and afterwards they all three joined in an attaint, and after appearance the third sifter, who was acquitted as aforesaid by the said verdict, was now nonsuited in the attaint, in that case the attaint was abated, because she had no cause to bring an attaint, for there was no verdict against her. 1 Leon. 317.

In an attaint the plaintiff shall recover against all the jurors, tenants, and defendants, the costs and damages, which he shall sustain by delay or otherwise in that suit: and if the defendant's plea in bar be found against him, the plaintiff will have judgment to be restored to what he lost, with damages, by Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 4. and 15 H. 6. c. 5.

Besides the statutes abovementioned in the course of this article, there are others to which it will be sufficient barely to refer, as the subject of them is in a great measure grown obsolete. See 3 Edw. 1. c. 38. 14 Edw. 2. c. 2. 1 Edw. 3. c. 6. 28 Edw. 3. c. 8. 18 Hen. 6. c. 2. 37 Hen. 8. c. 9.

This writ to attaint so many men of such a foul crime is seldom used, unless the corruption be very gross and apparent: and instead of attaint, where the verdict is supposed to be given against evidence, it is now usual to have new trials granted: but an issue found by verdict shall be always intended true, until reversed by attaint, according to our old books. Co. Lit. 227. The writ of attaint is generally to summon a jury to inquire if the former jurors made a false oath, and who were the jury of the first inquest, &c. and to have them before the lord the king, or before the justices, &c. N. B. 252, 253.

Form of a count in attaint.

Bedford, ff. A Jury of twenty-four, &c. of the neighbourhood of C. came to recognise whether the jurors, by whom a certain inquisition was lately summoned before the lord the king at Westminster, by bill without the writ of our said lord the king, between A. B. and C. D. of a certain trespass, &c. to the said A. by the said C. done, and afterwards before the beloved and faithful of our said lord the king, &c. justices assigned to take the assises, &c. in the county aforesaid taken, have made a false oath therein, as the said C. grievously complaining to our said lord the king sheweth, or not, &c.

Attainted. See Attainder.

Attal Sarifin, The inhabitants and miners of Cornwall, called an old deserted mine, that is given over, by this name of attal Sarifin, i. e. the leavings of the Sarafins, Sassins, or Saxons. Cowel.

Attegia, (from the Lat. ad and tego) A little house. 'Tis mentioned in Ethelwerd, lib. 4. Hist. Angl. cap. 3.—Pellunt ingenuos passim, attegas figunt in oppido.

Attendant, (attendens) Signifies one that owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends on him. Where a wife is endowed of lands by a guardian, &c. she shall be attendant on the guardian, and on the heir at his full age. Terms de Ley.

Attermining, (from the Fr. attermine) Is used for a time or term granted for payment of a debt. Ordinatio de libertatibus perquirendis, ann. 27 Ed. 1. And in the Stat. Westm. 2. it seems to signify the purchasing or gaining a longer time for payment of debts.—Atterminent querentes usque in proximum parliamentum. West. 2. c. 4.

Attile, attilium, attilamentum The rigging or furniture of a ship. This word is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 25. Batellus (i. e. the boat) cum omni onere & Artillamento.

Attornate Rem, To attorn or turn over money and goods, viz. to assign or appropriate them to some particular use and service. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 283.

Attornato faciendo vel recipiendo, A writ to command a sheriff or steward of a county-court, or hundred court, to receive and admit an attorney, to appear for the person that owes suit of court. F. N. B. 156. Every person that owes suit to the county-court, court-baron, &c. may make an attorney to do his suit. Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 10.

Attorney, (atturatus) Is he that is appointed by another man to do any thing in his absence. West. Symb. Crompt. Jurisdic. 105. An attorney is either publick, in the courts of record, the King's Bench and Common Pleas, &c. and made by warrant from his client: or private, upon occasion for any particular business, who is commonly made by letter of attorney. In ancient times those of authority in courts had it in their power whether they would suffer men to appear or sue by any other but themselves: and the king's writs were to be obtained for the admission of attorneys: but since that, attorneys have been allowed by several statutes. As by 27 Ed. 1. &c.

Attornies

Attornies may be made in such pleas whereon appeal lieth in criminal cases there will be no attornies admitted. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. An infant ought not to appear by attorney, but by guardian; for he cannot make an attorney, but the court may assign him a guardian. 1 Lill. Abr. 138. Infants, after they come to full age, may sue by attorney, though admitted before by guardian, &c. In action against baron and feme, the feme being within age, she must appear by guardian: but if they bring an action, the husband shall make attorney for both. 1 Dan. Abr. 602. And it is said, that where baron and feme are sued, though the wife cannot make attorney, the husband may do it for both of them. 2 Sand. 213. One non compos mentis, being within age, is to appear by guardian; but after he is of age he must do it by attorney. Inst. 135. An idiot is not to appear by attorney, but in proper person. A corporation cannot appear otherwise than by attorney, who is made by deed under the seal of the corporation. Plowd. 91. Persons that owe suit to county-courts, &c. making attornies. See Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 10.

Attornies at Law, Are such persons as take upon them the business of other men, by whom they are retained.

Before the statute of West. 2. c. 10. [13 Ed. 1. A. D. 1285.] all attornies were made by letters patent under the great seal, commanding the justices to admit the person to be his attorney. These patents, where they were obtained, seemed to have been inrolled by a proper officer, called the clerk of the warrants; and also the courts inrolled those patents on which any proceedings were. If such letters patent could not be obtained, the persons were obliged to appear each day in court in their proper persons. Gilb. H. C. P. 32, 33.

The said statute of West. 2. gives to all persons a liberty of appearing, and appointing an attorney, as if they had letters patent; and therefore the clerk of the warrants received each person's warrant, and upon the warrant it equally appeared to the court, that he had appointed such a one his attorney to the end of the cause, unless revoked; so that on each act there is no occasion of the plaintiff's and defendant's presence, as was used before that time. This authority continues till judgment, and for a year and a day, and afterwards to sue out execution, and for a longer time, if they continue execution; but if not, the judgment is supposed to be satisfied; and to make it appear otherwise, the plaintiff must again come into court, which he either does by a scire fac' or an action of debt on the judgment. Gilb. H. C. P. 33.

Who may make attornies, see farther 20 H. 3. c. 10. — 12 Edw. 2. c. 1. — 7 Ric. 2. c. 14.

Parties to fines, as well defendant or plaintiff as tenants or defendants, that will acknowledge their right of lands unto other in pleas of quarrantia chartæ, covenant, &c. before the fines pass, shall appear personally, so that their age, ideocy, or other default (if any be) may be discerned: provided that if any, by age, impotency, or casualty, is not able to come in court, one of the justices shall go to the party and receive his cognizance, and shall take with him a knight or man of good fame. Barons of the Exchequer and justices shall not admit attornies, but in pleas that pass before them, and where they be assigned. Reserved to the Chancellor his authority in admitting attornies, and to the Chief Justices. Stat. 15 Edw. 2. stat. 1.

In respect of the several courts, there are attornies at large; and attornies special, belonging to this or that court only. An attorney may be a solicitor in other courts, by a special retainer: one may be attorney on record, and another do the business; and there are attornies who manage business out of the courts, &c. Anno 4 H. 4. it was enacted, that the justices should examine attornies, and remove the unskilful; and attornies shall swear to execute their offices truly, &c. The Stat. 33 H. 6. was made to restrain the number of attornies. And by 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. Attornies &c. shall not be allowed any fees laid out for counsel, or otherwise, unless they have tickets thereof signed by them that receive such fees; and they shall give in true bills to their clients of all the charges of suits, under their hands, before the clients shall be charged with the payment thereof; if they delay their clients suit for gain; or demand more than their due fees and disbursements, the clients shall recover costs and treble damages; and they shall be for ever after disabled to be attornies: none shall be admitted attornies in courts of record, but such as have been brought up in the said courts, or are well practised and skilled, and of an honest disposition; and no attorney shall suffer any other to follow a suit in his name, on pain of forfeiting 20 l. to be divided between the king and the party grieved. This statute, as to fees to counsel, doth not extend to matters transacted in inferior courts, but only to suits in the courts of Westminster-Hall. Carth. 147. Attornies, &c. are to take the oath to the government, under penalties and disability to practice. 13 W. 3. cap. 6.

By the Stat. 12 Geo. 1. cap. 29. If any who hath been convicted of forgery, perjury, &c. shall practise as an attorney or solicitor in any suit or action in any court, the judge where such action shall be brought hath power to transport the offender for seven years, by such ways, and under such penalties as felons.

The act 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. ordains, That all attornies shall be sworn, admitted and inrolled, before allowed to sue out writs in the courts at Westminster; and after the first of December 1730 none shall be permitted to practise but such as have served a clerkship of five years to an attorney, and they shall be examined, sworn and admitted in open court; and attornies shall not have more than two clerks at one time, &c. every writ and copy of any process served on a defendant, and also every warrant made out thereon, shall be indorsed with the name of the attorney by whom sued forth; and no attornies or solicitors shall commence any action for fees till a month after the delivery of their bills subscribed with their hands: also the parties chargeable may in the mean time get such bills taxed, and upon the taxation the sum remaining due is to be paid in full of the said bills, or in default the parties shall be liable to attachment, &c. And the attorney is to pay the costs of taxation, if the bill be reduced a sixth part. There is a penalty of 50 l. inflicted, and disability to practice, for acting contrary to this statute. By the 6 Geo. 2. cap. 27. Persons having served five years as clerks to attornies, though not bound by contract; or who had been bound, but not served five years; and sons of attornies that served that time with their fathers, &c. were to be sworn and admitted. By 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. Attornies, &c. that act in any county-court, without being admitted according to the statute 2 Geo. 2. shall forfeit 20 l. recoverable in the courts of record: and no attorney, who is a prisoner in any prison, shall sue out any writ, or prosecute suits; if he doth, the proceedings shall be void, and such attorney, &c. is to be struck off the roll. But suits commenced before by them may be carried on. A quaker serving a clerkship, and taking his solemn affirmation instead of an oath, shall be admitted an attorney. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. Persons bound clerks to attornies or solicitors are to cause affidavits to be made and filed of the execution of the articles, names and places of abode of attorney or solicitor, and clerk, and none to be admitted till the affidavits be produced and read in court; no attorney having discontinued business to take any clerk. Clerks are to serve actually during the whole time, and make affidavits thereof. Persons admitted sworn clerks in Chancery, or serving a clerkship to such, may be admitted solicitors. By the Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. Any person, duly admitted a solicitor, may be admitted an attorney, without any fee for the oath, or any stamp to be impressed on the parchment, whereon his admission shall be wrote.

Attornies of courts, &c. shall not receive or procure any blank warrant for arrests from any sheriff, without writ first delivered, on pain of severe punishment, expulsion, &c. And no attorney shall make out a writ with a clause ac etiam bille, &c. where special bail is not required by law. Passb. 15 Car. 2. Attornies are to enter and file warrants of attorney in every suit, on pain of 10 l. and imprisonment. Stat. 32 H. 8. And the plaintiff's attorney is to file his warrant the term he declares, and the defendant his the term he appears. 4 & 5 Ann. Action upon the case lies for a client against his attorney, if he appear for him without a warrant; or if he plead a plea for him, for which he hath not his warrant. 1 Lill. Abr. 140. But if an attorney appear without warrant, and judgment is had against his client, the judgment shall stand, if the attorney be responsible: contra, if the attorney be not responsible. 1 Salk. 88. Action lies against an attorney for suffering judgment against his client by nil dicit, when he had given him a warrant to plead the general issue: this is understood where it is done by covin. 1 Danv. Abr. 185. If an attorney makes default in a plea of land, by which the party loses his land, he may have a writ of deceit against the attorney, and recover all in damages. Ibid. An attorney owes to his client secrecy and diligence, as well as fidelity; and if he take reward on the other side, or cause an attorney to appear and confess the action, &c. he may be punished. Hob. 9.

But action lies not against an attorney retained in a suit, though he knows the plaintiff hath no cause of action; he only acting as a servant in the way of his profession. 4 Inst. 117. 1 Mod. 209. Though where an attorney or solicitor is found guilty of a gross neglect; the court of Chancery has in some cases ordered him to pay the costs. 1 P. Williams 593. He who is attorney at one time, is attorney at all times, pending the plea. 1 Danv. 609. And the plaintiff or defendant may not change his attorney, while the suit is depending, without leave of the court, which would reflect on the credit of attorneys; nor until his fees are paid. Mich. 14 Car. A cause is to proceed notwithstanding the death of an attorney therein; and not be delayed on that account. For if an attorney dieth, the plaintiff or defendant may be required to make a new attorney. 2 Keb. 275. An attorney, solicitor, &c. having fees due to him, may detain writings until his just fees are paid: but if there be no fees due to him, the court on motion will compel the delivery of them. 1 Lill. 148. Any papers may be detained by an attorney till the money is paid for drawing them; but he cannot detain writings which are delivered to him on a special trust, for the money due to him in that very business, &c. if he doth, a rule may be obtained that he shall deliver them by such a day, or an attachment shall issue against him. Mod. Caf. in Law and Equity 306. The court will make a rule for delivery of writings when they come to the attorney's hands by way of his business; and when they come to him in any other manner, the party must bring his action. 1 Salk. 87. Attornies have the privilege to sue and be sued only in the courts at Westminster, where they practise: they are not obliged to put in special bail, when defendants; but when they are plaintiffs, they may insist upon special bail in all bailable cases. 1 Vent. 299. Wood's Inst. 450. And they shall not be chosen into offices, against their Wills. See Privilege.

Attorney of the Duchy Court of Lancaster, (attornatus curie ducatus Lancastrie) Is the second officer in that court; and seems for his skill in law to be there placed as assessor to the chancellor, and chosen for some special trust reposed in him, to deal between the king and his tenants. Convel.

Attorney General, Is a great officer under the king, made by letters patent. It is his place to exhibit informations, and prosecute for the crown, in matters criminal; and to file bills in the Exchequer, for any thing concerning the king in inheritance or profits; and others may bring bills against the king's attorney. His proper place in court, upon any special matters of a criminal nature, wherein his attendance is required, is under the judges, on the left hand of the clerk of the crown: but this is only upon solemn and extraordinary occasions; for usually he does not sit there, but within the bar in the face of the court. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.

Attornment, (attornamentum, from the Fr. tourner) Signifies the tenant's acknowledgment of a new lord, on the sale of lands, &c. As where there is tenant for life, and he in reversion grants his right to another; it is necessary the tenant for life agree thereto, which is called attornment. It gives no interest, but only perfects the grant of another: and tenant in tail is not compellable to attorn, on the reversion being granted; he having an estate of inheritance. 1 Inst. 316, 319. This attornment is in deed, or in law; voluntary and compulsory; and may be made, as set down by Littleton, in these words, viz. I attorn to you by force of the grant, or I agree to the grant, or I become your tenant, &c. Or by any words or act which import an assent to the grant. Litt. 551. 1 Danv. 623. It may be made by payment of a penny rent, &c. to the grantee. 1 Inst. 309. Where an estate is granted to one for life, remainder to another in fee, attornment to the tenant for life is good to him in remainder. 1 Inst. 312. By feoffment of a manor, the services do not pass without attornment. 1 Dayv. Abr. 612. But if a person comes to an estate by recovery; or where a fine is levied of lands; or by deed of bargain and sale inrolled, according to the statute, there needs no attornment, they being in by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. And if a reversion be devised by will to another, the estate passeth without attornment. 8 Hen. 6. This was a large head in our Common law; but now much of this learning is out of use. And by a late statute, it is enacted, That all grants and conveyances of manors, lands, rents, reversions, &c. by fine, or otherwise, shall be good without the attornment of the tenants of such lands, or of the particular tenant upon whose estate any such reversion, &c. shall be expectant or depending: but notice must be given of the grant, to the tenant; before which he shall not be prejudiced by payment of any rent to the grantor, or for breach of the condition for non-payment. Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 9. And attornments of lands, &c. made by tenants to strangers shall be void, and their landlord's possession not affected thereby: though this shall not extend to vacate any attornment made pursuant to a judgment at law, or with consent of the landlord; or on a forfeited mortgage, &c. by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Attrapper, (Fr.) Taken, or seized. Law Fr. Dict.

Avage, or avisage, A rent or payment by tenants of the manor of Writtle in Essex, upon St. Leonard's day, 6 November, for the privilege of pawning in the lord's woods, viz. for every pig under a year old, an half-penny; for every yearling pig, one penny; and for every hog above a year old, two-pence.

Avantagium, Profit and advantage.—Walterus Cantuar. archiep. ad feodi firmam tradidit Johanni de B. terras in, &c. cum omnibus suis utilitatibus ac avantagiis inde provenientes. Regist. Eccl. Christi Cantuar. MS. anno 11 Ed. 2.

Auxionarii, auxionarii, Sellers, regrators, or retailers. Placit. Parl. 18, Ed. 1. But more properly brokers.

Audience Court, (curia audientie Cantuariensis) Is a court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, having the same authority with the court of arches, though inferior to it in dignity and antiquity. It is held in the archbishop's palace; and in former times the archbishops were wont to try and determine a great many ecclesiastical causes in their own palaces; but before they pronounced their definitive sentence, they committed the matter to be argued by men learned in the law, whom they named their auditors: and so in time it grew to one special man, who at this day is called causarum negotiorumque audientie Cantuariensis auditor officialis. And to the office of auditor was formerly joined the chancery of the archbishop, which meddled not with any point of contentious jurisdiction; that is, deciding of causes between party and party, but only such as are of office, and especially as are voluntarie jurisdictionis, as the granting the custody of spiritualities, during the vacancy of bishopricks, institutions to benefices, dispensations, &c. but this is now distinguished from the audience. The auditor of this court antiently by special commission was vicar general to the archbishop, in which capacity he exercised ecclesiastical jurisdiction of every diocese becoming vacant within the province of Canterbury. 4 Inst. 337. But now the three great offices of official principal of the archbishop, dean or judge of the peculiars, and official of the audience are, and have been for a long time past, united in one person under the general name of dean of the arches, who keepeth his court in Doctors Commons hall. Johns. 254.

The archbishop of York hath in like manner his court of audience. Johns. 255.

Audiendo & terminando, A writ, or rather a commission to certain persons, when any insurrection or great riot is committed in any place, for the appeasing and punishment thereof. F. N. B. 110. See Oyer and Terminer.

Audita Querela, Is a writ that lies where a man hath any thing to plead, but hath not a day in court to plead it: And it is usually brought where one is bound in a statute merchant, statute staple, or recognisance, or judgment is given against him for debt, and his body in execution thereupon, at the complaint of the party, upon suggestion of some just cause why execution should not be granted; as a release, or other exception. This writ is granted, by the lord chancellor to the justices of either bench, willing them to grant summons to the county where the creditor lives, for his appearance before them at a certain day. F. N. B. 102. To writs of execution the defendant cannot plead; so that if there be any matter since the judgment, to discharge him of the execution, he is to have audita querela; upon which, the justices shall hear the complaint, and do right: and audita querela cannot be brought in a release, until judgment is entered of record. 1 Mod. 111.

An audita querela is in nature of a suit in equity, where a person is charged with a debt that is paid, or being released, &c. 2 Cro. 29. And there must be a charge and burthen come, or coming upon the party that is to have it, of which he ought by law to be discharged; and then it is to be in such a case wherein he hath no other way to relieve himself. 2 Cro. 29. 1 Cro. 44. And it may be brought against the prosecutor himself, and sometimes against him and others that ought to bear part of the burthen with him. Kelw. 25.

On a statute, the conusor or his heir may bring audita querela, before execution is sued out; but this may not be done by a stranger to the statute, or a purchaser of the land. 1 Danv. Abr. 630. 3 Rep. 13. If a lessee covenants for him and his assigns to repair, and the lessee assign over, and the covenant is broken; if the lessor sues one of them and recovers damages, and then sues the other, he may bring audita querela for his relief. Bro. 74. And where a man hath goods from me by my delivery, and another takes them from him, so that he is liable to both our suits: and one of us sue and recover against him, and then the other sues him, his remedy is this writ. Dyer 232. One binds himself and his heirs in an obligation, if the obligee recover of the heir, and after sue the executors for the same cause, &c. they may have the writ audita querela. Plowd. 439. If two joint and several obligors are sued jointly, and both taken in execution, the death or escape of one will not discharge the other, so as to give him this action; but if such obligors be prosecuted severally, and a satisfaction is once had against one of them, or against the sheriff upon the escape of one, the other may have it. Hob. 58. 5 Rep. 87. Judgment is had against a sheriff on an escape of a person in execution, and after the first judgment is reversed for error, the sheriff shall have relief by audita querela, 8 Rep. 142. If the plaintiff hath had satisfaction against one trespasser, and he proceed to require it against the other, he shall have this writ. Hob. 66. And where there is judgment against three, and one of them taken in execution, they may all join in audita querela, when they have cause to have the same. 3 Cro. 443. A plaintiff, that sues an administrator, has his letters of administration revoked; the defendant must be relieved by audita querela, for he cannot plead it. Style 417. If one accepts of a lesser sum of money for a greater debt, and after the day, and yet sues the bond; this writ will not lie, because it lieth only where a discharge is in law. Trin. 18 Jac. 1. B. R. It may be brought by an infant in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, to avoid a statute acknowledged by him whilst he was within age. 1 Cro. 208.

If A. being within age becomes bail for B. and after two seire fa. and nihil returned, judgment is given against A. &c. he may have an audita querela, and avoid the recognizance, and so the judgment thereupon of consequence shall be avoided. Telv. 155.

But if A. being within age enters into a bond to B. who procures C. without any warrant, to appear for A. and confesses a judgment thereupon, yet A. shall not have an audita querela, but he must take his remedy by action of disceit against the attorney. Cro. Jac. 694.

If a statute be acknowledged to two, of which one is an infant, and they make a defeazance, and after sue execution contrary to it, an audita querela shall be brought against both; for it does not appear within the deed that he was an infant; also the deed of an infant is only voidable, and peradventure he will affirm it. 1 Rol. Abr. 312.

The writ of audita querela may be had, where a recognisance or statute entered into is defective, and not good; or being upon an usurious contract, by dures or imprisonment, or where there is a defeasance upon it, &c. Moore, ca. 1097. 1 Brownl. 39. 2 Bulst. 320. So upon shewing an acquittance of the cognisee, on a suggestion that he had agreed to deliver up the statute. 1 Rol. 309. Where one enters into a statute, and after sells his lands to divers purchasers; or judgment is had against a man, who leaves land to several heirs, &c. and one of the purchasers, or one heir alone is charged, he may have this writ against the rest to contribute to him. 3 Rep. 44. 2 Bulst. 15.

If tenant in tail acknowledges a statute and dies; and the conuzee sues execution against the heir, he may avoid it by assise, without being put to his audita querela. 1 Rol. Abr. 304.

So if a disseisor acknowledges a statute, and the disseisee enters, the conusee extends the land, the disseisee is not put to his audita querela to avoid the extent; the conusor having only a tortious and unlawful seisin of the land, and consequently no power to charge it. 1 Rol. Abr. 304.

But if A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. his son in tail, and A. enters into a recognizance to C. and dies; C. brings a sci. fac. and B. is returned heir and tertenant, and warned, but makes default; he can have no audita querela to avoid this execution, because he had a day given him in court to set aside the recognizance, and it was his folly not to appear when warned. Raym. 19. 1 Sid. 54.

Where a statute or recognisance is acknowledged before one who hath not power to take it, and afterwards the cognisor makes a feoffment of the land to another, and the cognisee taketh out execution, in such case the feoffee may have an audita querela, and avoid the execution. Dyer 35, 27.

If A. enters into a statute to B. and pays the money at the day assigned, upon which the statute is cancelled, and after B. forges a new statute in the name of A. in this case A. may relieve himself by audita querela; for the forged statute having all the essentials of a true one, the court was obliged to look on it as such till the contrary appeared, which the conusor could not set forth before execution, having no day to appear judicially in court, and therefore is put to this writ to avoid the execution founded on the injustice of the pretended conusee. F. N. B. 104.

If the conusee of a statute, upon agreement with the conusor, delivers up the statute in lieu of an acquittance, and after sues execution, and the conusor prays a re-extent, because that the land was extended too low, and has it granted him, he shall never avoid the extent by audita querela; because by his praying the re-extent he admits the statute good and executory. 1 Rol. Abr. 313.

If upon an elegit the sheriff takes an inquisition, and there are several lands found subject to the extent, and several values found, and the sheriff returns, that he has delivered some of the lands in particular for the moiety, where it appears according to the values found, that an equal moiety is not delivered to the party who recovered, but more than a moiety; yet this is not void, nor is it a disclaim by the entry, but only voidable by audita querela. 1 Rol. Abr. 305.

If a man in execution upon a judgment for debt or damages, be delivered out of execution by the sheriff or gaoler who hath him in execution, with the assent of him at whose suit he is in execution, and after, by colour of this judgment, he takes him again and puts him in prison, an audita querela lies upon this matter, and thereupon he shall be delivered. 1 Rol. Abr. 307.

But

But if A. be in execution at the suit of B. and after A. escapes with the consent of the sheriff, and after A. returns to the prison, and the sheriff keeps him in prison upon the said execution, A. shall not be discharged by audita querela, for B. has it still in his election to have him in execution at his suit, and shall not be compelled to take his remedy against the sheriff for this voluntary escape, who perhaps may be worth nothing. 1 Rel. Abr. 307.

If a statute be made to baron and feme, and they make a defeasance, and sue execution contrary to it, the audita querela shall be brought against both, although the defeasance be void as to the wife; for this action is in lieu of an answer of the execution, which is sued by both; and this is all one as if the baron alone had made the defeasance, which would have been a sufficient discharge. 1 Rel. Abr. 312.

If a statute be acknowledged to a feme sole and J. S. and after the feme takes husband, and J. S. releases, and after execution is sued, the audita querela may be brought against the baron and feme and J. S. 1 Rel. Abr. 312.

If two executors sue execution for damages recovered by the testator, where one hath released, an audita querela lies against both. 1 Rel. Abr. 312.

If A. consuee of a statute releases to the tenant all right, interest, and demands, together with all suits and executions, and afterwards sues execution, the tertenant shall have an audita querela to set aside this execution. Cro. Eliz. 40. 1 And. 133.

So in trespass or other action, if it be found for the plaintiff by nisi prius, and after, before the day in bank, the plaintiff releases to the defendant, and after judgment is given for the plaintiff, the defendant shall have an audita querela upon this matter; because he could not plead the release at the day in bank. 1 Rel. Abr. 307.

In an audita querela, the process is a venire facias, distingas, alias, pluries, and if non est inventus be returned, or that be bath nothing, the plaintiff shall have a capias against the defendant. F. N. B. 104. Dyer, 297. b.

If an audita querela is founded on a record, or the person bringing it is in custody, the process upon it is a scire facias but if founded on matter of fact, or the party is at large, then the process is a venire. 1 Salk. 92.

And if there be a default by the defendant upon a scire feci, or two nibils returned, the plaintiff shall have judgment. 1 Salk. 93. But, where an audita querela is sued quia timet, and the party is at large, there shall never be a scire facias. 1 Salk. 92.

Adjudged, that where the party hath some matter which he might have pleaded to the sci. fa. in his discharge, and two nibils are returned, and judgment against him, the court will relieve him upon motion, without putting him to bring an audita querela. 1 Salk. 93.

An audita querela shall be granted out of the court, where the record, upon which it is founded, remains, or it may be returnable in the same court. F. N. B. 105. b. And therefore if a man recover in B. R. or C. B. the defendant having a release after judgment, and before execution, shall sue the audita querela out of B. R. or C. B. where the record is. F. N. B. 105. So, if a recognizance be acknowledged in C. B. and execution be sued upon it after release, the defendant shall sue the audita querela out of C. B. F. N. B. 105. But an audita querela may be by original, and upon a judgment in C. B. It goes out of chancery returnable in C. B. F. N. B. 105.

The writ of audita querela shall be allowed only in open court. 1 Bulst. 140. 2 Bulst. 97. 2 Sherr. 240.

Upon audita querela brought, a superfedeas shall go to stay execution, and the judgment in this action is to be discharged of execution. Hob. 2. If an audita querela be unduly gotten, upon a false surmise, it may be quashed. 1 Bulst. 140. This writ lies not after judgment upon a matter which the party might have pleaded before. Cro. Eliz. 35. A bare surmise is not sufficient to avoid a judgment: but generally some specialty must be shewn. Cro. Jac. 579. Upon a release or other deed pleaded, no superfedeas will be granted till the plaintiff in the audita querela hath brought his witnesses into court to prove the deed: and if execution be executed before, bail is to be put in by allowance of the court. 1 Lill. Abr. 151.

Upon a motion for an allowance of an audita querela, it was held, that bail must be given in court, and not elsewhere, unless in cases of necessity, to be allowed by the court, and then it may be put in before two judges. Palm. 422.

And by bail the party is in custody of the law, and if he make not out his audita querela, he must render his body in execution again, or pay the debt for which he is in execution, or else his bail must pay it. If after judgment against bail, the judgment against the principal is reversed, or the money paid by the principal; the bail may have audita querela. Cro. Jac. 645. 8 Rep. 143. And it may be brought by the bail to avoid an execution against them, where no process is sued forth against the principal in his life-time, &c. Goldsb. 174. Where a plaintiff in audita querela gets judgment, he shall have restitution of his goods, though taken in execution before the writ brought. Sid. 74.

A man nonsuited in an audita querela, may have a new writ. F. N. B. 104. When audita querela is extended on any statute, &c. before the time audita querela lieth. 22, 46 E. 3. A writ in the nature of an audita querela, has been made out returnable in B. R. on a special pardon, setting forth the whole matter. Jenk. Cent. 109. And in some cases after a judgment, the court will relieve the party on motion, without audita querela. 1 Salk. 93.

A writ of audita querela.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To our justices assigned to hold pleas before us, greeting. We having received information, by the grievous complaint of A. B. That whereas C. D. in Easter term, &c. and now hath to the damage of the said A. B. &c. wherefore the said A. B. hath brought us to provide him relief, and being unwilling that the said A. B. should be any ways injured, and desirous that what is right and just should be done in this case: We command you, that in order to hear the complaint of the said A. B. you call before you the aforesaid parties, and such others as it shall seem meet to you to convene; and having heard the aforesaid parties, and their several reasons, you cause to be done full and speedy justice to the said parties, which of right, and according to the laws and customs of our kingdom, you shall see ought to be done. Witnesses, &c.

Auditor, (Lat.) Is an officer of the king, or some other great person, who examines yearly the accounts of all under officers, and makes up a general book, which shews the difference between their receipts and charge, and their several allowances, commonly called allocations: as the auditors of the exchequer take the accounts of those receivers who collect the revenues. 4 Inst. 106. Receivers general of sec-farm rents, &c. are also termed auditors, and hold their audits for adjusting the accounts of the said rents at certain times and places appointed. And there are auditors assigned by the court to audit and settle accounts in actions of account, and other cases, who are proper judges of the cause, and pleas are made before them, &c. 1 Brownl. 24.

Auditor of the Receipts, An officer of the exchequer, that files the tellers bills, and having made an entry of them, gives the lord treasurer, &c. weekly, a certificate of the money received: he makes debentures to the tellers, before they pay any money; and takes their accounts: he also keeps the black book of receipts, and the treasurer's key of the treasury, and seeth every teller's money locked up in the treasury. 4 Inst. 107.

Auditors of the Imprest, Are officers in the exchequer, who have the charge of auditing the great accounts of the king's customs, naval and military expences, of the mint, &c. and any money imprested to men for his majesty's service. Pract. Excheq. 83.

Auditores, Is the same with audientes, i. e. the catechumens, or those who were newly instructed in the mysteries of the christian religion before they were admitted to baptism; and auditorium is that place in the church where they stood to hear, and be instructed.

'Tis what we now call navis ecclesiæ: and in the primitive times, the church was so strict in keeping the people together in that place, that the person who went from thence in sermon time was excommunicated. Blount.

Avenage. (from the Lat. avena) A certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as a rent, or in lieu of some other duties.

Avenor, (avenarius, from the Fr. avoine, i. e. oats) Is an officer belonging to the king's stables, that provides oats for his horses: he is mentioned 13 Car. 2. cap. 8.

Adventure. Adventures of trials of skill at arms, and signifies military exercises on horseback.—Affisa de armis 36 Hen. 3. Brady's Append. Hist. Eng. 250. And 'tis mentioned in Addit. Mat. Parij. p. 149. Quid nulli convenient ad turmandum, vel burdandum nec ad alias quas-cunque aventuras.

Adventure, (properly adventure) A mischance causing the death of a man: as where a person is suddenly drowned, or killed by any accident, without felony. 1 Inst. 291.

Avera, (quasi ouera, from the Fr. ouvre and ouvrage, ou operatum) signifies a day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at 8d. It is found in domesday. 4 Inst. 269.

Average, (averagium) Is said to signify service which the tenant owes to his lord by horse or carriage: but it is more commonly used for a contribution that merchants and others make towards their losses, who have their goods cast into the sea for the safeguard of the ship, or of the other goods and lives of those persons that are in the ship, during a tempest. It is in this sense called average, because it is proportioned and allotted after the rate of every man's goods carried. By the laws of the sea, in a storm, when there is an extreme necessity, the goods, wares, guns, or whatsoever else is on board the ship, may (by consulting the mariners) be thrown over board by the master, for the preservation of the ship; and it shall be made good by average and contribution. Mo. 297. But if the master takes in more goods than he ought, without leave of the owners and freighters, and a storm ariseth at sea, and part of the freighters goods are thrown over board, the remaining goods are not subject to average; but the master is to make good the loss out of his own estate: and if the ship's gear or apparel be lost by storm, the same is not within the average. Leg. Rebd. If goods are cast over board before half the voyage is performed, they are to be estimated at the price they cost: but if they are ejected afterwards, then at the price as the rest are sold at the port of arrival. Leg. Oleron. Where goods are given to pirates by way of composition to save the rest, there shall be average, by the civil law. Mo. 297. — Average is likewise a small duty, paid to masters of ships when goods are sent in another man's ship, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight — Paying so much freight for the said goods, with prime and average accustomed. Words in bills of lading.

Average of Corn Fields. The stubble or remainder of straw and grain left in corn fields after the harvest is carried away. In Kent it is called the gratten, and in other parts the roughings, &c.

Aver Corn, i. a reserved rent in corn, paid by farmers and tenants to religious houses: and signifies by Sommer corn drawn to the lord's granary, by the working cattle of the tenant. 'Tis supposed that this custom was owing to the Saxon cyriac fecat, church seed, a measure of corn brought to the priest annually on St. Martin's day, as an oblation for the first-fruits of the earth: under which title the religious had corn rent paid yearly; as appears by an inquisition of the estate of the abbey of Glastenbury. A. D. 1201.

Aver Land, Seems to have been such lands as the tenants did plough and manure, cum averiis suis, for the proper use of a monastery, or the lords of the soil. Mon. Angl.

Aver Penny, (or average penny) Money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, or to be freed thereof. — Aver penny hoc est, quietum esse de diversis denariis pro averagiis domini regis. Rassal.

Aver Siftber, A custom or rent formerly so called: Corwel.

Averia, Cattle: Spelman deduces the word from the Fr. ouvrer, to work, as if chiefly working cattle: though it seems to be more probably from avoir, to have or possess: the word sometimes including all personal estate, as catalla did all goods and chattels. This word is used for oxen or horses of the plough; and in a general sense any cattle. — Homines per averia sua, viz. Equos & boves, & affros graviter distruxit. W. Thorn, in Ed. 2. 'Tis used in the same sense in W. 2. c. 18. Averia elongata; see Elongata.

Averia Captis in Withernam, A writ for the taking of cattle to his use, who hath cattle unlawfully distrained by another, and driven out of the county where they were taken, so that they cannot be replevied by the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 82. If the cattle are put into any strong place in the same county, the sheriff may take the posse comitatus, and break into it, to make the replevin. But when they are driven out of the county, he hath no authority to pursue them. Vide 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12.

Averment, (verificatio, from the Fr. averer, i. e. verificare, testari) Is an offer of the defendant to make good or justify an exception pleaded in abatement or bar of the plaintiff's action: and it signifies the act, as well as the offer of justifying the exception; and not only the form, but the matter thereof. Co. Litt. 362. Averment is either general, or particular; general, which concludes every plea, i. e. or is in bar, or in a replication, or other pleadings, containing matter affirmative, and ought to be with these words, Et hoc paratus est verificare, &c. Particular averment is when the life of tenant for life, or of tenant in tail, &c. is averred. Ibid.

In replevin the defendant made cognisance as bailiff to baron and feme, he being seized in right of the jeme for rent in avero existens; the plaintiff demurr'd specially; for that the life of the wife was not averr'd. But Hale Ch. J. held, that the rent in avero existens is quasi an averment, and after verdict, or upon a general demurrer, had been good; and Twifden and Wild held it good enough on a special demurrer, which Hale doubted, and judgment was for the avowant. 2 Lev. 88.

He that claims estate from tenant for life, or in tail, or from parson of a church, ought to aver his life. Br. Estate, pl. 18.

Where one thing is to be done in consideration of another, on contracts, &c. there must be an averment of performance, but where there is promise against promise, there needs no averment; for each party hath his action. 1 Lev. 87. The use of averment being to ascertain what is alledged doubtfully, deeds may sometimes be made good by averment, where a person is not certainly named; but when the deed itself is void for uncertainty, it cannot be made good by averment. 5 Rep. 155. Averment cannot be made against a record, which imports in itself an uncontrollable verity. 1 Inst. 26.

Where a statute is recited, there one may not aver that there is no such record; for generally an averment, as this is, doth not lie against a record; for a record is a thing of solemn and high nature, but an averment is but the allegation of the party, (21 Car. B. R.) and not so much credit in law to be given to it. Lil. P. R. 155.

Where D. has appeared as an attorney for A. in an action brought by A. against B. it cannot be assigned for error, that D. was not an attorney, or that there is no such person in verum natura; for it is against the record; and the admittance of him for an attorney by the court, makes him an attorney, if he was not an attorney before this admittance; in a writ of error brought in this writ, and error assigned ut supra, the defendant in the writ of error in this case pleads in nullo est erratum; this does not confess that he was not an attorney; but this plea est quasi a demurrer, that this is not an error at all; adjudged and affirmed in error. Jenk. 232.

Averment lies not against the proceedings of a court of record. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. sect. 14. Nor shall it be admitted against a will concerning lands. 5 Rep. 68.

And an averment shall not be allowed where the intent of the testator cannot be collected out of the words of the will. 4 Rep. 44. One may not aver a thing contrary to the condition of an obligation, which is supposed to be made upon good deliberation, and before witnesses, and therefore not to be contradicted by a bare averment. 1 Lill. Abr. 156. An averment of a wicked and unlawful consideration of giving a bond, may well be pleaded, though it doth not appear on the face of the deed: and any thing which shews an obligation to be void may well be averred, although it doth not appear on the face of the bond. Adjudged on demurrer, after two arguments in the case of Collins and Blantern, C. B. Easter, 7 Geo. 3. Wilson par. 2. fo. 347, &c.

N. B. The plea in this case was settled by Lord Lifford, now Chancellor of Ireland, then Mr. serjeant Hewitt, and afterwards perused and signed by Mr. serjeant Glyn, Mr. serjeant Hewitt being made a judge of B. R. before the plea was delivered. Vide the plea, fo. 345. Wilson.

One cannot avoid a statute-merchant, obligation, release, &c. against the party himself named in it, by averring a delivery thereof upon condition, unless he shews a writing of the condition. Br. Faits, pl. 10. Sed qu. for defendant may plead that the bond was delivered as an escrow, to be delivered upon a certain condition to the obligee. Wilf. par. 2. fo. 347.

But 'tis otherwise in detinue against a stranger, where the thing is bailed into an indifferent hand; nota the diversity; for there it is averrable contrary against the party himself. Br. Faits, pl. 10.

If an heir is sued on the bond of his ancestor, it must be averred that the heirs of the obligor were expressly bound. 2 Saund. 136. In declaring you shew that the obligor bound his heirs. Another consideration than mentioned in a deed, may be averred, where it is not repugnant or contrary to the deed. Dyer 146. But a consideration may not be averred, that is against a particular express consideration; nor may averment be against a consideration mentioned in the deed, that there was no consideration given. 1 Rep. 176. 8 Rep. 155. No averment will lie upon a deed of another use, against the uses expressed in the deed; but where no use is expressed, or but uncertainly, an averment shall be admitted, and may serve for addition or explication. 2 Rep. 75. But vide case of Collins and Blantern, before referred unto. And if an estate is made to a woman that hath a husband, by fine or deed, for her life; in this case it may be averred to be made to her for her jointure, although there be another use or consideration expressed. 4 Rep. 4. Averment may be of a use upon any fine, or common recovery; though not of any other use than what is expressed in it: it may be received to reconcile a fine, and the indenture to lead the uses. Dyer 311. 2 Bulst. 235. 1 And. 312.

If one has two manors known by the name of W. and levies a fine of his manor of W. he shall by averment ascertain which of them it was; per cur. 6 Mod. 235.

Two manors were known by the name of W. and sometimes distinguished with an alias; an annuity of 20*l.* per ann. is granted out of the manor of W. one of them is but 8*l.* per ann. and the other of more than the annuity. It is a good averment in law, that the greater manor should be liable to the rent-charge. Chan. Rep. 138.

If a piece of ground was anciently called by one name, and of late is called by another, and it is granted to me by this new name; an averment may be taken that it is all one thing, and it will make it good. Dyer 37. 44. No averment lies against any returns of writs, that are definitive to the trial of the thing returned; as the return of a sheriff upon his writs, &c. But it may be where such are not definitive; and against certificates upon commissions out of any court: also against the returns of bailiffs of franchises, so that the lords be not prejudiced by it. Dyer 348. 8 Rep. 121. 2 Cro. 13. When certainty is expressed by argument and implication in pleading, there it need not be averred. 2 Bulst. 95, 142.

In an action on the case for these words, viz. Thy son hath robbed me, the plaintiff cannot maintain the action, without averring, that the defendant had no more sons; but if the words had been spoken to the son instead of the father or to the wife, viz. Thy father hath robbed me, &c. there needs no averment, because a son can have but one father, and a husband but one wife. 2 Cro. 443.

The father having two sons, both of one name, levied a fine of lands to the use of W. his son and his heirs; in this case the judges cannot take notice to which of his sons the land doth belong; but if the party averreth, that the cognisor had two sons, named W. the elder, and W. the younger, and that his intent was to levy the fine to W. the younger, this averment is good, it being of matter of fact not apparent in the fine, but out of it, and therefore it shall be tried by a jury; but if a man, by deed executed under his hand and seal, giveth goods to one of the sons of G. D. who hath several sons at that time, there an averment shall not be allowed which son he meant; because the deed itself being void for uncertainty, it cannot be made good by an averment. 5 Rep. 155.

A special averment must be made upon the pleading of a general pardon, for the party to bring himself within the pardon. Hob. 67. A person may aver he is not the same person on appeal of death in favour of life. 1 Nelf. Abr. 305.

Where a man is to take a benefit by an act of parliament, there in pleading he must aver, that he is not a person exempted; but where he claims no benefit by it, but only to keep that which he had before, in such case 'tis not necessary to make such averment. Plow. Com. 488.

In an action upon the statute 32 H. 8. c. 9. against buying pretended titles, if the plaintiff declares, that the defendant, or any of his ancestors, or any other person under whom he claims, were not in possession of the land, nor received the rents, &c. by the space of a year, &c. he need not aver, that the title is pretended, because the statute makes it so; and therefore 'tis impertinent to aver a thing which clearly appears both by the statute and the declaration. Plow. Com. 87.

Pleas merely in the negative, shall not be averred, because they cannot be proved: nor shall what is against presumption of law, or any thing apparent to the court. 1 Inst. 362, 373. The statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. gives the averment, not summoned according to law, &c. on a bond given to the sheriff or gaoler, contrary to the 23 H. 6. c. 9. there may be averment by that statute: upon bonds for usury, the usury may be averred by virtue of 13 Eliz. c. 8. And so in case of simony. Star. 31 Eliz. c. 6. But there is no averment of maintenance. Jenk. Cent. 94, 108, 121. By statute, no exception or advantage shall be taken upon a demurrer, for want of averment of hoc paratus est, &c. except the same be specially set down for cause of demurrer. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

Averrare, To carry goods in a waggon, or upon loaded horses, a duty required of some customary tenants.—Debent fruges domini metere, prata falcare, & carriare & averrare. Cartular. Glaston. MS. f. 4.

Augea, A cistern for water.—Episcopus B. concedit civibus W. unum caput pro conductu aquatico cum augeis, spirabilibus, & ceteris machinis, sub & super terraneis. A. D. 1451. Reg. Eccl. Well. MS.

Augmentation, (augmentatio) The name of a court erected 27 H. 8. for determining suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey lands. The intent of this court was, that the king might be justly dealt with touching the profits of such religious houses, as were given to him by act of parliament. It took its name from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown, by the suppression of religious houses: and the office of augmentation, which hath many curious records, remains to this day, though the court hath been long since dissolved. Terms de Ley 68.

Avifamentum, Advice, or counsel.—De avifamento & consensu concilii nostri concessimus, &c. was the common form of our kings grants.

Aula, i. e. A court-baron, aula ibidem tent. die, &c. Aula ecclesiæ is that which is now termed navis ecclesiæ. Eadm. lib. 6. p. 141.

Aulnage. See Alnage.

Aumone, (Fr. aumône, alms) Tenure in aumone is where lands are given in alms to some church, or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor's soul. Britt. 164. Vide Frankalmoin.

Auncel-weight, (quasi hand jale weight, or from ansa, the handle of the balance) An antient manner of weighing, by the hanging of scales or hooks at each end of a beam or staff, which by lifting up in the middle with one's finger or hand, discovered the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other. This weighing being subject to great deceit, was prohibited by several statutes, and the even balance commanded in its stead, 34 Ed. 3. 8 Hen. 6. 22 Car. 2. &c. But notwithstanding it is still used in some parts of England: and what we now call the stilliards, a sort of hand-weighing among butchers, being a small beam with a weight at one end, (which shews the pounds by certain notches) seems to be near the same with the auncel-weight.

Aunciatus, A word signifying antiquated. — Sicut charta eorum aunciata est et libertus anterior. Brompton, lib. 2. cap. 24. par. 6.

Avoidance, In the general signification is when a benefice is void of an incumbent; in which sense it is opposed to plenary. Avoidance is either in fact, as by death of the incumbent; or in law: and may be by cession, deprivation, resignation, &c. In the first case,

Where the avoidance is by the death of the incumbent, or by his being made a bishop, in such cases the patron is to take notice of it at his peril; and the six months, in which he is to present another, shall be accounted from the death of the one, and the creation of the other; but if the avoidance be by resignation, which is the act of the party himself, or by deprivation, which is the act of the law, in both those cases the patron must have notice, and the six months shall be accounted from the time of the notice, and not from the resignation or deprivation. Dyer 327.

Where the patron himself took notice of a deprivation, which was obtained at his own prosecution, for not reading the thirty-nine articles; yet, in such case, lapse shall not incur, without an actual notice of the deprivation given to him by the bishop; for 'tis he, and no other person, who is required by the law to give notice, and it must not be a general notice, but it must be particular, and the cause be expressed for which he was deprived. 6 Rep. 29.

Where the bishop refused to institute a clerk, he must give notice of such refusal to the patron himself, if he is within that county where the church is become void; but if he is not in that county, then notice must be given at the door of that church; but where 'tis doubtful who is patron, and upon jus patronatus awarded, 'tis found, that such a one is patron, though it may happen he is not the true patron, yet if he gives him notice, and no presentation is made within six months after such notice, the bishop may collate to the church; and though that collation shall not bind the true patron, yet the bishop shall be excused from being a disturber. 1 Leon. 32.

There are avoidances by act of parliament, wherein there must be a judicial sentence pronounced to make the living void: if a man hath one benefice with cure, &c. and take another with cure without any dispensation to hold two benefices, in such case the first is void by the act 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. if it was above the value of 8*l.* During an avoidance, it is said that the house and glebe of the benefice are in abeyance: but by the Stat. 28 Hen. 8. cap. 11. The profits arising during the avoidance are given to the next incumbent towards payment of the first fruits; though the ordinary may receive the profits to provide for the service of the church, and shall be allowed the charges of supplying the cure, &c. for which purpose the churchwardens of the parish are usually appointed. The next avoidance of a church may be granted by deed, where the church is full: if a grant be made of the next avoidance when it shall happen, and the church is void at that time, this will make the grant void as to that very avoidance, but it may be good for the next turn after that.

And the distinction which hath obtained is this: if it come in question, whether the church be full of an incumbent or not, the same shall be tried by the certificate of the bishop, who best knows of the institution; but if the issue to be tried be, whether the church be void or not, the same shall be tried by a jury at the Common law, unless the issue to be tried be upon some special act of avoidance, for then the same shall be tried by the certificate of the bishop, so as the special cause of the avoidance be spiritual. Gib. 793. Hughes, c. 13. 1 Burn E. L. 78. And see 25 Ed. 3. §. 3. c. 8.

If a clerk is instituted to a benefice of the yearly value of 8*l.* and before induction accepts another benefice with cure, and is instituted, the first benefice is void by the statute 21 H. 8. for he who is instituted only, is properly said to have accepted a benefice within the words of the act. 4 Rep. 78.

The patron granted the next avoidance to two jointly and severally; adjudged, that this grant is not good, because an interest cannot be divided; so where there was a grant of the next avoidance to three, habendum to them and to each of them jointly and severally, the first presented the third, and adjudged good; but if the bishop had refused to admit the presentee, he might have failed in a quare impedit, because the severance in the habendum is void in law; but 'tis otherwise in case of an authority, for that may be divided. Goldf. 142.

But if he is induced into a second benefice, the first is void in facto et jure, and not voidable only. quoad the patron, and until he presents another; and in such case the patron ought to take notice of the avoidance at his peril, and present within the six months. Cro. Car. 258.

A grant of the next avoidance is no more than a chattel, and goes to executors. Right Clerg. 68.

Avoirdupois, or averdupois, (Fr. avoir du poids, i. e. habere pondus, aut justi esse ponderis) Signifies a weight different from that which is called troy weight, which contains but twelve ounces in the pound, whereas this hath sixteen ounces: and in this respect it is probably so called, because it is of greater weight than the other. It also signifieth such merchandizes as are weighed by this weight; and is mentioned in divers statutes, as 9 Ed. 3. 27 Edw. 3. c. 10. 2 R. 2. c. 1. Averium ponderis, full weight, or averdupois. Cart. 3 Ed. 2.

Avowee, Of a church benefice. Britt. c. 29. See Advowee.

Avowry, (Fr. advouerie) Is where a man takes a distress for rent or other thing, and the party on whom taken sues forth a replevin, then the taker shall justify his plea for what cause he took it; and if in his own right, he must shew the same, and avow the taking; but if he took it in right of another, he must make cognizance of the taking, as bailiff or servant to the person in whose right he took the same. Terms de Ley 70. 2 Lill. 454. The avowry must contain sufficient matter for judgment to have return: but so much certainty is not required in an avowry as in a declaration; and the avowant is not obliged to alledge seisin within the statute of limitations. Nor shall a lord be required to avow on any person in certain; but he must alledge seisin by the hands of some tenant within forty years. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. 1 Inst. 268. In avowry seisin in law is sufficient, so that where a tenant hath done homage or fealty, it is a good seisin of all other services to make an avowry, though the lord, &c. had not seisin of them within sixty years. 32 H. 8. cap. 2. 4 Rep. 9. A man may distrain and avow for rent due from a copyholder to a lord of a manor; and also for heriots, homage, fealty, amercements, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 315. If a person makes an avowry for two causes, and can maintain his avowry but for one of them, it is a good avowry: and if an avowry be made for rent, and it appears that part of it is not due, yet the avowry is good for the rest. Supposing sufficient rent due to justify a distress. An avowry may be made upon two several titles of land, though it be but for one rent; for one rent may depend upon several titles. 1 Lill. Abr. 157. Saund. 285. If a man takes a distress for rent reserved upon a lease for years, and afterwards accepts a surrender of the lands, he may nevertheless avow, because he is to have the rent due, notwithstanding the surrender. 1 Danv. Abr. 652. Where tenant in tail aliens in fee, the donor may avow upon him, the reversion being in the donor, whereunto the rent is incident. Ibid. 650. If there be tenant for life, life, remainder in fee, the tenant for life may compel the lord to avow upon him: but where there is tenant in tail, with such remainder, and the tenant in tail makes a feoffment, the feoffee may not compel the lord to avow upon him. 1 Danv. Abr. 648. 1 Inst. 268. If the tenant enfeoffs another, the lord ought to avow upon the feoffor for the arrears before the feoffment, and not upon the feoffee. 1 Danv. 650. The lord may avow upon a disseisor. 20 Hen. 6. And if a man's tenant is disseised, he may be compelled to avow, by such tenant or his heir. A defendant in replevin may avow or justify; but if he justifies he cannot have a return. 3 Rev. 204. The defendant need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus est, &c. And the avowant shall recover his damages and costs, by 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. By which statute it is enacted, That if in any replegiare for rents, &c. the avowry, cognisance, or justification be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, &c. the defendant shall recover such damages and costs as the plaintiff should have had, if he had recovered. And by 17 Car. 2. c. 7. When a plaintiff shall be nonsuit before issue in any suit of replevin, &c. removed or depending in any of the courts at Westminster, the defendant making suggestion in the nature of an avowry for rent, the court on prayer shall award a writ to inquire of the sum in arrear, and the value of the distress, &c. Upon return whereof the defendant shall recover the arrears, if the distress amounts to that value, or else the value of the distress with costs; and where the distress is not found to the value of the arrears, the party may distrain for the residue. Vide 17 Car. 2. c. 7. The learning of avowries is abridged by the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 19. and the intricacies of process in replevin, &c. much remedied in cases of distresses for rent, by the 17 Car. 2. c. 7. Vide 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. f. 23. Tusculare. Formerly persons were appointed in monasteries to hear the monks read, and direct them how, and in what manner they should do it with a graceful tone or accent, to make an impression on their hearers, which was required before they were admitted to read publicly in the church; and this was called auscultare, viz. to read or recite a lesson.—Quicumque leſurus vel canturus eſt aliquid in monaſterio, ſi neceſſe habeat, ab eo, (viz. Cantore) priuſquam incipiat, debet auſcultare. Lanfrancus in Decretis pro ordine Benedicti. c. 5.

Tuſturus and Oſturus, A goſhawk; from whence we uſually call a ſaulkoner, who keeps that kind of hawks, an oſtringer. In antient deeds there has been reſerved, as a rent to the lord, unum auſturm.

Tuter Droit, Is where perſons ſue or are ſued in another's right; as executors, administrators, &c.

Tuterſoits acquit, Is a plea by a criminal that he was heretofore acquitted of the ſame treaſon or felony: for one ſhall not be brought into danger of his life, for the ſame offence more than once. 3 Inst. 213. We muſt except out of this general rule, the right which the widow hath to ſue an appeal for the death of her husband, and the heir for the death of his anceſtor. There is alſo plea of auterſoits convicted, and auterſoits attain; that he was heretofore convicted, or attained, of the ſame felony. In appeal of death, auterſoits acquit, or auterſoits attain, upon indictment of the ſame death, is no plea. H. P. C. 244. But in other caſes where a perſon is attained, it is to no purpoſe that he ſhould be attained a ſecond time. And conviction of manſlaughter, where clergy is admitted thereon, will bar any ſubſequent proſecution for the ſame death. 2 Haw. P. C. 377.

Turhority, Is nothing but a power to do ſomething: it is ſometimes given by word, and ſometimes by writing: alſo it is by writ, warrant, commiſſion, letter of attorney, &c. and ſometimes by law. The authority that is given muſt be to do a thing lawful; for if it be for the doing any thing againſt law, as to beat a man, take away his goods, or diſſeiſe him of his lands, this will not be a good authority to juſtify him that doth it. Dyer 102. Kelw. 89. An authority given to another perſon, to do that which a man himſelf cannot do, is void: and where an authority is lawful, the party to whom given muſt do the act in the name of him who gave the authority. 11 Rep. 87.

An authority in ſome caſes cannot be transferred.

One, who has an authority to do any act for another, muſt execute it himſelf, and cannot tranſfer it to another; for this being a truſt and confidence reſoſed in the party, cannot be aſſigned to a ſtranger whoſe ability and integrity were not ſo well thought of by him for whom the act was to be done; therefore an executor, having authority to ſell, cannot ſell by attorney. 9 Co. 77. b. 1 Rel. Abr. 330.

So if a leſſee for life hath power to make leaſes, rendering the ancient rent, he cannot make them by letter of attorney. 2 Rel. Rep. 303.

If A. lends B. a horſe to ride to York, B. cannot let his man ride him; for the licence is a matter of pleaſure annexed to the perſon of B. and cannot be transferred; adjudged upon a deſurrer, in an action of treſpaſs, for immoſtately riding the plaintiff's mare; where the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff licentiam eidem dedit equitare; and that the defendant and his ſervant alternatim had rid upon the ſaid mare. 1 Rel. Abr. 330. 1 Mod. 110.

Some authorities likewise determine with the life of the perſon who gave them.

The authority given by letter of attorney muſt be executed during the life of the perſon that gives it; becauſe the letter of attorney is to conſtitute the attorney by repreſentative for ſuch a purpoſe, and therefore can continue in force only during the life of me that am to be repreſented; and hence it is, that if J. S. make a letter of attorney to deliver ſeiſin after my death, it is void; becauſe he cannot deliver ſeiſin during my life; for that were plainly without any authority from me; nor can he do it after my death, for the former reaſon. 2 Rel. Abr. 9. Co. Lit. 52.

But if any corporation aggregate, as a mayor and commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a feoffment and letter of attorney to deliver ſeiſin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean, but the attorney may well execute the power after their death; becauſe the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which ſubſiſts after the death of the mayor or dean, and therefore may be repreſented by their attorney; but if the dean or mayor be named by their own private name, and die before livery, or be removed, livery after ſeems not good. Co. Lit. 52. 2 Rel. Abr. 12.

It is a rule that every authority ſhall be countermandable, and determine by the death of him that gives it, &c. But where an intereſt is coupled with an authority, there it cannot be countermanded or determined. And. 1. Dyer 190.

A deviſe to another to have the diſpoſing, ſelling, and letting his land; ſo a deviſe to his ſon, but that his wife ſhall take the profits; ſo a deviſe, that his executor ſhall have the overſight and dealing of his lands; ſo a deviſe to an infant in tail, but that G. D. ſhall have the overſight of his will, and the education of his ſon till of age, and to receive, ſet, and let for him; theſe and ſuch like words give the deviſee an authority, but no intereſt. Dyer 26. b. 2 Leon. 221. 3 Leon. 78, 216. Moor 635. S. P. Cro. Eliz. 674, 678, 734.

Where goods are deviſed to a particular purpoſe, there the deviſee hath no intereſt in them; as for inſtance, the teſtator deviſed ſeveral legacies, and after thoſe were paid, then he deviſed the reſidue to his wife to diſpoſe for the good of his ſoul, and payment of his debts, and made her ſole executrix; adjudged, that by this deviſe he had no intereſt in the reſidue, for it was deviſed for a particular purpoſe, viz. to pay the teſtator's debts. Dyer 331.

The law makes a difference where lands are deviſed to executors to ſell, and where the deviſe is, that his lands ſhall be ſold by his executors; for in the firſt caſe an intereſt interest passes to the executors, because the lands are expressly devised to them, but in the other case they have only an authority to sell. Goldf. 2. Dyer 219. Moor 61. Keilw. 107. b. 1 And. 145.

The testator devised, that his executors should receive the issues and profits of his lands till his son came of age, ~~to pay his debts and legacies, and to breed up his younger children~~; the testator died, so did the executor, during the minority of the son, having first made J. S. his executor; adjudged, that his executor of an executor may dispose of the issues and profits for the purposes mentioned in the will during the infancy of the son; because the first executor had not only a bare authority, but an interest vested in him. Dyer 210.

An authority may be delegated by deed indented, tho' the attorney be not party to the deed; because the attorney takes nothing by the deed, but has only a naked authority delegated to him; and therefore, since a man may take an estate in remainder, though he is no party to the deed, a fortiori one not party to the deed may receive a naked authority or power by it. 2 Rol. Abr. 8, 9.

N. B. Indenting is not necessary.

Where the testator gives another authority to sell his lands, he may sell the inheritance, because he gave him the same power he had himself, and in such case the purchaser shall be in by the devise. 2 Rep. 53.

An authority may be apportioned or divided, but an interest is inseparable from the person, and where an act, which is in its nature indifferent, will work two ways, the one by an authority, and the other by an interest, the law will attribute it to the interest; as for instance, where a man is seised of three acres holden in capite, to the use of such person, and of such estate as he shall devise, and afterwards he, by his last will, devised all his lands to G. D. in fee, this shall only pass two parts, viz. two acres and no more; but where an interest and authority meet, if the party declare, that the thing shall take effect by virtue of his authority, there it shall prevail against the interest; therefore if the testator had recited his power, and relied upon it, the three acres would have passed by his express declaration; nay, if he had not made such a declaration, yet if the act itself doth import, that it must necessarily work by his power, or be void, the law will adjudge it to take effect according to the meaning of the party; therefore it was resolved in Sir Edward Cleeve's case, that he being seised of three acres of equal value, settled two of them in jointure upon his wife, and afterwards made a feoffment of the third acre to the use of such person to whom he should devise the same, and then devised it to G. D. that this devise was good by virtue of his authority to devise, or else the whole had been void. 6 Rep. 17.

In many cases authorities must be strictly executed according to the power given.

If a man devise that his executors shall sell his land, this gives but a naked authority; and the lands, till the sale is made, descend to the heir at law; and in this case all must join in the sale; and if one die, it being a bare authority, cannot survive to the rest. Co. Lit. 112. b. 113. a. 181. b.

But if a man by will give land to executors to be sold, and one of them die, the survivors may sell; for the trust being coupled with an interest, shall survive together with it. Co. Lit. 113. b. 181. b.

If a letter of attorney be to make livery upon condition, so as to make a conditional feoffment, and the attorney delivers seisin absolutely, the livery is not good; because the attorney had no authority to create an absolute feoffment; and therefore such absolute feoffment shall not bind the feoffor, because he gave no such authority. 2 Rol. Abr. 9.

But if the letter of attorney had been to make livery absolutely, and the attorney had made it upon condition, this seems a good execution of his power, and the feoffment good; because when the attorney had once delivered seisin, he has fully executed his power; and the condition annexed to it being without authority, is void; and therefore shall not destroy the operation of the livery. 2 Rol. Abr. 9.

If a warrant of attorney be given to make livery to one, and the attorney makes livery to two; or if the attorney had authority to make livery of Black-Acre, and he made livery of Black-Acre and White-Acre, though the attorney has in these cases done more, yet there is no reason that shall vitiate what he has done pursuant to his power, since what he did beyond it is a perfect nullity and void. Perk. sect. 189.

If a letter of attorney be given to two jointly to take livery, and this feoffor makes livery to one in the absence of the other, in the name of both, this is void; because they being appointed jointly to receive livery, and to be considered but as one. Co. Lit. 49. b. 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But if a feoffment be made to A. and B. and the feoffor gives a letter of attorney to deliver seisin, and J. S. gives livery to A. in the absence of B. in the name of both, this is a good livery; for though the intire possession be delivered to one only, yet they being jointtenants by the deed of feoffment, such livery to one makes no alteration or change in the possession; because if the livery had been made to both, each had been placed in the whole possession; besides that, every man being presumed to accept a gift for his advantage, A. is looked upon as the attorney of B. to receive the possession for him; and therefore the livery to A. enures to the benefit of B. till he disagrees to it. Co. Lit. 49. 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But if a letter of attorney be made to three conjunctim & divisim, and two only make livery, this is not good, because not pursuant to their authority; for the delegation was to them all three, or to each of them separately; yet if the third was present at the time of the livery made by two, though he did not actually join with them in the act of livery, yet the livery is good; because when they all three are upon the land for that purpose, and two make livery in the presence of the third, there is his concurrence to the act, though he did not join in it actually, since he did not dissent to it. Dyer 62. 1 Rol. Abr. 329. Co. Lit. 181. b. 1 Rol. Rep. 299. Yelv. 26.

If a letter of attorney be given to A. to make livery of lands already in lease, the attorney may enter upon the lessee in order to make livery; because whilst the lessee continues in possession, the attorney cannot deliver seisin of it; and therefore to execute the power given him by the letter of attorney, it is necessary he should have a power to enter upon the lessee. Co. Lit. 52. Poph. 103. Dyer 131. a. 340. a.

If a sheriff makes a warrant to four or three, or a capias jointly or severally to arrest one, two of them may arrest the party, for the greater expedition of justice. Co. Lit. 181. Palm. 52. 2 Rol. Rep. 137.

Where the mayor and commonalty of London had constituted J. S. their bailiff to receive their rents, and to make demand of them, and to make entry, such general authority is not sufficient to authorize a bailiff to take advantage, and demand a rent accrued due after the authority given; for it is a new right attached, and there ought to be a special authority for that purpose. Skin. 413.

If the lord gives licence to a copyholder for life, to lease the copyhold for five years, the copyholder may lease it for three years; for this is comprehended within the licence, inasmuch as he hath given him licence to lease for more years. 1 Rol. Abr. 330.

So if the lord gives licence to a copyholder for life, to lease the copyhold for five years, if the copyholder tandem vixerit, and he leases it for five years generally without limitation, this is a good execution, and pursuant to the licence; for the lease is determinable by his death, by a limitation in law; and therefore as much is implied by law, as if he had made an actual limitation. 1 Rol. Abr. 330, 331. Cro. Jac. 436. S. B.

The king may not give any one authority or licence to do any thing that is malum in se. 11 Rep. 86. See Licence.

Autumn, Is the decline of the summer. Award, (from the Fr. agard) Is the judgment and arbitration of one or more persons, at the request of two parties who are at variance, for ending the matter in dispute without public authority: and may be called an award, because it is imposed on both parties to be observed by them. Distum quod ad custodiendum seu observandum partibus imponitur. Spelm. An award may be by word, or in writing; but is usually in writing; and must be exactly according to the submission.

It must likewise be equal, certain, and final, and the performance of it must be possible and lawful.

If an award be according to the submission by bond, though it is void in law, if it be not observed, the obligation will be forfeited. 1 Danv. Abr. 515.

The submission to an award may be by bond, covenant, or by an assumpsit or promise; or without all this, by a bare agreement to refer the matter to such a person or persons. 10 Rep. 131. Dyer 270.

An award may be void in some part, and good in another part, if it makes an end of all the differences submitted; and if an award be good in part, and void in part, the good shall be performed. 10 Rep. 31. 2 Saund. 293. An award without a deed of submission, will be a good bar of a trespass. Danv. 548. But the delivery of the award in writing, under hand and seal, &c. must be pleaded, and be exactly replied to by the plaintiff, in action of debt on an award, or it will be ill on demurrer. Dyer 243. 2 Mod. 77, 78, 269. Debt on obligation to perform an award, which was, that the defendant should enjoy a house of which the plaintiff was lessee for years during the term, paying to the plaintiff 20s. yearly, and for non-payment of this the action was brought; and it was held to lie. 1 Cro. 211. If more is awarded than submitted, the award will be void; but when an award seems to extend to more than in the submission, the words de & super præmissis restrain it to the thing submitted. Cro. Eliz. 861. So if an award be made of any other thing than what is contained in the submission, it is void; for no acts are my own, or binding to me, unless done by me or by commission from me. Plow. 396. Dyer 242.

If arbitrators award to do an act to a stranger, this is good; for the stranger is put by the arbitrators in the place of the party, and they have power to award this act, since it is not impossible or unequal, and it is relating to the submission. Mo. 3, 359. 10 Co. 131. 3 Jac. 62. 1 Rol. Abr. 248. Hard. 46. 1 Leon. 316.

But an award that an act should be done by a stranger, is void; because he is not within the submission. Hard. 46.

If two submit to an award all actions, and the arbitrators award a release of all actions till the time of the award, some books have said, that this is void for the whole, because it extends to things partly in the submission and partly to things out of it, and it is one intire act; for say they, to do that act they are not obliged, because not within the submission; and to do an act relating only to things contained in the submission, is another act from what is awarded; others have said, that this is not void, unless there are shewn on the other side, causes of action arising between the time of making the award, otherwise none shall be intended; and then the release only relates to the things in submission. 10 Co. 131, 132. 1 Rol. Rep. 45, 162, 270. 1 Rol. Abr. 242. Cro. Eliz. 809. Cro. Jac. 353, 447. Popb. 137. 1 Sid. 365. 2 Mod. 169.

But it has been resolved, and seems now settled, that the act is not intire; for he may release all actions to the time of the submission; for though there is one deed of release awarded, yet that deed relates to several things that are dividable in their own nature one from another, and so it shall be good for what is in the submission, and void for the residue. 3 Lev. 188. 2 Mod. 169. 1 Salk. 74. 3 Lev. 413. 2 Lev. 3.

A submission is of all actions and demands, &c. though there be but one cause or matter between them, an award may be made for this: and where two things are submitted, and the award but of one, it is good, if the arbitrators have no further notice of the other; though if it be of three things, or some particulars, with a general clause of all other matters, in that case they must make the award for the things particularly named, without any other notice given. Dyer 216. 2 Cro. 130. Godb. 146.

If two submit all quarrels concerning tithes in a place certain, and the arbitrator awards that one shall pay to the other 20*l.* and the other should release to him all actions, this shall be intended all actions concerning tithes, unless the contrary appear on the other side, and the actions may be severed; and this shall be good for the acts in the submission, and void for the rest. Palm. 107. 1 Rol. Rep. 362. Cro. Jac. 66.

An award may be good, though made of less than is contained in the submission; as if the submission be of all actions, trespasses, demands and controversies, and the award be made of some only, this is good; for no more shall be supposed to be made known to the arbitrator: and if there be other causes of action in being, and they be made known to the arbitrator, they must be shewn on the other side; and this as well where the submission is conditional by ita quod, as where it is absolute; for the award being made de præmissis shall be supposed to settle all things. Hob. 49. 8 Co. 98. Cro. Jac. 278. 1 Sand. 32. 1 Brownl. 63. 2 Brownl. 310. 1 Sid. 12. Dyer 216, 242. Hard. 45.

If the submission be by divers persons, and the arbitrators award between some of them only, this is good; but if a submission is of certain things in special, with a proviso in the condition, that the award may be made of the premises, &c. by such a day, there the award must be made of all, or it will be void. 8 Rep. 79. Hob. 49. an award of all actions real, when the submission is of actions personal, is not good. Plowd. 306. 10 Rep. 132. Yet if the submission be of things personal, and the award is, that one of the parties shall do an act real, in satisfaction of a personal injury, &c. or a submission be of one thing, and the award made of something incident to, or necessarily depending upon it; or if the submission is of all actions real and personal, and the award only of matters personal, &c. it will be good in these cases; cases, if nothing else is notified to the arbitrators. Dyer 216.

Where the submission is general and conditional to end all controversies, an indictment for a battery is not a controversy between the parties, within the meaning of the submission, for that is the King's suit; and if the arbitrators award the ceasing of such a prosecution, it would be void, because it would be to obstruct justice. Resolved, Freem. Rep. 204. pl. 208.

A submission of all debts and demands, and a release of all judgments, actions and extents awarded, is a good award. 2 Sand. 190.

A submission of all matters between the plaintiff and another, and an award made of things that the party hath in right of his wife, is good; for these things are comprehended under the words all matters. 10 Hen. 6. 18. 3 Bulst. 65.

A submission of all injuries; an award of all debts, duties and trespasses, is a good award; for whatever is against law is an injury. 3 Bulst. 312, 313.

A submission of all actions now depending, and an award of all actions, good; for it is all intended actions depending. Cro. Eliz. 66, 858.

If there be a controversy between the parson and his parishioners, whether tithes shall be paid in year or not, and they submit all controversies, and the arbitrators award that they shall pay so much a year for tithes, this is good; for that was the debate on the award. 1 Rol. Abr. 254.

If the submission be of all controversies to the time of the submission, and the award be that one of them should deliver up an obligation made since the submission, in satisfaction of all matters, &c. this is good; because the bond is given only in satisfaction. 1 Rol. Abr. 246.

An award may be good, though part of it be made of a thing not within the submission; as if an award be to pay 1000*l.* and to procure a person to be bound to pay 22*l.* per ann. the plaintiff must lay the breach in not paying the 1000*l.* for as to the other part it is wholly void. See 1 Leon. 304, 305. Cro. Jac. 149. Poph. 134. 10 Co. 131. 5 Co. 78.

Awards likewise, as has been said, must be equal.

An award made only on one side, without any thing on the other, is void in law: as that one shall pay or give bond for money to the other party, and he do nothing for it; but if it be to give bond to pay, or to pay a debt, and that the other shall be discharged of the debt, &c. this is good: so where it is, that one party shall pay money to the other, and then the other shall release all actions to him. 8 Rep. 72, 98.

Thus in case of a trespass submitted, the arbitrators award that one shall pay the other 3*l.* this is void, because only on one side; for it is not said for what, and so the trespass is not discharged, and then the other party hath no advantage by the award; but if it were awarded de et super premissis, it would be well enough; likewise if the award had been that he shall pay 3*l.* for a trespass, it had been good, and yet one only was to do an act, but then the trespass by that award had been discharged. 1 Rol. Abr. 253, 254. Hob. 49.

Upon a submission of all trespasses, duties, and demands, the award was, that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff, in satisfaction of all trespasses done to him by the defendant before the day of the submission, so much. In debt upon this award defendant demurred to the declaration, and insisted that the award was void, it being of one side; for the plaintiff was to do nothing. But adjudged good; for by the payment of the money he is acquitted of all trespasses done to the plaintiff, and it is a good bar against him, and it shall not be intended that the arbitrators had notice that the defendant had any cause of action against the plaintiff, unless shewn on the defendant's part; and judgment for the plaintiff, Haughton hæstante. Cro. Jac. 354.

If an award be, that an obligor in a single obligation shall pay the debt, this is no award, unless it be provided that he be discharged; for payment in that case is no discharge. Hob. 49. pl. 55.

But if the award be, that she one shall pay 10*l.* for trespass, it is good; for a satisfaction implies a discharge, and that is the reason of the judgment in Bisspools case. Hob. 49.

If divers trespasses be referred to arbitrament, and the award is, that one of the parties shall make the other party amends, or give a release, and say not what amends, or what release, &c. it is void for uncertainty. 5 Rep. 78. March 18.

A naked award is no good plea in trespass, unless something be awarded to the plaintiff in amends; for if there be no trespass there is nothing about which an award can be made; and if there be one, and they do not award satisfaction, they do not act according to the design of their institution, for they are not indifferent, and so there is no good award. 1 Brownl. 63. Cro. Eliz. 904. 1 Rol. Abr. 251.

If an award be to pay so much money in discharge of all actions, a release shall be intended to be awarded, unless the contrary be shewn on the other side. 2 Rol. Rep. 1.

A submission to award was of all matters in controversy by rule of court; and award was made, that so much money should be paid on one side, and nothing was awarded of the other side; and moved to set it aside as being an award only ex parte. Per Holt, The common exceptions against an award will not hold here, it being an award upon submission by rule of court; for tho' there be no release awarded of one side, yet the submission was of all matters in controversy; and we will not grant an attachment before they tender a release; for if one comes to have aid of the court, he shall do that which is fair and equitable before he has it. 12 Mod. 234.

Award was, that each party should give to the other a general release of all demands; provided, that if either of them dislike the award within twenty days after made, and within that time pay 10*s.* the arbitrament to be void: it was held that the first part of the award was good, and the proviso repugnant and void.

As an award is in nature of a judgment, it ought to be wholly decisive, for if it doth not determine the matter, it becomes a new controversy; therefore if the arbitrators award a bond for quiet enjoyment of lands, without appointing a certain sum, this is a void award, and the party is not obliged to give bond to the value of the land; for then the sense of the award must be supplied by averment; now if it hath the credit of a judgment, there can be no interpretation made of the award, but by the words of the award itself; for if it receives its meaning from any matters out of the award, the mind of the arbitrators is only guess at, and not express'd; but the parties intended to be obliged only by what the arbitrators themselves declare to be their award, and the bond to be according to the value, they cannot assign their power to any person to assess the value. 5 Co. 77. Cro. Eliz. 432. 1 Rol. Abr. 263. Moor 359. 1 Rol. Rep. 271. Dyer 242. Telv. 78.

An award was to pay money, but express'd no place where it should be paid. Resolved, that in law this should have a reasonable construction, and the party ought to have a reasonable time for the payment; but Foster conceived it not good, because in such case the bond of submission would be immediately forfeited, as there was neither time nor place where the money should be paid; but in answer to this were cited 3 H. 7. and 16 E. 4, where it is said, that if an arbitrator awards that one party shall pay so much such a day, and keeps the award in his pocket till the day be past, yet the bond shall not be forfeited; and so it was adjudged by all the other justices. 2 Brownl. 211.

If the condition of an obligation be to submit to an award all controversies between A. and B. and an award is made that A. shall permit B. to enjoy certain leases of lands purchased from J. S. and that B. shall pay the rents, and perform the covenants, and deliver to A. a true copy of the leases, and pay the arrears to the time of the purchase from J. S. this is a good award as to the rents and covenants, though not particularly specified; for it is true, an award is to be interpreted by its own words, and not by any matter out of the award which doth not appear in the words; but when the words of an award award have relation to things certain out of the award, these things may be averred; for that is the express mind of the arbitrators, which they have expressly referred to; but as to the arrears the award is void, because they have not referred to any matter that falls within the cognizance of B. for he cannot compel A. or J. S. to set the time of the purchase; and an award of what cannot be certainly done is not a certain determination. 1 Rol. Abr. 264.

An award may be good for part only, but then it must be final as to that part. 19 Hen. 6. 30. 8 Ed. 4. 10.

An award that all suits shall cease is a final award; so an award that one of the parties shall not sue an obligation; for this amounts to an extinguishment of the debt. An award that a suit in chancery shall be dismissed, is a final award; so if the arbitrators award a retraxit, or an award that one shall not prosecute nor proceed in such a term, seems to be good; but an award that one of the parties shall be nonsuit is not good, because the party may begin again, so that each party shall discontinue their actions which they have against each other; for this is not a final determination. 2 Mod. 227. 1 Lev. 58. 1 Rol. Abr. 54. 1 Salk. 75. 6 Mod. 282.

When the arbitrators award a thing not submitted, with a reservation to themselves of a future power of judging of the matter, and they award a thing within the submission, this is good for the thing within the submission; for as to that it is final, and void for the residue. Palm. 146. Cro. Jac. 315, 584.

If they arbitrate that all controversies shall cease, except that concerning one bond, this is final; for as to the bond, they arbitrate that it shall continue in force. Cro. Jac. 277, 400.

A conditional award not good, because not final to determine matters in difference; the same law where any thing is referred to the arbitrator's future judgment or exposition. 1 Sid. 59. Cro. Jac. 508. Hob. 218. Palm. 110.

An award to give such a release as counsel, &c. should advise, is good, for this is only a ministerial, and not a judicial act. Style 219.

An award to pay all costs which should be taxed by a prothonotary, &c. not good, because not final. Sid. 358.

The performance of what is awarded likewise must be possible and lawful.

If the arbitrators award a thing impossible ex natura rei, it is void; as if they award a sum of money to be paid at a day past, it is void. 8 Ed. 4. 1. b. But if they award a thing which cannot be done, but is not in the nature of the act itself contradictory or repugnant; this may be a good award; for there is no contrivance to be made of the award, but by the words thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 248.

An award to levy a fine is good; for though it is an act of the court, yet by the law and publick justice of the kingdom, it is not to be refused to any man; but if the award be to command the justices to do it, this is no good award; for the parties in effect pray leave to agree from the King himself, which is quite different from the nature of a command. 1 Rol. Abr. 249.

An award to pay so much apud domum J. S. good; for he is not bound to pay it in the house, but as near as he can to it, or it shall be intended a common inn; and if the party will not let him pay there, it has been said that the endeavour is sufficient; for they cannot award anything that will make the party a trespasser. 1 Rol. Abr. 249. 1 Rol. Rep. 6. Cro. Car. 226. 2 Bulst. 39. 3 Lev. 153. An award that one of the parties shall do a thing out of his power, as to deliver up a deed which is in the custody of J. S. is void; agreed per cur. 12 Mod. 585. If an arbitrator awards a thing against law, this is void. 1 Rol. Abr. 249. And a party is not to be made a judge in his own cause by award. 1 Salk. 71. Where a thing is to be done on payment of money, a tender of the money is as much as an actual payment. Mod. Caf. 33. Action of debt may be brought for money adjudged to be paid by arbitrators, declaring on the award; and also action of debt upon the bond for not performing the award. Brownl. 55.

With respect to pleading awards in bar, there is a difference between an accord with satisfaction and an award; for in an accord a man must plead present satisfaction, and it is no plea in bar to plead an accord with satisfaction at a day to come; for in all personal injuries the law gives damages as an equivalent; and when the party accepts of an equivalent, there is no injury or cause of complaint, and therefore a present satisfaction is a good plea; but where the wrong-doer promises a future satisfaction, the injury continues till satisfaction is made, and consequently there is a cause of complaint in being; and if the trespass were now barred by this plea, he can have no remedy for the future satisfaction, for that supposes the injury still to have continuance; but where persons submit to arbitration, the arbitrators are judges of the injury; and if they award money payable at a day to come, that is a good award, and may be a good plea in bar to an action of trespass brought in the mean time, because this thereby becomes the immediate debt attainable by law. 5 Ed. 4. 7. Plowd. 5. b.

A man cannot plead generally the award performed, but he ought to set forth the award, and shew how he hath performed it. Moor 3. p. 9. In pleading a countermand to a submission to arbitrate, it need not be alledged, that the party gave notice to the arbitrators, for without that it is no countermand, and therefore if no notice be given, issue may be joined upon the point quod non retractavit. 8 Co. 82. If the submission be by word, though the award be by deed, the party may wage his law; for though a deed cannot be dissolved without deed, yet a verbal contract may be dissolved by word only: and this in its original is a verbal contract. Co. Lit. 295. 2 Sand. 65.

Arbitrators are to make their award secundum allegata & probata, but they may not injoin any oath to the witnesses: the award ought to be published; and no one is bound to perform till he can know what the award is. 4 Rep. 82. Brownl. 311. A submission to award may be revoked and countermanded, before the award made; where there is no specialty to abide the award of J. S. &c. 8 Rep. 8. By Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13. Submissions to awards, by agreement of the parties, may be made a rule of any of his majesty's courts of record; and on a rule of court thereupon, the parties shall be finally concluded by such arbitrament: and in case of disobedience thereto, the party refusing to perform the same, shall be subject to the penalties of contemning a rule of court, &c. unless it appears on oath that such award was unduly procured, when it shall be set aside: but this statute extends only to personal matters, for which there is no other remedy but by personal action, or by suit in equity. Attachment lies for non-performance of an award made a rule of court; after personal demand of performance. 1 Salk. 83. In making a submission to an award a rule of the court of Chancery, which the parties may agree to, it must be done pursuant to the act of parliament; and the method is to move that court, to confirm the award, upon the Master's report: though if there be such submission to a reference, and the award made is to be confirmed by decree, without appeal; yet exceptions may be taken thereto. 2 Vern. 109. See 1 Mod. 21. And vide Arbitrator.

Form of an Award on a Submission.

TO all people to whom this present writing indented of award shall come greeting. Whereas there are several accounts depending, and divers controversies and disputes have lately arisen between A. B. of, &c. gent. and C. D. of, &c. all which controversies and disputes are chiefly touching and concerning, &c. And whereas for the putting an end to the said differences and disputes, they the said A. B. and C. D. by their several bonds or obligations bearing date, &c. are become bound each to the other of them in the penal sum of &c. to stand to, and abide the award and final determination of us E. F. G. H. &c. so as the said award be made in writing, and ready to be delivered to the parties in difference on or before, &c. next, as by the said obligations, and the conditions thereof may appear. Now know ye, That we the said arbitrators, whose names are hereunto subscribed, and seals affixed, taking upon us the burthen of the said award, and having fully examined and duly considered the proofs and allegations of both the said parties, do for the settling settling amity and friendship between them, make and publish this our award, by and between the said parties in manner following, that is to say; Imprimis, We do award and order, that all actions, suits, quarrels and controversies whatsoever had, moved, arisen or depending between the said parties in law or equity for any manner of cause whatsoever, touching the said, &c. to the day of the date hereof, shall cease and be no further prosecuted, and that each of the said parties shall pay and bear his own costs and charges, in any wise relating to, or concerning the said premises. And we do also award and order that the said A. B. shall pay, or cause to be paid to the said C. D. the sum of, &c. within the space of, &c. And also at his own costs and charges do, &c. And further we do award and order that the said C. D. shall pay or cause to be paid, to the said A. B. the sum of, &c. on or before, &c. or give sufficient security for the same to the said A. B. &c. And we do award and order that, &c. And lastly, we do award and order that the said A. B. and C. D. on the receipt of the several sums, &c. abovementioned, shall in due form of law execute each to the other of them general releases, sufficient for the releasing by each to the other of them, his executors and administrators, of all actions, suits, arrests, quarrels, controversies and demands whatsoever touching or concerning the premises aforesaid, or any matter or thing thereunto relating, from the beginning of the world until the day of, &c. last. In witness, &c.

Awme, or anme, (Teut. ohn, i. e. cadus vel mensura) A measure of Rhenish wine, containing forty gallons; mentioned in the statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 33. and 12 Car. 2. c. 4. This word is otherwise called awame, as you may read in a very old printed book.—The rood of Rhenish wine of Dordrecht is ten awmes, and every awme fifty gallons. The rood of Antwerp is fourteen awmes, and every awme thirty-five gallons. By this account it contains different quantities in several countries.

Axe and Axen, Comes from the Saxon verb axian, to demand, and from hence we have our English word ask. In Somersetshire, and some other counties of England, in the country dialect the word axe is made use for ask.

Axel, and besaicl, A writ that lies for an heir dispossessed of his inheritance left by his grandfather, or great grandfather, &c. See aile.

Azaldus, Signifies a poor horse or jade.—Affri, azaldi, & alii equi valoris, &c. Claus. 4 Ed. 3.

B.

Baca, A hook or link of iron, or staple.—In axibus emptis & carrellis exandis novem denarios in colariis, bacis & sellis ad idem emptis xlii den.—Consuetudin. domus de Farendon, MS. penes Wh. Kennet, f. 20.

Baccinium, or bacina, A basin or vessel to hold water to wash the hands.—Non topeta, non mountergia, non bacinia, & nil omnino per violentiam exigatur. Simeon Dunelm. anno 1126. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 191.—Petrus filius Petri Picot tenet medietatem Heydenæ per serjantiam serviendi de bacinis.—This was a service of holding the basin, or waiting at the basin, on the day of the king's coronation. Lib. Rub. Scaccar. f. 137.

Bachelor, The commonalty as distinguished from baronage.—Festivitate S. Edmundi Regis & Confessoris, in quindenam S. Michaelis apud Westmonasterium, per dominum regem regaliter celebrato communitas bacheloriarum Anglie significavit domino Edwardo filio regis, &c. Annal. Burton. p. 426. sub an. 1259.

Bachelors, (baccalarius, from the Fr. bachelier, viz. tyro, a learner :) In the universities there are bachelors of arts, &c. which is the first degree taken by students, before they come to greater dignity. And those that are called bachelors of the companies of London, are such of each company, as are springing towards the estate of those that are employed in council, but as yet are inferiors; for every of the twelve companies consist of a master, two wardens, the livery, (which are assistants in matters of council, or such as the assistants are chosen out of) and the bachelors. The word bachelor is used 13 R. 2. and signifies the same with knight-bachelor. By 3 E. 4. c. 5. it is a simple knight, and not knight banneret, or Knight of the Bath.

Anno 28 E. 3. a petition was recorded in the Tower, beginning thus: A nostre Seigneur le Roy monstrent votre simple bachelor, Johan de Bures, &c. Bachelor was anciently attributed to the admiral of England, if he were under a baron. In Pat. 8 R. 2. we read of a baccalarius regis. And touching the further etymology of this word, baccalarei (teste Renano) a bacillo nominati sunt, quia primi studii auctoritatem quæ per exhibitionem baculi concedebatur jam consecuti fuissent, &c.

Bachberinde, (Sax.) Signifieth bearing upon the back, or about a man. Brañon useth it for a sign or circumstance of theft apparent, which the Civilians call furtum manifestum; for, dividing furtum into manifestum & non manifestum, he defineth the former thus; furtum vero manifestum est, ubi latro deprehensus est seistus de aliquo latrocinio, scil. handhabend, & bacherind, & infecutus fuerit per aliquem cujus res illa fuerit. Brañt. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 32. Manwood remarks it as one of the four circumstances or cases, wherein a forester may arrest the body of an offender against vert or venison in the forest: by the assise of the forest of Lancaster (says he) taken with the manner, is when one is found in the king's forest in any of these four degrees, stable-stand, dog-draw, backbear, and bloody-band. Manw. 2 part, Forest Laws.

Bacille, A candlestick properly so called, when formerly made ex baculo of wood, or a stick. Hugo episcopus Dunelmensis fecit in ecclesia coram altari tria ex argente bacilla, in quibus lumina die noctuque perpetuo ardentia lucerent. Clodingham Hist. Dunelm apud Wartoni Ang. Sac. p. 1723.

Badger, (from the Fr. bagage, a bundle, and thence is derived bagagier, a carrier of goods) Signifies with us one that buys corn or victuals in one place, and carries them to another to sell and make profit by them: and such a one is exempted in the Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. from the punishment of an ingrosser within that statute. But by 5 Eliz. c. 12. badgers are to be licensed by the justices of peace in the sessions; whose licences will be in force for one year, and no longer; and the persons to whom granted must enter into a recognizance that they will not by colour of their licences forestall, or do any thing contrary to the statutes made against forestallers, ingrossers, and regrators. If any person shall act as a badger without licence, he is to forfeit 5*l.* one moiety to the king, and the other to the prosecutor, leviable by warrant from justices of peace, &c. Vide 13 El. c. 25. f. 20.

Bag, An uncertain quantity of goods and merchandize, from three to four hundred. Lex Mercat.

Bagavel, The citizens of Exeter had granted to them by charter from K. Edw. 1. a collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all manner of wares brought to that city to be sold, towards the paving of the streets, repairing of the walls, and maintenance of the city, which was commonly called in old English begavel, betbugavel, and chippinggavel. Antiq. of Exetef.

Bahadum, A chest or coffer; it is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2. c. 21.

Bajardour. (Lat. bajulator) A bearer of any weight or burden.—Offerebant duos incisores in sua lapidina, & cariagium petræ usque ad navim, & de navis usque duos bajardours servituros ad ecclesiam. Petr. Bles. Contin. Hist. Croylond, p. 120.

Bail, ballium, (from the Fr. bailier, which comes of the Greek βάλλω, and signifies to deliver into hands) is used in our Common law for the freeing or setting at liberty of one arrested or imprisoned upon any action, either civil or criminal, on surety taken for his appearance at a day and place certain. Brañt. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 8. The reason why it is called bail, is because by this means the party restrained is delivered into the hands of those that bind themselves for his forthcoming, in order to a safe keeping or protection from prison: and the end of bail is to satisfy the condemnation and costs, or render the defendant to prison.

With respect to bail in civil cases it is to be observed, that there is both common and special bail: common bail is in actions of small concernment, being called common, because any sureties in that case are taken; whereas in causes of greater weight, as actions upon bonds, or specialty, &c. where the debt amounts to 10*l.* Special bail or surety must be taken, such as subsidy men at least, and they according to the value. 4 Inst. 179. For common bail fictitious names only are now used.

By Stat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 9. Sheriffs, &c. are to let to bail persons by them arrested by force of any writ, in any personal action, &c. upon reasonable sureties, having sufficient within the county to keep their days in such place, &c. as the writs require. And the Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 2. (36.) provides against excessive bail.

By the Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. None shall be held to special bail on process out of any superior court, where the cause of action doth not amount to 10*l.* or upwards; nor out of any inferior court where it doth not amount to 40*s.* Affidavit is to be made of the cause of action, and filed before some judge, or commissioner of the court whence the writ issues, or before the officer issuing it, and the sum specified in the affidavit indorsed on the back of the writ; for which sum bail shall be taken, and no more: and if there be no such affidavit and indorsement, the defendant shall not be arrested by his body, &c. Vide 21 Geo. 2. c. 3.

In actions of battery, trespass, slander, &c. though the plaintiff is like to recover large damages, special bail is not to be had, unless by order of court, and the process is marked for special bail: nor is it required in actions of account, or of covenant, except it be to pay money; nor against heirs or executors, &c. for the debt of the testator, unless they have wasted the testator's goods. 1 Danv. Abr. 681.

Neither is an executor, administrator or heir, upon the removal of a cause out of an inferior court, obliged to put in bail. 2 Lev. 204. 1 Sid. 418. 1 Lev. 945, 268. 2 Jones 82. 1 Salk. 98. S. P. cont. Lit. Rep. 81.

But if there be a devastavit suggested, which can only be on an action of debt on a judgment, they must find special bail. 1 Lev. 145. 1 Sid. 63. 1 Salk. 98.

An attorney, or other officer, whose attendance is required in the court to which he belongs, shall not be held to special bail. 1 Mod. 10. Unless at the suit of an attorney of another court.

If baron and feme are sued, the husband must put in bail for both, but if the husband does not appear upon the arrest, the wife must file common bail before she can be discharged; for otherwise the plaintiff could not proceed to obtain judgment. Goldf. 127. Cro. Eliz. 370. Cro. Jac. 445. Style 475. 1 Mod. 8. 6 Mod. 17, 105.

In all actions brought in B. R. upon any penal law, the defendant is to put in but common bail. Yelv. 53. In actions where damages are uncertain, bail is to be at the discretion of the court: on a dangerous assault and battery, upon affidavit of special damages, a judge's hand may be procured for allowance of an ac etiam in the writ: and in action of scandalum magnatum the court on motion ordered special bail. Raym. 74. Special bail is ordered, by rule of court, in all causes of removal, whether by habeas corpus, writ of privilege, certiorari, &c. except where the defendant is sued as executor or administrator: and a caveat is to be entered with the judges for good bail. And when bail is taken by the chief justice, or other judge on a habeas corpus, the bail taken in the inferior court is dismissed; though the last bail be not filed presently, nor till the next term. Yelv. 120, 121. Yet it has been held, where a cause is removed out of an inferior court by habeas corpus, if the bail below offer themselves to be bail above, they shall be taken, not being excepted against below, unless the cause comes out of London. For the sufficiency of the bail there is at the peril of the clerk, and he is responsible to the plaintiff; so that the plaintiff had not the liberty of excepting against them, and the clerk is not responsible for their deficiency in the court above, though he was in London. 1 Salk. 97.

In London, 'tis said, special bail is to be given in action of account, &c. But on removal by habeas corpus into B. R. that court will accept common bail. 2 Keb. 404.

There is not only bail to appear, &c. on writs of error; but also in audita querela, a recognisance of bail must be acknowledged; and upon a writ of attaint, to prosecute, &c. Jenk. Cent. 129.

By the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. No execution shall be delayed by any writ of error or superfedeas thereupon, for the reverting of any judgment; unless such person in whose name such writ shall be brought, with two sufficient sureties, shall first, before such stay made, or superfedeas awarded, be bound unto the party for whom any such judgment is or shall be given, in double the sum adjudged, to prosecute the writ of error with effect; and also to satisfy the debt, damages, and costs adjudged, &c.

Note; by the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 8. When a writ of error is brought on a judgment had upon a bond to pay money (only) there special bail ought to be given; and after a year a scire facias ought to precede the levari, or feri facias. 11 Mod. 2.

If a cause removed from an inferior court, be remanded back by certiorari to the same term, the original bail in the inferior court are chargeable, but not if remanded in another term. 2 Cro. 363. One in execution in custody of the marshal of B. R. is not compellable to find bail, if another action be brought against him. But if he be in the prison of the Fleet in execution, on action brought in B. R. he must be removed into the custody of the marshal of that court, or put in bail to the action. Trin. 24 Car. B. R. One taken on a writ of execution is not bailable by law; except an audita querela be brought: but where a writ of error is brought and allowed, if the defendant be not in execution, there shall not be an execution awarded against him, at the request of the bail, though he be present in court. 1 Nelf. Abr. 331. The bail ought not to join with the principal, nor the principal with the bail, in a writ of error to reverse the judgment against either. 2 Cro. 295.

On capias ad satisfaciendum against the defendant returned non est inventus, scire facias is to issue against the bail, or an action may be brought. Where a defendant renders his body in discharge of the bail, the plaintiff is by the rules of the court to make his choice of proceeding in execution, whether he will charge body, goods, or lands. 1 Lill. 183. And if the principal after judgment renders not himself in discharge of his bail, it is at the election of the plaintiff to take out execution either against him or proceed against his bail: but if he takes the bail in execution, though he hath not full satisfaction, he shall never after take the principal; and if the principal be taken, he may not after meddle with the bail.

Where two are bail, although one be in execution, the plaintiff may take the other. 2 Cro. 320. 2 Bulst. 68. If a principal render himself, and there is none to require his commitment, the court is ex officio to commit him; and if the plaintiff refuse him, he shall be discharged, and an entry made of it upon the record. Moor, cas. 1249. A defendant having rendered himself to discharge the bail, and prayed entry of it; the court asked the plaintiff if he would have execution of his body, and he said no: the bail was discharged. 1 Leon. 59. See Hob. 210. There must be an exoneratur entered, to discharge the bail. If the defendant dies before a capias ad satisfaciendum against him returned and filed, the bail will be discharged. 1 Lill. 177. On the death of the principal, 'tis impossible for the bail to bring in his body: and the bail stand engaged that the principal shall render himself, which must be intended upon process awarded against him in his life time. 1 Nelf. 328.

The bail upon a writ of error cannot render the party in their discharge; because they are bound in a recognisance that the party shall prosecute the writ of error with effect, and pay the money if judgment be affirmed. 1 Lill. Abr. 173. Before a scire facias taken out against bail, the principal may render his body in discharge of the bail: and if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the second sci. fac. against them, they shall be discharged. 1 Roll. Abr. 250. 1 Lill. 471. Antiently tiently the bail were to bring in the principal upon the first scire fac. or it would not be allowed. 3 Balk. 182. If bail surrender the principal at or before the return of the second scire facias, it is good, although there be not immediate notice of it to the plaintiff; and if through want of notice, he is at further charge against the bail, that shall not vitiate the surrender, but the bail shall not be delivered till they pay such charges: if at any time after the return of the capias, the bail surrender the principal at a judge's chamber, and he thereupon is committed to the tipstaff, from whom he escapes, &c. this will not be a good surrender; but if it be before or on a capias returned, it is otherwise, the one being an indulgence, and the other matter of right. Mod. Caf. 238. When a person makes his escape out of prison, and is retaken and bailed; the bail shall be discharged on a writ to the sheriff commanding him to keep the prisoner in discharge of the bail. Stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 6. Sec. 3. The judges of the courts at Westminster have power by statute to appoint commissioners in every county to take recognisances of bail, in causes depending in their courts; and to make such rules for justifying the bail as they shall think fit, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 4.

The commissioners are to take bail, but are obliged by rule of court to keep a book wherein are the names of the plaintiff, defendant, and bail, and the person who transmits the same, and who makes affidavit that the recognisance was duly acknowledged in his presence: on such affidavit the judges make a conditional allocatur, and the bail are to stand absolute, unless the plaintiff excepts against them within twenty days, and if he excepts, the bail may justify by affidavit before the commissioners in the country. Gilb. H. C. B. 32.

If a defendant puts in bail by a wrong name, the proceedings shall nevertheless be good; for otherwise every man impleaded, may give a false name to his attorney by which he will be bailed, and then plead it in arrest of judgment. Goldsb. 138. But it hath been held, that if the bail be entered in one name, and the declaration and all the proceedings are by a contrary name, it will be erroneous. 1 Cro. 223. So if there is bail, and the bail be taken off the file, the plaintiff is without remedy: though a habeas corpus and bail-piece were lost in B. R. new ones were ordered to be made out. Style 261.

Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 26. enacts, That it is felony without benefit of clergy to acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, any bail in the name of other person not privy or consenting thereto, provided that it shall not corrupt the blood, or take away dower.

Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 4. s. 4. enacts, That any person representing or personating another before commissioners appointed to take bail, shall be adjudged guilty of felony.

Special bail, which is taken before a judge, or by commissioners in the country, when accepted, is to be filed; after twenty days notice given of putting in special bail before a judge, on a cepi corpus, if there be no exception, the bail shall be filed in four days. 1 Lill. Abr. 174. Upon a cepi corpus twenty days are allowed to except against the bail: so on a writ of error; and you need not give notice; but you cannot take out execution without giving a four days rule to put in better bail: in all other cases, notice must be given. Upon a habeas corpus, eight and twenty days are appointed to except against the bail, and after that, if it be not excepted against, it shall be filed in four days. 1 Salk. 98.

As to putting in common bail, or entering a common appearance, vide the books of practice by Richardson or Harrison.

The exception to bail put in before a judge, must be entered in the bail book, at the judge's chambers at the side of the bail there put in, after this manner: I do except against this bail, A. B. attorn. for the plaintiff. And if there be no such exception, the defendant's attorney may take the bail-piece from the judge's chamber, and file it. Bail is not properly such until it is filed, when it is of record: but it shall be accounted good, till the same is questioned and disallowed. When cognitors of bail are questioned, they are to justify themselves in open court, by oath of their abilities; or before one of the judges of the court; or by affidavit before commissioners who took the bail.

Bail cannot be justified before a judge in his chamber, except it be by consent, or for necessity in vacation; but in the latter case they ought to be justified again in term, and upon that the defendant is compelled to accept a declaration to go to trial at the assizes, if it be an issuable term; and upon putting in bail, it is not enough to give notice of their being put in, but it ought to be of their names, places of abode, and trade or vocation, that the plaintiff may know how to enquire after them; and after exception to bail there is no set time to justify, or change them for better, but it must be in convenient time. 6 Mod. 24, 25.

It being doubtful whether Sunday should be reckoned as one day in notice to justify bail, it was determined per cur. that for the future Sunday shall not be counted one, (it not being a proper day to enquire after bail) but two days notice must be given, of which Sunday shall not be one; upon motion for defendant to justify bail, notice was served Saturday June 23, to justify bail Monday 25; the notice being insufficient, the bail was not suffered to justify. Notes in C. B. 220.

The court may adjudge bail sufficient, when the plaintiff will not accept of it. Also the court on motion, or a judge at his chamber, will order a common appearance to be taken, when special bail is not required, on affidavit made by the defendant of the smallness of the debt due, &c. The putting in of a declaration, and the acceptance of it by the defendant's attorney with the privacy of the plaintiff's attorney, is an acceptance of the bail. If a plaintiff accepts of an assignment of the bail bond, and the defendant puts in the same bail that were put in to the sheriff at the return of the writ, the plaintiff cannot except against them; but 'tis otherwise where he hath not taken an assignment. Farrell. Mod. Caf. 62. When a sheriff hath taken good bail of the defendant, he will on a rule return a cepi, and assign the bail bond to the plaintiff, which may be done by indorsement without stamp; so as it be stamped before action brought thereupon; and then the defendant and bail may be sued on the bond, by the plaintiff in his own name, i. e. as assignee of the sheriff. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. But if the plaintiff takes an assignment of the bail-bond, though the bail is insufficient, the court will not amerce the sheriff. 1 Salk. 99. By the antient practice, a bail-bond could not be put in suit till a rule was had to amerce the sheriff, for not having the body at the return of the writ; and the course now is, to stay proceedings on the bail-bond, if there is no return of a cepi corpus. Mod. Caf. 229. 3 Salk. 57. In case the defendant doth not put in bail, the attorney for the plaintiff is to call on the sheriff for his return of the writ; and so proceed to an attachment against the sheriff. If on a cepi corpus no bail is returned, a rule will be made out to bring in the defendant's body. Though a defendant, with leave of the court, may deposit money in court instead of bail; and in such case the plaintiff shall be ordered to waive other bail. Lill. Abr. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. Bail to the action is to be taken before none but a judge of the court; but for appearance may be before any officer, and if it be illegally taken, it will not oblige one as bail. 2 Cro. 94. It is said bail are liable to all actions of the plaintiff the same term wherein they shall declare against the defendant; yet where an attorney appeared for one in the King's Bench, and special bail was entered for his client to that action; it was agreed, that the bail is not bound to stand bail to all other actions that shall be declared in against the party in the by: but the attorney is obliged to appear for him in all such actions, and to put in common bail. Style 464.

If more damages, &c. are recovered than mentioned in the plaint, or than the sum wherein the bail is bound, the bail will not be liable. 1 Salk. 102. So where a declaration is laid in another county, when the original is sued out in London, and bail put in there upon it. 3 Lev. 235. Contra where the suit is by latitat. An order of court was made anno 22 Car. 2. That in case of bail, if the recovery be for a larger sum than in the scutiam, the bail shall not be chargeable at all: but by a late late order, bail is answerable for any less sum which the plaintiff shall recover. Ord. Pasch. 5 Geo. 2. A bail cannot be a witness for the defendant at the trial; but the court, on motion, will discharge the bail, upon giving other sufficient bail. Wood's Inst. 582. Bail-pieces are written on a small square piece of parchment, with the corners cut off at the bottom. A special bail-piece is in the following form: and all the difference between a special bail-piece and a common one is, that in the former the real names of the bail, with their additions, are inserted; whereas in the latter the fictitious names of John Doe and Richard Roe are inserted.

At the suit of C. D.

As to bail for crimes, at Common law bail was allowed for all offences except murder. 2 Inst. 190. And if the party accused could find sufficient sureties, he was not to be committed to prison; for all persons might be bailed till convicted of the offence. 2 Inst. 186. But by statute it was after enacted, that in case of homicide the offender should not be bailed: and by our statutes, murderers, outlaws, house-burners, thieves openly defamed, &c. are not bailable; but where persons are guilty of larceny, are accessories to felony, or guilty of light suspicion, they may be admitted to bail. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 15.

One indicted and found guilty of the death of a man by misadventure, as by casting a stone over a house, and by chance killing a man, woman, or child, is not bailable. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5. cites 3 Ed. 3. Corone 354.

So if one indicted be found guilty of the death of a man se defendendo, he ought not by law to be bailed; for according to Bracon's rule, invenientur culpabiles. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5.

One indicted of conspiracy, viz. that he with others conspired falsely to indict another of murder or felony, by means whereof he was indicted, and afterwards convicted, shall not be bailed. Coke of Bail, &c. cap. 5. and says, that this was the resolution of all the judges, upon the question demanded by King Ed. III. himself, as appears 27 Aff. 1.

One indicted for burglary may be bailed. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5. cites 29 Aff. 44.

One indicted or appeal'd of robbery may be bailed. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5.

One indicted or appeal'd of rape may be bail'd: yet that was no felony at Common law, till the Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 34. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5.

If one be appeal'd by an approver, and be of good and honest fame, he may be bailed during the life of the approver. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5.

One indicted for putting out eyes, or cutting out of tongues, may be bailed. Coke of Bail, &c. c. 5.

Roll Ch. J. said, he doubted whether one indicted of perjury may be bailed, tho' the clerks of the criminal side said he might. Sty. 368.

One committed by the council of state and the parliament, for publishing a seditious pamphlet, was denied to be bailed. Sty. 397.

One indicted on suspicion of robbery was outlawed, and taken on the outlawry, and brought writ of error, and being brought to B. R. by habeas corpus, prayed to be bailed, and took two exceptions to the indictment; 1st, That he was in prison, and knew nothing of the outlawry;

2dly, That the charge is too general, and no-body prosecutes; but per Roll Ch. J. He cannot be bailed. Sty. 418. But see 4 & 5 H. & M. c. 18. which enacts, that persons outlawed, except for treason or felony, may appear by attorney and reverse the same without bail; except special bail shall be ordered by the court: and that persons arrested upon any capias utlagatum, except for treason or felony, may be discharged by an attorney's engagement to appear: and in cases where special bail is required, the sheriff may take bond with sureties.

One charged with buggery is not bailable; per Holt Ch. J. 12 Mod. 435.

It was doubted, whether persons committed by rule of court are intitled to the benefit of the habeas corpus act; and it was resolved by two judges, viz. Eyre and Fortescue, (absente Powis & dissentiente Pratt) that none are intitled to make their prayer, but such as are committed by warrant of a justice of peace, or secretary of state, and not those committed by rule of court; for that is not in the meaning of the act of parliament, (a commitment by warrant.) 10 Mod. 429.

But in the late case of Bingley, he was brought before a judge of B. R. and bailed.—And the judges never denied him an habeas corpus, when applied for, though a person under such circumstances, on obtaining habeas corpus might perhaps be remanded.

Having thus briefly shewn what criminals are bailable, it remains to consider by whom they may be bailed.

By the Common law the sheriff might bail persons arrested on suspicion of felony, or for other offence bailable; but he hath lost this power by the Stat. 1 Ed. 4. c. 22. Justices of peace may let to bail persons suspected of felony, or others bailable, until the next sessions: though where persons are arrested for manslaughter or felony, being bailable by law, they are not to be let to bail by justices of peace but in open sessions, or where two justices (quorum unus) are present; and the same is to be certified with the examination of the offender, and the accusers bound over to prosecute, &c. 3 H. 7. 1 & 2 P. & M. If a person be dangerously wounded, the offender may be bailed till the person is dead; but 'tis usual to have assurance from some skilful surgeon, that the party is like to do well. 2 Inst. 186. A man arrested and imprisoned for felony, being bailable, shall be bailed before it appears whether he is guilty or not; but when convicted, or if on examination he confesseth the felony, he cannot be bailed. 4 Inst. 178. For where in manslaughter, felony, &c. it is certainly known that the party did it, he ought not to be bailed.

It is to be observed, that the Stat. West. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 15. above mentioned, doth not extend to the judges of B. R. &c. only to sheriffs and other inferior officers. H. P. C. 98, 99.—Likewise, Justices of gaol-delivery not being within the restraint of the statute of Westm. 1. may bail persons convicted before them of homicide by misadventure, or self-defence, the better to enable them to purchase their pardon. Crompt. 154. a. H. P. C. 101. F. N. B. 246. S. P. C. 15.

Also it seems that in discretion they may bail a person convicted before them of manslaughter, upon special circumstances, as if the evidence against him were slight, or if he had purchased his pardon. H. P. C. 101. Crompt. 153.

The court of B. R. bails in all cases, and may bail murder, &c. If a man is found guilty of murder by the coroner's inquest, yet B. R. may bail him; for they may examine into the depositions taken by the coroner. 1 Salk. 104. But if a criminal be indicted of murder, the court will not bail him, though upon affidavits of evidence which might discharge the prosecution: nor when a person is found guilty of any crime by the grand jury, because they cannot have notice of what evidence was before the jury, which by their oath they are obliged to conceal. 1 Salk. 104. And

Here it must be observed, that with respect to the nature of the offence, although this court is not tied down by the rules prescribed by the stat. of Westm. 1. yet it will in discretion pay a due regard to those rules, and not admit a person to bail who is expressly declared to be irrepleviable, replevisable, without some particular circumstances in his favour. 2 Inst. 185, 186, 189. H. P. C. 104. 1 Salk. 61. 3 Bulst. 113. 2 Hawk. P. C. 113, 114. 5 Mod. 454.

And therefore if a person be attainted of felony, or convicted thereof by verdict general or special, or notoriously guilty of treason or manslaughter, &c. by his own confession or otherwise, he is not to be admitted to bail without some special motive to induce the court to grant it. Kelynge 90. Dyer 79. 1 Bulst. 87. 2 Hawk. P. C. 114.

The defendant being indicted for murder at the quarter sessions, and the indictment being removed into B. R. by certiorari, the defendant appeared, and pleaded Not guilty, and he moved to be bailed, which the court granted, being satisfied by several affidavits that there was good reason for it. 2 Jo. 222.

The defendant was indicted for murder, and the trial coming on, the prosecutor alleged, that there had been great labouring of the jury, and therefore did not proceed, suspecting a partial jury, but brought an appeal; and tho' by the appeal the indictment still continued, and was not gone, yet the delay being occasioned by the prosecutor, the party was bailed; but by Crake J. If the labouring the jury had been proved, peradventure he would not be bailable. Bulst. 85.

The jury on an indictment of murder found a special verdict, whereupon the court were divided, two against one, and thereupon the prisoner moved to be bailed, but all the court denied it; and as for the verdict there was a curia advisare, and the matter adjourned, and the prisoner carried away in custody. Bulst. 89.

Formerly persons committed for treason, by the king's command, or order of council, were not to be delivered without trial, &c. But it is said that the court of B. R. has power to bail in all cases of treason. Stim. 163. cites the opinion of the judges in the house of lords 1678. in Zachary Croston's case.

Upon a commitment of either house of parliament, when it stands indifferent on the return of the habeas corpus, whether it be legal, or not, the court of B. R. ought not to bail a prisoner; but when it appears to be illegal, they may do it, as well as on an unwarrantable commitment of the king and council. 2 Hawk. 110. And a person committed for a contempt, by order of either house of parliament, may be discharged by B. R. after a dissolution or prorogation, which determines all orders of parliament: also 'tis said on an impeachment, when the parliament is not sitting, and the party has been long in prison, B. R. may bail him. The court of B. R. hath bailed persons committed to the Fleet Prison by the Lord Chancellor; when the crime of commitment was not mentioned, or only in general terms, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 111. And B. R. having the control of all inferior courts, may at their discretion bail any person unjustly committed by any of those courts. In admitting a person to bail in the court of B. R. for felony, &c. a several recognisance is entered into to the king in a certain sum from each of the bail, that the prisoner shall appear at a certain day, &c. And also that the bail shall be liable for the default of such appearance, body for body. And it is at the discretion of justices of the peace, in admitting any person to bail for felony, to take the recognisance in a certain sum, or body for body: but where a person is bailed by any court, &c. for a crime of an inferior nature, the recognisance ought to be only in a certain sum of money, and not body for body. 2 Hawk. 115. And the bail are to be bound in double the sum of the criminal. Where persons are bound body for body, if the offender doth not appear, whereby the recognisance is forfeited, the bail are not liable to such punishment to which the principal would be adjudged if found guilty, but only to be fined, &c. Wood's Inst. 618. If bail suspect the prisoner will fly, they may carry him before a justice to find new sureties; or to be committed in their discharge. 1 Rep. 99.

The courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, in term time, and the Chancery in the term or vacation, may bail persons by the habeas corpus act; but not such as are committed for treason, or felony specially expressed in the warrant of commitment; unless it be where a Sessions is past from the time of commitment of the prisoner, without any prosecution; when he may be bailed. And B. R. will not admit a person to bail on the habeas corpus statute, on commitment for treason or felony, without four sureties. The court of B. R. may bail persons committed by the king's special command, or by the privy council, on the like circumstances upon which it will grant bail on other commitments: this is where the crime is specified in the warrant of commitment; and wherever any commitment by the privy council hath not expressed with some certainty the crime alleged against the party, it has been usual to admit him to bail on his habeas corpus. 2 Hawk. P. C. 107, 109. See Stat. 16 Car. 1. cap. 10. But concerning bail on habeas corpus, see title Habeas Corpus.

To refuse bail when any one is bailable; or to admit any to bail who ought not by law to be admitted, or to take slender bail, is punishable by fine, &c. 2 Inst. 291. H. P. C. 97. And see farther, 3 Edw. 1. c. 15. 27 Edw. 1. St. 1. c. 3. 4 Edw. 3. c. 2. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15. & 31. Car. 2. c. 2.

No person shall be bailed for felony by less than two, and it is said not to be usual for the King's Bench to bail a man on a habeas corpus, on a commitment for treason or felony, without four sureties; the sum in which the sureties are to be bound, ought to be never less than 40*l.* for a capital crime; but it may be higher in discretion, on consideration of the ability and quality of the prisoner, and the nature of the offence; and the sureties may be examined on oath concerning their sufficiency, by him that takes the bail; and if a person be bailed by insufficient sureties, he may be required either by him who took the bail, or by any other who hath power to bail him, to find better sureties, and on his refusal may be committed; for insufficient sureties are as none. 2 Hawk. P. C. 88. H. P. C. 97.

But justices must take care, that under pretence of demanding sufficient surety, they do not make so excessive a demand, as in effect amounts to a denial of bail; for this is looked upon as a great grievance, and is complained of as such by 1 W. & M. sess. 2. (the Bill of Rights) by which it is declared, that excessive bail ought not to be required. 2 Hawk. P. C. 89.

If where a felony is committed, one is brought before a justice on suspicion, the person suspected is to be bailed, or committed to prison; but if there is no felony done, he may be discharged. H. P. C. 98, 106.

Bailiff, (ballivus) From the French word bayliff, that is, praefectus provinciae, and as the name, so the office itself was answerable to that of France; where there are eight parliaments, which are high courts from whence there lies no appeal, and within the precincts of the several parts of that kingdom which belong to each parliament there are several provinces to which justice is ministered by certain officers called bailiffs: and in England we have several counties in which justice hath been administered to the inhabitants by the officer whom we now call sheriff or viscount, (one of which names descends from the Saxons, the other from the Normans;) and tho' the sheriff is not called bailiff, yet 'tis propable that was one of his names also, because the county is often called balliva: as in the return of a writ, where the person is not arrested, the sheriff saith, Infratominatus A. B. non est inventus in balliva mea, &c. Kitch. Ret. Brev. fol. 285. And in the statute of Magna charta, cap. 28. and 14 Ed. 3. c. 9. the word bailiff seems to comprise as well sheriffs, as bailiffs of hundreds. As the realm is divided into counties, so every county is divided into hundreds; within which in ancient times the people had justice ministered to them by the several officers of every hundred, which were the bailiffs, as those officers do in France and Normandy, being chief officers of justice within their precincts. Custom. of Normand. cap. 1. And it appears by Bracton, (lib. 3. tra. 2. cap. 34.) that bailiffs of hundreds might anciently hold plea of appeal and approvers; but since that time the hundred courts, except certain franchises, are swallowed in the county-courts; and now the bailiff's name and office is grown into contempt, they being generally officers to serve writs, &c. within their liberties.

liberties. Though in other respects, the name is still in good esteem; for the chief magistrates in divers towns, are called bailiffs: and sometimes the persons to whom the king's castles are committed are termed bailiffs, as the bailiff of Dover Castle, &c.

Of the ordinary bailiffs there are several sorts, viz. bailiffs of liberties; sheriffs bailiffs; bailiffs of lords of manors; bailiffs of husbandry, &c. Bailiffs of liberties are those bailiffs who are appointed by every lord within his liberty, to execute process and do such offices therein, as the bailiff errant doth at large in the county; but bailiffs errant or itinerant, to go up and down the county to serve process, are out of use. Bailiffs of liberties and franchises, are to be sworn to take distresses, truly impanel jurors, make returns by indenture between them and sheriffs, &c. and shall be punished for malicious distresses, by fine and treble damages, by ancient statutes. Vide 12 Ed. 2. St. 1. c. 5. 14 Ed. 3. St. 1. c. 9. 20 Ed. 3. c. 6. 1 Ed. 3. St. 1. c. 5. 2 Ed. 3. c. 4. 4 Ed. 3. c. 9. 5 Ed. 3. c. 4. 11 H. 7. c. 15. 27 H. 8. c. 24. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. §. 10. The bailiff of a liberty, may make an inquisition and extent upon an elegit: the sheriff returned on a writ of elegit, that the party had not any lands but within the liberty of St. Edmund's Bury, and that J. S. bailiff there had the execution and return of all writs, and that he inquired and returned an extent by inquisition, and the bailiff delivered the moiety of the lands extended to the plaintiff, who by virtue thereof entered, &c. and it was held a good return. 3 Cro. Rep. 319. These bailiffs of liberties cannot arrest a man without a warrant from the sheriff of the county: and yet the sheriff may not enter the liberty himself, at the suit of a subject, (unless it be on a quo minus, or capias utlagatum) without clause in his writ, Non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, &c. If the sheriff, &c. enters the liberty without such power, the lord of the liberty may have an action against him; tho' the execution of the writ may stand good. 1 Kent. 406. 2 Inst. 453.

Sheriffs bailiffs are such who are servants to sheriffs of counties to execute writs, warrants, &c. Formerly bailiffs of hundreds were the officers to execute writs; but now it is done by special bailiffs, put in with them by the sheriff. A bailiff of a liberty is an officer which the court takes notice of; though a sheriff's bailiff is not an officer of the court, but only the sheriff himself. Pasch. 23 Car. 1. B. R. The arrest of the sheriff's bailiff is the arrest of the sheriff; and if any rescous be made of any person arrested, it shall be adjudged done to the sheriff: also if the bailiff permit a prisoner to escape, action may be brought against the sheriff. 1 Inst. 61, 168. Sheriffs are answerable for misdemeanors of their bailiffs; and are to have remedy over against them. 2 Inst. 19. And the court of B. R. will punish bailiffs that misbehave themselves in executing process, &c.

Bailiffs of lords of manors are those that collect their rents, and levy their fines and amercements: but such a bailiff cannot distrain for an amercement without a special warrant from the lord or his steward. Cro. Eliz. 698. He cannot give licence to commit a trespass, as to cut down trees, &c. though he may license one to go over land, being a trespass to the possession only, the profits whereof are at his disposal. Cro. Jac. 337, 377. A bailiff may by himself, or by command of another take cattle damage-feasant upon the land. 1 Danv. Abr. 685. Yet amends cannot be tendered to the bailiff, for he may not accept of amends, nor deliver the distress when once taken. 5 Rep. 76. These bailiffs may do any thing for the benefit of their masters, and it shall stand good till the master disagrees; but they can do nothing to the prejudice of their masters. Litt. Rep. 70.

Bailiffs of courts baron summon these courts, and execute the process thereof; they present all pound breaches, cattle-strayed, &c. Bailiffs of husbandry are belonging to private men of good estates, and have the disposal of the under-servants, every man to his labour; they also sell trees, repair houses, hedges, &c. and collect the profits of the land for their lord and master, for which they render account yearly, &c. Besides these there are also bailiffs of the forest, of which you may read Magnwood, part 1. pag. 113.

An Appointment of a Bailiff of a Manor.

K Now all men by these presents, That I W. B. of &c. Esq; lord of the manor of D. in the county of G. Have made, ordained, depused, and appointed, and by these presents do make, ordain, depuse, and appoint J. G. of, &c. my bailiff, for me and in my name, and to my use, to collect and gather, and to ask, require, demand and receive of all and every my tenants, that have hold, or enjoyed, or now do, or hereafter shall hold or enjoy any messuages, lands, or tenements, from, by or under me, within my said manor of D. all rents, and arrears of rent, heriots, and other profits, that now are, or hereafter shall become payable, due, owing or belonging to me, within the said manor; and in default of payment thereof, to distrain for the same from time to time, and such distress or distresses to impound, detain and keep, until payment be made of the said rents and profits, and the arrears thereof. And I do also further empower and authorize the said J. G. to take care of and inspect into all and every my messuages, lands and woods, within the said manor, and to take an account of all defects, decays, wastes, spoils, trespasses, or other misdemeanors, committed or permitted within my said manor, or in any messuages, lands or woods there; and from time to time, to give me a just and true account in writing thereof: and further to ask and do all other things that to the office of a bailiff of the said manor belongs and appertains, during my will and pleasure. In witness, &c.

Bailiwick, (balliwa) Is not only taken for the county; but signifies generally that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff with such powers within his precinct, as an under-sheriff exerciseth under the sheriff of the county; such as the bailiff of Westminster, &c. Stat. 27 Edin. cap. 12. Wood's Inst. 206.

Bailment, (from bailor, to deliver) Is a delivery of things to another, sometimes to be delivered back to the bailor that delivered them, sometimes to the use of the bailee to whom delivered, and sometimes to a third person. This delivery is called a bailment; which may be simple, or general, as to keep for my use; or special, or conditional, to be redelivered when money is paid, &c.

The learning under this head is well exemplified in the case of Cogg and Bernard, which was thus—The defendant did undertake to remove a quantity of brandy from Brook's Market to Water Lane; and by reason of his neglect one of the casks broke; and on Not guilty, a verdict was for the plaintiff; and in arrest of judgment two exceptions were taken: 1st, Because in the declaration he was not alledged to be a common porter. 2^{dly}, Because it was not averred that he had a reward.

My lord chief justice Holt in his argument on this case enumerated six species of bailment.

The first is a bare and naked bailment to another, to keep for the use of the bailor, which is called depositum.

2. A delivery of goods to another which are in themselves useful to keep, and these are to be restored again in specie, which is called accommodatum.

3. A delivery of goods for hire, which is called locatio or conductio.

4. A delivery by way of pledge, which is called vadium.

5. A delivery of goods to be carried for a reward.

6. Such a delivery as here in the case at bar, where the goods are delivered to do some act about them, as the carrying, and without a reward which is called mandatum, by Bracton, lib. 3. 1006 in English, an acting by commission.

As to the first, if a person out of kindness keeps the goods of another, he shall not be answerable if they be stolen, without there be a particular default in him: and 2^{dly}, such a bailee is not chargeable for a common neglect, for it must be a gross neglect for which he shall be liable.

2. A lending gratis to use for his advantage; there the borrower is strictly bound to keep it, for if he be guilty of the least neglect he shall be answerable; as if I lend a horse to go to the North of England, and he goes to the West, and the horse is stole, he shall in that case be chargeable; for if he had gone as I directed, the horse, perhaps, would not have been stolen; this sort of bailment is mentioned tioned in Bracton 99. but in this case, if the horse had been in the stable of the bailee, and stolen thence without his default, as perhaps the thieves might first have bowed the bailee, and then have taken the horse, he shall not be answerable; but if he left the stable door open, he shall for that neglect be answerable; Bracton says he ought to take the utmost care, but in no place says he shall be charged where no default was in him.

3. As to the third bailment, where goods are hired out for a reward, Bracton 62. says, the hirer is to take all imaginable care, and to restore them at the time, and he is bound to such a care as a diligent master of a family useth to his family, which care, if he so useth, he shall not be bound; now the most diligent man is liable to be robbed, and therefore I collect, that if he be so careful, as according to Bracton's definition, and be robbed, he shall not be liable.

4. If goods be pawned, the pawnee has a special property, which is in nature of a security to compel the pawner to pay; and if the goods be the worse for using, the pawnee must not use them, as clothes, &c. but if they be not the worse for using, he may use them at his peril; as jewels pawned to a lady, and she keeps them in a box, and they are stolen, she shall not be charged; but if she goes abroad with them to a play, and there they are stolen, she shall be answerable. 2dly, If the pawnbroker be at charge in keeping of them, as if it were a horse, and he gives it meat, he may use it for his reasonable charge he has been at. Bracton 99. If a creditor takes a pawn, he is bound to restore it upon payment; but if he, notwithstanding all his diligence lose it, he shall howsoever recover his debt, 29 Aff. pl. 28. for the law does not lay upon him an obligation to keep against all accidents; but if the money be tendered, and he after detains, and then it is lost, he shall then be liable, for he is then a wrong-doer, and his keeping it after is the occasion of its being stolen, and he is then answerable at all events.

5. Goods to be carried for a reward. 1. If you deliver them to a publick or common carrier, and they are stolen, he must be liable, for the law charges him at all events; but yet the act of God, or the enemies of the Queen, may excuse, and this is a political institution by the laws of England, that people may be safe in their dealing; for otherwise carriers, that are frequently trusted with things of greatest value, would be often tempted to confederate with thieves. 2dly, But he who has a particular private employment, though he has a reward, yet he is not bound against all events, as a factor or a bailiff, if they do to the best of their power; and that is Southcott's case, and he is bound no otherwise than as his master himself should do; for it were unjust to charge him with what he cannot prevent.

6. To this point; here is a man not entrusted to keep, but to carry, and not to have any thing for his pains, and through his negligence miscarries, though he be to have nothing, yet it appears there was a neglect, and for that reason he is chargeable; but if the goods had been misused by a third person in the way as he carried them, and without any neglect of his, I hold that he would not then be liable, because he had nothing for a reward. In this case the court resolved that the plaintiff should have judgment. 1 New Abr. 243. Comyn. 133. S. C. 2 Ld. Raym. 909. S. C.

Upon bailment or delivery of goods, these things are to be observed: if they are delivered to a man to be safely kept, and after these goods are stolen from him; as he undertook to keep them safely, this shall not excuse him; but if he undertook to keep them as his own, he shall be excused. 2 Inf. 89. 4 Rep. 83. 1 Roll. Abr. 338.

If a man deliver goods to another to be kept, or which is all one, to be safely kept, the bailee undertakes to keep them only from all damages that arise from his own negligence; and the undertaking being only to keep them, he ought not to use them as though he had an interest in them.

So a ferriar, if a man delivers goods to another to keep as a man would keep his own; and this is called a special bailment, in which the bailee doth undertake for no more than for his diligence in the keeping of them, and has no manner of use of the thing to him committed, but the naked possession only. Co. Litt. 89. a. 4 Co. 83. b. Doct. & Stud. 129.

If where goods are delivered to one as a pledge, they are stolen from him, action lieth not against him; because he hath a property in them, and therefore ought to keep them no otherwise than as his own. Co. Litt. 89. A man leaves a chest locked up with another to be kept, and doth not make known to him what is therein; if the chest and goods in it are stolen, the person who received them shall not be charged for the same, for he was not trusted with them. Ibid. And what is said as to stealing is to be understood of all other inevitable accidents: but it is necessary for a man that receives goods to be kept, to receive them in a special manner, viz. to be kept as his own, or at the peril of the owner. 1 Hill. Abr. 193, 194. The case of a carrier, inn-keeper, &c. is different; for as they have their hire, and thereby implicitly undertake the safe delivery of the goods intrusted with them, they shall answer the value if they are stolen from them. 1 Roll. Abr. 338. But—

If money is delivered to A. to keep generally, without any consideration or reward for so doing, if A. is robbed, he is discharged, and the owner shall bear the loss. Ruled upon evidence per Ld. Pemberton. 2 Show. pl. 166.

If I deliver 100*l.* to A. to buy cattle, and he bestows 50*l.* of it in cattle, and I bring an action of debt for all, I shall be barred in that action for the money bestowed and charges, &c. but for the rest I shall recover. Hob. 207.

If one deliver his goods to another person, to deliver over to a stranger; the deliverer may countermand his power, and require the goods again, and if the bailee refuse to deliver them, he may have an action of account for them. Co. Litt. 286.

If A. delivers goods to B. to be delivered over to C. C. hath the property, and C. hath the action against B. for B. undertakes for the safe delivery to C. and hath no property or interest but in order to that purpose. 1 Roll. Abr. 606.

But if the bailment were not on valuable consideration, the delivery is countermandable; and in that case, if A. the bailor bring trover, he reduces the property again in himself, for the action amounts to a countermand of the gift; but if the delivery was on a valuable consideration, then A. cannot have trover, because the property is altered, and in trover the property must be proved in the plaintiff. 1 Bull. 68.

If goods be bailed to bail over on a consideration precedent, on his part, to whom they ought to be bailed, the bailor can't countermand it; otherwise where 'tis voluntary, and without consideration. But where 'tis in consideration of a debt, it is not countermandable; otherwise if it be to satisfy the debt of another; per Egerton. 1 Leon. 30. pl. 36.

And where a man delivers goods to another to be redelivered to the deliverer at such a day, and before the bailee doth sell the goods in market overt; the bailor may at the day seize and take his goods, for the property is not altered. Godb. 160.

If A. borrows a horse to ride to Dover, and he rides out of his way, and the owner of the horse meets him, he cannot take the horse from him; for A. has a special property in the horse till the journey is determined; and being in lawful possession of the horse, the owner cannot violently seize and take it away, for the continuance of all property is to be taken from the form of the original bargain, which in this case was limited till the appointed journey was finished. Telv. 172.

But if A. borrows a horse to go to Dover, and goes to other places, the owner may have an action on the case against him for exceeding the purposes of the loan; for so far it is a secret and fallacious abuse of his property; but no general action of trespass, because it is not an open and violent invasion of it. 1 Rel. Rep. 128.

As to borrowing a thing perishable, as corn, wine, or money, or the like, a man must, from the nature of the thing, have an absolute property in them; otherwise it could not supply the uses for which it was lent, and therefore he is obliged to return something of the same sort, the the same in quantity and quality with what is borrowed. Dr. & Stud. 129.

If one delivers a ring to another to keep, and he breaks and converts the same to his own use; or if I deliver my sheep to another to be kept; and he suffers them to be drowned by his negligence; or if the bailie of a horse, or goods, &c. kill or spoil them, in these cases action will lie. 5 Rep. 13. 15 E. 4. 20. b. 12 E. 4. 13.

If a man delivers goods to another, the bailie shall have a general action of trespass against a stranger, because he is answerable over to the bailor; for a man ought not to be charged with an injury to another, without being able to retire to the original cause of that injury, and in amends there to do himself right. 13 Co. 69. 14 Hen. 4. 28. 25 H. 7. 14.

If a man bail goods to one, to bail over to another, and the bailie, contrary to the trust in him, doth not deliver but convert them to his own use; he shall be chargeable both to the bailor, and him to whom the goods ought to have been bailed. 1 Bulst. 68, 69.

Baliba, Is expounded to signify jurisdiction. Co. Lit. 105.

Balibo amobendo, A writ to remove a bailiff from his office, for want of sufficient land in the bailiwick. Reg. Orig. 78. For if a sheriff chuse one to be bailiff of a hundred; or if the lord of a liberty elect one to be bailiff of the liberty, who hath not land sufficient in the county to answer the king and his people, according to the statute of Westmin. 2. then this writ shall be sent to the sheriff to discharge such bailiff, and chuse another in his place.

Balkers, Are derived from the word balk, because they stand higher, as it were on a balk or ridge of ground, to give notice of something to others. Shep. Epitom. vide Conderg.

Ballance of Trade, A computation of the value of all commodities which we buy from foreigners, and on the other side the value of our own native products, which we export into neighbouring kingdoms; and the difference or excess between the one side and the other of such account or computation is called the balance of trade: which excess can be answered by us in nothing but our coin or bullion. The overplus of goods brought from our colonies in America, and other foreign parts, with which we supply our neighbours, is computed in time of peace at least to ballance our trade.

Ballare, Signifies scopis expurgare. 'Tis mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 87.

Ballast, Is gravel or sand to poise ships, and make them go upright: and ships and vessels taking in ballast in the river Thames, are to pay so much a tun to Trinity House Deptford; who shall employ ballastmen, and regulate them, and their lighters to be marked, &c. on pain of 10s. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 29.

Ballium, A fort of fortrefs or bulwark — Eam civitatem cum exteriori ballio castri bellatorum suorum insulibus occupavit. Matt. Westm. Anno 1265.

Ban, or bans, (from the Brit. ban, i. e. clamor) Is a proclamation, or publick notice; any publick summons or edict, whereby a thing is commanded or forbidden. It is a word ordinary among the feudists; and there is both bannus and bannum which signify two several things. This word bans we use here in England, especially in publishing matrimonial contracts, which is done in the church before marriage, to the end that if any man can speak against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred, precontract, or for other just cause, they may take their exception in time, before the marriage is consummated: and in the canon law, Bannæ sunt proclamationes sponsæ & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri solitæ. But there may be a faculty or licence for the marriage, and then this ceremony is omitted; and ministers are not to celebrate matrimony between any persons without a licence, except the bans have been first published three several times; upon pain of suspension, &c. Can. 62. See the Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 35. See marriage and Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33.

Bancalt, A covering of ease and ornament for a bench, or other seat; mentioned in the Monasticon, Tom. 1. pag. 222.

Bane, (from the Sax. bana, a murderer) Signifies destruction or overthrow: as, I will be the bane of such a man, is a common saying; so when a person receives a mortal injury by any thing, we say, it was his bane: and he who is the cause of another man's death, is said to be le bane, i. e. a malefactor. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 8. cap. 1.

Banerett, (banerettus, miles vexillarius) Sir Tho. Smith, in his Repub. Angl. cap. 18. says, is a knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it as it were a banner, and accounted so honourable, that they are allowed to display their arms in the king's army as barons do, and may bear arms with supporters. Cambden, in his Britan. fol. 109. hath these words, baneretti, cum vassalorum nomen jam desierat, a baronibus secundi erant; quibus inditum nomen a vexillo; concessum illis erat militaris virtutis ergo, quadrato vexillo (perinde ac barones) uti, unde & equites vexillarii a nonnullis vocantur, &c. 'Tis said that they were antiently called by summons to parliament: and that they are next to the barons in dignity, appears by the statute 14 R. 2. c. 11. and 5 R. 2. Stat. 2. cap. 4. William de la Pole was created banerett by K. Edward the Third, by letters patent, Anno Regni sui 13. And those banerets, who are created sub vexillis regis, in exercitu regali, in aperto bello, & ipso rege personaliter presente, explicati, take place of all Baronets; as we may learn by the letters patent for creation of Baronets. 4 Inst. 6. Some maintain that knights banerets ought not to be made in a civil war: but Hen. 7. made divers banerets upon the Cornish commotion, in the year 1495. See Selden's Titles of Honours, f. 799.

Banishment, (Fr. bannissement) Exilium, abjuratio, is a forsaking or quitting of the realm; and a kind of civil death, inflicted on an offender: there are two kinds of it, one voluntary and upon oath, called abjuratio; and the other upon compulsion, for some offence. Strandf. Pl. Cr. f. 117. By Magna charta, none shall be outlawed or banished his country, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or according to the law of the land. 9 H. 3. c. 29. And by the common law no person shall be banish'd, but by authority of parliament; or in case of abjuratio for felony, &c. but this is taken away by statute. 3 Inst. 115. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. See Abjuratio.

Bank, (Lat. bancus, Fr. banque) In our Common law, is usually taken for a seat or bench of judgment; as Bank le Roy, the King's Bench, Bank le Common Pleas, the Bench of Common Pleas, or the Common Bench; called also in Latin Bancus Regis, and Bancus Communium Placitorum. Comp. Just. 67, 91. Jus Banci, or the privilege of the bench, was antiently allowed only to the king's judges, qui summam administrant justitiam; for inferior courts were not allowed that privilege.

There are, in each of the terms, stated days, called days in bank, dies in banco, that is, days of appearance in the court of Common Pleas. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and regulated by some festival of the church. On some one of these days in bank all original writs must be made returnable; and therefore they are generally called the returns of that term. Vide Black. Com. 3 V. 277.

The adjournment day, or first return day after the trial of a cause, and whereon the distingas juratores is returnable, is called a day in bank until four days after, which judgment can't be signed. The use of which four days is, that the party, against whom judgment is given, may have an opportunity of moving in arrest of judgment, if he thinks proper.

There is another sort of bank, which signifies a place where a great sum of money is to let out to use, returned by exchange, or otherwise disposed of to profit: and a Bank of England managed by a governor and directors, established by parliament, with funds for maintaining thereof, appropriated to such persons as were subscribers; and the capital stock, which is enlarged by divers statutes, is exempted from taxes, accounted a personal estate assignable over, not subject to forfeiture; and the company make dividends of the profits half-yearly, &c. The funds are redeemable by the parliament, on paying the money borrowed: and the Company of the Bank is to continue a corporation, and enjoy annuities till redeemed, &c. During the continuance of the Bank, no body politick, &c. other than the Company, shall borrow any sums on bills payable at demand; and forging or altering Bank-notes, or tendering such forged notes in payment, demanding to have them exchanged for money, &c. is felony. And officers or servants of the Company, that imbezil any Bank-note, &c. wherewith they are intrusted, being duly convicted, shall suffer death as felons. Vide the statutes 5 & 6 and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20. and 7 Annæ, &c. See also 1 Geo. 1. c. 12. and 11 Geo. 1. c. 9. and 15 Geo. 2. c. 13. See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 4. for enabling the Bank of England to hold general courts and courts of directors in the manner therein mentioned.

Bankers, The money'd goldsmiths first got the name of bankers in the reign of K. Charles the Second, as by the words of an act of parliament, anno 22 & 23 Car. 2. appears,—Whereas several persons, being goldsmiths, and others, by taking up or borrowing great sums of money, and lending out the same again for extraordinary hire and profit, have gain'd and acquired to themselves the reputation and name of bankers, &c. thus runs the statute: but bankers of late are those goldsmiths and private persons in whose hands money is deposited and lodged for safety, to be drawn out again as the owners have occasion for it.

Bankrupt, (bancus ruptus) Is so called, because when the bank or stock is broken or exhausted, the owner is said to be a bankrupt. And this word bankrupt is derived from the Fr. banqueroute, which signifies a breaking or failing in the world: banque in French is as much as mensa in Latin, and route is the same as vestigium; and this term is said to be taken originally from the Roman mensarii, which were set in publick places, and when a tradesman slipp'd away, with an intention to deceive his creditors, he left only some vestigia or signs of his table or shop behind him. Cowel. But a bankrupt with us signifieth generally either man or woman; that living by buying and selling hath gotten other mens goods into his or her hands, and hideth himself in places unknown, or in his own house, in order to deceive and defraud his creditors. 4 Inst. 277.

But for the better understanding of this head, it will be proper to consider,

- I. Who may be a bankrupt, and by what acts they may become so.
- II. Who may take out a commission of bankruptcy, and of the power and duty of commissioners.
- III. Of the chusing of assignees, and of their interest in the bankrupt's estate; with the manner in which creditors are to prove their debts.
- IV. Of the distribution of the bankrupt's estate.
- V. Of the duty, privilege, discharge, and certificate of the bankrupt.

I. By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. A bankrupt is thus described, viz. All and every person who shall use the trade of merchandise, by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, or otherwise in gross, or by seeking his or her living by buying and selling, who shall depart his house, or absent himself, or suffer himself to be arrested for any debt or other thing not grown due, for money delivered, wares sold, or other good consideration; or shall suffer himself to be outlawed, or go to prison, or fraudulently procure himself to be arrested, or his money or goods attached; or make any fraudulent conveyance of his lands, goods, or chattels, whereby his creditors may be defeated in the recovery of their just debts; or being arrested for debt shall lie in prison six months, or more, upon such arrest or detention, shall be adjudged a bankrupt.

The 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. hath other descriptions of a bankrupt; but they are all declared void by a late statute. It is not buying and selling of land, but of personal things, that will make a man liable to be a bankrupt; nor is it buying only, or selling only, but both buying and selling. Every one that gets his living by buying and selling in trade and merchandise, may come under the denomination of a bankrupt, upon his failing therein. But adventurers in the East India company, members of the bank of England, of the South Sea company, and other societies, shall not be adjudged bankrupts, in respect of their stock, &c. Also no person concerned as receiver general of taxes, &c. shall be a bankrupt: and farmers, graziers, &c. are excepted out of the statutes; as buying and selling is not their only or principal means of livelihood. 14 Car. 2. c. 24. But vide the statutes 4 Ann. c. 17. 5 Ann. c. 22. 3 Geo. 1. c. 12. 5 Geo. 1. c. 24. 10 Ann. c. 15. 7 Geo. 1. c. 31. 3 Geo. 2. c. 29. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. 24 Geo. 2. c. 57. 28 Geo. 2. c. 13. sect. 22. An innkeeper is not within the statutes, for though he buys provisions to be spent in his house, yet he doth not properly sell it, but utters it to his guests at no certain price. Cro. Car. 395. And a taylor is not within the statute of bankrupts, because he lives by making of garments, and not by buying and selling. A shoemaker hath been adjudged within the statutes, as he lives by his credit in buying leather, and selling it again in shoes, &c. And carpenters in London, weavers, dyers, tanners, bakers, brewers, vintners, &c. may be bankrupts: but handicraftsmen, husbandmen, labourers, &c. are not within the statutes. Cro. Car. 21. Cro. Jac. 585. 3 Mod. 330. It hath lately been determined in the court of King's Bench that a *virtual*ler, following the business of *virtual*ler only, is not within the bankrupt laws. In the case of Perkin v. Proctor and Green, vide Wilson Rep. par. 2. fo. 382, &c. A feme sole merchant in London may be a bankrupt. If a merchant gives over his trade, and some years after becomes insolvent for money he owed while a merchant, he is a bankrupt: but if it be for new debts, or old debts continued on new security, it is otherwise. 1 Vent. 5, 29.

By Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 39. Persons dealing as bankers, brokers, and factors, being frequently intrusted with large sums of money, and with goods and effects of very great value belonging to other persons, are declared to be subject to all the statutes made concerning bankrupts.

By Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 40. No driver of cattle, or any receiver general of taxes, shall be deemed a bankrupt.

An ironmonger, who buys rod iron, or bar iron, and causes it to be worked up into wares, may be a bankrupt. Good. 11. Stone 120.

A salesman may be a bankrupt. Good. 12.

A nobleman, who hath granted to him the sole importing of cards or glasses, may be a bankrupt. Stone 120.

An officer of the court takes a lease of the king of the sole pre-emption of tin, he is a bankrupt for all debts he contracts during his term. Stone 120.

Persons residing abroad may be adjudged bankrupts here. Thus

A man born in England goes over to Ireland, and there trades and buys goods in England, and sells them in Ireland, and being indebted in England becomes bankrupt, adjudged a bankrupt in England. Raym 375. A gentleman of the Temple went to Lisbon, and traded to England and broke; it was adjudged he was a bankrupt by reason of his trading hither and back again, which gained him credit here, though he was out of the realm. Salk. 110.

A member of parliament is liable to a commission of bankruptcy, and accordingly on the 23d of January 1741, a joint commission was taken out against John Caswell and John Mount of London, bankers and partners; and Mr. Caswell was then a member of parliament, and the parliament then sitting; and on the 21st of May 1717, a commission was taken out against John Burridge of London, merchant, who was also a member of parliament, and the author likewise sets forth a resolution of the house of commons, bearing date the 16th of November in the 9th year of king George, 1722, whereby it is unanimously declared, that no copartner in any trade or undertaking, was intitled to the privilege of that house, in respect of any matter relating to such copartnership. Dav. 6. And

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 33. Members of parliament are made subject to bankrupt laws; but not subject to arrest, except in cases made felony by those laws.

The statutes relating to bankrupts have been adjudged to extend to physicians, when they have been proved to have traded or merchandized, or to have bought and sold goods, effects, and merchandizes, and accordingly on the 29th of October 1726, a commission of bankruptcy was taken out against Doctor John Lane, a physician in Bristol, and he was found a bankrupt, on his being proved a dealer in copper and lead. Dav. 9. And every one who buys and sells goods and chattels, &c. and thereby endeavours to get a living, is, in respect of such trading, subject to the bankrupt laws, any other profession that they follow, being out of the question.

Private gentlemen may be bankrupts, though never bred up to trade, but have only invested their money in it, in order to make better interest thereof, notwithstanding they have never acted or appeared in the trade, or been known to any persons trading with the person to whom they so lent the money, or been personally concerned in the buying and selling any goods whatsoever. See Dav. 9. And why not? For if intitled to the profits, they ought to be subject to all the consequences of trading.

A pawnbroker, merely as such, is not liable to the statutes relating to bankrupts, because he does not buy nor sell for himself, and is only a common lender of money at interest, and the pledges which he sells are for the benefit of the borrower; but if he is in any other way a trader, he is then liable to become a bankrupt: for if a man hath several trades, and one is within, but another not within the statutes, he shall nevertheless be adjudged a trader, so as to make him a bankrupt.

With respect to the acts by which a man may become a bankrupt, they may be collected from the foregoing and following statutes, and are briefly thus:

1. To depart the realm.
2. To begin to keep his house, privately, to absent himself from, and avoid his creditors.
3. To offer himself willingly to be arrested for any debt, or other thing, not grown due, for money delivered, wares sold, or any other just or lawful cause, or good consideration or purpose.
4. To suffer himself to be outlawed.
5. To yield himself to prison.
6. To depart from his dwelling-house, to the intent or purpose to defraud or hinder a just creditor or creditors of his or their just debt or duty. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. sect. 2.

7. Willingly or fraudulently to procure himself to be arrested, or his goods, money, or chattels, to be attached or sequestered.

8. To make any fraudulent grant or conveyance of his lands, tenements, goods or chattels, to the intent, or whereby his creditors shall and may be defeated or delayed for the recovery of their just debts. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. sect. 2.

9. Being arrested for debt, to lie in prison two months, after his arrest, upon that or any other arrest, or detention for debt.

10. To obtain privilege other than that of parliament.

11. Being arrested for 100*l.* or more, to escape out of prison.

12. To prefer to any court any petition or bill against any of the creditors, thereby endeavouring to enforce them to accept less than their just debts, or to procure time, or longer days of payment, than was given at the time of their original contracts. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. sect. 2.

13. For a bankrupt to pay, satisfy, or secure the petitioning creditor his debt. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 24. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 478, &c.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 33. Neglecting to make satisfaction for any just debt to the amount of 100*l.* within two months after service of legal process, for such debt, upon any trader having privilege of parliament, is an act of bankruptcy.

If a merchant departs the realm with the consent of his creditors, he does not thereby commit an act of bankruptcy. Dav. 30.

But if a merchant departs the realm to merchandize, and becomes indebted, and to avoid arrests, defers his return; this is tantamount to a departing of the realm. Stone 123.

As to keeping of the house, &c. if a man keeps his house for a long time, this does not immediately make him a bankrupt; but if he conceals himself within his house but for a day or an hour to delay or defraud his creditors, he is a bankrupt. Palm. 325.

If a man denies himself to a creditor wilfully, knowing he comes for money, and with an intent to defraud and delay him of his debt, such denials are taken to be acts of bankruptcy; and several persons have been found bankrupts on such accounts.

But in a petition which came on before the late Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, on the 6th of August 1743, it was said, that the being denied to a creditor was only an evidence of an act of bankruptcy; but that the absconding was the material part of it. Dav. 92, 93.

A merchant trader indebted, keeps in another man's house, or on shipboard, adjudged a keeping in his house: but a withdrawing must be on purpose to defraud creditors; and if a man goes sometimes at large, so as he may be met with one time or other, it will excuse him. But this must be such a going at large, as that 'tis evident he did not intend to avoid his creditors, and must be a going abroad in the day time, at usual times of business, and in the common and usual way.

Keeping house for fear of an attachment in Chancery, is no act of bankruptcy. Stone 123.

So if a man absents himself for felony, it is not an act of bankruptcy, it not being to defraud the creditor of his just debt or duty due to him. Dav. 91.

As to the outlawry, if a jury on a verdict find a man to be outlawed, it must be proved to be done in fraudem creditorum, or to defraud his creditors. Keb. 11. 2 Sid. 69, 114, 176.

A man may be so unfortunate as to be outlawed, and know nothing at all of the matter, and may afterwards come and procure the outlawry to be reversed; and if so, it is not an act of bankruptcy; and this was determined in the case of Radford v. Bildworth, &c. above.

If an outlawry be reversed for want of proclamations, all done in the mean time by the commissioners, is void; but if it were reversed for error, contrary. Stone 124. Good. 23.

As to lying in prison upon an arrest, it is said, that lying in prison makes a man a bankrupt from the first arrest, that is, from the time of the first arrest upon which he lies in prison, and not where he puts in sufficient bail, for that might be infinitely prejudicial and mischievous, and no man could ever safely pay or receive from a tradesman. Salk. 109. adjudged in B. R. and affirmed in error. Came v. Coleman.

But it is held by Holt C. J. that if a defendant renders in discharge of his bail, and lies in prison two months, he is a bankrupt from the first arrest, not from the render only. Salk. 110. 2 Show. 519.

Yet in order to make it a compleat act of bankruptcy, his lying in prison two months without putting in bail ought to be proved, otherwise a third person, who may be an innocent man, may be affected thereby; and the intention or desire of any man to be a bankrupt, or to be unjust, ought not to prejudice such innocent person, unless an essential fact, which creates an act of bankruptcy, is proved against the person so intending to be a bankrupt. Dav. 94.

With regard to the bankrupt's paying or securing the debt of the petitioning creditor,

The doing this is declared, shall be taken to be such an act of bankruptcy, that on good proof such commission shall be superseded, and the Lord Chancellor, &c. may, on any creditor's petitioning, award a new commission.

And such person, so taking or receiving such goods, or satisfaction, shall lose his whole debt, and the money received, and shall pay the same to such persons as the commissioners shall appoint, in trust for the bankrupt's creditors in proportion. See 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 24.

But if a banker, who hath many peoples money in his hands, refuses payment, yet keeps his shop open, and as often as he is arrested gives bail; by this means he may give preference of payment to his friends; and if when he hath done he runs away, such payment shall stand against a commission of bankruptcy. Farrell. Rep. 139. If after a plain act of bankruptcy, one goes abroad and is a great dealer, yet this will not purge the first act of bankruptcy; though if he pays off or compounds with his creditors, he is become a new man. Trin. 2 Ann. 1 Salk. 110. The commissioners of bankrupts have the power to adjudge a man a bankrupt; yet in an action the jury must find whether he was so, or not. 1 Dav. 687. He that is a bankrupt to one creditor, is accounted in law a bankrupt to all the creditors; and being once adjudged so, is always so to the rest of the creditors. 22 Car. 1. B. R.

Where there are two partners in trade, and one breaks, you shall not charge the other with the whole; but the estate belonging to the joint trade ought to be divided, &c. Mod. Rep. 45. And if one of them becomes a bankrupt, it will not affect his companion. 3 Salk. 61. Acts discharging bankrupts shall not discharge any partner in trade, or one jointly bound with the bankrupt. 1 Dav. Abr. 686.

II. As to the taking out the commission,

The commission of bankruptcy, which arms the commissioners with all the power which they are to exercise over the bankrupt and his estate, is to be granted by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Commissioners of the Great Seal, on the application of creditors only; for if twenty swear that such a one is a bankrupt, yet a commission cannot be awarded without a petition from the creditors for that purpose; and this is a matter not discretionary, but to be granted de jure. 1 New Abr. 251.

By 34 H. 8. cap. 4. "The Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. were to take order with the bankrupt's lands and goods for payment of his debts."

And by 13 Eliz. cap. 7. "The Lord Chancellor or Keeper, upon complaint in writing, shall have power, by commission under the Great Seal, to appoint honest and discreet persons, who, or the most of them, may take such order with the body, &c." By 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. The commission does not abate by the bankrupt's death. And

By 5 Geo. 2. cap. 30. sect. 44. it is enacted, "That no commission of bankruptcy shall abate by the death of the king; and where by the death of the commissioners or otherwise, it becomes necessary to renew the commission, no more than half fees are payable thereupon."

No commission of bankruptcy shall be granted, unless the debt of one creditor amount to 100*l.* or of two creditors to 150*l.* or of three or more to 200*l.* 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

In order to the taking out a commission of bankruptcy, it is usual first for a creditor to make affidavit before a master in Chancery, that the party is indebted in a sum sufficient to make him a bankrupt; then to petition the Lord Chancellor for a commission; give bond to prove the person a bankrupt, &c. within some or one of the statutes; and next follows the commission, directed to five commissioners, (whereof two are to be esquires of the quorum.)

By the 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 22. it is enacted, "That persons who have bills, bonds, promissory notes, or other personal security for their money, payable at a future day, who by the 7 Geo. 1. cap. 31. are enabled to come in as creditors, and allowed to discount such debts, allowing 5*l. per cent.* &c. may (though disabled by the statute) petition for, or join with others in petitioning for any commission of bankruptcy."

By the 13 Eliz. abovementioned, the commissioners have power over the whole estate, freehold and copyhold, goods, debts, chattels, and effects of the bankrupt, and may sell his land.

They have no estate, and have only power to sell; and to pass the estate there must not only be a deed indented, but the same must be inrolled also. 2 Show. 156. i. e. as to the real estate.

They may break open houses. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. sect. 8.

But they cannot break open a house to search for the bankrupt's goods, unless the bankrupt's goods be in the house of the bankrupt. 2 Show. 247.

Bankrupts are to be apprehended, on a commission issued and certified, by virtue of a justice's warrant; and refusing to be examined, the commissioners may commit them. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Also commissioners may examine bankrupt's wife touching his estate. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. sect. 6.

But he cannot be examined against her husband touching his bankruptcy, or whether he had committed any act of bankruptcy, or as to how and when he became a bankrupt; and if they commit her, and though the warrant of commitment mentioned to be, as well for refusing to discover the goods, &c. of the bankrupt as the time and manner of his bankruptcy, yet the commitment will be held illegal, and the wife ordered to be discharged. 1 Will. Rep. 610, 611.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. The commissioners may commit such persons as have the bankrupt's goods, or are indebted to him; who refuse to come before them, or to be sworn when present.

They may likewise examine and commit any other person, not answering interrogatories. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 16.

A person once examined by the commissioners of bankrupts cannot be examined again without a new commission. 2 Show. 102.

Equity will not compel a man to discover what goods he really bought of a bankrupt after the bankruptcy, and before the commission sued out, where the party has no notice of the bankruptcy. 1 Vern. 27.

Though such persons have been examined by the commissioners, yet 'tis said a bill for a discovery of the same matters may be filed against them in Chancery. 2 Chan. Ca. 73.

With respect to their duty, they are by 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. to take an oath, before they proceed, for the due execution of their trust; and by the same statute

The commissioners are not to eat, &c. at bankrupt's or creditors expence, or to take more than 20*s.* each commissioner for each meeting.

The commissioners are to appoint three meetings within 42 days, but the Lord Chancellor may enlarge the time.

They are to give notice of their meeting in the Gazette, and to admit creditors to prove their debts. Same statute.

The farther particulars of their duty may be collected by attending to the subsequent divisions :

III. As to the manner of chusing assignees, and their interest, &c.

It is enacted by 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 26. That commissioners are to assign the bankrupt's effects to such persons as shall be chosen by a major part of the creditors; who (by sect. 35. with consent of creditors) may compound with debtors, &c. And by the same statute, None are to vote for the choice of assignees, whose debt doth not amount to 10*l.* Notice shall be given to creditors to meet and chuse assignees, and prove debts, &c. which they may do without paying contribution.

New assignees may be chosen by the creditors; and the old ones shall deliver up effects to them, under the penalty of 200*l.* And after the end of four months and within twelve months are to account, and then a dividend shall be made; and there may be a second dividend in eighteen months, if the estate be not wholly divided on the first, which shall be final, unless any law suit is depending, or the effects are not disposed of, &c.

Assignees or commissioners may pay off mortgages on the bankrupt's estate: likewise assignees of the commissioners shall have the benefit of covenants of re-entry, &c. on lands. 2 Rep. 25.

All the goods and chattels of the bankrupt, which he was possessed of at the time of his becoming bankrupt, may be sold by the commissioners; and notwithstanding the bankrupt sell them in market overt. Sale of goods by a bankrupt, after an act of bankruptcy, may be avoided by the commissioners of bankruptcy; and they may in this case bring trover for the goods, or debt, or assumpsit for the value, &c. 3 Salk. 60. Offices of inheritance may be sold; but not offices of trust, annexed to the person for life. If a bankrupt commits felony, it is said his land shall not escheat, but the commissioners may sell it: and his creditors shall have his goods, not the King. Stone 126, 130.

Commissioners may assign debts, &c. to the creditors, who may proceed to execution, though the bankrupt dies; persons suspected to detain any of the bankrupt's goods or estate may be arrested, and still refusing to deliver them shall be committed. Sed quære? The usual method is to bring an action of trover.

Freehold and copyhold lands, goods and debts may be assigned, tho' transferred into other mens names, except bona fide, and on valuable consideration. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7. sect. 7. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. sect. 5.

Assignees shall compound with the lord for fine of copyhold lands, and be admitted. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7. sect. 3.

The commissioners may sell a copyhold intailed, which by custom may be intailed and cut off; otherwise, if there be no such custom. Stone 127. Billing. 148.

Assignees may sue actions in their own names for the debts due to the bankrupt, for they are transferred by act of parliament, but yet it is not a debt upon record; but as in debt upon contract defendant might have waged his law against the bankrupt, so he may against the assignees. Cro. Jac. 105.

But if the commission be not taken out within six years, directed by law for suing of debts, and the assignment made within that time, a defendant in an action may plead the statute of limitations: if the commission be taken out in six years, the statute preserves the debt, being to relieve the creditors against fraud, &c. 1 Saund. 37.

Notice of the assignment of the debt is not necessary to be given to the debtor, before action brought by the assignees for the debt. Lutw. 456.

When an action is brought by an assignee under a commission of bankruptcy, it need not be set forth in the declaration how he became assignee. Barnard. K. B. 309. and vide Carth. 29.

In case of bankruptcy trover will lie generally; per cur. 3 Keb. 254. pl. 22.

Sale of goods by a bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy is not merely void, the contract is good between the parties; but it may be avoided by the commissioners or assignees at pleasure; therefore they may either bring trover for the goods, as supposing the contract may be void, or may bring debt or assumpsit for the value, which affirms the contract. 3 Salk. 59. pl. 2.

Though assignees may as aforesaid bring actions of law in their own names, yet no bill in equity shall be commenced by any assignee or assignees, without the consent of the major part in value of the creditors of such bankrupt, who shall be present at a meeting of the creditors, pursuant to notice to be given in the London Gazette for that purpose. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 36.

They may also, with the like consent of creditors, submit disputes to arbitration, and compound with debtors to the bankrupt's estate. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sec. 33, 34.

Assignees likewise, or the major part of the commissioners, may settle open, unbalanced and mutual accounts; and what shall appear on the balance before the person became bankrupt, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 28.

The assignees are to keep fair accounts in their books, of all monies received and paid, and to make oath or affirmation before the commissioners of the truth of such accounts. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 33.

Assignees may be removeable on the petition of creditors to the Lord Chancellor, &c. and if a new assignment is made, the estate shall be vested in such new assignees; and the commissioners shall give notice in the two London Gazettes that shall immediately follow the removal of such assignees, and the appointment of the new ones, for the debtors to the bankrupts not to pay any money to the old assignees. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 31.

If an assignee is guilty of a breach of trust, he will be liable to pay interest and costs.

If one assignee dies, the trust goes to the survivor, and the executors of the deceased assignee must account with the survivor; and if assets are denied, he must account for assets before a Master in Chancery.

If the bankrupt's real estate is conveyed to assignees, and one of them dies, this is a jointenancy, and goes to the survivor; and he may alone sell such estate to a purchaser. But if both die before any conveyance is made, then the heir at law of the survivor must convey to such new assignees as the court shall appoint, or join with such new assignees in the conveyance to a purchaser. Dav. Bank. 409.

The law is very clear, that the assignees are exactly in the same place as the bankrupt, and stand in his place to every particular, and any agreement entered into shall bind them; and though there may not be the same remedy against them, that is not from the nature but the necessity of the thing; for he shall make an adequate and compleat satisfaction as far as his fortune in the hands of the assignees will admit of. Select Ca. in Ch. 77.

The assignees are bound by all acts done by the bankrupt before he becomes so, whether of a legal or equitable nature, if they were done upon a valuable consideration, and without fraud; and whatever disposition of his estate he makes, that will affect himself, does equally conclude the assignees, who stand directly in his place. 2 Eq. Abr. 101. pl. 5.

The assignee of a bankrupt exhibits his bill against the defendant, to discover goods of the bankrupt, that came to his hands after the bankruptcy. The defendant, by way of plea, sets forth, that he had no goods of the bankrupt's, or that ever were his, but what he bought for full and valuable consideration, and bona fide; and that at the time of the sale and payment of his money, he had no notice either of the commission, or of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt. On long debates, the plea was allowed by the Lord North, and to take what remedy they could before the commissioners, or at law. Hutchins, counsel for the defendant, cited a former precedent, but it was not produced. 2 Chan. Ca. 135.

A purchases of a man, who had committed an act of bankruptcy, but without notice thereof: afterwards a commission is taken out, and there being a term standing out in trustees, the assignee brings a bill against them and the purchaser, to have the term assigned to him; but bill dismissed. 2 Vern. 599.

A puts out 1000*l.* at interest to the East India company, and takes bond for it in the name of J. S. his wife's wife's relation, and afterwards A. is bankrupt; J. S. is summoned before the commissioners, but, before his examination, tells the company, that the money was not his, but that they should pay it to the person who should bring the bond; and accordingly A.'s wife brought the bond, and received the money. The court would not enforce J. S. to pay the money. Cb. Pre. 18.

A man had devised lands, which were in mortgage, to be sold, and the surplus of the money to be paid to his daughter; the daughter married a man who soon after became a bankrupt, and the commissioners assigned this interest of the wife's; the husband died, and the assignees brought this bill against the wife and trustees, to have the land sold, and the surplus of the money paid to them; but the court would not assist in stripping the wife (who was wholly unprovided for) of this interest, but dismissed the bill at the Rolls. Eq. Ca. Abr. 54.

The creditors have a right to the bankrupt's goods, by the act of bankruptcy, and thereby they are bound: tho' until assignment by the commissioners, the property is not transferred out of the bankrupt. 1 Salk. 108. The commissioners are to sell all the bankrupt's lands in fee, for life, or years, &c. and it will be binding against the bankrupt and his issue, &c. 1 Lill. Abr. 204. They may sell all entailed lands in possession, reversion, or remainder, except entailed in the crown, of the gift of the king; and this shall bind the issue in tail, and all others, which a common recovery might cut off. Ibid. 205. But, as before said, sales of the bankrupt's land by commissioners, are to be by deed inrolled. If a bankrupt grant his lands or goods in the names of other persons, the commissioners notwithstanding may make sale of them: but not lands, &c. conveyed bona fide before the party became a bankrupt. Wood's Inst. 310. And no purchase of lands shall be impeached, unless the commission of bankruptcy be sued out within five years after a man becomes bankrupt. Lands held by a bankrupt in jointenancy may be sold as to the moiety: also lands which a person hath in right of his wife, (but not her dower), and lands devised to a bankrupt, the commissioners may sell.

With respect to the manner of creditors proving their debts, it may be proper to consider the nature of their debts, and how far they are legally to be received as creditors.

An assignee, or indorsee of a bankrupt's notes at an under value is a creditor for the full sums, and may sue out a commission. But it is otherwise where he is assignee of a bond, or where the indorsement of the note is subsequent to the bankruptcy. 1 Peer. Will. 782.

Persons who are security for another may come in as creditors. 2 Cro. Rep. 127.

But a seller of lands need not come in as a creditor for the remainder of his purchase money. 1 Vern. 267.

If a creditor advances money to a bankrupt after a commission sued out, though he did not know it, he will lose his money. 2 Vern. 156.

When money is obtained by judgment in action of debt, and the plaintiff becomes bankrupt, and a commission of bankruptcy is taken out against him, though the sheriff may bring the money into court, it shall be delivered to the plaintiff, and not the assignee of the commission, unless he take out a scire facias against the defendant, in order to try the bankruptcy. 1 Vent. 193. A plaintiff that hath a defendant's body in execution, who becomes bankrupt, shall not come in to be relieved by the statutes: but if the plaintiff recovers damages, &c. against the defendant, and hath judgment, and then the defendant becomes bankrupt, the plaintiff is a creditor; for it is a debt due to him, and action of debt lies on the judgment. 1 Cro. 166. If a debtor to a bankrupt pays him his debt voluntarily, he must pay it over again; but 'tis otherwise in case of payment by compulsion of law. 2 Vent. 258. Sureties or bail, when they have paid the debt, may come in as creditors: but mortgagees, or persons that have a pledge of the bankrupt's goods, having security for their debts in their hands, are not creditors within the statutes. Those that attach goods of the bankrupt, are to come in as creditors. If an executor becomes bankrupt, a legatee is to be creditor. And aliens as well as denizens may come in as creditors; for all statutes concerning bankrupts extend to aliens, who shall be subject to the laws against bankrupts, &c. Hob. 287. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19.

Though a creditor comes into a commission of bankruptcy, and proves his debt, being prevailed on to be an assignee, being informed that otherwise he will lose his debt, yet if the bankrupt has no estate, the creditor may take the bankrupt in execution, if he will waive any benefit of the statute. 1 Peer. Will. 560.

Creditor coming in under a commission, though only to prove his debt, and oppose the bankrupt's obtaining his certificate, yet he shall not sue the bankrupt at law, unless he will waive all benefit of the commission, as to the dividends; and by the Lord Chancellor King ordered, he should waive it as to voting against his certificate. But now the creditor is to make his election, whether he will proceed at law, or come in under the commission; and if he has received any dividend, he is to refund it, but may oppose the certificate. Dav. Bank.

Creditors by recognizances, statute-staple, or judgments, specialties with penalties, attachments and securities, where no execution or extent sued out, shall only be relieved as to a ratable part with the rest of the creditors, without any regard to the penalty; and to prove their debt under a commission of bankruptcy. 1 Peer. Will. 92.

A trader seized of lands in fee, gives judgment to B. and then sells the lands to C. and afterwards becomes bankrupt; though the judgment-creditor cannot come in for more than his proportion with the bankrupt's creditors; yet it is said that he may extend the land in C. the purchaser's hands, C. having purchased before the bankruptcy, and this not prejudicing the creditors. So if A. the trader gives judgment to B. and articles for a valuable consideration to sell to C. and then becomes a bankrupt; it seems the judgment shall bind the lands in the hands of C. who article to buy them; but whatever money the purchaser was to pay the bankrupt, the same shall be liable to the bankruptcy. 1 Peer. Will. 737.

Creditors can't prove contingent or uncertain debts, which may or may not happen, or debts upon bottomree bonds, till the debts are reduced to a certainty. Dav. Bank. 289.

But where a commission issues against the obligor in a bottomree or respondentia bond, or the under writer or assurer in an assurance, before loss of the ship or goods, the obligee or assured may claim, and after loss prove his debt in like manner as if the loss had happened before the suing forth the commission; and have a proportionable dividend. And the bankrupt shall be discharged from the debt due by the bond or policy, and have all advantages of the statutes now in force, as if the contingency had happened before the suing forth the commission.

If a creditor has 100*l.* due to him from two bankrupts, and proves his debt of 100*l.* under the first commission, and receives 40*l.* for the 100*l.* he shall only come in as a creditor for 60*l.* under the second commission. 2 Peer. Will. 89.

A. gives a promissory note to B. or order for 200*l.* B. indorses it to C. who indorses it to D. A. B. and C. become bankrupts, and D. receives 5*s.* in the pound out of A.'s estate, D. shall come in as a creditor for 150*l.* only, out of B.'s effects. If D. had at that time paid contribution money, it should have been returned to D. 2 Peer. Will. 407.

A merchant mortgages his land; the mortgagee may chuse to come in as a creditor. Stone 130.

A. makes a mortgage, and afterwards a commission of bankruptcy is taken out against him, and commissioners make an assignment of his estate, and then B. lends 2000*l.* to the bankrupt on a second mortgage, having no notice of the bankruptcy, and afterwards he gets in the first mortgage. The prior mortgage shall not protect the mortgage subsequent to the bankruptcy. 2 Vern. 357.

A merchant pledges goods, and becomes a bankrupt, the party need not come in. Stone 130.

An executor becomes bankrupt, a legatee shall be relieved. Stone 131.

If there be an act of bankruptcy committed, and a creditor obtains a judgment subsequent to it, then a commission is taken out; now the judgment is thereby avoided. 12 Mod. 446.

Rent due to a landlord is a debt of the highest nature, and affects the goods, chattels, and stock of the tenant upon the premises; and (if there is no seizure made by the landlord) in the case of an execution or extent, a year's rent is to be reserved for him, as appears by the statute 8 Ann. c. 14. sect. 1.

But in commissions of bankruptcy it is otherwise, and though no commission can remove or carry away any goods belonging to the bankrupt, if the landlord seizes for the rent before the goods are removed, and he is to be first discharged, even if there are several years rent in arrear; yet if the landlord does not seize before the commission of bankruptcy carries away the goods from off the premises, he must then come in as a creditor for his rent, with the rest of the bankrupt's creditors. Dav. Bank. 314.

Also if there are not sufficient goods upon the premises to pay the landlord's rent, he can then only take what goods there are upon the premises, and after they are appraised and sold, as the law, in cases of distress for rent, directs; then the landlord may come in as a creditor for the rent remaining due to him, with the rest of the creditors under the commission. Dav. Bank. 314.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 32. no creditor bona fide of a bankrupt for or in respect of any goods really sold to such bankrupt, or of any bill of exchange really and bona fide drawn, negotiated, or accepted by such bankrupt, shall be liable to refund to the assignees any money, which before the suing forth of the commission was really and bona fide, and in the usual course of trade, received by such person of any bankrupt before notice that he was become a bankrupt, or in insolvent circumstances.

As to the manner of creditors proving their debts, they may prove them without paying any contribution on account of the same: and the commissioners after they have declared the person against whom a commission shall issue to be a bankrupt shall cause notice thereof to be given in the London Gazette, and shall appoint a time and place for the creditors to meet, in order to choose assignees, at which meeting the said commissioners shall admit the proof of any creditors debts, that shall live remote from the place of such meeting of the commissioners, by affidavit, or being quakers, by solemn affirmation, and also permit any person duly authorized by letter of attorney from such creditors, oath or affirmation being made of the due execution thereof, either by an affidavit sworn or affirmation made before a Master in Chancery, or before the commissioners viva voce, and in case of creditors residing in foreign parts before a magistrate where the party shall be residing, to be, together with such creditors letters of attorney attested by a notary public, to vote in the choice of assignees.

And if any person shall prove a debt, which shall not be really due, and under such fictitious debt sign the bankrupt's certificate, unless the bankrupt shall disclose the fraud, and object to the reality of the debt, the certificate shall be void, and the bankrupt shall not be intitled to be discharged from his debts, or to any benefit or allowances under 5 G. 2. c. 30. sec. 26 & 29.

IV. Of the distribution of the bankrupt's estate.

The commissioners, after sale of the bankrupt's estate, are to make distribution among the creditors, first making the bankrupt his allowance, &c. After four months, and distribution made, no creditor can come in to disturb it; but he may come in for the residue, of which no distribution is made. 1. Danv. 603. And the court of Chancery hath sometimes allowed creditors to come in after distribution, upon particular circumstances which have happened; and the Lord Chancellor ordered the execution of the commission to be suspended. Chan. Rep. 307. If commissioners refuse to pay a creditor his proportionable part, he may bring action of debt, or be more properly relieved in Chancery: where the commissioners do not pursue the acts of their commission, the party injured must bring his action, and set forth the finding of the commissioners, that the debtor is a bankrupt. But if a commission is not duly obtained against a person, he may traverse, by saying he is not a bankrupt. 8 Rep. 121. By 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. In actions against commissioners, or others under them, executing any matter by force of the 13 Eliz. c. 7. or that statute, the defendants may plead Not guilty, or justify that it was done by the authority of those acts, &c. without shewing forth the commission; to which the plaintiff may reply, that the defendant did the fact of his wrong, &c. 1 Danv. 694.

Creditors before choosing assignees, shall fix the method of dividends: and assignees shall, after the expiration of four months, and within twelve months from the time of issuing of such commission, cause at least 21 days publick notice to be given in the London Gazette, of the time and place the commissioners and assignees intend to meet, to make a dividend or distribution of such bankrupt's estate and effects; at which time the creditors, who have not before proved their debts, shall then be at liberty to prove the same; and upon every such meeting assignees shall produce their accounts, and the said commissioners, or the major part of them, shall order such part of the neat produce of the said bankrupt's estate, as by such accounts, or otherwise, shall appear to be in the hands of the said assignees, to be forthwith divided amongst such of the bankrupt's creditors, who have duly proved their debts under such commission, in proportion to their several and respective debts. And a final dividend shall be made within eighteen months after the issuing of any commission. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sec. 32, 33, and 37.

Creditors, upon what security soever they be, come in all equal, unless such as have obtained actual execution before the bankruptcy, or had taken pledges for their just debts; and the reason is, because, from the act of bankruptcy, all the bankrupt's estate is vested in the commissioners who are established as courts of justice touching the bankrupt's estate, and before whom the creditors must authenticate their debts, in order to receive their dividends; and therefore they must equally admit all persons to make proof of their debts; but such as have pawns or mortgages have a property in the thing so pledged, precedent to the translation of the property to the commissioners, in which case they have only an equity of redemption, and are in no better condition than the bankrupt himself; that the bankrupt, before the assignment of the commissioners, has such property as will maintain an action for the recovery of the goods. New Abr. 258. in notes. See Salk. 108.

Joint debts are to be paid out of the joint stock first; and if there be any overplus, then that ought to be applied to pay particular debts of each partner; but if there be not enough to pay all the joint debts; and if either of the partners shall pay more than a moiety of the joint debts, then such partner is to come in before the commissioners of bankrupts, and be admitted as a creditor for what he shall pay over and above his moiety. 2 Chan. Rep. 226.

If there be several joint traders, payment to one of them is payment to all; so if they all, except him to whom the payment was made, were bankrupts, the payment is only unavoidable as to his proportion. 12 Mod. 447.

And if there be four partners, whereof three are bankrupts, and their shares assigned, and a payment was made to him that was no bankrupt, it is payment to all the assignees, for now they are all partners. 12 Mod. 447.

On a joint commission of bankruptcy against two traders, separate creditors are allowed to come in, for the joint effects are to be applied, first to pay the partnership debts, and then the separate debts; and the separate effects to pay first the separate creditors, and afterwards the partnership creditors. Per Cowper, Chan. 2 Vern. 706.

Two partners in trade put in each an equal stock, and agreed by covenant, that the stock should pay the debts of the stock, and neither of their separate debts should charge the stock, but only his own estate, or to that effect; they both became bankrupts, and a commission issued issued against them both; one of them owed separately more than the other; the question was between the separate creditors of each bankrupt, and the creditors on account of the joint stock, for these would exclude the separate creditors from charging the joint stock, but that it should satisfy the stock debts; but the Lord North was of a contrary opinion, for the covenant of the partners cannot bind any of the creditors, but only themselves. 2 Chan. Ca. 139.

R. S. and G. were partners together in the trade of a dry-salter: G. embezzles and wastes the joint stock, contracts private debts, and becomes a bankrupt; the commissioners assign the goods in partnership. Bill by R. the plaintiff for an account, and to have the goods sold to the best advantage, and insisted, that out of the produce of the goods the debts owing by the joint trade ought to be paid in the first place, and that out of G.'s share satisfaction must be made for what G. had wasted or embezzled; that the assignees could be in no better a case than the bankrupt himself, and were intitled only to what his third part would amount unto, clear after debts paid and deductions for his embezzlement; and the court seemed to be of that opinion, but sent it to a Master to take the account and state the case. 2 Vern. 293.

If one or more of the joint traders become bankrupt, his or their proportions only are assignable by the commissioners to be held in common with the rest, who were not bankrupts. 12 Mud. 446.

V. Of the duty, privilege, discharge, and certificate of the bankrupt.

The 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. ordains, that if bankrupts do not, after notice in the Gazette, surrender to the commissioners in forty-two days, to be examined, and discover and deliver up all their estates real and personal, they shall be adjudged guilty of felony; but the Lord Chancellor may enlarge the time for surrendering, not exceeding fifty days further: they are to deliver all books of account, writings, &c. on oath to the assignees; and shall be allowed 5*l.* per Cent. so as not to exceed 200*l.* if they pay 10*s.* in the pound, 7*l.* 10*s.* per Cent. not above 250*l.* if they pay 12*s.* 6*d.* per pound, and 10*l.* per Cent. not exceeding 300*l.* if they pay 15*s.* in the pound; but no advantage is given to any bankrupt, who hath lost 5*l.* a day, or 100*l.* in a year at gaming, or 100*l.* by stockjobbing, &c. And the body of the bankrupt only, not his future estate, shall be discharged, except he pays 15*s.* per pound. §. 9. On a second bankruptcy, four parts in five in number and value of creditors, not for less than 20*l.* are to sign certificates, and consent to the bankrupt's discharge, &c. of which oath is to be made, and other creditors may be heard against it: bonds or notes given to any creditor so consent to a certificate, shall be void; and if the person issuing any commission have privately more than the other creditors, the commission may be superseded, and he shall lose his debt. And when the commission is executed, and the party hath conformed to the statutes, his certificate is granted and allowed, &c.

The commissioners are to certify to the Lord Chancellor, that the bankrupt hath conform'd, and four parts in five, in number and value, of the creditors must sign the bankrupt's certificate.

The 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. §. 13. empowers any judge of the court wherein judgment has been obtained against a bankrupt, for any debt owing before he became a bankrupt, the bankrupt being in prison in execution on such judgment, to discharge such bankrupt on producing his certificate.

A creditor came in under the commission, and proved his debt, and after arrested the bankrupt, who now prayed to be discharged. Ld. Ch. King said it has been the construction of equity upon statute of 4 Ann. cap. 17. which discharges the bankrupt of his debts, on a certificate, by four-fifths of his creditors, and allowed by the Chancellor, that where a trader becomes bankrupt, and any one of his creditors comes in before, under the commission to prove his debt, though with design only to oppose the bankrupt's certificate; yet this is an election to take his remedy for his debt under the commission, and if pending that, the creditor sues and arrests the bankrupt, it is taken to be an oppression, and ordered the creditor, at his own expence, to discharge the bankrupt out of custody. 2 Will. Rep. 394. But vide ante, & post.

But if such creditor will waive any benefit under the statute, and stay a reasonable time, and there is an improbability of the bankrupt's being able to gain his certificate sign'd by four-fifths in number and value of the creditors, or allowed by the court; in such case, if the creditor applies to the court, declaring his consent to waive any right or share of the bankrupt's estate under the commission, and praying, that he may sue the bankrupt; Ld. Ch. King thought it reasonable for the court to give leave to such creditor to proceed at law against the bankrupt for his debt. 2 Will. Rep. 395.

The stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 7. extends not to debts due to a bankrupt as executor, but it is for this particular reason, because they are appropriated to pay testator's debts; and if they were assigned it would be a wrong, viz. a devastavit; and it being objected, that it extends not to debts due to the bankrupt jointly with another, it was answered by Ld. Ch. J. Parker, in delivering the opinion of the court, that the case cited for that purpose from Lev. 17. is not determined. Will. Rep. 254. Gilb. Ca. 323.

If a bankrupt has a certificate, and an action be brought against him afterwards for a debt precedent to the statute, he may plead his certificate upon the roll, and so prevent a judgment from being entered up afterwards; but having neglected so to do, it was his own default: that a court of equity is not to relieve either his pleading, or his want of a plea, or no proper plea put in in time, nor could he be relieved on an audita querela; because he had an opportunity, and might have pleaded his certificate before the judgment was entered; and upon producing such precedents where bankrupts had been relieved against judgments obtained against them, they did not come up to the case in question; and the petition was dismissed. 2 Vern. 696, 697.

Per Lord C. Talbot; Though a creditor of a bankrupt under 20*l.* is by the last act excluded from assent or dissent to the certificate, yet as he is affected by the consequence of allowing the certificate, he hath right to petition, and shew any fraud against allowing the certificate. 7 Vin. Abr. 134. pl. 18.

A question was, concerning the form of certificates on the late act; but per Lord C. Parker, the commissioners are to certify one day, that the bankrupt has in all things conformed, &c. and then the next day, the creditors certify on the same parchment their consent, at the foot of which the commissioners are to certify that the creditors had consented, according to the terms of the act. 7 Vin. Abr. 132. pl. 9.

The defendant and his partner in trade had a joint commission of bankruptcy taken out against them, under which they obtained a certificate. The plaintiff was a separate creditor, and had obtained a judgment before the commission or act of bankruptcy; and having now the body of the defendant in execution, the court was moved to discharge him, upon the authority of Howard v. Poole, where it was held, that a separate creditor might come in under a joint commission; and also on Eq. Caf. Abr. 55. 2 Vern. 707. 2 Will. Rep. 500. and the court discharged him accordingly. 2 Sira. 1157.

If there be two partners, and one of them becomes bankrupt, and on a separate commission being sued out against him, his certificate is allowed; this does not only discharge the bankrupt of what he owed separately, but also of what he owed jointly, and on the partnership account; because, by the act of parliament, the bankrupt, upon making a full discovery, and obtaining his certificate, is to be discharged of all debts. Now, as the debts he owes jointly with another are equally his debts as what he owes on his separate account, consequently he is to be discharged of both his joint and separate debts. And so it has been determined by the judges of B. R. By the Lord Chancellor Parker. 3 Will. Rep. 24. in a note.

On a joint commission against two partners, the separate creditors, though they have taken out separate commissions, shall yet be at liberty to come in to oppose the allowing of the certificate. 3 Will. Rep. 23.

Where

Where two partners are bankrupts, and a joint commission is taken out against them, if they obtain an allowance of their certificate, this will bar as well their separate as their joint creditors. 3 Will. Rep. 24.

The statute 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. is general, and takes no notice of separate commissions; and a discharge under a separate commission has been determined to be a discharge of debts owing under the joint trade: before the statute 10 Ann. cap. 15. if there were two partners, and only one party became bankrupt, and a separate commission was taken out against him; there was no doubt but the discharge of that bankrupt, discharged him from all debts which he owed in his joint as well as private capacity; but the great question in that case was, whether by such discharge of the bankrupt, the partner of such bankrupt should likewise be discharged from such debts as he was discharged of; and therefore that statute has enacted, that such partner shall not be discharged; though if a joint debt is discharged by a separate commission, there can be no question but a joint commission will discharge a separate debt.

Bankrupts concealing or embezzling goods, to the value of 20 l. are guilty of felony. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Affidavit of a debt to make the party a bankrupt.

A. B. of, &c. maketh oath that C. D. of, &c. is truly and justly indebted to him this deponent (one of the creditors) in the sum of 100 l. and upwards; and that he is become a bankrupt within the meaning of some or one of the statutes made against bankrupts, as this deponent believes.

Jurat' die, & coram, &c.

A. B.

As to the form of the petition to the Chancellor, 'tis a matter of course, prepared by the clerk at the office, therefore 'tis not necessary to set it forth.

A bond to the Lord Chancellor on granting the commission.

K Now all men by these presents, That I A. B. of, &c. am held and firmly bound to the right honourable Robert Lord Henley, Baron of, &c. Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, in two hundred pounds of good and lawful money of this kingdom, to be paid to the said Lord Chancellor, or to his certain attorney, his executors, administrators and assigns; for which payment well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators, firmly by these presents sealed with my seal. Dated this day of, &c. in the year of the reign of the Lord George the Third, &c. and in the year of our Lord, &c.

The Condition of this obligation is such, That if the above bound A. B. do and shall before the major part of the commissioners to be appointed in a commission of bankrupt against C. D. of, &c. prove that the said C. D. is justly indebted unto the said A. B. in the sum of 100 l. And in like manner prove that the said C. D. is become a bankrupt within some or one of the statutes made against bankrupts; then this obligation to be void, or else to remain, &c.

Form of a commission of bankrupt.

G EORGE the Third, by the grace of God, king of Great Britain, &c. To our trusty and well beloved R. C. H. S. H. B. I. T. I. C. &c. greeting. Whereas we are informed that C. D. of, &c. using and exercising the trade of, &c. by way of bargaining, exchange, bartery, &c. seeking his living by buying and selling, did about six months since become bankrupt within the several statutes made against bankrupts, to the intent to defraud and hinder A. B. of, &c. and other his creditors of their just debts and duties to them due and owing: We therefore minding the due execution as well of the statutes touching order for bankrupts made in the parliament, begun and holden at Westminster, the day, &c. in the thirteenth year of the reign of Elizabeth queen of England made and provided, as of the statute made in the parliament, begun and holden at Westminster, the day, &c. in the first year of king James of England, &c. intituled, An act, &c. And also of the statute made in the parliament, begun and holden, &c. in the twenty-first year of the said king James of England, &c. And also of the statute made in the parliament, holden, &c. in the fourth year of the reign of her late majesty queen Anne, intituled, &c. And also of the statute made, &c. in the fifth year of the reign, &c. Upon trust of and in the wisdom and fidelity which we have conceived in you, do by these presents, assign, appoint, constitute and ordain you our special commissioners for the purpose aforesaid, giving full power and authority unto you, or four or three of you, to proceed according to the said statutes, and every or any of them, not only concerning the said bankrupt, his body, lands and tenements, goods, chattels, debts, and other things whatsoever; but also concerning all other persons, who by concealment, claim, or otherwise do or shall offend touching the premises, or any part thereof, contrary to the intent and meaning of the said statutes, or any of them: and to do and execute all and every thing and things whatsoever, as well for and towards satisfaction and payment of the said creditors, as towards and for all other intents and purposes, according to the ordinances and provisions of the same statutes; willing and commanding you, four or three of you, whereof, &c. to proceed to the execution of this our commission, according to the true intent and meaning of the said statutes, with all diligence and effect. Witness our self at Westminster, the day, &c. in the, &c. year of our reign.

Form of a bankrupt's certificate.

To the right honourable Robert Lord Henley, Baron of, &c. Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

W E R. C. H. S. H. B. &c. the major part of the commissioners assigned and authorized in and by a commission of bankrupt awarded against C. D. of, &c. bearing date at Westminster, the day of, &c. last past, having begun to execute the said commission, and found that the said C. D. became a bankrupt before the date and suing out of the said commission, within the true intent and meaning of some or one of the statutes made against bankrupts, do humbly certify to your lordship that the said C. D. did on, &c. surrender himself to us, and submit himself to be examined on oath before us, from time to time, and in all things to conform himself to an act made in the fourth and fifth years of her late majesty queen Anne, intituled, An act to prevent frauds frequently committed by bankrupts, &c. And to the several other statutes made against bankrupts: whereupon and for the better discovery of the said bankrupt's estate, and putting in execution the said acts, we the said R. C. H. S. H. B. &c. have had several meetings for the examination of the said C. D. and caused due notice to be published in the Gazette of the time and place when and where we intended to finish his said examination, to the intent that the creditors of the said C. D. might be heard against the making of this present certificate, and also admitted to prove their debts; and several creditors having proved their debts, and none shewn any cause against the making of this certificate: We do therefore further certify to your lordship, that the said C. D. hath upon such examination made a discovery of his estate and effects, and in all things conformed himself according to the direction of the said late acts; and that there doth not appear to us any reason to doubt the truth of such discovery, or that the same is not a full discovery of all the estate and effects of the said C. D. And the rather, for that the persons who have signed this certificate, testifying their consent to the same, are full four parts in five, in number and value, of the creditors of the said C. D. who have duly proved their said debts. Witness our hands and seals, &c.

Bargain and Sale. Is an instrument whereby the property of lands and tenements is for valuable consideration granted and transferred from one person to another: it is called a real contract upon a valuable consideration, for passing of lands, tenements and hereditaments, by deed indented and inrolled. 2 Inst. 672. Accomp. Conv. 1 Vol. 62.

For the more clearly comprehending the law under this head, it will be proper to consider,

I. What things may be bargained and sold.

II. By whom, to whom, and by what words a bargain and sale may be made.

III. Of the consideration and inrollment of a bargain and sale.

IV. Of the manner of pleading bargains and sales.

I. All things, for the most part, that are grantable by deed in any other way, are grantable by bargain and sale; and lands, rents, advowsons, tithes, &c. may be granted by it, in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, &c. 1 Rep. 176. 11 Rep. 25.

Any freehold or inheritance in possession, reversion or remainder, upon an estate for years, or life, or in tail, may be bargained and sold, but the deed shall be inrolled. 2 Co. 54. Dyer 309. 2 Inst. 671.

But if tenant for life bargains and sells his land by deed inrolled, it will be a forfeiture of his estate. 4 Leon. 251.

But a man seised of a freehold may bargain and sell for years, and this shall be executed by the statute of uses, 27 H. 8. c. 10. but it need not be inrolled by the statute of inrollments. 8 Co. 93. 2 Rel. Abr. 204. 2 Inst. 671.

A man possessed of a term cannot bargain and sell it so as to be executed by the statute. 2 Co. 35, 36. Poph. 76.

A bargain and sale of the profit of land, is a bargain and sale of the land itself; for the profits and the land are the same thing in substance. Dyer 77. One bargain and sells all his woods, and underwoods, that have been accustomably used to be felled, growing and being in the manor of D. to hold for life; it was held, that the vendee should cut but once by this, and not again. Bro. Abr. 55.

A rent in esse may be bargained and sold, because this is a freehold within the statute; and before the statute a rent newly created might be bargained and sold, because when money, as an equivalent, was given, and ceremonies or words of law were wanting, the Chancery supplied them; but it seems, that since the statute, a rent newly created cannot be bargained and sold, because there ought to be a freehold in some other person, to be executed in cestui que use; but here can be no seisin of his rent in the bargainor, because no man can be seised of a rent in his own land, and consequently there can be no estate to be executed in the bargainee. Kelw. 85. 1 Co. 126. 1 And. 327. 1 Jones 179.

If A. by indenture inrolled bargains and sells lands to B. and his heirs, with a way over other lands of A. this is void as to the way; for nothing but an use passes by the deed, and there can be no use of a thing not in esse, as a way, common, &c. before they are created. Cro. Jac. 189.

II. As to the persons by whom and to whom bargains and sales may be made, it is to be premised, that

The king, and all other persons that cannot be seised to a use, cannot bargain and sell, for at Common law, when a man had sold his land for money without giving livery, the use only passed in equity, and this is now executed and becomes a bargain and sale by the statute; but antecedent to any such execution there must be a use well raised, which cannot be without a person capable of being seised to a use, which the king is not, there being no means to compel him to perform the use or trust; for the Chancery has only a delegated power from the king over the consciences of his subjects; and the king is the universal judge of property, and ought to be perfectly indifferent, and not to take upon him the particular defence of any man's estate as a trustee. Bro. Feoffment to Uses 33. Hard. 468. Poph. 72.

If tenant in tail bargains and sells his land in fee, this passes an estate determinable upon the life of the tenant in tail; for at Common law the use could not be granted of any greater estate than the party had in him; now tenant in tail had an inheritance in him, but he could dispose of it only during his own life; and therefore when he sells the use in fee, cestui que use has a kind of an inheritance, yet determining within the compass of a life; and the statute executes it in the same manner as he has the use, and consequently he will have some properties of a tenant in fee, and some of a tenant for life only; but if tenant for life bargains and sells in fee, this passes only an estate for life, for he could not pass the use of an estate for life to the bargainee, and the statute executes the possession as the party has the use. 10 Co. 96, 98. 1 Sund. 260, 261. 1 Co. 14, 15. Co. Lit. 151.

A man may bargain and sell to a corporation, for they may take a use, though the money be given by the governors in their natural capacity. 10 Co. 24, 34. 2 Rel. Abr. 788.

A man may bargain and sell to his son; but then the consideration of money ought to be expressed, and it ought to have all the other circumstances of a bargain and sale; but this shall operate as a covenant to stand seised, if there be none but the consideration of natural love and affection expressed. 7 Co. 40. 2 Co. 24. Cro. Eliz. 394. 1 Vent. 137. 1 Lev. 56. But

If a son and heir bargains and sells the inheritance of his father, this is void, because he hath no right to transfer; the same law of a release. Kelw. 84. Co. Lit. 265.

If an infant bargains and sells his land by deed indented and inrolled, yet he may plead non-age; for notwithstanding the statute the bargainee claims by the deed as at Common law, which was, and therefore is still defeasible by non-age. 2 Inst. 673.

If a husband seised of lands in right of his wife, or tenant in tail bargains and sells the trees growing on the lands, lands, and dies before severance, the bargainee cannot afterwards cut them down and take them away. Mo. 41.

If a wife joins with her husband in a bargain and sale by deed indented and inrolled, of her lands, yet it shall not bind her, for the wife cannot be examined by any court without writ, and there is no writ allowed in this case, which is for the better security of wives, who are by our law intirely subjected to the will of the husband. 2 Inst. 673.

If there be two jointenants, and one of them makes a bargain and sale of his own estate in fee, and then the other dies, the other moiety shall survive to the bargainor; for since the freehold is in the bargainor the inheritance continues; but if such jointenant had bargained and sold solum statum suum in fee, though he died before inrollment; yet if the deed were afterwards inrolled, the moiety would not survive, but would pass to the bargainee. Cro. Jac. 53. Co. Lit. 186. 1 Bulst. 3.

As to the words necessary.

The very words bargain and sell are not of absolute necessity in this deed, for other words equivalent will suffice; as if a man seised of lands in fee by the words alien or grant, sell the same to another, the deed being made in consideration of money, and indented and inrolled, will be an effectual bargain and sale. In short, whatever words upon valuable consideration would have raised an use of any lands, &c. at Common law, the same would amount to a bargain and sale within this act; as if a man by deed, &c. for a valuable consideration covenants to stand seised to the use of another, &c. 2 Inst. 672. Cro. Jac. 210. Mo. 34. Cro. Eliz. 166.

At Common law land might be bargained and sold by words only, for it was the consideration that in equity raised the use, but since the statute of 27 Hen. 8. c. 19. lands cannot pass without indenture. 2 Inst. 675. Dyer 229. Poph. 48. Dalt. 63.

Bargains and sales of lands are to be in writing indented, and inrolled in one of the courts at Westminster, or in the county where the lands lie, before the Custos Rotularum, justices of the peace, &c. And the inrolment shall be made within six months after the date of the deeds. Stat. 27 H. 8. cap. 16. Vide Tab. 10 Stat. iii. Register.

III. As to the consideration and inrolment.

There must be a good consideration given, or at least said to be given, for lands in these deeds: and for a competent sum of money, is a good consideration; but not the general words for divers considerations, &c. Mod. Ca. 777. Where money is mentioned to be paid in a bargain and sale, and in truth no money is paid, some of our books tell us this may be a good bargain and sale; because no averment will lie against that which is expressly affirmed by the deed, except it comes to be questioned whether fraudulent or no, upon the statute against fraudulent deeds. Dyer 90. If no consideration of money is expressed in a deed of bargain and sale, it may be supplied by an averment that it was made for money: and after a verdict on a trial, it shall be intended that evidence was given at the trial of money paid. 1 Vent. 108. If lands are bargained and sold for money only, the deed is to be inrolled according to the statute; but if it be in consideration of money, and natural affection, &c. the estate will pass without it. 2 Inst. 672. 2 Lrv. 56. But a bargain and sale of lands for money may not be made to one man, to the use of another, but only to the bargainee. A man bargains and sells his land for money by deed inrolled to another, to hold to the bargainee in fee, to the use of the bargainor for life, &c. or to the use of any other, this limitation of the uses is void, and it shall be to the use of the bargainee in fee, because the consideration and sale implies the use to be to him only. Benl. Rep. 61.

If a man, in consideration of so much money to be paid at a day to come, bargains and sells, the use passes presently, and after the day the party has an action for the money, for it is a sale, be the money paid presently or hereafter. Dyer 337. a.

With respect to the inrollment.

If the deed of bargain and sale be not inrolled within the six months (which are to be reckoned after twenty-eight days to the month, the day of the date taken exclusively) it is of no force; so that if a man bargains and sells his land to me, and the trees upon it, although the trees might be sold by deed without inrolment, yet in this case, if the deed be not inrolled, it will be good neither for the trees nor the land. Dyer 90. 7 Rep. 40. 2 Bulst. 8. A bargain and sale of a manor to which an advowson is appendant by indenture not inrolled, will not pass the advowson or the manor, for it was to go as appendant. Bro. Cas. 240. And if two jointenants are of land, and one of them bargains and sells it all by such a deed indented, and then the other jointenant dieth, and the deed is inrolled; here but a moiety of the land shall pass by this deed. 2 Cro. 53. A. bargains and sells his land to B. and his heirs, by indenture inrolled, but before the inrolment B. bargains and sells all his estate to C. and the deed was after inrolled; adjudged, that nothing did pass by the deed from B. to C. 2 Cro. 52. But in some cases, where a deed will not enure by way of bargain and sale, by reason of some defect therein, it may be good to another purpose. Dyer 90.

If two bargains and sales are made of the same land, to two several persons, and the last deed is first inrolled; if afterwards the first deed is also inrolled within six months, the first buyer shall have the land; for when the deed is inrolled, the bargainee is seised of the land from the delivery of the deed, and the inrolment shall relate to it. Hob. 165. Wood's Inst. 259. Neither the death of the bargainor or bargainee, before the inrolment of the deed of bargain and sale, will hinder the passing of the estate to the bargainee: but the estate of freehold is in the bargainor, until the deed is inrolled; so that the bargainee cannot bring any action of trespass before entry had: though 'tis said he may surrender, assign, &c. 2 Cro. 52. 1 Inst. 147. A bargainee shall have rent which incurs after the bargain and sale, and before the inrolment. Sid. 310. Upon the inrolment of the deed, the estate settles ab initio, by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16. And the statute of inrolment says, that it shall not veil, except the deed be inrolled; and when it is inrolled, the estate vests presently, by the statute of uses. 1 Davu. Abr. 696. Every deed may be inrolled at Common law, for its security. If several seal a deed of bargain and sale, and but one acknowledge it, and thereupon the deed is inrolled; this is a good inrolment within the statute. Style 462. None can make a bargain and sale of lands, that hath not the actual possession thereof at the time of the sale; if he hath not the possession, the deed must be sealed upon the land, to make it good. 2 Inst. 672. 1 Lill. 290.

Houses and lands in London, and any city, &c. are exempted out of the statute of inrolments. 2 Inst. 676. 1 Nels. Abr. 342. But the general method now used to convey estates, is, by lease and release, whereby the possession and the fee immediately pass without inrolment.

IV. In regard to the manner of pleading a bargain and sale, it is to be observed, that in pleading these deeds, the deed itself must be shown under seal. 1 Inst. 225. For though the inrolment being on record is of undoubted veracity, being the transaction of the court; yet the private deed has not the sanction of a record, though publicly acknowledged and inrolled; for it might have been falsly and fraudulently dated, or ill executed. Co. Lit. 225. b. 251. b. 2 Inst. 673. 4 Co. 71. 5 Co. 53. 2 Rd. Rep. 119.

It must likewise be set forth, that the inrolment was within six months, or secundum formam statuti, &c.

In debt for rent, the plaintiff declared upon a lease made by a stranger, who after bargained and sold the reversion to the plaintiff per indenturam debito modo inrotulata in curia Cancellaria; and after verdict for the plaintiff judgment was arrested, because it was not alleged, that the inrolment was within six months, nor secundum formam statuti, and debito modo will not help it, for it might be so at Common law. Allen 19. Carter 221. Style 34. S. C.

* If a man makes a lease for years the 10th of May, and afterwards bargains and sells his lands, and antedates the deed by making it the 10th of April, and the inrollment is also as of that time, the lessee is without remedy, for he cannot aver against the record. See Owen 138. 1 Leon. 183. 2 Leon. 121, 183. 3 Leon. 175.

In pleading a bargain and sale, the party ought regularly to aver payment of the money. 1 Leon. 170. See Moor 504.

In replevin, the case upon the pleadings was, that the defendant made a title under bargain and sale, inrolled within six months, and the statute of uses, and did not shew that it was in consideration of money; but adjudged, that after a verdict, as this case was, it shall be intended, that evidence was given at the trial of money paid. 1 Vent. 108.

The party that claims by any bargain and sale, must shew in what court the deed is inrolled, because he must shew all things in certain that make out his title; otherwise his adversary would be put to an infinite search before he could traverse with security. Yelv. 213. Cro. Jac. 291. S. C.

Debt upon a lease for years, in which the plaintiff declared, that by indenture, bearing date the 27th of Nov. G. D. in consideration of so much money, bargained and sold the reversion to him in fee, which indenture was inrolled such a day, according to the statute; and because he did not shew in what court it was inrolled, the plea was held ill; for 'tis unreasonable to put the lessee to search the courts at Westminster, and the rolls of the clerks of the peace. Yelv. 313.

The manner of inrolling a bargain and sale.

BE it remembered, That on the . . . day, &c. here in the same term before the lord the king at Westminster, came A. B. of, &c. in the county of M. gentleman, in his proper person, and brought here into the court of the said lord the now king, before the king himself at Westminster, a certain indenture, which he hath acknowledged to be his deed: and he desired that that indenture in the court of the lord the now king before the said lord the king at Westminster, might be of record inrolled: and it is inrolled in form following, that is to say, This indenture, made, &c. (And so inrol it verbatim :) The term must be at the top of the roll.

Afterwards is indorsed on the back of the deed,

Inrolled in the court of the lord the king, before the king himself at Westminster, of the term of the Holy Trinity, &c. in the first year of the reign of the lord George the Third now king of Great Britain, &c.

Barkary, (barkaria, corticulus) A tan-house or place to keep bark in for the use of tanners. New Book Entr. tit. Affix, Corp. Polit. 2.

Baron, (bars) Is a French word, and hath divers significations here in England. First, it is taken for a degree of nobility next to a viscount. Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 8. says, they are called barones, quasi robur belli. In which signification it agrees with other nations, where baronia are as much as provincie: so that barons are such as have the government of provinces, as their fee holden of the king; some having greater, and others less authority within their territories. It is probable, that formerly in this kingdom, all those were called barons that had such feignories as we now call courts-baron; as they are at this day called seigneurs in France, who have any manor or lordship: and soon after the conquest, all such came to parliament, and sat as peers in the lords house. But when by experience it appeared that the parliament was too much thronged by these barons, who were very numerous, it was in the reign of King John ordained that none but the barones majores should come to parliament, who, for their extraordinary wisdom, interest, or quality, should be summoned by writ. After this, men observing the estate of nobility to be but casual, and depending merely upon the king's will, they obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male, who were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now by inheritance those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create at his pleasure. Nevertheless there are still barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent: and those barons who were first by writ, may now also justly be called barons by prescription, for that they and their ancestors have continued barons beyond the memory of man. The calling up by writ is at this day seldom practised unless it be to summon the son of some lord to parliament, in the life-time of his ancestor; for creation by letters patent is almost altogether in use. 2 Inst. 48. The original of barons by writ, Camden refers to King Hen. 3. and barons by letters patent, or creation, commenced 13 R. 2. Camb. Brit. pag. 109. To these is added a third kind of barons, called barons by tenure, which are some of our ancient barons; and likewise the bishops, who by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, always had place in the lords house of parliament, as barons by creation. Seager of Honour, lib. 4. cap. 13.

There are also barons by office; as the barons of the Exchequer, barons of the Cinque Ports, &c. of which you may read under their proper titles. In antient records, the word baron included all the nobility of England, because regularly all noblemen were barons, though they had a higher dignity; and therefore the charter of King Ed. 1. which is an exposition of what relates to barons in Magna Charta, concludes testibus archiepiscopis, episcopis, baronibus, &c. And the great council of the nobility, when they consisted, besides earls and barons, of dukes, marquesses, &c. were all comprehended under the name of le conseil de baronage. Glanv. cap. 4. These barons have given them two ensigns to remind them of their duties; first, a long robe of scarlet, in respect whereof they are accounted de magni robore regis; and secondly, they are girt with a sword, that they should ever be ready to defend their king and country. 2 Inst. 5. A baron is vir notabilis & principalis: and the chief burghesses of London were in former times barons, before there was a lord mayor, as appears by the city seal, and their antient charters.—Henricus 3. Rex. Sciatis nos concessisse & hac presenti charta charta nostra confirmasse baronibus nostris de civitate nostra London quod eligant sibi mayor de seipfis singulis annis, &c. Spelm. Gloss. The Earl palatines and marches of England had antiently their barons under them; but no barons but those who held immediately of the king were peers of the realm. 'Tis certain the king's tenants were called barons; as we may find in Mat. Paris. and other writers: and in days of old, all men were stiled barons; but this, We take it, was only a term in the law, not a title of nobility.

Barony, (baronia) Is that honour and territory which gives title to a baron; comprehending not only the fees and lands of temporal barons, but of bishops also who have two estates; one as they are spiritual persons, by reason of their spiritual revenues and promotions; the other grew from the bounty of our English kings, whereby they have baronies and lands added to their spiritual livings and preferments. The baronies belonging to bishops are by some called regalia, because ex sola liberalitate regum eis olim concessa, & a regibus in feudum tenentur. Blount. Barony, Bracton says, (lib. 2. cap. 34.) is a right indivisible; and therefore if an inheritance be to be divided among coparceners, though some capital messuages may be divided, yet si capitale messuagium sit caput comitatus vel caput baroniae, they may not be parcelled. In some cases a barony may be aliened, or entailed, and the honour pass accordingly. Sed qu. In antient times thirteen knights fees and a quartef made a tenure per baroniam, which amounted to 400 marks per annum.

Baronet, (baronetus) Is a dignity or degree of honour, which hath precedence before all knights, as knights of the bath, knights bachelors, &c. except Bannerets, made sub vexillis regis in exercitu regali in aperto bello, & ipso rege personaliter presente. This order of baronets was instituted by King James I. in the year 1611. with such precedence as aforesaid, and other privileges, &c. Their number at first was but two hundred; but now they are without limitation: they are created by patent with an habendum sibi & heredibus masculis, &c. And their dignity, on its first institution, was a kind of purchased honour, by men of great estates, qualified for titles.

Baron and feme, Are husband and wife, by our law; and they are adjudged but one person. Under this head must be considered,

I. The legality of the marriage, and the nature of marriage contracts.

II. What acts and agreements of the wife before marriage bind the husband.

III. Of the husband's power over the person of his wife, and of her remedy for any injury done to her by him, and of actions by him for criminal conversation with her.

IV. Of his interest in her estate and property.

V. Where the husband shall be liable to the wife's debts contracted before marriage; and therein of a wife that is executrix or administratrix.

VI. Of her contracts during marriage, and how far the husband is bound by such contracts.

VII. Where she alone shall be punished for a criminal offence, and where the husband shall be answerable for what she does, in a civil action.

VIII. What acts done by the husband, or wife alone, or jointly with the wife, will bind the wife; and therein of her agreement or disagreement to such acts after the death of the husband.

IX. Where the husband and wife must join in bringing actions.

X. Where they must be jointly sued.

XI. Where a wife shall be considered as a feme sole.

XII. Of divorce, separate maintenance, and pin-money.

I. Marriage is a compact between a man and a woman, for the procreation and education of children, which is to continue during both their lives; and it may be celebrated in a private house as well as in a church. 1 New Abr. 283.

Before the time of pope Innocent the Third, there was not any solemnization of marriage in the church; but the man came to the house where the woman inhabited, and led her home to his own house, which was all the ceremony then used. Moor 170. Per Goldingham, Doctor of the Civil Law, arguendo.

The age of consent to a marriage in an infant male is fourteen, and in a female twelve; but they may marry before; and if they agree to it when they attain these ages, the marriage is good; but they cannot disagree before then; also if one of them be above the age of consent, and the other under such age, the party so above the age may as well disagree as the other; for both must be bound or neither. Co. Lit. 33, 78, 79. 2 Inst. 454. Inst. 88, 89. 6 Co. 22. 7 Co. 43. 1 Rel. Abr. 340.

A man within the age of fourteen (his age of consent to marry) takes a woman to wife, they are baron and feme, so that he may have trespass de muliere abducta cum bonis viri, &c.

By the statute 32 Hen. 8. cap. 38. it is enacted, "That no reservation or prohibition (God's law excepted) shall trouble or impeach any marriage without the Levitical degrees, and that no person, of what estate, degree or condition soever he be, shall be admitted in any of the spiritual courts within the King's realm, or any his Grace's other lands and dominions, to any process, plea or allegation contrary to the statute." For the exposition of this statute, see Co. Lit. 24. a. 2 Inst. 684. See 25 Hen. 8. c. 22. 28 Hen. 8. c. 7. 28 Hen. 8. c. 16. Before which the ecclesiastical courts had the sole jurisdiction of matrimonial causes. See 13 Ed. 1. the Stat. Circumspete agatis. Illob. 181. Co. Lit. 235. 2 Inst. 683, 684. See Vaugh. 214. But if a man marries his cousin within the degrees, or his mother or sister, they continue husband and wife till a sentence of divorce be pronounced. 1 Rel. Abr. 340, 357.

By 6 & 7 Will. 3. cap. 6. By 7 & 8 Will. 3. cap. 35. By 10 Ann. cap. 19. Certain penalties were inflicted on parsons, &c. marrying persons without publication of bans or licence, as also on the man so married. And by 26 Geo. 2. cap. 33.

All bans of matrimony shall be published in an audible manner in the parish church, or in some publick chapel, in which bans of matrimony have been usually published, belonging to such parish or chapelry wherein the persons to be married dwell; upon three Sundays preceding the solemnization of marriage, during the time of morning service (or of evening service, if there be no morning service in such church or chapel upon any of those Sundays) immediately after the second lesson: and when the persons to be married dwell in divers parishes or chapelries, the bans shall be published in the church or chapel where each of them dwell; and where both or either of the persons to be married dwell in any extraparochial place having no church or chapel wherein bans have been usually published, then the bans shall be published in the parish church or chapel belonging to some parish or chapelry adjoining to such extraparochial place.

And in all cases where bans shall have been published, the marriage shall be solemnized in one of the parish churches or chapels where such bans have been published.

Sec. 2. No parson, vicar, minister, or curate, shall be obliged to publish bans of matrimony between any persons, unless the persons to be married shall seven days before the time required for the first publication of such bans, cause to be delivered to such parson, &c. a notice in writing of their christian and surnames, and of their respective abodes within such parish, chapelry, or extraparochial place, and of the time during which they have dwelt in such houses respectively.

Sec. 3. No parson, &c. solemnizing marriages between persons, both or one of whom shall be under the age of 21 years, after bans published, shall be punishable by ecclesiastical censures, for solemnizing such marriages without consent of parents or guardians, whose consent is required by law, unless such parson, &c. have notice of the dissent of such parents or guardians. And in case such parents or guardians, or one of them, publicly cause to be declared, in the church or chapel where the bans shall be so published, at the time of such publication, their dissent to such marriage, such publication of bans shall be void.

Sec. 4. No licence of marriage shall be granted by any person having authority to grant such licences, to solemnize any marriage in any other church or chapel, than in the parish church or publick chapel belonging to the parish or chapelry, within which the usual place of abode of one of the persons to be married shall have been for four weeks, immediately before the granting of such licence; or where both or either of the parties to be married dwell in an extraparochial place having no church or chapel wherein bans have been usually published, then in the parish church or chapel belonging to some parish or chapelry adjoining to such extraparochial place.

Sec. 5. All parishes where there shall be no parish church or chapel, or none wherein divine service shall be usually celebrated every Sunday, may be deemed extraparochial places for the purposes of this act.

Sec. 6. Nothing herein contained shall deprive the archbishop of Canterbury and his officers, of the right which hath hitherto been used in virtue of 25 Hen. 8. cap. 21. of granting special licences to marry at any convenient time or place.

Sec. 7. No surrogate deputed by any ecclesiastical judge, who hath power to grant licences of marriage, shall grant any such licence, before he hath taken an oath before the said judge faithfully to execute his office according to law to the best of his knowledge, and hath given security by his bond in the sum or 100*l.* to the bishop of the diocese, for the faithful execution of his office.

Sec. 8. If any person shall solemnize matrimony in any other place than a church or public chapel, where bans have been usually published, unless by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury; or shall solemnize matrimony without publication of bans, unless licence of marriage be first obtained from some person having authority to grant the same; every person wilfully so offending and convicted shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and be transported to some of his Majesty's plantations in America, for 14 years, according to the laws for transportation of felons. And all marriages solemnized in any other places than a church or public chapel, unless by special licence as aforesaid, or without publication of bans, or licence of marriage from a person having authority to grant the same, shall be void.

Sec. 9. All prosecutions for such felony shall be commenced within three years after the offence committed.

Sec. 10. After the solemnization of any marriage under a publication of bans, it shall not be necessary in support of such marriage to give any proof of the dwelling of the parties in the respective parishes or chapelries wherein the bans are published; or where the marriage is by licence, it shall not be necessary to give any proof that the usual place of abode of one of the parties, for four weeks as aforesaid, was in the parish church or chapelry where the marriage was solemnized; nor shall any evidence in either of the said cases be received to prove the contrary in any suit touching the validity of such marriage.

Sec. 11. All marriages solemnized by licence, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of 21 years, which shall be had without the consent of the father of such of the parties so under age, if living, or if dead, of the guardians of the person of the party so under age, or one of them; and in case there be no such guardian, then of the mother, if living and unmarried; or if there be no mother living and unmarried, then of a guardian of the person appointed by the court of Chancery, shall be void.

Sec. 12. In case any such guardian or mother, or any of them, whose consent is made necessary, shall be non compos mentis, or beyond the seas, or shall refuse their consent to the marriage, it shall be lawful for any person desirous of marrying, in any of the before mentioned cases, to apply by petition to the Lord Chancellor, who is hereby empowered to proceed upon such petition in a summary way; and in case the marriage proposed appear proper, the Lord Chancellor shall judicially declare the same to be so by an order of court, and such order shall be deemed as good as if the guardian, or mother of the person so petitioning, had consented to such marriage.

Sec. 13. In no case shall any suit or proceeding be had in any ecclesiastical court, to compel a celebration of any marriage in facie ecclesiae, by reason of any contract of matrimony, whether per verba de presenti, or per verba de futuro, entered into after the 25th of March 1754.

Sec. 14. The churchwardens and chapelwardens of every parish or chapelry shall provide books of vellum, or durable paper, in which all marriages respectively, there published or solemnized, shall be registered, &c.

Sec. 15. All marriages shall be solemnized in the presence of two witnesses, besides the minister who shall celebrate the same. And immediately after the celebration of every marriage, an entry thereof shall be made in such register, in manner and form as by the said act is prescribed.

Sec. 16. If any person shall with intent to elude this act, wilfully insert, or cause to be inserted, in the register book of such parish or chapelry, any false entry of any thing relating to any marriage; or falsly make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or cause to be falsly made, &c. or assist in falsly making, &c. any such entry in such register; or falsly make, &c. or cause to be falsly made, &c. or assist in falsly making, &c. any such licence of marriage as aforesaid; or publish as true any such false, altered, forged, or counterfeited register, or a copy thereof, or any such false, &c. licence of marriage, knowing such register or licence of marriage respectively to be false, &c. or if any person shall wilfully destroy, or cause to be destroyed, any register-book of marriages, or any part of such register-book, with intent to avoid any marriage, or to subject any person to any of the penalties of this act; every person so offending, and being convicted, shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and shall suffer death.

Sec. 17. This act shall not extend to the marriages of any of the royal family.

Sec. 18. Nothing in this act shall extend to Scotland; nor to any marriages amongst Quakers, or amongst persons professing the Jewish religion, where both the parties to such marriage shall be Quakers, or persons professing the Jewish religion; nor to any marriage solemnized beyond the seas.

By the 13 Sec. of this statute the law for enforcing contracts in the spiritual court is altered.

But in these causes the temporal courts have given a remedy by action, for the breach of promise. Cro. Eliz. 79. Carter 273. In an action against husband and wife, the plaintiff declared that he promised to marry the defendant's wife whilst sole, and that she the same time promised to take him for her husband, and averred that he tendered himself, and that she refused, &c. It was objected, that marriage was no advancement to a man, though it was to a woman; also that no time was laid when this agreement was to be executed; but the court over-ruled both the objections. Carth. 467. Harriſon v. Cage et ux. 1 Salk. 24. S. C. See 2 Salk. 437, 438. If a man and an infant at the age of fifteen, promise to intermarry, and the man refuses, and after marries another, she may, notwithstanding her infancy, maintain an action; for this is a contract which she may at these years enter into, being for her advantage; and though it may be voidable as to her, yet it is good against the man, who must be presumed to have acted with as much caution as if he had contracted with a person of full age. Trin. 5 Geo. 2. adjudged between Holt and Ward. Note; By the statute of frauds and perjuries, these contracts must be reduced into writing. That is contracts in consideration of marriage (if not to be performed within one year). But mutual promises to marry, each are not within the statute of frauds and perjuries. A wife cannot be a witness against or for her husband, nor he against or for her, (except in case of high treason), because they are duae animae in una Carne. 1 Nels. Abr. 349. At common law a man could neither in possession, reversion or remainder, limit an estate to his wife; but by Stat. 27 H. 8. A man may covenant with other persons to stand seised to the use of his wife; or may make any other conveyance to her use, but he may not covenant with his wife to stand seised to her use, for they are one person in law. A man may devise lands by will to his wife, because the devise doth not take effect till after his death. Co. Litt. 112.

G g

A wife cannot devise lands to her husband: for a feme covert cannot make a will, as she is so entirely under the power of her husband, that what she doth cannot be called her will. Nelf. Abr. 347.

If a man takes A. S. to wife, per duress, though marriage be solemnized in facie ecclesiæ, yet it is merel void; and they are not baron and feme, because there is not any consent; and it cannot be a marriage without consent. 1 Rel. Abr. 340.

II. As to the acts and agreements of the wife before marriage binding the husband.

By the marriage the husband and wife become one person in law, and therefore such an union works an extinguishment or revocation of several acts done by her before the marriage; and this not only for the benefit of the husband, but likewise of the wife, who, if she were allowed at her pleasure to rescind and break through, or confirm several acts, might be so far influenced by her husband, as to do things greatly to her disadvantage. 4 Co. 60. 5 Co. 10. Kelw. 162. Co. Lit. 55. Heil. 72. Cro. Car. 304.

But in things which would be manifestly to the prejudice of both husband and wife, the law does not make her acts void; and therefore if a feme sole makes a lease at will, or is lessee at will, and afterwards marries, the marriage is no determination of her will, so as to make the lease void; but she herself cannot without the consent of her husband determine the lease in either case 5 Co. 10.

So where a warrant of attorney was given to confess judgment to a feme sole; and the court gave leave, notwithstanding the marriage, to enter up judgment, so that the authority shall not be deemed to be revoked or countermanded, because it is for the husband's advantage; like a grant of a reversion to a feme sole, who marries before attornment, yet the tenant may attorn afterwards; otherwise if a feme sole gives a warrant of attorney, and marries, for that is to charge the husband. 1 Salk. 117, 399.

But if a feme sole makes her will, and devises her land to J. S. and afterwards marries him, and then dies, yet J. S. takes nothing by the will, because the marriage was a revocation of it; for as the law will not allow a woman under coverture to make a will, lest she should be influenced by her husband in the disposition of her estate; so for the same reason a will made by a feme sole is countermanded by the marriage, lest she should be influenced by her husband (if it continued after the coverture) to revoke it, or let it stand, as it best answered his interest. 4 Co. 60.

Agreements between baron and feme before marriage, are by the marriage generally extinguished: but if a person, in consideration of marriage, promise to leave his wife worth so much at his death, this being no duty in the life-time of the husband, is not extinguished by the Marriage. Cro. Jac. 571, 623.

A man enters into a bond to his intended wife, conditioned to leave her 1000*l.* the husband mortgaged his estate, and died, not leaving personal assets to discharge the bond; and it was decreed in equity, that though the bond was void by law, being extinguished by the marriage, yet it should be made good in equity; and that the wife might redeem and hold the land till she was satisfied her debt. 2 Vern. 480.

Also equity will set aside the intended wife's contracts, though legally executed, when they appear to have been entered into with an intent to deceive the husband, and are in derogation of the rights of marriage; as where a widow made a deed of settlement of her estate, and married a second husband, who was not privy to such settlement; and it appearing to the court, that it was in confidence of her having such estate that the husband married her, the court set aside the deed as fraudulent; so where the intended wife, the day before her marriage, entred privately into a recognizance to her brother, and it was decreed to be delivered up. See 2 Chan. Rep. 79, 81. 2 Vern. 17.

But where a widow, before her marriage with a second husband, assigned over the greatest part of her estate to trustees for children by her former husband; and though it was insisted that this was without the privy of the husband, and done with a design to cheat him, yet the court thought, that a widow might thus provide for her children before she put herself under the power of a husband; and it being proved that 8000*l.* was thus settled, and that the husband had suppressed the deed, he was decreed to pay the whole money, without directing any account. 1 Vern. 408.

A woman being married agreed with her husband, that she should have power to act as a feme sole notwithstanding that marriage; the husband died, and she married another husband, who was not privy to the settlement on the former marriage. It was decreed, that the second husband should not be bound by that settlement on the former marriage. 2 Vern. 17, 18.

A. before marriage with M. agrees with M. by deed in writing, that she, or such as she should appoint should, during the coverture, receive and dispose of the rents of her jointure, by a former husband, as she pleased. Per cur. The aforesaid agreement with the feme herself before marriage, was by the marriage extinguished. Chan. Ca. 21.

The baron before marriage articulated with the feme to make a settlement of certain lands, before the marriage should be solemnized; but they intermarried before the settlement. Then the baron died; and on a bill by the widow for an execution of the articles, it was decreed against the heir at law of the baron; who objected, that marrying before the execution of the settlement was a waiver of the articles, and the benefit of them; and she being the only party with whom they were made, her marriage with the other party before performance was a release in law. 2 Vent. 343.

Upon a treaty of marriage the man gave a bond to the woman, condition'd that if he did permit her to dispose of 100*l.* then the bond should be void. Afterwards the marriage took effect, so that the bond became void, yet this was held to be a good agreement; and the court decreed, that the husband should give bond to trustees with the same condition; it was held, that a bill may be exhibited by her prochein amy; or if trustees exhibit a bill for or on her behalf, it is good either way. 2 Freem. Rep. 205.

III. As to the power of the husband over the wife's person, &c.

By marriage the husband hath power over his wife's person; and he may correct his wife. Dalt. 284. But if he threaten to kill her, &c. she may make him find surty of the peace, by suing a writ of supplicavit out of Chancery or by preferring articles of the peace against him in the court of King's Bench, or she may apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce propter sevitiam. Crom. 28, 136. F. N. B. 80. Heil. 149. cont. 1 Sid. 113, 116. Dalt. c. 68. Lamb. 7. Crom. 133.

But a wife cannot, either by herself or her prochein amy bring a homine replegiando against her husband, for he has by law a right to the custody of her, and may, if he think fit, confine her, but he must not imprison her; if he does, it will be good cause for her to apply to the spiritual court for a divorce propter sevitiam; and the nature and proceedings in the writ de homine replegiando shew that it cannot be maintained by the wife against her husband. Prec. in Ch. 492.

With regard to actions by the husband for criminal conversation with his wife.

Licence by husband to the wife to lie with another man, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action of trespass by the husband; nor that she was a notorious lewd woman; but these matters may be given in mitigation of damages. 12 Mod. 232. On licence proved, he ought to recover, not being damnified.

If adultery be committed with another man's wife without any force, but by her own consent, though the husband may have assault and battery, and lay it vi & armis; yet they shall in that case punish him below for that very offence; for an indictment will not lie for such an assault and battery; neither shall the husband and wife join in an action at Common law; and therefore they proceed below either civilly, that is, to divorce them, or criminally, because they were not criminally prosecuted above; and the true action for the husband in such case is a ſerial action, quia the defendant uxorem rapuit, and not to lay it, per quod consortium amiſit; per Holt Ch. J and per cur. accordingly; for that the offence is not merely ſpiritual. 7 Mod. 81.

IV. Of the husband's intereſt in her eſtate, &c.

He hath likewiſe power over his wife's eſtate; and if ſhe hath a fee, he gaineth a freehold in her right; he alſo gaineth her chattels real, as terms for years, &c. and all chattels perſonal, in poſſeſſion of the wife, are the husband's: but where the wife is out of poſſeſſion, or is poſſeſſed only as executrix, or the chattels are debts and things in action, if they are not recovered by him and his wife, the husband ſhall not have them. 1 Inſt. 299, 351. Though money charged on lands, is not in nature of a choſe in action, but of rent, and is given to the husband by the intermarriage. 1 Chan. Rep. 189. The law gives the husband an abſolute power of diſpoſing of her perſonal property, no act of her's being of any force to affect or transfer that, which by the intermarriage ſhe has reſigned to the husband; but the freehold and inheritance of the wife, is ſubject to other rules and regulations; for the husband by the marriage does not become abſolute proprietor of the inheritance, but as the governor of the family is ſo far maſter of it as to receive the profits of it during her life, but has no power to make an abſolute ſale of it without her conſent. 10 Co. 42. 2 Inſt. 510 1 Sid. 11. 1 Roll. Abr. 347.

If lands be given to a man, and ſuch a woman who ſhall be his wife, the man ſhall have the whole: but if a feoffment be made to the uſe of the feoffee, and his wife that ſhall be, the wife he afterwards marries ſhall take jointly with him. 1 Rep. 101. If baron and feme are jointenants for years, the baron may diſpoſe of the whole: and if the baron hath a term in the right of his feme, he may grant over the whole. 1 Danv. 702. But he cannot diſpoſe of it by will, if he doth not ſurvive her. 1 Inſt. 46, 184. And as the husband ſurviving the wife ſhall enjoy her term, againſt her executors: ſo if the wife ſurvive her husband, ſhe ſhall have her term for years, or other chattels real again, if the husband hath not altered the property. 1 Inſt. 351. And if the husband charges the chattel real of his wife with a rent, &c. if ſhe ſurvives him, it will not bind her: for ſhe ſhall hold it diſcharged, as ſhe comes in paramount the charge.

A husband poſſeſſed of a term in his wife's right, may make a leaſe for years of the land, rendering rent to his executors or aſſigns, to commence after his death. 1 Nelf. Abr. 344. But if a leaſe be conveyed by a feme ſole, in truſt for the uſe of herſelf, if ſhe afterwards marries, it cannot be diſpoſed of by the husband: If ſhe dies, he ſhall not have it, but the executors of the wife. March 44. See 2 Vern. 270. A legacy is given to a feme ſole to be paid preſently, or at a day to come, if ſhe marry and die, before any releaſe or diſpoſal thereof by her husband; in that caſe, her executor or adminiſtrator, it has been held, ſhall have it: and if a promiſe, or bond be to feme, or the baron and feme, and the husband dies before he recovers, or releaſes the ſame, the wife, and not his executors, ſhall be intitled to it. F. N. B. 121. 7 Hen. 6. 2. Mich. 17 Jac. 1. A man and his wife covenanted by indenture, but the wife did not ſeal it; and it was held, that if the baron ſealed and delivered it in the name of the feme, it would be the deed of the wife, during the life of the husband: but if land is given to husband and wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, and the husband alone ſuffer a common recovery; this will not bind the eſtate tail, although the husband ſurvive his wife. 1 Cro. 769. 3 Rep. 5, 34.

The wife ſhall be received to defend her right, on the default of the husband, and he cannot prejudice his wife, as to her freehold and inheritance. Fent. Cent. 79. A husband cannot alien the wife's lands but by fine wherein ſhe joins; if he doth, ſhe may recover them after his death by Cui in vita. And by ſtatute, where a husband makes leaſes of his wife's lands, for twenty-one years, &c. ſhe is to be made a party, and the rent reſerved to husband and wife, and the heirs of the wife, &c. This is of leaſes of lands of the wife's inheritance. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 28. If a feme having a rent for life takes husband, the baron ſhall have action of debt for the rent incurred during the coverture, after the death of the feme. 1 Danv. 719. And arrears due in the life-time of the husband, after his death, ſhall ſurvive to the wife, if ſhe outlives him, and her adminiſtrators after her death. 2 Lut. 1151. A feme leſſee for life, rendering rent, takes husband and dies, the baron ſhall be charged in action of debt for the rent which was grown due during the coverture, becauſe he took the profits out of which the rent ought to iſſue. Keilw. 125. Raym. 6. But if ſuch a feme leſſee takes baron and dies, 'tis ſaid the baron ſhall not be charged for waſte during the coverture; for he was never leſſee. 1 Danv. 718. If a leaſe is made to baron and feme, and the husband dies, and the wife accepts of the land, though ſhe may be obliged to pay the rent, or to perform a condition on the part of the leſſor; yet ſhe is not bound to perform collateral covenants, as to do no waſte, or to repair houſes, &c. 1 Brownl. 31. But in either of theſe caſes, we conceive for waſte, &c. action on the caſe will lie.

Where a ſtatute or obligation is made to a baron and feme, or to her during coverture; the husband only can make a defeaſance of it, and conclude the wife. 1 Inſt. 351.

If a feme covert ſues a woman in the ſpiritual court for adultery with her husband, and obtains a ſentence againſt her, and coſts, the husband may releaſe theſe coſts, for the marriage continues, and whatever accrues to the wife during coverture, belongs to the husband; per Holt Ch. Juſt. on motion for prohibition. 1 Salk. 115.

But if the husband and wife be divorced a menſa & thoro, and the wife has her alimony, and ſues for defamation or other injury, and there has coſts, and the husband releaſes them, this ſhall not bar the wife, for theſe coſts comes in lieu of what ſhe hath ſpent out of her alimony, which is a ſeparate maintenance, and not in the power of her husband. 1 Roll. Rep. 426. 3 Bulſt. 264. 1 Roll. Abr. 343. 2 Roll. Abr. 293. 1 Salk. 115.

A legacy was given to a feme covert, who lived ſeparate from her husband, and the executor paid it to the feme, and took her receipt for it; yet on a bill brought by the husband againſt the executor, he was decreed to pay it over again, with intereſt. 1 Vern. 261.

V. In regard to debts contracted by the wife before marriage.

If a feme ſole indebted takes husband; it is then the debt of the husband and wife, and both are to be ſued for it; but the husband is not liable after the death of the wife, unleſs there be a judgment againſt both during the coverture. 1 Roll. Abr. 351. Where there is judgment againſt a feme ſole, who marries and dies, the baron ſhall not be charged therewith: though if the judgment be had upon ſcire facias againſt baron and feme, and then the feme dies, he ſhall be charged. 3 Mod. 186. In action brought againſt a feme ſole, if pending the action ſhe marries, this ſhall not abate the action; but the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution againſt her, according as the action was commenced. 1 Lill. 217. Trin. 12 W. 3. And if habeas corpus be brought to remove the cauſe, the plaintiff is to move for a procedendo on the return of the habeas corpus: alſo the court of B. R. may reſuſe it, where brought to abate a juſt action. Salk. 8.

In general the husband is liable to the wife's debts contracted before marriage, whether he had any portion with her or not; and this the law preſumes reaſonable, becauſe by the marriage the husband acquires an abſolute intereſt in the perſonal eſtate of the wife, and has the receipt of the rents and profits of her real eſtate during coverture; alſo whatever accrues to her by her labour, or otherwiſe, during the coverture, belongs to the husband; ſo that in favour of creditors, and that no perſon's act ſhould prejudice another, the law makes the husband liable to thoſe debts with which he took her attached. F. N. B. 265. 20 Hen. 6. 22. b. Moor 468. 1 Roll. Abr. 352. 3 Mod. 186.

If baron and feme are ſued on the wife's bond, entered into by the feme before marriage, and judgment is had thereupon, and the wife dies before execution, yet the husband is liable; for the judgment has altered the debt. 1 Sid. 337.

When

When baron and feme are sued, the husband must make an attorney for himself and his wife. If a wife be arrested, she shall be discharged on common bail, let the cause of action be what it will: but if baron and feme be arrested, the husband shall not be discharged, unless he give bail for his wife as well as himself. Mod. Caf. 17. If judgment be against husband and wife, he dies, and she survives, execution may be against her. 1 Rol. Abr. 890. l. 10, 56.

Where a man marries a widow executrix, &c. her evidence shall not be allow'd to charge her second husband with more than she can prove to have actually come to her hands. Agreed per cur. Abr. Eq. Ca. 227. Hil. 1-19.

If feme executrix takes baron, and afterwards she releases debt of the testator by deed in her own name, this is good, for she represents the testator; per Littleton, but Cook contra without her baron. Br. Coverture, pl. 52.

D. confessed a judgment to F. who made his wife, the plaintiff, executrix and died; she administrated and married a second husband, and then she alone, without her husband, acknowledged satisfaction, though no real satisfaction was made. The court held that this was not good. Sid. 31.

A wife administratrix under 17 shall join with her husband in an action; per Twissden J. Mod. 297.

It was said, that if a feme be made executrix who does not administer, and she takes baron, the baron may administer for him and his feme, and prove the testament, &c. and there release of the baron is good. Br. Executors, pl. 147.

If a feme executrix takes baron, and he releases all actions, this shall be a bar during the coverture without question; by the justices. But Choke doubted if it shall be a bar after the death of the baron; but per Pigot, once extinct is for ever. Br. Releases, pl. 29.

If a feme executrix take baron, and the baron puts himself in arbitrement for debt of the testator, and award is made, and the baron dies, the feme shall be barred; per tot' cur'. Brook says, that from hence it seems to him, that the release of the baron without the feme is a good bar against the feme; quod conceditur, anno 39 H. 15. and therefore there be excepted those debts in his release, otherwise they had been extinct. Br. Releases, pl. 79.

A feme executrix takes baron, and they bring debt as executors, and have judgment; the defendant pleaded outlawry of the husband in bar; but per cur. Clearly the husband forfeits nothing of the goods which the wife hath as executrix; and judgment for the plaintiff. 3 Bulst. 210.

The possession of the wife as executrix, is also the possession of her baron, and damages recovered in trover of them, shall be to the estate of testator, and so may concern them both. Sty. 48.

Obligee made his wife executrix. She married a second husband, who became bankrupt, and the commissioners assigned this debt. But by Holt Ch. J. they have no power to assign any thing but what is the bankrupt's estate, and if the wife dies before assignment by him, there must be an administration de bonis non. His power to dispose of her estate does not make a title in him; and though he may dispose of a term which he has in jure uxoris, yet if he becomes a bankrupt, the commissioners cannot assign over this estate; and by Powell J. they have nothing to do with the debts of the testator, but only with the debts of the bankrupt. Holt's Rep. 104, 105.

Where the wife has debts or duties due to her, she cannot, by making another person executor, preclude her husband from that benefit which to him should appertain as administrator of her goods. West. Off. Ex. 200.

But where they belong to her as executrix, no benefit can redound to the husband by having such administration of his wife's goods; for those should go to the next of kin of the wife's testator, who must take administration de bonis non of such testator, if she has no executor, and therefore her making executors touching these brings no prejudice to her baron, and so is out of the reason of the case of Ognell v. Underhill and Appleby, West. Off. Ex. 200.

Where the wife is executrix and legatee, if she claims as executrix, and dies, if the second baron would have advantage of it, he must take letters of administration de bonis non of the first husband, and not of the wife; but if she had claimed the land and the term in it as legatee, and had not been in possession, administration taken of the rights and debts of the wife had been good as to that intent, tho' his wife was not actually possess'd of it, but only had a right unto it, and of such things in action the husband might be executor or administrator to his wife; and if the baron takes administration differently, and brings action, he will be nonsuit, and if the wife before election marries, the baron may make the election. Leq. 216. pl. 298. Mich. 32 & 33 Eliz. C. B. in case of Cheyney v. Smith.

If a man marries an administratrix to a former husband, who in her widowhood wasted the assets of her intestate, the husband is liable to the debts of the intestate, during the life of the wife; and this shall be deemed a devastavit in him. Cro. Car. 603.

VI. In regard to her contracts during marriage.

Every gift, grant, or disposition of goods, lands, or other thing whatsoever, and all obligations and feoffments made by a feme covert, without her husband's consent, are void. 1 H. 5. 125. Fitz. Covert. 18.

But the husband is obliged to maintain his wife in necessaries: yet they must be according to his degree and estate, to charge him; and necessaries may be suitable to a husband's degree of quality, but not to his estate; also they may be necessaries, but not ex necessitate to charge the husband. 1 Mod. 129. 1 Nels. Abr. 354. If a woman buys things for her necessary apparel, though without the consent of the husband, yet her husband shall be bound to pay for it. Brownl. 47. And if the wife buys any thing for herself, children, or family, and the baron does any act precedent or subsequent whereby he shews his consent, he may be charged thereupon. 1 Sid. 120. Though a wife is very lewd, if she cohabits with her husband, he is chargeable for all necessaries for her, because he took her for better for worse: and so he is if he runs away from her, or turns her away: but if she goes away from her husband, then as soon as such separation is notorious, whoever gives her credit doth it at his peril, and the husband is not liable, unless he take her again. 1 Salk. 119. Although a husband be bound to pay his wife's debts for her reasonable provision, yet if she parts from him, especially by reason of any misbehaviour, and he allows her a maintenance, he shall never after be charged with her debts, till a new cohabitation: but if the husband receive her, or come after her, and lie with her but for a night, that may make him liable to the debts. Pasch. 3 Ann. Mod. Caf. 147, 171. And if there be an agreement in writing between husband and wife to live separate, and that she shall have a separate maintenance, it shall bind them both till they both agree to cohabit again; and if the wife is willing to return to her husband, she may; but it has been adjudged that the husband hath no coercive power over the wife to force her, though he may visit her, and use all lawful means in order to a reconciliation. Mich. Geo. 1. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 22. Sed quare as to her power to return. Where there is a separation by consent, and the wife hath a separate allowance, those who trust her do it upon her own credit. 1 Salk. 116. If a husband makes his wife an allowance for clothes, &c. which is constantly paid her, 'tis said he shall not be charged. 1 Sid. 109. And if he forbids particular persons to trust her, he will not be chargeable: but a prohibition in general, by putting her in the news-papers, is no legal notice not to trust her. 1 Vent. 42.

The baron in an account shall not be charged by the receipt of his wife, except it came to his use. 1 Danv. 707. Yet if she usually receives and pays money, it will bind him in equity. Abr. Caf. Eq. 61. For goods sold to a wife, to the use of the husband, the husband shall be charged, and be obliged to pay for the same. Sid. 425.

If the baron is beyond sea in any voyage, and during his absence the wife buys necessaries, this is a good evidence for a jury to find that the baron assumpsit. Sid. 127.

But such evidence is only presumptive, and not conclusive evidence, and therefore the jury in such case finding it specially, the court cannot give judgment against the baron; for their being necessaries and the employment, with the residue of the special circumstances, is only matter of evidence, upon which the jury should proceed to ascertain ascertain the fact, whether the baron promised or not. Sid. 127. in case of Manby v. Scott.

And the baron might contradict such presumptive evidence by other proofs; as that he gave her ready money to buy, &c. Sid. 127. in case of Manby v. Scott.

If the wife pawns her cloaths for money, and afterwards borrows money to redeem them, the husband is not chargeable unless he were consenting, or that the first sum came to his use. 2 Shou. 283.

If a wife takes up clothes, as silk, &c. and pawns them before made into clothes, the husband shall not pay for them, because they never came to his use; otherwise if made up and worn, and then pawn'd; per Holt Ch. J. at Guildhall. 1 Salk. 118.

A wife may use the goods of her husband, but she may not dispose of them: and if she takes them away, it is not felony, for she cannot by our law steal the goods of her husband; but if she delivers them to an adulterer, and he receives them, it will be felony in him. 3 Inst. 308, 310.

VII. As to crimes committed by the wife.

The will of the wife is subject to that of the husband; so that if they commit a felony together, she shall be neither principal nor accessory: and if a wife doth damage to another, she can make no satisfaction during the coverture, but the husband must do it. F. N. B. 188.

But if husband and wife commit treason or murder, they shall be both found guilty; and the wife shall not be discharged, on presumption it was by coercion of the husband. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 47. And a wife for her own crimes, may be indicted without her husband; and she may sue and be sued without her husband, in the spiritual court. 9 Rep. 72. 2 Roll. Abr. 298. So if she commit a theft of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, she is punishable as much as if she was sole. H. P. C. 65. Dalt. 104. 27. Aff. pl. 40. Fitz. Coron. 199.

A man must answer for the trespasses of his wife: if a feme covert slander any person, &c. the husband and wife must be sued for it, and execution is to be awarded against him. 11 Rep. 62. But where a feme covert commits a trespass vi & armis, and action is brought against baron and feme, if the jury find the wife guilty, and the husband not; here the wife shall be imprisoned, until the husband pays the fine. Tenck. Cent. 23.

A feme covert generally shall answer as much as if she were sole, for any offence not capital against the Common law or statute; and if it be of such nature, that it may be committed by her alone, without the concurrence of her husband, she may be punished for it without the husband, by way of indictment, which being a proceeding grounded merely on the breach of the law, the husband shall not be included in it for any offence to which he is no way privy. 9 Co. 71. Hauk. P. C. 3. See Moor 813. Hob. 93. Noy 103. Savil 25. Cro. Jac. 482. 11 Co. 61.

A feme covert lent 20*l.* to be paid at 20*s.* by the week, and one shilling and sixpence interest; the borrower paid the interest, which amounted to 30*s.* which the wife exacted and received; and this appearing on evidence, in an action brought by the husband for the money, Holt Ch. J. ruled it to be an usurious contract by the husband, sufficient to discharge and avoid the obligation civiliter, though not sufficient to charge the husband criminaliter. Skin. 348.

If the wife incur the forfeiture of a penal statute, the husband may be made a party to an action or information for the same, as he may be generally to any suit for a cause of action given by his wife, and shall be liable to answer what shall be recovered thereon. See 1 Hauk. P. C. 3. and the authorities there cited.

If a feme covert pretending herself to be sole, marries a second husband, he shall have no action against the first, because this action is founded on the communication and contract of the wife, which will not bind the husband; besides this is felony. 1 Sid. 375. 1 Lev. 237.

Husband and wife may be found guilty of larceny, battery, &c. and the reason why in burglary, larceny, &c. she is excused, is, because she could not tell what property the husband might claim in the goods. Arg. 10 Mod. 63

Husband and wife were indicted for keeping a bawdy-house and procuring lewdness. The court held the indictment good, and said, that keeping the house does not necessarily import property, but may signify that share of government which the wife has in a family as well as the husband. 10 Mod. 63.

Husband and wife were indicted for keeping a common gaming-house, and held good, and compared it to the case of Queen v. Williams; for as there the wife may be concerned in acts of bawdry, so here she may be active in promoting gaming, and furnish the guests with all conveniencies for the purpose. 10 Mod. 335.

VIII. Of acts done by one or both jointly or severally, &c.

At Common law, any alienation made by the husband of the wife's land, whether by feoffment, fine or recovery, was a discontinuance, and after his death she was put to her cuius vita, to reinstate herself; but now by the statute 32 H. 8. cap. 28. it is provided, That no fine levied by the husband alone, of lands, being the freehold and inheritance of the wife, shall in any wise be or make a discontinuance, or be otherwise prejudicial to her or her heirs, but that the wife and her heirs shall and may lawfully enter into the said lands, according to their rights and titles therein. 2 Inst. 681.

A wife is sub potestate viri, and therefore her acts shall not bind her, unless she levy a fine, &c. when she is examined in private, whether she doth it freely, or by compulsion of the husband: if baron and feme levy a fine, this will bar the feme: and where the feme is examined by writ, she shall be bound; else not. 1 Darv. Abr. 708. Therefore where baron and feme acknowledge a deed to be inrolled, or a statute, &c. this will not bind the feme, because she is not examined by writ.

If a common recovery be suffered by husband and wife of the wife's lands, this is a bar to the wife; for she ought to be examined upon the recovery. Pl. Com. 514. & 10 Co. 43. a. 1 Roll. 347. l. 19. Vide post, this division.

So if husband and wife are vouches in a common recovery, the recovery shall be a bar, tho' the wife be not examined; for tho' it be proper that she be examined, yet that is not necessary, and is frequently omitted. Dist.

Sid. 11. per Roll. Sti. 319, 320.

A wife is disabled to make contracts, &c. 3 Inst. 110. And if a married woman enters into bond as feme sole, if she is sued as feme sole, she may plead Non est factum, and the coverture will avoid her bond. 1 Lill. Abr. 217. A feme covert may plead non assumptis, and give coverture in evidence, which makes it no promise, &c. Raym. 395.

In case money be due to the husband by bill or bond, or for rent on a lease, and it is paid to the wife; this shall not prejudice him, if after payment he publicly disagrees to it. 19 Jac. 1. B. R. 2 Shep. Abr. 426.

If a feme covert levies a fine of her own inheritance without her husband, this shall bind her and her heirs, because they are estopped to claim any thing in the land, and cannot be admitted to say she was covert against the record; but the husband may enter and defeat it, either during the coverture, to restore him to the freehold he held jure uxoris, or after her death, to restore himself to his tenancy by the courtesy, because no act of a feme covert can transfer that interest which the intermarriage has vested in the husband; and if the husband avoids it during the coverture, the wife or her heirs shall never after be bound by it. Bro. Tit. Fines. 33. 10 Co. 43. Hob. 225. 7 Co. 8. Co. Lit. 46.

If a man leases to baron and feme for years rendering rent, and dies, the feme shall be bound by it; contrary of other collateral covenants. Br. Baron and Feme. pl. 78.

Lease made by baron and feme shall be said to be the lease of them both, till the feme disagrees, which she cannot do in the life of the baron, and waste lies by both. Br. Agrum. pl. 6.

A man was infeoffed to the use of a feme sole, who took an husband. They both for money sell the land to B. who pays it to the wife, and she and her husband do pray the feoffee to make estate to B. Afterwards her husband dies. Now, by the Chancellor and all the justices. H h she she shall have aid against the first feoffee by subpoena, to satisfy her for the land; and if the second feoffee were confusant, a subpoena shall be against him for the land; for all that the wife did during her coverture (as they said) shall be taken to be done for fear of the husband Cary's Rep. 18, 19.

Fine by E. to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife that should be at the time of his death, for life; remainder to the son of E. in tail. E. took to wife A. A fine levied by E. and A. his wife, who afterwards survived him, and other uses declared, is no bar to her, because it was uncertain who would be the person; but had the person been certain, there perhaps, notwithstanding it was but a possibility, it might have been a bar; per Walmesley J. Cro. E. 826. pl. 31.

The examination of a feme covert is not always necessary in levying of fines, because that being provided that she may not at the instance of her husband make any unwary disposition of her property, it follows, that when the husband and wife do take an estate by the fine, and part with nothing, the feme need not be examined; but where she is to convey or pass any estate or interest, either by herself or jointly with her husband, there she ought to be examined; therefore if A. levies a fine come ceo to baron and feme, and they render to the conuzor, the feme shall be examined; so it is where she takes an estate by the fine, rendering rent. 2 Inst. 515. 2 Rel. Abr. 17.

If baron and feme by fine sur concessit grant land to J. S. for 99 years, and warrant the said land to J. S. during the said term, and the baron dies, and J. S. is evicted by one that hath a prior title, he may thereupon bring covenant against the feme, notwithstanding she was covert at the time when the fine was levied. 2 Saund. 177. 1 Sid. 466. S. C. 1 Mod. 290. 2 Keb. 684, 703.

A recovery, as well as a fine by a feme covert, is good to bar her, because the præcipe in the recovery answers the writ of covenant in the fine, to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges destroys the presumption of the law, that this is done by the coercion of the husband, for then it is to be presumed they would have refused her. 10 Co. 43. 2 Rel. Abr. 395. Vide ante this division.

If a husband disseise another to the use of his wife, this does not make her a disseisee, she having no will of her own, nor will any agreement of hers to the disseisin during the coverture, make her guilty of the disseisin, for the same reason; but her agreement after her husband's death will make her a disseisee, because then she is capable of giving her consent, and that makes her tenant of the freehold, and so subject to the remedy of the disseisee. 1 Rel. Abr. 660. Bro. Disseisin 67.

But if a feme covert actually enters and commits a disseisin, either sole or together with her husband, then she is a disseisee, because she thereby gains a wrongful possession; but such actual entry cannot be to the use of her husband or a stranger, so as to make them disseisors, because though by such entry she gains an estate, yet she has no power of transferring it to another. Co. Lit. 357. 1 Rel. Abr. 660. Bro. Disseisin 15, 67. Sec 8 Hen. 6. 14. cont.

If the husband seised of lands in right of his wife, makes a lease thereof for years by indenture or deed poll, reserving rent; all the books agree this to be a good lease for the whole term, unless the wife by some act after the husband's death, shews her dissent thereto, for if she accepts rent which becomes due after his death, the lease is thereby become absolute and unavoidable; the reason whereof is, that the wife, after her intermarriage, being by law disabled to contract for, or make any disposition of her own possessions, as having subjected herself and her whole will to the will and power of her husband; the law therefore transfers the power of dealing and contracting for her possessions to the husband, because no other can then intermeddle therewith, and without such power in the husband, they would be obliged to keep them in their own manurance or occupation, which might be greatly to the prejudice of both; but to prevent the husband's abusing such power, and lest he should make leases to the prejudice of his wife's inheritance, the law has left her at her liberty after his death, either to affirm and make good such lease, or defeat and avoid it, as she finds it subservient to her own interest; and this she may do, though she joined in such lease, unless made pursuant to statute 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28. Bro. Acceptance 10. Bro. Leases 24. Cro. Jac. 332. 2 And. 42. Co. Lit. 45. Plow. 137. Cro. Jac. 563. Yelv. 1. Cro. Eliz. 769.

Husband and wife make a lease for years, by indenture, of the wife's lands, reserving rent; the lessee enters; the husband before any day of payment dies; the wife takes a second husband, and he at the day accepts the rents, and dies; and it was held, that the wife could not now avoid the lease, for by her second marriage she transferred her power of avoiding it to her husband, and his acceptance of the rent binds her, as her own act before such marriage would have done; for he by the marriage succeeded into the power and place of the wife, and what she might have done either as to affirming or avoiding such lease before marriage, the same may the husband do after the marriage. Dyer 159. 1 Rel. Abr. 475. 1 Rel. Rep. 132.

The husband being seised of copyhold lands in right of his wife in fee, makes thereof a lease for years not warranted by the custom, which is a forfeiture of her estate, yet this shall not bind the wife or her heirs after the husband's death, but that they may enter and avoid the lease, and thereby purge the forfeiture; and the diversity seems between this act, which is at an end when the lease is expired or defeated by the entry of the lord, or the wife after the husband's death, and such acts as are a continuing detriment to the inheritance, as wilful waste by the husband, which tends to the destruction of the manor; so of non-payment of rent, denial of suit or service; for such forfeitures as these bind the inheritance of the wife after the husband's death; but in the other case the husband cannot forfeit by this lease more than he can grant, which is but for his own life. 2 Rel. Rep. 344, 361, 372. Cro. Car. 7. Cro. Eliz. 149. 4 Co. 27.

A feme covert is capable of purchasing; for such an act does not make the property of the husband liable to any disadvantage, and the husband is supposed to assent to this, as being to his advantage, but the husband may disagree; and it shall avoid the purchase; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the purchase is good, for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to turn to his advantage; but in this case, though the husband should agree to the purchase, yet after his death she may waive it, for having no will of her own at the time of the purchase, she is not indispensably bound by the contract; therefore if she does not, when under her own management and will, by some act express her agreement to such purchase, her heirs shall have the privilege of departing from it. Co. Lit. 3. a.

Jointress paying off a mortgage was decreed to hold over till she or her executor be satisfied, and interest to be allowed her. Chan. Cases 271.

The husband gave a voluntary bond after marriage to make a jointure of such value on his wife; the husband accordingly makes a jointure; the wife gives up the bond; the jointure is evicted; the jointure shall be made good out of the husband's personal estate, there being no creditors in the case; and the delivery up of the bond by a feme covert could no ways bind her interest. Vern. 427. pl. 402.

A feme covert agrees to sell her inheritance, so as she might have 200*l.* of the money secured to her; the land is sold, and the money put out in a trustee's name accordingly; this money shall not be liable to the husband's debts, nor shall any promise by the wife, to that purpose, subsequent to the first original agreement, be obliging in that behalf. 2 Vern. 64, 65. pl. 58. Trin. 1688.

IX. Of joinder in actions, &c.

In those cases where the debt or cause of action will survive to the wife, the husband and wife are regularly to join in action; as in recovering debts due to the wife before marriage; in actions relating to her freehold or inheritance, or injuries done to the person of the wife. Rel. Abr. 347.

But if a feme sole hath a rent-charge, and rent is in arrear and she marries, and the baron distrains for this rent, and thereupon a rescous is made, this is a tort to the baron himself, and he may have an action alone. Cro. Eliz. 439. Owen 82. S. P. Moor 584. S. C.

So if a feme sole hath right to have common for life, and she takes husband, and she is hindred in taking the common, he may have an action alone without his wife, it being only to recover damages. 2 Bulst. 14.

But if baron and feme are disseised of the lands of the feme, they must join in action for the recovery of this land. 1 Bulst. 21.

The baron may have an action alone upon the Stat. 9 R. 2. for entering into the land of the feme; trespass and taking charters of the inheritance of the feme; quare impedit, &c. But for personal torts, they must join, though the baron is to have the damages. 1 Danv. 709. 1 Roll. Rep. 360. The husband is to join in actions for battery to the wife; and a wife may not bring any action for wrong to her, without her husband. 1 Inst. 132, 326. An action for a battery on the wife, brought by husband and wife, must be laid to the damage of both. 2 Lord Raym. 1209. For an injury done to the wife alone, action cannot be maintained by the husband alone, without her; but for assault and debauching or lying with the wife, or for a loss and injury done to the husband, in depriving him of the conversation and service of his wife, he alone may bring an action; and these last actions are laid for assault, and detaining, &c. the wife, per quod consortium amiserit, &c. 2 Cro. 538. For taking any thing from the wife, the husband only is to bring the action, who has the property; for the wife hath not the property. In all cases where the feme shall not have the thing recovered, but the husband only, he alone is to bring the action. 1 Roll. Rep. 360. except as above, &c. For a personal duty to the wife, the baron only may bring the action: and the husband is intitled to the fruits of his wife's labour, for which he may bring quantum meruit. 1 Lill. Abr. 227. 1 Salk. 114. Baron and feme ought to join in actions for debt due to the feme before coverture: and where an action will survive to the wife, and she may recover damages, she must join with the husband in the action. 2 Mod. 269. In case, before marriage, a feme enters into articles concerning her estate, she is as a separate person; and the husband may be plaintiff in equity against the wife. Preced. Chanc. 24.

Where the feme is administratrix, the suit must be in both their names, for by the intermarriage the husband hath authority to intermeddle with the goods as well as the wife; but in the declaration the granting administration to the feme must be set forth. Vide the Books of Entries, and Godb. 40. pl. 44.

In action for goods which the feme hath as executrix, they must join, to the end that the damages thereby recovered may accrue to her as executrix in lieu of the goods. Wint. Off. Ex. 207.

In battery the plaintiff declared, that on such a day the defendant assaulted and beat his wife. This action was brought by the husband after the death of his wife, and it being a personal wrong, is dead with the person; and if she had been living, the husband alone could not have the action, because damages must be given for the tort offered to the body of his wife; quod fuit concessum. Yelv. 89.

In an action upon a trover before marriage, and a conversion after, the baron and feme ought to join; for this action, as a trespass, disaffirms the property; but the baron ought alone to bring a replevin, detinue, &c. for these conditions admit and affirm a property in the feme at the time of the marriage, which by consequence must have vested in the baron. 1 Sid. 172. 1 Keb. 641. S. C. 1 Vent. 261. 2 Lev. 107. S. P. and that he may join the wife at his election.

But if A. declares, that the defendant being indebted to him and his wife, as executrix to one J. S. in consideration that A. would forbear to sue him for three months, assumed, &c. and avers that he forbore, and that his wife is still alive, the action is well maintainable by the husband alone, for this is on a new contract, to which the wife is a stranger. Cartb. 462. 1 Salk. 117. Yelv. 84. Cro. Jac. 110. S. P.

In all actions real, for the land of the wife, the husband and wife ought to join. R. 1 Bul. 21. So in actions personal for a chose in action, due to the wife before coverture. 1 Roll. 347. l. 53. Cro. El. 537. Vide Com. Dig. 1 V. 375. ante & post.

X. Of jointly suing them.

The husband is by law answerable for all actions for which his wife stood attached at the time of the coverture; and also for all torts and trespasses during coverture, in which cases the action must be joint against them both; for if she alone were sued, it might be a means of making the husband's property liable; without giving him an opportunity of defending himself. Co. Lit. 133. Doctr. Placit. 3. 2 Hen. 6: 4.

If goods come to a feme covert by trover, the action may be brought against husband and wife, but the conversion may be laid only in the husband, because the wife cannot convert goods to her own use; and the action is brought against both, because both were concerned in the trespass of taking them. See Co. Lit. 351. 1 Roll. Abr. 6. pl. 7. Yelv. 166. Noy 79. 1 Leon. 312. Cro. Car. 254, 494. 1 Roll. Abr. 348. But in detinue upon a devastavit against baron and feme executrix, it shall not be laid quod devastaverunt, for a feme covert cannot waste. 2 Lev. 145.

An action on the case was brought against baron and feme, for retaining and keeping the servant of the plaintiff, and judgment accordingly. 2 Lev. 63.

If a lease for life or years be made to baron and feme, reserving rent, an action of debt for rent arrear may be brought against both; for this is for the advantage of the wife. 1 Roll. Abr. 348.

If an action be brought against the husband and wife, and the wife be arrested, she shall be discharged upon common bail; for nobody can be supposed to undertake for a wife who hath no property of her own. 1 Salk. 114. Comb. 355. 6 Mod. 17. 805.

Where a right of action doth accrue to a woman before marriage, as where a bond is made to her and forfeited, there, if she marry, she must be joined with the husband in an action of debt against the obligor. Owen 82.

Where a feme sole is indebted, and afterwards married, she and her husband shall both be sued for her debts, and the action must be joint against both during her life; but if she dieth, the husband shall not be charged with her debts, unless judgment was had against him and his wife during the coverture. F. N. B. 120.

XI. Where a wife shall be considered as a feme sole.

A husband who has abjured the realm, or who is banished, is thereby civilliter mortuus; and being disabled to sue or be sued in right of his wife, she must be considered as a feme sole; for it would be unreasonable that she should be remediless on her part, and equally hard on those who had any demands on her, that not being able to have any redress from the husband, they should not have any against her. Bro. Baron and Feme, 66. Co. Lit. 133. 1 Roll. Rep. 400. Moor 851. 3 Bulst. 188. 1 Bulst. 140. 2 Vern. 104.

In assumpsit the defendant proved that she was married, and her husband alive in France, the plaintiff had judgment, upon which as a verdict against evidence she moved for a new trial, but it was denied; for it shall be intended that she was divorced: besides, the husband is an alien enemy, and in that case, why is not his wife chargeable as a feme sole? 1 Salk. 116. Deerly versus Duchess of Marlborough.

By the custom of London, if a feme covert trades by herself, in a trade with which her husband does not intermeddle, she may sue and be sued as a feme sole. 10 Mod. 6.

A woman, whose husband had left her about twelve years before, had carried on a trade in her own name as a widow, and gave receipts in her own name; being sued for debt contracted in the course of her trade, gave coverture in evidence, and gave evidence of her husband's having been lately alive in Ireland; and Lord Ch. Justice Holt

Holt directed the jury to find for the defendant; and so they did. 12 Mod. 603.

XII. Of divorce, separate maintenance, and pin-money.

The feme, after divorce, shall re-have the goods which she had before marriage. Br. Coverture, pl. 82.

But if he had given or sold them without collusion before the divorce, there is no remedy; but if by collusion, she may aver the collusion, and have detinue for the whole, whereof the property may be known; and as for the rest, which consists of money, &c. she shall sue in the spiritual court. Br. Deraignment and Divorce, pl. 1. cites 26 H. 8. 7.

If a man is bound to feme sole, and after marries her, and after they are divorced, the obligation is revived. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. Because the divorce being a vinculo matrimonii, by reason of some prior impediment, as precontract, &c. makes them never husband and wife ab initio; but if the husband had made a feoffment in fee of the lands of his wife, and then the divorce had been, that would have been a discontinuance as well as if the husband had died, because there the interest of a third person had been concerned, but between the parties themselves it will have relation to destroy the husband's title to the goods, and it proves no more than the common rule, viz. that relations will make a nullity between the parties themselves, but not amongst strangers. Lord Raym. Rep. 521. Hill. 11 W. 3.

If a man gives lands in tail to baron and feme, and they have issue, and after divorce is sued, now they have only frank tenement, and the issue shall not inherit; for it was once possible that their issue might inherit. Br. Tail et dones, &c. pl. 9.

If land be given in frankmarriage, and donees are divorced, which of them first moves for the divorce shall lose the land, per Shelly; but by Fitzherbert, the land shall be divided between them. Cited Dyer 13. pl. 62. Trin. 28 Hen. 8.

If the baron and feme purchase jointly and are disseised, and the baron releases, and after they are divorced, the feme shall have the moiety, tho' before the divorce they were no moieties; for the divorce converts it into moieties. Br. Deraignment, pl. 18. cites 32 Hen. 8.

If baron alien the wife's land, and then there is a divorce causa præcontractus, or any other divorce which dissolves the marriage a vinculo matrimonii, the wife during the life of the baron may enter by statute 32 Hen. 8. Dyer 13. pl. 61.

But if after such alienation and divorce the baron dies, she is put to her cui in vita ante divortium; and yet the words of the statute are, that such alienation shall be void, but this shall be intended to toll the cui in vita. Mo. 58. pl. 164. Pasch. 8 Eliz. Broughton v. Conway.

After divorce the wife shall have such goods as were hers before marriage, and are not spent. D. 13. pl. 63. by Fitzherbert, and says, that so was the opinion of the court about the 26 Hen. 8. Kelw. 122. b. pl. 75.

Divorce causa adulterii of the husband; afterwards the wife sues in the spiritual court for a legacy; the executor pleads the release of the baron; the release binds the wife, for the vinculum matrimonii continues. Cro. E. 908. Vide 1 Salk. 115.

But Holt held, that if feme covert after divorce a mensa & thoro, sues for a legacy, which, if recovered, comes to her husband, there the husband may release it, because there is no alimony; and if he may release the duty, he may release the costs. 1 Salk. 115. pl. 4. S. C. & S. P.

A divorce was a mensa & thoro, and then the husband dies intestate. The wife by bill pray'd assistance as to dower and administration (it being granted to another) and distribution. The Master of the Rolls bid her go to law to try if she was intitled to her dower, there being no impediment, and as to that dismissed the bill; and as to the administration, the granting that is in the ecclesiastical court; but the distribution more properly belongs to this court; but since in that court she is such a wife as is not intitled to administration, he dismiss'd the bill as to distribution too, and said, if they could repeal that sentence, she then would be intitled to distribution. Ch. Prac. 111.

The plaintiff sets forth in her bill, that she joined with her husband in sale of part of her inheritance, and after some discord growing between them, they separated themselves, and 100*l.* of the money received upon the sale of the lands was allotted to the plaintiff for her maintenance, and put into the hands of Nicholas Mine, &c. and hands then given for the payment thereof unto H. G. deceased, to the use of the plaintiff, which bonds are come to the defendant as administrator to the said H. G. who refuses to deliver the same to the plaintiff, and hereupon she prays relief; the defendant does demur in law, because the plaintiff sueth without her husband; and it is ordered the defendant shall answer directly. Cary's Rep. 124.

The ecclesiastical court is the proper court for alimony, and if the person will not obey, they cannot but excommunicate him. Her. 69.

If baron and feme are divorced causa adulterii, which is a divorce a mensa & thoro, they continue baron and feme: it is otherwise in a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, which dissolves the marriage.

As to the consequences of a separate maintenance.

The baron covenanted with L. to pay his wife, or such as he should appoint, 50*l.* a year as a separate maintenance, provided she live at such a place as N. and W. appoint. Baron pleaded, that she did not live at such a place as N. and W. appointed. Plaintiff replies, that she was always ready to live at such a place, but that N. and W. appointed no place. Defendant demurred, for that it was a condition precedent; but the plaintiff insisted it was only subsequent, and so become impossible, N. being since dead, and no place being appointed. Per cur. The condition is subsequent, the covenant being, in pursuance of a former absolute agreement, to pay so much, and it is like an assent of the husband, which is intended, till the contrary appears. 3 Keb. 363.

Where, on a separation, lands are convey'd by the baron in trust for the feme, Chancery will not bar the feme from suing the baron in the trustee's name, and a surrender or release by the baron shall not be made use of against the feme. 2 Chan. Ca. 102.

A woman living separate from her husband, and having a separate maintenance, contracts debts. The creditors, by a bill in this court, may follow the separate maintenance whilst it continues; but when that is determined, and the husband dead, they cannot by a bill charge the jointure with the debts; by Lord Keeper North; and the rather, because the executor of the husband, who may have paid the debt, is no party. Vern. 326.

Where the husband, during his cohabitation with the wife, makes her an allowance of so much a year for her expences, if she out of her own good housewifery saves any thing out of it, this will be the husband's estate, and he shall reap the benefit of his wife's frugality, because when he agrees to allow her a certain sum yearly, the end of the agreement is, that she may be provided with clothes and other necessaries, and whatsoever is saved out of this, redounds to the husband; per Lord Keeper Finch. Freem. Rep. 304.

A term was created on the marriage of A. with B. for raising 200*l.* a year for pin-money, and in the settlement A. covenanted for payment of it. There was an arrear of one year at A.'s death, which was decreed, because of the covenant to be charged on a trust-estate settled for payment of debts, it being in arrear for one year only; ficus had it been in arrear for several years. Chan. Prac. 26.

The plaintiff's relation (to whom he was heir) allow'd the wife pin-money, which being in arrear, he gave her a note to this purpose; I am indebted to my wife 100*l.* which became due to her such a day; after by his will he makes provision out of his lands for payment of all his debts, and all monies which he owed to any person in trust for his wife; and the question was, whether the 100*l.* was to be paid within this trust; and my Lord Keeper decreed not; for in point of law it was no debt, because a man cannot be indebted to his wife; and it was not money due due to any in trust for her. Hill. 1701. between Cornwall and the earl of Montague. But quære; for the testator looked on this as a debt, and seems to intend to provide for it by his will. Ab. Eq. Ca. 66.

Where the wife hath a separate allowance made before marriage, and buys jewels with the money arising thereout, they will not be assets liable to the husband's debts. Cham. Prec. 295.

Where there is a provision for the wife's separate use for clothes, if the husband finds her clothes, this will bar the wife's claim; nor is it material whether the allowance be provided out of the estate which was originally the husband's, or out of what was her own estate; for in both cases her not having demanded it for several years together, shall be construed a consent from her that she should receive it; per Lord C. Macclesfield. 2 Wms's Rep. 82, 84.

So where 50*l.* a year was reserved for clothes and private expenses, secured by a term for years, and ten years after the husband died, and soon after the wife died; the executors in equity demanded 500*l.* for ten years arrear of this pin-money; but it appearing that the husband maintained her, and no proof that she ever demanded it, the claim was disallowed. 2 Wms's Rep. 341.

Bar, or Barr, (Lat. barra, and in Fr. barre.) In a legal sense is a plea or peremptory exception of a defendant, sufficient to destroy the plaintiff's action. And it is divided into bar to common intendment, and bar special; bar temporary, and perpetual: bar to a common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which usually disableth the declaration of the plaintiff: bar special is that which is more than ordinary, and falls out upon some special circumstance of the fact, as to the case in hand. Terms de Ley. Bar temporary is such a bar that is good for the present, but may afterwards fail: and bar perpetual is that which overthrows the action of the plaintiff for ever. Plowd. 26. But a plea in bar, not giving a full answer to all the matter contained in the plaintiff's declaration is not good. 1 Lill. Abr. 211. If one be barred by plea to the writ, or to the action of the writ, he may have the same writ again, or his right action: but if the plea in bar be to the action itself, and the plaintiff is barred by judgment, &c. it is a bar for ever in personal actions. 6 Rep. 7. And a recovery in debt is a good bar to action on the case for the same thing: also a recovery on assumpsit in case, is a good bar in debt, &c. Cro. Jac. 110. 4 Rep. 94.

In all actions personal, as debt, account, &c. a bar is perpetual, and in such case the party hath no remedy, but by writ of error or attain; but if a man is barred in a real action or judgment, yet he may have an action as high a nature, because it concerns his inheritance; as for instance, if he is barred in a formedon in descender, yet he may have a formedon in the remainder, &c. 6 Rep. 7. It has been resolved, that a bar in any action real or personal by judgment upon demurrer, verdict, or confession, is a bar to that action, or any action of the like nature for ever: but according to Pemberton Chief Justice, this is to be understood, when it doth appear that the evidence in one action would maintain the other; for otherwise the court shall intend that the party hath mistaken his action. Skin. 57, 58.

Bar to a common intent is good: and if an executor be sued for his testator's debt, and he pleadeth that he had no goods left in his hands at the day the writ was taken out against him, this is a good bar to a common intendment, till it is shown that there are goods: but if the plaintiff can shew by way of replication, that more goods have fallen into his hands since that time, then, except the defendant allege a better bar, he shall be condemned in the action. Plowd. 26. Kitch. 215. Bro. tit. Barre.

There is a bar material, and bar at large: bar material may be also called special bar; as when one, in stay of the plaintiff's action, pleadeth some particular matter, viz. a descent from him that was owner of the land, &c. a feoffment made by the ancestor of the plaintiff, or the like: a bar at large is, when the defendant, by way of exception, doth not traverse the plaintiff's title, by leading, nor confers, nor avoid it, but only makes to himself a title in his bar. Kitch. 68. 5 H. 7. 29. This word bar is likewise used for the place where serjeants and counsellors at law stand to plead the causes in court; and where prisoners are brought to answer their indictments, &c. whence our lawyers, that are called to the bar, are termed barristers. 24 H. 8. c. 24.

As to the qualities of a plea, see farther Black. Com. 3 V. 308.

Matter of law may be pleaded specially, tho' it may be given in evidence on the general issue. 5 Com. Dig. 68. 1 Vent. 295. 1 Salk. 344. 2 Mod. 276. Skin. 362.

As to the words modo & forma in pleading, vide 2 Anderson 182. Co. Lit. 281. 5 Com. Dig. 109.

Farther concerning this head, see Statement, Pleading, Judgment, Pleading, &c.

Barrister, Barrister, (barristerius) Is a counsellor learned in the law, admitted to plead at the bar, and there to take upon him the protection and defence of clients. They are termed jurisconsulti; and in other countries called licentiatii in jure: and antiently barristers at law were called apprentices of the law, in Lat. apprenticii juris nobiliores. Fortesc. The time before they ought to be called to the bar, by the antient orders, was eight years, now reduced to five; and the exercises done by them (if they were not called ex gratia) were twelve grand moots performed in the inns of Chancery in the time of the grand readings, and twenty-four petty moots in the term times, before the readers of the respective inns: and a barrister newly called is to attend the six (or four) next long vacations the exercise of the house, viz. in Lent and Summer, and is thereupon for those three (or two) years styled a vacation barrister. Also they are called utter barristers, i. e. pleaders ouster the bar, to distinguish them from benchers, or those that have been readers, who are sometimes admitted to plead within the bar, as the king, queen, or prince's counsel are. Barristers, who constantly attend the King's Bench, &c. are to have the privilege of being sued in transitory actions in the county of Middlesex. But it hath been questioned, whether an action of debt doth lie for their fees; unless it be upon special retainer; for a counsellor's fee is honorarium quiddam, not mercenarium, as that of an attorney or solicitor. 2 Inst. 213, 214, &c. Wood's Inst. 448.

Barrator, or Barretor, (Lat. barrator, Fr. barrateur) A common mover of suits and quarrels, either in courts, or elsewhere in the country, that is himself never quiet, but at variance with one or other. Lambert derives the word barretor from the Lat. bulatro, a vile knave: but the proper derivation is from the Fr. barrateur, i. e. a deceiver, and this agrees with the description of a common barretor in my Lord Coke's Reports, viz. that he is a common mover and maintainer of suits in disturbance of the peace, and in taking and detaining the possession of houses and lands, or goods by false inventions, &c. And therefore it was adjudged, that the indictment against him ought to be in these words, viz. That he is communis malefactor, calumniator & seminator litium & discordiarum inter vicinos suos, & pacis regis perturbator, &c. And there it is said that a common barretor is the most dangerous oppressor in the law; for he oppresseth the innocent by colour of law, which was made to protect them from oppression. 8 Rep. 37. No one can be a barretor in respect of one act only; for every indictment for such crime must charge the defendant with being communis barrator, and conclude contra pacem, &c. And it hath been holden, that a man shall not be adjudged a barretor for bringing any number of suits in his own right, though they are vexatious, especially if there be any colour for them; for if they prove false, he shall pay the defendant costs. 1 Rel. Abr. 355. 3 Mod. 98. A barrister at law entertaining a person in his house, and bringing several actions in his name, where nothing was due, was found guilty of barrettry. 3 Mod. 97. An attorney is in no danger of being convicted of barrettry, in respect of his maintaining another in a groundless action, to the commencing whereof he was no way privy. Id. A common solicitor, who solicits suits, is a common barrettor, and may be indicted thereof, because it is no profession in law. 1 Danv. Abr. 725. Barrettors are punished by fine and imprisonment, bound to the good behaviour, &c. And belonging to the profession of the law, they ought to be further punished by disability to practise. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1. Hawk. P. C. 244.

South'ton, ff. THE jurors for our sovereign lord the king upon their oath present, that A. B. of &c. in the said county, yeoman, on the day, &c. in the year of the reign, &c. at H. in the said county, was and yet is a common barrettor, and continual disturber of the peace of our said lord the king; and also on the day and year, and at the place abovementioned, was and still is a common and troublesome slanderer, railer, and sower of discord among his neighbours, and that he hath procured and caused divers suits and quarrels then and there and elsewhere in the county aforesaid, amongst divers subjects of our lord the king, to the great contempt of our sovereign lord the king, and the bad example of other offenders, and against the peace of our said lord the king, &c. *Vide Black. Barrel, (barillum) Is a measure of wine, ale, oil, &c. Of wine it contains the eighth part of a tun, the fourth part of a pipe, and the moiety of a hoghead; that is, thirty-one gallons and a half. 1 R. 3. c. 13. Of beer it contains thirty-six gallons; and of ale, thirty-two gallons. Anno 23 H. 8. c. 4. and 12 Car. 2. c. 23. It is declared, that the assise of herring barrels is thirty-two gallons wine measure, containing in every barrel usually a thousand full herrings. Anno 13 El. c. 11. The eel barrel contains thirty gallons. 2 H. 6. c. 13.

Barriers, (Fr. barrieres) Signifies that which the French call jeu de barres, i. e. palæstra, a martial exercise of men armed and fighting together with short swords, within certain bars or rails which separated them from the spectators; it is now disused here in England. There are likewise barrier towns, or places of defence on the frontiers of kingdoms.

Barrow, (from the Sax. borrg, a heap of earth) A large hillock or mount, raised or cast up in many parts of England, which seem to have been a mark of the Roman tumuli, or sepulchres of the dead. The Sax. beora was commonly taken for a grove of trees on the top of a hill. Kennet's Gloss.

Barter, (from the Fr. baretre, circum-venire) Signifies in our books to exchange one commodity for another, or truck wares for wares. Anno 1 R. 3. c. 9. And the reason may be, because they that exchange in this manner do endeavour, for the most part, one to over-reach and circumvent the other.

Barton, Is a word used in Devonshire, for the demesne lands of a manor; sometimes the manor-house itself; and in some places for out-houses and fold-yards. In the Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 12. barton lands, and demesne lands, are used as synonyma. See Berton.

Base Court, (Fr. cour basse) Is any inferior court, that is not of record, as the court baron, &c. Kitch. fol. 95, 96.

Base Estate, (Fr. bas estat) Is that estate which base tenants have in their lands. And base tenants, according to Lambert, are those who perform villainous services to their lords; Kitch. fol. 41. makes base tenure and frank tenure to be contraries, and puts copyholders in the number of base tenants; where it may be gathered that every base tenant holds at the will of the lord: but there is a difference between a base estate and villainage; for to hold in pure villainage is to do all that the lord will command him; and if a copyholder have but a base estate, he not holding by the performance of every commandment of his lord, cannot be said to hold in villainage: and copyholders are by the customs of manors, and continuance of time, grown out of that extreme servitude wherein they were first created.

Base fee, Is a tenure in fee at the will of the lord, distinguished from focage free tenure: but the Lord Coke says, that base fee is what may be defeated by limitation, or on entry, &c. Co. Lit. 1, 18. Bassa tenura, or base tenure, was a holding by villainage, or other customary service, opposed to alia tenura, the higher tenure in capite or by military service, &c.—Manerium de Cheping Parendon cum pertinentiis est de antiquo dominico coronæ domini regis, unde omnia prædicta tenementa sunt parcella, & de bassa tenura ejusdem manerii. *Confectud. Basinetum, A basnet, or helmet. By Inqu. 22 Ed. 4. After the death of Laurence de Hastings, earl of Pembroke, it was found thus—Quod quidem manerium, (i. e. de Aston Cantlore) per se teneatur de domino rege in capite, per servitium invenendi unum hominem peditem, cum arcu sine chorda, cum uno basneto, sive cappa, per xl dies sumptibus suis propriis quotiens fuerit guerra in Wallia.

Basinet, A skin with which the soldiers covered themselves. Blount.

Bastard, (bustardus) From the Brit. bastaerd, i. e. nothus or spurius, is one that is born of any woman not married, so that his father is not known by the order of law; and therefore is called filius populi, the child of the people.

If a woman be with child by a man, who afterwards marries her, and then the child is born, this child is no bastard: but if a man hath issue by a woman before marriage, and after they marry, the issue is a bastard by our law; but legitimate by the Civil law. 2 Inst. 96, 97. If a man marries a woman grossly big with child by another, and within three days after she is delivered, in our law the issue is no bastard. 1 Danv. Abr. 729. And where a child is born within a day after marriage between parties of full age, if there be no apparent impossibility that the husband should be the father of it, the child is no bastard, but supposed to be the child of the husband. 1 Rel. Abr. 358. But if the husband be but eight or nine years of age, or if he be within the age of fourteen, the issue is a bastard: so where a husband is gelt, or hath lost his genitals, &c. which shews an impossibility to get a child, the issue of his wife, though born within marriage, is a bastard. 1 Inst. 244. 1 Danv. 728.

By the law of the land a person cannot be a bastard who is born after espousals, unless it be by special matter. If a woman elope from her husband, so as he be within the four seas, her issue shall not be a bastard by our law, though by the spiritual law he shall: but if the wife continues in adultery and hath issue, this is a bastard in our law. 1 Danv. 730. By the Common law, if the husband be infra quatuor maria, so that by intentment he may converse with his wife, and the wife hath issue, the child will not be a bastard: but he is a bastard who is born born of a woman when her husband, at and from the time of the begetting to the birth, is extra quatuor maria. 1 Inst. 244. 2 Salk. 483. If a woman hath issue, the husband being over sea so long before the birth of the issue, which his wife hath in his absence, that the issue cannot be his, this is a bastard. 1 Danv. 729. If the husband be only over in Ireland, it is otherwise. A divorce causa praeconstratus, causa affinitatis, causa frigiditytis, &c. bastards the issue; not for cause subsequent to the marriage: but if the man and woman continue husband and wife for all their lives, the issue cannot be a bastard by divorce after their death. 1 Danv. 730. Where a woman, on divorce a mensa a thoro, lives in adultery with another, her children by such other are bastards; for children born in adultery, are born out of the limits of matrimony. Though if husband and wife consent to live separate, the children born after such separation shall be taken to be legitimate, because the access of the husband shall be presumed; but if it be found there was no access, then they are bastards. 1 Salk. 122.

But this non-access of the husband ought to be proved otherwise than upon the wife's oath; as in the following case: the defendant Reading was adjudged by an order of bastardy, to be the putative father of a bastard child, begotten of the wife of one Almont of Shelborn. The said woman, on the appeal, gave evidence, that the said Reading had carnal knowledge of her body in or about August 1732, and several times since; and that her husband had no access to her from May 1731, to the time of her examination in that court, being the 3d of October 1733. and that the said Reading was the father of the said child. And the question on removal of the same into the King's Bench was, whether the wife in this case could be admitted as an evidence for or against her husband, and to bastardize her own child. And the whole court were of opinion, that the wife could be a witness to no other fact but that of incontinence, and that this she must be admitted to be a witness to from the necessity of the thing: but not for the absence of the husband; which might properly be proved by other witnesses; and likened it to the case of hue and cry, where the person robbed shall be admitted a witness of the fact of robbery, but not to prove any other matter relating thereto, as in what hundred the place was, and the like, because that may be proved by others. 2 Seff. Ca. 175.

* A man who hath issue a son by a woman before marriage, and afterwards marries the same woman, and hath issue a second son born after the marriage; the first of these is termed in law a bastard signe, and the second a mulier; by the common law, as hath been said, such bastard signe is as incapable of inheriting, as if the father and mother had never married; but yet there is one case in which his issue was let into the succession, and that was by the consent of the lord and person legitimate; as if upon the death of the father the bastard signe enters, and the mulier during his whole life never disturbs him, he cannot upon the death of the bastard signe enter upon his issue. Lit. fœd. 399. Co. Lit. 245.

To exclude the mulier from the inheritance, there must not only be an uninterrupted possession of the bastard signe during his life, but a descent to his issue. Co. Lit. 244. 1 Rel. Abr. 624.

No man can bastardize another after his death, that was a mulier by the laws of holy church, and who carried the reputation of legitimate during his life; for a man must be bastardized by the rules of the Civil or Common law: by the rules of the Civil law, this person is by supposition legitimate; and if the Common law be made the judge, he cannot be bastardized; for it is a rule of Common law, that a personal defect dies with the person, and cannot after his death be objected to his successor that represents him; and this rule of law was taken from the humanity of the ancients, which would not allow the calumny of the dead, as also from an important reason of convenience, for pedigrees are often derived through several persons, concerning whom there remains little knowledge or remembrance of any thing, but only of their being; and therefore it were an easy matter to throw on them the aspersions of bastardy by any forged evidence, which cannot be confronted by opposite proof; and so it is fit to limit a time in which all proofs of bastardy are to be disallowed. 7 Co. 44. Jenk. Rep. 268. 1 Brownl. 42. Co. Lit. 33. a. Lit. fœd. 399. Co. Lit. 245.

Though this seems to be the doctrine of the old books, yet there is this modern case. An ejectment was brought by one Pride, against the earls of Bath and Mountague; Pride made title as heir to George, duke of Albemarle, proving himself the son of one who was brother to the duke, and that the duke died without issue; the defendant gave evidence, that duke George had issue duke Christopher, who conveyed to him; plaintiff gave evidence, that duke Christopher was a bastard, begotten of such a woman, who at the time of her marriage with the said George, duke of Albemarle, was married to another man, who was then, and yet living: upon which it was objected, that since duke George and this woman lived together as man and wife, and were now dead, the plaintiff could not be admitted to bastardize the issue, who was dead also; and who, during his whole life, was reputed and taken to be the legitimate son of the duke, and so stiled by the duke himself in his deed of settlement, and in his will, his son and heir; Et quod iustum non est aliquem post mortem facere bastardum. The court held this true of such a bastard as is meant by Littleton, in his case of bastard signe, and mulier puique, that is, such a bastard as is born before the espousals of a father and mother, who may afterwards marry; and said, the rule extended only to that case. 1 Salk. 120. Pride v. Earls of Bath, &c. 7 W. & M. 3 Lev. 410. S. C. Who tells us, that though the evidence was admitted by Holt, and Gil. Eyre, who were only in court, the jury were not satisfied with it, and gave a verdict for the Earl of Bath.

If a woman hath a child forty weeks and eight days after the death of her husband, it shall be legitimate; the law having appointed no exact certain time for birth of legitimate issues. 1 Danv. 726. 2 Lill. Abr. 236. If a man or woman marry a second wife or husband, the first being living, and have issue by such second wife or husband, the issue is a bastard. 39 Ed. 3. cap. 14, &c. Before the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 21. One was adjudged a bastard, Quia filius sacerdotis.

Bastard is terminus a quo, he is the first of his family; for he hath no relation of which our law takes any notice; yet this must be understood as to civil purposes, there being a relation as to moral purposes; for he cannot marry his own mother, or bastard sister. 3 Salk. 66, 67.

A bastard cannot inherit land as heir to his father; nor can any person inherit lands as heir to him, but one that is heir of his body. Lit. Sec. 401.

But though he cannot inherit any ancestor, yet when he hath gotten a name of reputation, he may purchase by it; for all surnames were originally acquired by reputation. George Shelly conveyed lands to the use of himself, the remainder to George Shelly his son; whereas in truth George was born of one B. in matrimony of one C. yet was reputed the son of George, and educated by him; though the boy was but six years old, it was ruled that he should take the remainder; for having got by reputation the name of George Shelly, these words are a certain designation of the person to take the remainder. But if a remainder be limited to the eldest issue of J. S. whether legitimate or illegitimate, and J. S. hath issue a bastard, he shall not take this remainder; for it is not vested in J. S. as it was in the other case, but is in contingency, and the certain time is not defined when this contingency shall happen; for the bastard at his birth does not acquire the reputation of being the issue of J. S. and since the bastard, when first in being, cannot take by virtue of this limitation, he can never take it; for he cannot be understood to be the person designed and marked out by these words, if after his birth it depends on the uncertainty of popular reputation, whether he should take the remainder or not; and such a designation of the person as contains no certainty in itself, or no relation to any other certain matter that may reduce it to certainty, is a void limitation. Co. Lit. 3. b. 6 Co. 65. 1 New Abr. 309.

But where a remainder is limited to the eldest son of Jane S. whether legitimate or illegitimate, and she hath issue, a bastard shall take this remainder, because he acquires

quires the denomination of her issue by being born of her body; and so it was never uncertain, who was designed by this remainder. Noy 35

If parents are married, and afterwards divorced, this gives the issue the reputation of children; and so doth a subsequent marriage of the parents. 6 Co. 65. Hugb's Abr. 363.

If a man, in consideration of natural affection and love, covenants to stand seised to the use of a bastard, this is not good; for he is not de sanguine patris; but it is said that a woman may give lands in frank-marriage with her bastard, because he is of the blood of the mother; but he hath no father, but from reputation only. Dyer 374. And. 79. 6 Co. 77. Noy 35.

A court of equity will not supply the want of a surrender of a copyhold estate, in favour of a bastard, as it will for a legitimate child. Preced. Chan. 475.

Bastardy, in relation to the several manners of its trial, is distinguished into general and special bastardy. General bastardy is the bastardy tried by the bishop, which in it's notion contains two things. 1st, It should not be a bastard made legitimate by a subsequent marriage. 2^{dly}, That it should be a point collateral to the original cause of action. 1 Rol. Abr. 361.

Formerly bastards had a way in such issues to trick themselves into legitimation, for they used to bring feigned actions, and get suborned witnesses before the bishop to prove their legitimation, and then got the certificate returned of record, and after that their legitimation could never be contested; for being returned of record as a point adjudged by its proper judges, and remaining among the memorials of the court, all persons were concluded by it; but this created great inconveniencies, as it is taken notice of in the preamble of the 9 Hen. 6. cap. 11. in the case of several persons of quality; for the evidence of the contrary parties concerned were never heard at the trial, and yet their interest was concluded: To remedy this inconvenience without altering the rules of law, it was enacted, that before any writ to the bishop there should be a proclamation made in the same court, and after that the issue should be certified into Chancery, where proclamation should be made once in every month for three months, and then the Chancellor should certify to the court where the plea depends, and afterwards it shall be again proclaimed in the same court, that all that are concerned may go to the ordinary to make their allegations; and without these circumstances, any writ granted to the ordinary, and all proceedings thereupon, shall be utterly void. 1 Rol. Abr. 361.

If the ordinary certify or try bastardy without a writ from the King's temporal courts, it is void; for the spiritual jurisdiction within these kingdoms is derived from the King, and therefore it must be exercised in the manner the King hath appointed; for it would be injurious if they should declare legitimation where the rights of inheritance are so nearly concerned, without any apparent necessity. 1 Rol. Abr. 361.

The certificate must be under the seal of the ordinary, and not under the seal of the commissary only, for the command is to the bishop himself to certify, and therefore the execution of the command must appear to be by the bishop in proper person. 1 Roll. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, this binds perpetually, though the person so adjudged a bastard is not party to the action, for all persons are estopped to speak against the memorial of any judicatory; because the act of the publick judicatory under which any person lives, is his own act; and were he not thus bound, there might be contradiction in certificates. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, that doth not bind stranger till returned of record, because it is no judicial act till recorded in the place appointed to record such transactions, nor doth it bind the party to the action till judgment thereon, because if he avoid the action he avoids all consequences of the action; and therefore if the defendant be certified bastard by the ordinary, yet if the plaintiff be nonsuit they cannot go on to trial, and so the bishop's certificate never appears of record, and therefore is not binding. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified mulier, no man is estopped to bastardize him, for though he may be a mulier by the Spiritual law, yet he may be a bastard by our law; and therefore any man, notwithstanding the certificate, may plead the issue of special bastardy. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

Special bastardy, which is always tried by a jury in the temporal courts, is twofold: 1st, Where the bastardy is the gist of the action, and the material part of the issue. 2^{dly}, Where those are bastards by the Common law that are muliers by the Spiritual law, and such are those that are born before marriage, whose parents afterwards intermarry, and whose marriage is admitted. 1 New Abr. 314. 1 Inst. 134. 1 Rol. 367. Hob. 117.

If a man receives any temporal damage by being called a bastard, and brings his action in the temporal courts, and the defendant justifies that the plaintiff is a bastard, this must be tried at Common law, and by writ to the bishop; for otherwise you suppose an action brought in a court which hath not a capacity to try the cause of action. 1 Brownl. 1. Hob. 179. Godol. 479. Co. Ent. 29.

If it be found by an assize taken at large that a man is a bastard, the temporal courts are judges of it, for the jury cannot be estopped to speak truth which may fall within their own knowledge, and what they find becomes the record of the temporal courts, and so within their cognizance. Bro. Bastardy, 97.

A bastard by the common law is made incapable of any ecclesiastical benefice; for the sacraments ought not to be committed to infamous persons: and it is the law of nature, that a bastard who is born out of lawful marriage, (unless there be some particular law to the contrary) has not any relation to his father, who begot him, but shall rely on his mother, that bore him. Fortescue 88, 89. By statute a woman with child of a bastard, must be first examined by a justice of peace, and the fact of her being with child proved by her oath, and then the justice is to send his warrant for the reputed father; when the party is brought before the justice, he must enter into a recognizance with sufficient sureties for his appearance at the next sessions, &c. and he may be continued on the recognizance till the woman is delivered of the child: after the child is born, two justices (quorum unus) residing nearest the place, are to examine the matter by witnesses, &c. and make their order for relief of the parish from the bastard: and if the two justices cannot agree, they may refer it to the sessions; also the putative father may appeal from the order of the two justices; or may give security to the parish, &c. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3. 3 Car. 1. c. 4. The two next justices of peace (one being of the quorum) may make orders for punishing the mother and father of a bastard child: and by order of the justices, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor may seize goods, and receive the annual rents of lands, &c. of the father and mother to discharge the parish; and justices of the peace have power to commit lewd women having bastards to the house of correction, for one year, &c. But persons able to keep them, are not within the statute. It is adjudged murder to conceal the death of a bastard child when born, unless there be proof to the contrary that it was still born. 18 Eliz. c. 3. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27.

It hath been adjudged, that in order to convict a woman by force of this last statute, there is no need that the indictment be drawn specially, or conclude against the form of the statute; for the statute doth not make a new offence, but only makes such concealment an undeniable evidence of murder. 2 Hawk. 438.

Also, it hath been agreed, that where a woman appears to have endeavoured to conceal the death of such child within the statute, there is no need of any proof that the child was born alive, or that there were any signs of hurt upon the body, but it shall be undeniably taken that the child was born alive, and murdered by the mother. 2 Hawk. 438.

But it hath been adjudged, that where a woman lay in a chamber by herself, and went to bed without pain, and waked in the night, and knocked for help but could get none, and was delivered of a child, and put it in a trunk, and did not discover it till the following night, yet she was not within the statute, because she knocked for help. 2 Hawk. 438.

Also, it hath been agreed, that if a woman confess herself with child beforehand, and afterwards be surprized and delivered, no body being with her, she is not within the statute, because there was no intent of concealment, and therefore in such cases it must appear by signs of hurt upon the body, or some other way, that the child was born alive. 2 Hawk. 438.

If a woman be with child, and any gives her a potion to destroy the child within her, and she takes it, and it works so strongly that it kills her, this is murder; for it was not given to cure her of a disease, but unlawfully to destroy the child within her; and therefore he that gives her a potion to this end, must take the hazard, and if it kills the mother, it is murder. 1 Hal. H. 429, 430.

If a woman be quick or great with child, if she take, or any other give her any potion to make an abortion, or if a man strike her, whereby the child within her is killed, tho' it be a great crime, yet it is not murder nor manslaughter by the law of England, because it is not yet in rerum natura, nor can it legally be known, whether it were killed or not: so it is, if after such child were born alive, and after die of the stroke given to the mother, this is not homicide. 1 Hal. H. 433. Yet the offender may be indicted for a misdemeanor, at Common law.

If a man procure a woman with child to destroy her infant when born, and the child is born, and the woman in pursuance of that procurement kill the infant; this is murder in the mother, and the procurer is accessory. 1 Hal. H. 433.

If a woman declares herself to be with child of a bastard, and on oath before a justice charge any person with getting it; he may grant his warrant to apprehend the person charged, and for bringing him before any justice, &c. who may commit him to gaol or the house of correction, unless he give security to indemnify the parish, or enter into recognizance with sureties to appear at the next quarter-sessions, and perform such order as shall be made pursuant to the statute 18 Eliz. But in case the woman shall die, or be married, or miscarry, &c. or if no order is made in due time, the man shall be discharged: and no justice may send for, or compel any woman before she is delivered, and one month after, to answer questions, &c. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31. He that gets a bastard in the hundred of Middleton, in the county of Kent, forfeits all his goods and chattels to the king. MS. de Temp. Ed. 3.

If any one conspire to charge another to be the father of a bastard child, he may be indicted and punished with public whipping, &c. It is only in the power of the king and parliament to make a bastard legitimate. Daw. Rep. 37. See 13 Geo. 2. c. 29.

Bath, (Lat. bathon, called by the britons badina) Has been termed the city of sickmen: it is a place of resort in Somersetshire famous for its medicinal waters. The chairmen are there to be licensed by the mayor and aldermen, for carrying persons to and from the hot baths, &c. under the penalty of 10*s.* by statute 7 Geo. 1. c. 19. And a publick hospital or infirmary for poor is established in the city of Bath, the governors, whereof have power to hold all charities, &c. and appoint physicians, surgeons and other officers: any persons not able to have the benefit of the Bath Waters, may be admitted into this hospital, their case being attested by some physician, and the poverty of the patients certified by the minister and churchwardens of the place where they live, &c. Every person so admitted, shall have the use of the old hot-bath, and be entertained and relieved in the hospital; and when cured or discharged, such persons shall be supplied with 3*l.* each, to defray the expence of removing them back to their parishes, &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 31. But see 6 Geo. 3. for paving and lighting the streets of Bath.

Battel, (Fr. bataille) Signifies a trial by combat, which was anciently allowed of in our laws, where the defendant in appeal of murder or felony may fight with the appellant, and make proof thereby whether he be culpable or innocent of the crime. Glanv. lib. 14. c. 1. When an appellee of felony wages battel, he pleads that he is Not guilty, and that he is ready to defend the same by his body, and then flings down his glove; and if the appellant will join battel he replies, That he is ready to make good his appeal by his body upon the body of the appellee, and takes up the glove: and then the appellee lays his right hand on the book, and with his left hand takes the appellant by the right, and swears thus: Hear this thou who callest thyself John by the name of baptism, that I who call myself Thomas by the name of baptism, did not feloniously murder thy father W. by name, on the day and year of, &c. at B. as you surmise, nor am any way guilty of the said felony; so help me God. And then he shall kiss the book, and say; And this I will defend against thee by my body, as this court shall award. Then the appellant lays his right hand on the book, and with his left hand takes the appellee by the right, and swears to this effect: Hear this thou who callest thyself Thomas by the name of baptism, that thou didst feloniously on the day, and in the year, &c. at B. murder my father W. by name; so help me God. And then he shall kiss the book, and say; And this I will prove against thee by my body, as this court shall award. This being done, the court shall appoint a day and place for the battle, and in the mean while the appellee shall be kept in custody of the marshal, and the appellant shall find sureties to be ready to fight at the time and place, unless he be an approver, in which case he shall also be kept by the marshal: and the night before the day of battle, both parties shall be arraigned by the marshal, and shall be brought into the field before the justices of the court where the appeal is depending, at the rising of the sun, bare-headed and bare-legg'd from the knee downwards, and bare in the arms to the elbows, armed only with bastons an ell long, and four corner'd targets; and before they engage, they shall both make oath That they have neither eat nor drank, nor done any thing else by which the law of God may be depressed, and the law of the devil exalted: and then, after proclamation for silence under pain of imprisonment, they shall begin the combat wherein if the appellee be so far vanquished that he cannot or will not fight any longer, he may be adjudged to be hanged immediately; but if he can maintain the fight till the stars appear, he shall have judgment to be quit of the appeal: and if the appellant becomes a crying coward, the appellee shall recover his damages, and may plead his acquittal in bar of a subsequent indictment or appeal; and the appellant shall for his perjury lose his liberam legem. If an appellant becomes blind by the act of God after he has waged battel, the court will discharge him him of the battel; and in such case it is said that the appellee shall go free. This trial by battel is at the defendant's choice; but if the plaintiff be under an apparent disability of fighting, as under age, maimed, &c. he may counterplead the wager of battel, and compel the defendant to put himself upon his country: also any plaintiff may counterplead a wager of battel, by alledging such matters against the defendant, as induce a violent presumption of guilt; as in appeal of death, that he was found lying upon the deceased with a bloody knife in his hand, &c. for here the law will not oblige the plaintiff to make good his accusation in so extraordinary a manner, when in all appearance he may prove it in the ordinary way. It is a good counterplea of battel that the defendant hath been indicted for the same fact; when if appeal be brought, the defendant shall not wage battel. And if a peer of the realm bring an appeal, the defendant shall not be admitted to wage battel, by reason of the dignity of the appellant. 2 Hawk. P. C. 426, 427. This trial by battel is before the constable and marshal; but with all its ceremonies is now disused. See Glanv. lib. 14. Bracton, lib. 3. Britton, c. 22. Smith de Rep. Angl. lib. 2. Co. Lit. 294, &c. Vide Trial by Battel, described Black. Com. 3 V. 339. Vide Combat.

Battery, (from the Fr. batre, to strike, or Sax. batte, a club) Is an injury done to another in a violent manner; as by striking or beating of a man, pushing, jolting, flipping upon the nose, &c. And it is also defined by our law to be a trespass committed by one man upon another vi & armis & contra pacem, &c. This offence is punishable by action and indictment; on action for the injury at the suit of the party, the defendant shall render damages, &c. And on indictment at the suit of the king, for a breach of the peace, he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. Dalt. 282. 1 Hawk. P. C. 134. For here the person offending is subject to a twofold punishment, viz. a fine to the king, and damages to the party; though it is usual only to bring an action for damages, which in battery and maihem the court may increase upon view of the record and the person. 2 Roll. Abr. 572. But a man may beat another who first assaults him, in his own defence, and justify in an action by special pleading, or that the battery was occasioned by his own assault; or the defendant may give that in evidence upon Not guilty to an indictment: and the record of the conviction of the offender by indictment may serve afterwards for evidence in action of trespass for the same assault and battery. Terms de Ley. 2 Roll. Abr. 546. By Holt Chief Justice the least touching of another in anger is a battery: if two or more meet in a narrow passage, and without any violence or design of harm, the one touches the other gently, it will be no battery: but if either of them use violence to force his way in a rude manner, or any struggle is made about the passage to that degree as to do hurt, it will be a battery. Mod. Caf. 149. The beating of another, in a moderate manner, is lawful in some cases, as the parent of his child, a master his servant, or apprentice, &c. See Assault.

Batus, (Lat. from the Sax. bat) A boat, and battellus a little boat—Concessit etiam eidem Hugo Wake pro se & hered. suis, quod predictus abbas & successores sui & ecclesia sua de Croyland habeat tres battellos in Harnolt, &c. Chart. Ed. 1. 20 Julii 18 regni. Hence we have an old word batswain, for such as we now call boatswain of a ship.

Baubella, (baubles) A word mentioned in Howeden in R. 1. and signifies jewels or precious stones.—Tres partes thesauri sui & omnia baubella sua divisi.

Bauduin, (baldicum, and baldekinum) Cloth of bawthin, or gold: it is said to be the richest cloth, now called brocade, made with gold and silk, or tissue, upon which figures in silk, &c. were embroidered. Anno 4 Hen. 8. c. 6. erat pannus auro rigidus, plumatoque opere intertextus: but some writers account it only cloth of silk.

Bawdy-house, (lupanar, fornix) A house of ill fame, kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes. The keeping of a bawdy-house comes under the cognizance of the temporal law, as a common nuisance, not only in respect of its endangering the public peace by drawing together dissolute and debauched persons, and promoting quarrels, but also in respect of its tendency to corrupt the manners of the people, by an open profession of lewdness. 3 Inst. 205. 1 Hawk. P. C. 196. Those who keep bawdy-houses are punished with fine and imprisonment; and also such infamous punishment, as pillory, &c. as the court in discretion shall inflict: and a lodger who keeps only a single room for the use of bawdry, is indictable for keeping a bawdy-house. 1 Salk. 382. Persons resorting to a bawdy-house, are punishable, and they may be bound to the good behaviour, &c. But if one be indicted for keeping or frequenting a bawdy-house, it must be expressly alledged to be such a house, and that the party knew it; and not by suspicion only. Popb. 208. A constable, upon information, that a man and woman are gone to a lewd house, or about to commit fornication or adultery, may, if he finds them together, carry them before a justice of peace without any warrant, and the justice may bind them over to the sessions. Dalt. 214. Sed qu. unless he finds them in the act.

It seems always to have been the better opinion, that a man may be bound to his good behaviour, for haunting bawdy-houses with women of bad fame, as also for keeping bad women in his own house. 1 Hawk. 132.

But if a person is indicted for frequenting a bawdy-house, it must appear, that he knew it to be such a house; and it must be expressly alledged, that it is a bawdy-house, and not that it is suspected to be such a house. Wood, b. 3. c. 3. Constables in these cases may call others to their assistance, enter bawdy-houses, and arrest the offenders for a breach of the peace: in London they may carry them to prison; and by the custom of the city, whores and bawds may be carted. 3 Inst. 206.

A wife may be indicted together with her husband, and condemned to the pillory with him for keeping a bawdy-house; for this is an offence as to the government of the house; in which the wife has a principal share; and also such an offence as may generally be presumed to be managed by the intrigues of her sex. 1 Hawk. 2.

On an indictment for keeping a disorderly house, a female witness swore, that she was a sailor's wife, and during her husband's absence out of the realm, she had often prostituted herself there: Lord Raymond said it was an odious piece of evidence, and ought not to be heard: Barlow's Justice, tit. Bawdy-house.

But it is said, a woman cannot be indicted for being a bawd generally; for that the bare solicitation of chastity is not indictable. 1 Hawk. 196. 1 Salk. 382.

It was always held infamous to keep a bawdy-house; yet some of our historians mention bawdy-houses publicly allowed here in former times till the reign of Hen. 8. and assign the number to be eighteen thus allowed on the bank-side in Southwark. See Stews and Brothel-Houses. If two inhabitants, paying scot and lot, shall give notice to a constable of any person keeping a bawdy-house, the constable shall go with them before a justice of peace, and shall, (upon such inhabitants making oath, that they believe the contents of such notice to be true, and entering into a recognizance of 20*l.* each, to give material evidence of the offence,) enter into a recognizance of 30*l.* to prosecute with effect such person for such offence at the next sessions; the constable shall be paid his reasonable expences by the overseers of the poor, to be ascertained by two justices; and if the offender be convicted, the overseers shall pay to the two inhabitants 10*l.* each. On the constable's entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, the justice shall bind over the person accused to the next sessions, and, if he shall think proper, demand security for such person's good behaviour in the mean time. A constable neglecting his duty forfeits 20*l.* Any person appearing as master or mistress, or as having the care or management of any bawdy-house, shall be deemed the keeper thereof, and liable to be punished as such. Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36.

Form of an indictment for keeping a bawdy-house.

THE jurors, &c. That A. B. of, &c. the day and year, &c. and at divers times before and afterwards, at H. in the county aforesaid, held and kept, and often made use use of, and still holds and keeps, &c. in his house there, a common bawdy-house, entertainments for lechery and fornication, and permits men and other suspected persons, and not of good behaviour or fame, carnally to lie with whores, to the great detriment of all the people of our sovereign lord the king there near dwelling, and to the ill example of all other offenders in such cases, and against the peace, &c.

Bay, or pen, Is a pond-head made up of a great height, to keep in water for the supply of a mill, &c. so that the wheel of the mill may be driven by the water coming thence, through a passage or floodgate. A harbour where ships ride at sea, near some port, is also called a bay: and this word is mentioned anno 27 Eliz. c. 19.

Beacon, (from the Sax. beacen, i. e. signum) A signal well known; being a fire maintained on some eminence near the coasts of the sea, to prevent invasions, &c. 4 Inst. 148. 8 Eliz. c. 13. Hence beaconage (beaconagium) money paid towards the maintenance of beacons: and we still use the word beckon to give notice unto. See Stat. 5 Hen. 4. &c. The king hath an exclusive power by commission, under the Great Seal, to appoint them. Black. Com. 1 V. 265. They are usually vested by letters patent in the office of Lord High Admiral. Id. See the power given to the Trinity House, per Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 13.

Bead, or bede, (Sax. bead, oratio) A prayer; so that to say over beads, is to say over one's prayers. They were most in use before printing, when poor persons could not go to the charge of a manuscript book: though they are still used in many parts of the world, where the Roman Catholic religion prevails. They are not allowed to be brought into England, or any superstitious things, to be used here, under the penalty of a præmunire, by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2.

Beam, Is that part of the head of a stag where the horns grow, from the Sax. beam, i. e. arbor; because they grow out of the head as branches out of a tree. Beam is likewise used for a common balance of weights in cities and towns. Stat. 13 Ed. 1.

Beams and Ballance, for weighing goods and merchandize in the city of London. See Tonage.

Beaters, Signifies such as bear down or oppress others, and is said to be all one with maintainers.—Justices of assize shall inquire of, hear, and determine maintainers, bearers, and conspirators, &c. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11.

Beasts of chase (feræ campestris) Are five, viz. the buck, doe, fox, marten, and roe. Manw. part 1. pag. 342. Beasts of the forest (feræ silvestres) otherwise called beasts of venary, are the hart, hind, boar, and wolf. Ibid. par. 2. c. 4. Beasts and fowls of the warren, are the hare, coney, pheasant, and partridge. Ibid. Reg. Orig. 95, 96. &c. Co. Lit. 233.

Beau-pleader, (pulchre placitando, Fr. beauplaidier, i. e. to plead fairly) Is a writ upon the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 11. whereby it is enacted, That neither in the circuit of justices, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for fair pleading, viz. for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose; upon which statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand such fine, and it is a prohibition not to do it; whereupon an alias and pluries and attachment may be had, &c. New Nat. Br. 596, 597. And beau-pleader is as well in respect of vicious pleadings, as of the fair pleading, by way of amendment. 2 Inst. 122.

Bedel, (bedellus, Sax. hyrd) A cryer or messenger of a court, that cites men to appear and answer: and is an inferior officer of a parish, or liberty, very well known in London, and the suburbs. There are likewise university bedels, and church bedels; now called summoners and apparitors: and Manwood in his Forest Laws, saith there are forest bedels, that make all manner of garnishments for the courts of the forest, and all proclamations, and also execute the process of the forest, like unto bailiffs errant of a sheriff in his county.—Edgarus interdictit omnibus ministris, id est vicecomitibus, bedellis & baliwis, &c. Ne introeant fines & limites dicti marisci. Inglulph. Hist. Croyl.

Bedelary, (bedelaria) Is the same to a bedel, as bailiwick to a bailiff. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 5.—Will. filius Adæ tenet bedelarium hundredi de Macclesfield, &c. Ex Rot. Antiq.

Bederepe, alias biderepe, (Sax.) Is a service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, viz. to reap their landlord's corn at harvest; as some yet are tied to give them one, two, or three days work, when commanded. This customary service of inferior tenants was called in the Latin præcaria, bedrepium, &c.—Debent venire in autumnno ad præcariam quæ vocatur a le bederepe. Plac. in Crast. pur. 10 H. 3. Rot. 8. Surrey. See Magna Præcaria.

Bedetwori, Those which we now call banditti, profligate and excommunicated persons. The word is mentioned in Mat. Paris. anno 1258.

Beer, It is lawful to export beer, &c. paying a custom duty. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. And see 1 Will. & Mar. stat. 1. cap. 22. concerning the exportation of beer, as also the 11 & 12 Will. 3. cap. 15. for ascertaining the measure for retailing ale and beer. And see also Alehouses and Wetters.

Beggars, Pretending to be blind, lame, &c. found begging in the streets, are to be removed by the constables; and refusing to be removed, shall be whipt, &c. Stat. 12 Ann. And our statutes have been formerly so strict for punishing of beggars, that in the reign of King Hen. 8. a law was enacted, that sturdy beggars, convicted of a second offence, should be executed as felons: but this statute was afterwards repealed. See Rogue.

Benefice, (beneficium) Is generally taken for any ecclesiastical living or promotion; and benefices are divided into elective and donative: so also it is used in the Canon law. 3 Inst. 155. Duarenus de Beneficiis, lib. 2. c. 3. All church preferments and dignities are benefices; but they must be given for life, not for years, or at will. Deaneries, prebendaries, &c. are benefices with cure of souls, tho' not comprehended as such within the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13. of residence: but according to a more strict and proper acceptation, benefices are only rectories, and vicarages.

Beneficia were formerly portions of land, &c. given by lords to their followers for their maintenance; but afterwards, as these tenures became perpetual and hereditary; they left their name of beneficia to the livings of the clergy, and retained to themselves the name of feuds. And beneficium was an estate in land at first granted for life only, so called, because it was held ex mero beneficio of the donor; and the tenants were bound to swear fealty to the lord, and to serve him in the wars, those estates being commonly given to military men: but at length, by the consent of the donor, or his heirs, they were continued for the lives of the sons of the possessors, and by degrees past into an inheritance: and sometimes such benefices were given to bishops, and abbots, subject to the like services, viz. to provide men to serve in the wars; and when they as well as the laity had obtained a property in those lands, they were called regalia when given by the king; and on the death of a bishop, &c. returned to the king till another was chosen. Spelm. of Feud, c. 2. Blount, verb. Beneficium. Lands were anciently held in beneficio; and then granted in alodium perpetuo jure, &c.

Under this head the following particulars are to be attended to, which include several requisites in order to constitute a legal title to a benefice, as,

- I. Presentation, for which see title Presentation.
- II. Examination and refusal, &c.

It is very well known, that in the first settlement of the church of England, the bishops of the several dioceses had them under their own immediate care; and that they had the clergy living in a community with them, whom they sent abroad to several parts of their dioceses, as they saw occasion to employ them; but that by degrees, they found a necessity of fixing presbyters within such a compass, to attend upon the service of God amongst the inhabitants, and those precincts, which are since called parishes, were at first much larger; that when lords of manors manors were inclined to build churches for their own convenience, they found it necessary to make some endowments, to oblige those who officiated in their churches to a diligent attendance; that upon this, the several bishops were very well content to let those patrons have the nomination of persons to such churches, provided they were satisfied of the fitness of those persons, and that it were not deferred beyond such a limited time. So that the right of patronage is really but a limited trust; and the bishops are still, in law, the judges of the fitness of the persons to be employed in the several parts of their dioceses. But the patrons never had the absolute disposal of their benefices upon their own terms; but if they did not present fit persons within the limited time, the care of the places did return to the bishop, who was then to provide for them. 1 Still. 309.

And by the statute of Articuli Cleri, 9 Ed. 2. ft. 1. cap. 13. it is enacted as followeth: "It is desired, that spiritual persons, whom our lord the king doth present unto benefices of the church (if the bishop will not admit them, either for lack of learning, or for other cause reasonable) may not be under the examination of lay persons in the cases aforesaid, as it is now attempted, contrary to the decrees canonical; but that they may sue unto a spiritual judge for remedy, as right shall require. The answer: Of the ability of a parson presented unto a benefice of the church, the examination belongeth to a spiritual judge; so it hath been used heretofore, and shall be hereafter."

As to causes of refusal.

The most common and ordinary cause of refusal is want of learning. But there are also many other causes for which a clerk presented may lawfully be refused; as, if he be perjured before a lawful judge; or if he be an heretic or schismatick; or irreligious; or (as is said in the old books) if he is a bastard, and not dispensed withal; or if he is within age; or if he or his patron be excommunicated for the space of forty days; or if he be outlawed; or guilty of forgery; or hath committed simony in the procuring of the presentment he brings; or of any other presentment to a former benefice; or hath committed manslaughter; that is, if he be attainted thereof, and not pardoned; and that it is said, that the ordinary may refuse a clerk upon his own knowledge for an offence committed by him, which is a good cause of refusal, altho' he be not convicted thereof by the law; and this shall be tried by issue, whether it be true or not: and generally, all such as are sufficient causes of deprivation, are also sufficient causes of refusal. Wats. c. 20.

If the clerk refused be the presentee of a bishop, or other ecclesiastical patron, the ordinary is not bound to give notice of the refusal: or if he should do it, such patron can never revoke nor vary his presentation, by presenting one afterwards that is better qualified, without the ordinary's consent; the law supposing him that is a spiritual person to be capable of choosing an able clerk: and so lapse may come upon him unavoidably, if the clerk first presented be justly refused. But if the clerk presented be the presentee of a lay patron, and be refused by the ordinary, the ordinary in most cases is bound to give notice to the patron of such refusal: for if in such case no notice is given, no lapse can run, tho' no other clerk be presented; nor if notice be given, unless upon trial the clerk was justly refused. But if a clerk be for good cause refused, and notice thereof be in due time and manner given to the patron, and no other clerk be presented in time; lapse doth run to the ordinary. Wats. c. 12.

In the case of Hale and the bishop of Exeter, M. 3 Will. it was said by the court, That if the ordinary refuse because he is criminous, he need not give notice of the refusal; for the crime is as much in the cognizance of the patron as of the bishop; but if he refuse because illiterate, he must give notice. 2 Salk. 539.

Benereeth, An ancient service which the tenant rendered to his lord with his plough and cart. Lamb. Itin. p. 222. Co. Lit. 86.

Benevolence, (benevolentia) Is used in the chronicles and statutes of this realm for a voluntary gratuity given by the subjects to the king. Stow's Annals, p. 701. And Stow saith, that it grew from Edward the Fourth's days: you may find it also anno 11 Hen. 7. c. 10. yielded to that prince in regard of his great expences in wars, and otherwise. 12 Rep. 119. And by act of parliament, 13 Car. 2. c. 4. it was given to his majesty K. Char. 2. but with a proviso that it should not be drawn into future example: so that all supplies of this nature are now by way of taxes. In other nations benevolences are sometimes given to lords of the fee by their tenants, &c. Cassan. de Consuet. Burg. p. 134, 136.

Benevolentia Regis habenda, The form of purchasing the king's pardon and favour, in ancient fines and submissions, to be restored to estate, title, or place.—Thomas de St. Walerico dat regi mille marcas, pro habenda benevolentia regis & pro habendis terris suis unde disseisitus fuit. Paroch. Antiq. p. 172.

Bent. See 15 Geo. 2. c. 33. for planting the hills on the north-west coast of the kingdom, with a certain rush or shrub, called star or bent, and the penalties of cutting or carrying the same away. For the utility of this article, and how excellent a fodder it is in winter, see Dictionary of Husbandry, tit. Bent, and Mills's Husbandry. 'Tis an article well worth attending to in this country.

Berbiage, (berbiagium) Nativi tenentes manerii de Calistoke reddunt per ann. de certo redditu vocat. berbiag. ad le Hokeday xix. s. MS. Survey of the Duchy of Cornwall.

Berbicaria, A sheep down, or ground to feed sheep. Leg. Alfredi, c. 9. Et quod de berbicaria, &c. Manag'ticon, tom. 1. p. 308.

Bercaria, (berchery, from the Fr. bergerie) A sheepfold, or other inclosure for the keeping of sheep: in Domesday it is written berquarium. 2 Inst. 476.—Mandat. est Roberto de Lexinton, quod abbati de Miraval faciat unam bercariam in pastura de Fairfield ad oves suas custodiendas. Claus. 9 Hen. 3. m. 12. — Dedi sexaginta acras terre ad unam bercariam faciendam. — Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 599. Bercarius is taken for a shepherd: and bercaria is said to be abbreviated from berbicaria, and berbex; hence comes berbicus a ram, berbicus; berbicus, caro berbicina, mutton. Cowel.

Berefellarii: There were seven churchmen so called, anciently belonging to the church of St. John of Beverley. — Sed quia eorum turpe nomen berefellariorum patens risui remanebat, dictos septem de cetero non berefellarios sed personas vulgus nuncupari. Pat. 21 R. 2. par. 3. m. 10 per Inspey.

Beretrett, Beretred, A large wooden tower. Simeon Dunelm. Anno 1123.

Bergmaster, (from the Sax. berg a hill, mons, quasi master of the mountains) Is a chief officer among the Derbyshire miners, who also executes the office of a coroner. — Juratores dicunt, quod in principio quando minatores veniunt in campum mineras quarerunt, iuvanta minera, veniunt ad ballivum, qui dicitur bergmaster, et petunt ab eo duas metas, &c. — Ese. de An. 16 Ed. 1. num. 34. in Turri London. The Germans call a mountaineer, or miner, a bergman.

Bergmote, or Bergmote, Comes from the Sax. berg, a hill, and gemote, an assembly; and is as much as to say an assembly or court upon a hill, which is held in Derbyshire, for deciding pleas and controversies among the miners.

miners.—Juratores etiam dicunt quod placita del berghmoth debent teneri de tribus septimanis in tres septimanas super minneram de Pecco. Etc. 16 Ed. 1. And on this count of burghmothe, Mr. Manlowe, in his Treatise of the Customs of the Miners, hath a copy of verses, with references to statutes, &c. Vide Squire on the Anglo-Saxon Government.

Beria, berie, berry, A large open field; and those cities and towns in England which end with that word, are built in plain and open places, and do not derive their names from boroughs, as Sir Henry Spelman imagines. Most of our glossographers in the names of places have confounded the word berie with that of bury and borough, as if the appellative of ancient towns; whereas the true sense of the word berie is a flat wide campaign, as is proved from sufficient authorities by the learned Du Fresne, who observes that Beria Sancti Edmundi, mentioned by Mat. Paris. sub ann. 1174. is not to be taken for the town, but for the adjoining plain. To this may be added, that many flat and wide meads, and other open grounds, are called by the name of beries, and berysfields: the spacious meadow between Oxford and Isley was in the reign of king Athelstan called Bery. B. Twine, MS. As is now the largest pasture ground in Quarendon in the county of Buckingham, known by the name of Beryfield. And tho' these meads have been interpreted demesne or manor meadows, yet they were truly flat or open meadows, that lay adjoining to any vill or farm.

Berra, A plain open heath. Berras affartare, to grub up such barren heaths.

Bernet, Incendium, comes from the Sax. hyran, to burn: it is one of those crimes which by the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 15. emendari non possunt. Sometimes it is used to signify any capital offence. Leges Canuti apud Brempt. c. 90. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 12, 47.

Bersa, (Fr. bers), A limit or bound.—Pasturam duorum taurorum per totam bersam in foresta nostra de Chippenham, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. pag. 210. A park pale.

Bersare, (Germ. bersen, to shoot) Bersare in foresta mea ad tres arcus. Chart. Ranulf. Comit. Cestr. ann. 1218. viz. to hunt or shoot with three arrows in my forest. Bersarii were properly those that hunted the wolf.

Berselet, (berseletta) A hound.—Ad bersandum in foresta cum novem arcubus & sex berseletis. Chart. Reg. de Quincy.

Berton, or Barton, (bertona) Is that part of a country farm where the barns and other inferior offices stand, and wherein the cattle are foddered, and other business is managed. See Claus. 32 Ed. 1. m. 17. It also signifieth a farm, distinct from a manor: in some parts of the west of England they call a great farm a berton; and a small farm a living.—Bertonarii were such as we now call farmers or tenants of bertons; husbandmen that held lands at the will of the lord.—Cum bertonas, terris & tenementis, quibus bertonarii modo tenent ad voluntatem. Chart. Johan. Episc. Exon. 24 Dec. Ann. 1337.

Berewicha, or Berwica, Villages or hamlets belonging to some town or manor. This word often occurs in Domesday: ista sunt berewichæ ejusdem manerii.

Berwick, Merchandize carried into or brought out of Scotland, or the isles thereof, shall be brought first to Berwick, on pain of forfeiture: and the merchants and freemen there shall have the farm of the waters royal and fishings within the feignidry. Stat. 22 Ed. 4. c. 8. The liberties of Berwick are declared, by the Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 28.

By Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 42. sect. 3. Wales and Berwick upon Tweed shall be included in all acts of parliament, wherein the kingdom of England, or that part of GREAT BRITAIN called England, shall be mentioned. As to Berwick, vide Black. Com. 1 V. 98, &c.

Bery, or Bury. The vill or seat of habitation of a nobleman, a dwelling or mansion-house, being the chief of a manor; from the Sax. beorg, which signifies a hill or castle; for heretofore noblemens seats were castles, situate on hills, of which we have still some remains. As in Herefordshire, there are the beries of Stockton, Hope, &c. It was anciently taken for a sanctuary.

Besaille, (Fr. bisayenl, proavus) The father of the grandfather: and in the Common law it signifies a writ that lies where the great grandfather was seised the day that he died, of any lands or tenements in fee-simple; and after his death a stranger entereth the same day upon him, and keeps out the heir. F. N. B. 222. Vide Booth on Real Actions.

Bescha, (from the Fr. bercher, sodere, to dig) A spade or shovel.—In communi pastura turbas, cum una sola besca fodient & nihil dabunt. Prior. Lew. Customar. de Hecham, pag. 15. Hence perhaps, una Bescata terrainclusa—Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fol. 642. may signify a piece of land usually turned up with a spade, as gardeners fit and prepare their grounds; or may be taken for as much land as one man can dig with a spade in a day.

Bestials, (bestials) Beasts or cattle of any sort; anno 4 Ed. 3. c. 3. it is written bestayle; and is generally used for all kinds of cattle, though it has been restrained to those purveyed for the king's provision. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

Betaches, Laymen using glebe lands. Parl. 14 Ed. 2.

Beberches, Bed-works, or customary services done at the bidding of the lord by his inferior tenants.—Inter servitia customary tenentium in Blebury, de dominio abbatis & conventus Reading—prædictus abbas habebit de eis duas precarias carrucarum per annum, quæ vocantur beverches, & cum qualibet carruca duos homines qualibet die ad prundium abbatis. Cartular. Rading. MS. f. 225.

Bedward, An old Saxon word signifying expended; for before the Britons and Saxons had plenty of money, they traded wholly in exchange of wares.

Bidale, or Bidall, (precaria potaria, from the Sax. biddan, to pray or supplicate) Is the invitation of friends to drink ale at the house of some poor man, who thereby hopes a charitable contribution for his relief: it is still in use in the west of England: and is mentioned 26 Hen. 8. c. 6. And something like this seems to be what we commonly call house-warming, when persons are invited and visited in this manner on their first beginning house-keeping.

Bidding of the Beads, (bidding from the Sax. biddan) To pray or desire; and bead from the Sax. bead a prayer, was anciently a charge or warning given by the parish priest to his parishioners at some special times to come to prayers, either for the soul of some friend departed, or upon some other particular occasion. And at this day our ministers, on the Sunday preceding any festival or holiday in the following week, give notice of them, and desire and exhort their parishioners to observe them as they ought; which is required by our canons. See Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 26.

Bidentes, Two yearlings, or sheep of the second year.—Will. Longspe A. D. 1234. granted to the prior and canons of Burcester, pasturam ad quingenta bidentes, cum dominicis bidentibus meis ibidem pascendis. Paroch. Antiq. p. 216.

Biduana, A fasting for the space of two days. Matt. West. p. 135.

Biga, bigata, A cart or chariot drawn with two horses, coupled side to side; but it is said to be properly a cart with two wheels, sometimes drawn by one horse; and in our ancient records it is used for any cart, wain or waggon.—Et quod eant cum bigis & carris cum ceteris phaleris super tenementum suum, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 256.

Bigamus, Is a person that hath married two or more wives, successively after each other, or a widow; for the canonists account a man that hath married a widow, to have been twice married. It is mentioned in the statutes 18 Ed. 3. c. 2. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. And 2 Inst. 273.

Bigamy, (bigamia) Signifies a double marriage, or marriage of two wives; it is used in our law, for an impediment to be a clerk, by reason he hath been twice married. 4 Ed. 1. c. 5. Which seems to be grounded upon the words of St. Paul to Timothy, epist. 1. cap. 5. vers. 2. Oportet ergo episcopum irreprehensibilem esse & unius uxoris virum: upon which it is said the canonists have founded their doctrine, that he that hath been twice married, may not be a clerk; so that they do not only exclude such from holy orders, but also deny them all privileges that belong to clerks: but this law is abolished by 1 Ed. 6. and see the Stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 7. The statute called the Statute de Bigamis, is the 4 Ed. 1. and the 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. calls it bigamy, where a person marries the second wife, &c. the first being living, which is felony; but this is properly polygamy, and not bigamy, which last is not where a person hath two wives together, but where he hath two wives one after another. 2 Inst. 273.

There is a proviso in the 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. that the said statute shall not extend to any person or persons, who shall be at the time of such marriage divorced by a sentence in the ecclesiastical court declared to be void and of no effect; nor to any person or persons, for or by reason of any former marriage had or made within age of consent.

According to the construction of this provision, divorces a mensa et thoro, causa adulterii and sevitie are within the exception in the statute, though the word separamus, and not divortiamus, be made use of in the sentence; for the statute being penal, shall be construed favourably; and such separations are taken for divorces in common understanding. 1 Hawk. P. C. 111. 3 Inst. 89. H. P. C. 122. Kel. 27. Cro. Car. 461.

It has been held likewise with respect to the consent of parties. If one of the parties only were under the age of consent at the time of such marriage, the exception extends as well to the party above the age of consent, as to the other; because the power of disagreeing was equal on both sides. Vide on this subject Black. Com. 4 V. 163.

Bigot, Is a compound of several old English words, and signifies an obstinate person; or one that is wedded to an opinion, in matters of religion, &c. It is recorded that when Rollo the first duke of Normandy, refused to kiss the King's foot, unless he held it out to him, it being a ceremony required in token of subjection for that dukedom, with which the King invested him; those who were present taking notice of the duke's refusal, advised him to comply with the King's desire, who answered them ne se bigot; whereupon he was in derision called bigot, and the Normans are so called to this day.

Bilagines, (Lat.) Bilaws of corporations, &c. See By-Laws.

Bilancis deferendis, A writ directed to a corporation, for the carrying of weights to such a haven, thence to weigh the wool that persons by our ancient laws were licensed to transport. Reg. Orig. 270.

Bilinguis, Signifies generally a double tongued man; or one that can speak two languages: but it is used in our law for a jury that passeth between an Englishman and a foreigner, whereof part ought to be English, and part strangers. Though this is properly a jury de medietate lingue. 28 Ed. 3. c. 13.

Bill, (billā) Is diversly used: in law proceedings, it is a declaration in writing, expressing either the wrong the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of, or else some fault committed against some law or statute of the realm: and this bill is sometimes addressed to the Lord Chancellor of England, especially for unconscionable wrongs done to the complainant; and sometimes to others having jurisdiction, according as the law directs. It contains the fact complained of, the damage thereby sustained, and petition of process against the defendant for redress; and it is made use of as well in criminal as civil matters. In criminal cases, when a grand jury upon a presentment or indictment find the same to be true, they indorse on it billā vera; and thereupon the offender is said to stand indicted of the crime, and is bound to make answer unto it: and if the crime touch the life of the person indicted, it is then referred to the jury of life and death, viz. the petty jury, by whom if he be found guilty, then he shall stand convicted of the crime, and is by the judge condemned to death. Terms de Ley 86. 3 Inst. 36. See Ignoramus and Indictment.

Bill is also a common engagement for money given by one man to another; being sometimes with a penalty, called penal bill, and sometimes without a penalty, though the latter is most frequently used. By a bill we ordinarily understand a single bond, without a condition; and it was formerly all one with an obligation, save only it's being called a bill when in English, and an obligation when in Latin. West. Symbol. lib. 2. sect. 146. A bill has been defined to be a writing, wherein one man is bound to another, to pay a sum of money on a day that is future, or presently on demand, according to the agreement of the parties at the time it is entered into, and the dealings between them and it is divided into several sorts, as a bill that is single, a bill that is penal, &c. Where there is a bill of 100l. to be paid on demand, it is a duty presently, and there needs no actual demand. Cro. Eliz. 548. And a single obligation or bill, upon the sealing and delivery, is debitum in presenti, though solvendum in futuro. On a collateral promise to pay money on demand, there must be a special demand; but between the parties it is a debt, and said to be sufficiently demanded by the action: it is otherwise where the money is to be paid to a third person; or where there is a penalty. 3 Keb. 176. If a person acknowledge himself by bill obligatory to be indebted to another in the sum of 50l. and by the same bill binds him and his heirs in 100l. and says not to whom he is bound, it shall be intended he is bound to the person to whom the bill is made. Roll. Abr. 148. A bill obligatory written in a book, with the party's hand and seal to it, is good. Cro. Eliz. 613. And if a man makes a bill thus: I do owe and promise to pay to A. B. 50l. &c. for payment thereof, I bind myself to C. D. &c. another person; it is good by the words of the first part, and the words obligatory to another person are void. A man says by his deed: Memorandum, That I A. B. have received of C. D. the sum of 20l. which I promise to pay to E. F. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my seal, &c. Or if the bill be, I shall pay to C. D. 20l. In witness, &c. and the same be sealed: or if it runs as follows, I owe to C. D. 20l. to be paid at, &c. Or, I had of C. D. 20l. &c. to be repaid him again: Or, I A. B. do bind myself to C. D. that he shall receive 20l. &c. All these are said to be obligatory. 2 Rol. 146. 22 E. 4. c. 22.

Now bonds, &c. are to be on stamped paper, &c.

Form of a single Bill for Money.

K NOW all men by these presents, That I A. B. of, &c. do owe and am indebted to C. D. of, &c. the sum of fifty pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, which I promise to pay unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators or assigns, at and upon the first day of October next ensuing the date of these presents. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal the 10th day of August, Anno Domini 1770.

A Penal Bill for Payment of Money.

K NOW all men by these presents, That I A. B. of, &c. do owe unto C. D. of, &c. the sum of one hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid unto the said C. D. his executors, administrators or assigns, on, &c. next ensuing the date hereof; for which payment well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, to the said C. D. his executors, administrators and assigns in two hundred pounds of like lawful money firmly by these presents. In witness, &c.

Bill of Exceptions. Vide Barb. Ni. pri. 295. Black. Com. 3 V. 372.

Exception to evidence, &c. At Common law a writ of error lay for an error in law, apparent in the record, or for error in fact, where either party died before judgment; yet it lay not for an error in law not appearing in the record; and therefore, where the plaintiff or demandant, tenant or defendant, alledged any thing ore tenus, which was over-ruled by the judge, this could not be assigned for error, nor appearing within the record, nor being an error in fact, but in law; and so the party grieved was without remedy. 2 Inst. 436. And therefore,

By the statute of Westm. 2. "When one impleaded before any of the justices, alledges an exception, praying they they will allow it, and if they will not, if he that alleges the exception writes the same, and requires the justices will put to their seals, the justices shall so do; and if one will not another shall; and if, upon complaint made of the justice, the King cause the record to come before him, and the exception be not found in the roll, and the plaintiff shew the written exception, with the seal of the justice thereto put, the justice shall be commanded to appear at a certain day, either to confess or deny his seal, and if he cannot deny his seal, they shall proceed to judgment according to the exception, as it ought to be allowed or disallowed."

This statute extends to the plaintiff as well as defendant, also to him who comes in loco tenentis, as one that prays to be received, or the vouchee; and in all actions whether real, personal, or mixt. 2 Inst. 427.

The statute extends not only to all pleas dilatory and peremptory, but to prayers to be received, oyer of records and deeds, &c. also to challenges of jurors, and any material evidence offered and over-ruled. 2 Inst. 427. Dyer 231. pl. 3. Raym. 486.

The exceptions ought to be put in writing sedente curia, in the presence of the judge who tried the cause, and signed by the counsel on each side; and then the bill must be drawn up and tendered to the judge that tried the cause to be sealed by him; and when signed, there goes out a seire facias to the same judge ad componendum scriptum, and that is made part of the record, and the return of the judge with the bill itself, must be entered on the issue-roll; and if a writ of error be brought, it is to be returned as part of the record. 1 Nelf. Abr. 373. If a bill of exceptions is drawn up, and tendered to the judge for sealing, and he refuses to do it, on petition to the Lord Chancellor, he will grant a writ for that purpose.

If one of the justices sets his seal to the bill, it is sufficient; but if they all refuse, it is a contempt in them all; for which the party grieved may have a writ grounded upon the statute, commanding them to put their seals, &c. 2 Inst. 427. Raym. 182. S. P. 2 Lev. 237. S. P.

Although no time be appointed by this act when the justices shall put their seals, the party must pray the same before judgment; but if they deny it, then may they be commanded after judgment to put their seals, and then the putting of their seals after judgment shall be sufficient. 2 Inst. 427.

When a bill of exceptions is allowed, the court will not suffer the party to move any thing in arrest of judgment on the point on which the bill of exceptions was allowed; for his proper redress is by writ of error, and it is presumed, that the court was satisfied in the point when the party tendered his bill of exceptions. 1 Vent. 366, 367. 2 Lev. 237. 2 Jones 117.

These bills of exception, are to be brought before a verdict given, and extend only to civil actions, not to criminal. Sid. 85. 1 Salk. 288.

Bill of Exchange. Is in general an order for the payment of money to some person or to his order, equivalent to the sum which the drawer hath received. Of these there are different kinds, it will be proper therefore to consider,

- I. The nature of bills of exchange and negotiable notes, and what shall be so deemed.
- II. Of the different kinds of bills of exchange, and negotiable notes; wherein 1. Of foreign bills. 2. Of inland bills. 3. Of promissory and negotiable notes.
- III. Of the acceptance.
- IV. Of the protest.
- V. Of the indorsement.
- VI. Who shall be liable to payment, and to whom, and therein of suing the drawer, indorser, or acceptor.
- VII. Of the action and remedy, and manner of declaring and pleading, and of the evidence requisite.
- VIII. Of bills, lost, stolen or forged.

I. As the custom of merchants hath established these bills and notes, so hath it prescribed their form, and required that the same should be in writing, and drawn by the party, or those having legal authority from him; and such drawing raises a contract to pay the same without any express promise. 3 New Abr. 606. Carth. 510. Salk. 128. Starky v. Cheesman.

As to the form of the bill, it is said, that the same strictness and nicety are not required in penning of bills current between merchant and merchant, as in deeds, wills, &c. On the other hand it may happen, that a writing may have the form of a bill of exchange, and yet be otherwise. 3 New Abr. 606. Lucas 287.

As if A. draw a bill in this form; Sir, pray pay to H. 1945 l. upon demand, out of the money belonging to the proprietors of the Devonshire mines, being part of the consideration-money for the purchase of the manor of West-Buckland. This is no such bill of exchange as will intitle H. to an action against the drawer on the custom of merchants; for it is only a direction or appointment to the cashier to pay the money, and that out of a particular fund, and doth not answer the necessity of trade, not being a negotiable note, nor indorsible over; and charging the drawer on such a note, would be liable to this further inconvenience, that hereby every one who gives his steward an order or authority to pay money, might be charged for non-payment. Siran. 591. 3 Gco. 1. Jenney v. Herle. L. Raym. 1361.

So where a bill drawn by an officer upon his agent, requiring him to pay so much out of his growing subsistence, was held no bill of exchange, nor the drawer liable, though such bill was accepted; for it concerns neither trade nor credit; but is to be paid out of the growing subsistence of the drawer; so that if the party die, or the fund be taken away, the payment is to cease and determine. 3 New Abr. 606.

Also it hath been resolved, that if A. give a note, &c. to B. for the payment of a sum of money when he the said A. should marry such a one, B. cannot bring an action on such note, and declare as on a bill of exchange, setting forth the custom of merchants, &c. for that in truth there is no such custom, being only an agreement founded on a marriage brokerage, and to pay money on a collateral contingency; which contingency cannot be called trading, so as to come within the custom of merchants. 4 Mod. 242. Comb. 227. S. C. Pearson ver. Garret.

The plaintiff declared upon the custom of merchants against the defendants as acceptors of a bill of exchange, and the instrument run in these words.

Messrs. Gilly and Co.

Pray pay Mr. Richard Banbury one month after date two hundred pounds on account of freight of the Vcale Galley, Edward Champion; and this order shall be your sufficient discharge for the same.

J. Gibson.

Accepted for Lesset and Gilly at Leghorn, to pay as remitted from thence at usance.

March 18, 1748.

H. Gilley.

This was ruled to be a bill of exchange. Siran. 1211.

Pay to me or my order so much, is a bill of exchange if accepted; and this is the way to make a bill of exchange without the intervention of a third person. 1 Salk. 130. Trin. 2 Ann. B. R. Builer v. Crips.

It hath been resolved, that a bill of exchange drawn by a gentleman, who is no trader, shall notwithstanding make him responsible within the custom of merchants; for otherwise persons of distinction travelling abroad would suffer in their credit; and it might bring a general inconvenience on trade itself, when it came to be known to foreign merchants, that there were some who, though they took upon themselves to draw bills of exchange, yet were not liable to the payment thereof. Carth. 82. 1 Show. 125. Wetherly ver. Sarsfield. Comb. 45. 152. S. C. ill reported.

II. As to the different kinds of bills.

It is to be observed, 1. That the custom of merchants, in relation to foreign bills of exchange, seems to have prevailed time out of mind; and by this custom, if a merchant abroad draw a bill on a merchant here, or vice versa, verfa, requesting him to pay a certain sum of money, and the drawer sets his name to it; this amounts to a promise to pay, and subjects him, though but a collateral engagement, to an action on the non-payment. 1 Roll. Abr. 6. Cro. Jac. 306. Cro. Car. 301.

And if the drawer, or he on whom the bill is drawn, refuse to accept it, or having accepted it, refuse to pay it, the payee, or he in whose favour it is drawn, may protest it, and shall recover against the drawer, not only the principal sum, but likewise all interest, costs, and damages, by reason of the protest or refusal of acceptance, or payment of the money. Cro. Car. 301.

But though the custom of merchants, in relation to bills of exchange, be established by the Common law, and such bills, being securities for money, are of great credit among them; yet they are not allowed to be securities of as high a nature as bonds or specialties; and therefore it hath been adjudged, that a bill of exchange is within the statute of limitations, and must be sued for within six years after it becomes payable. 3 New Abr. 602. Carth. 3. Renew v. Axton.

Also a bill of exchange is to be considered as a simple contract debt, in a course of administration, which an executor or an administrator, cannot discharge before debts by bond, without being guilty of a devastavit. 3 New Abr. 602.

So, if a merchant in London draw a bill of exchange on his correspondent in Newcastle, in favour of J. S. and the bill is refused, and J. S. dies intestate, his administrator, on letters of administration taken out in Durham, cannot bring an action on the custom of merchants, against the drawer, and lay the same in London; for that a bill of exchange is not equal to a bond or specialty, (which are the deceased's goods where they happen to be at his death), but is a simple contract, which follows the person of the debtor, and makes bona notabilia where the debtor resides; and therefore administration ought to have been taken out in London. 3 New Abr. 603. Carth. 373. Yeoman v. Bradshaw. Comb. 392. S. C.

Also this custom shall not prevail against the privilege of infants, so as to bind them; and accordingly it hath been adjudged, that if an infant draw a bill of exchange, infancy is a good plea in bar to an action brought against him. 3 New Abr. 603. Carth. 160. Williams v. Harri-son.

Bills of exchange are usually drawn payable on sight, so many days after date, or at single, double or treble usance; and it is frequent to draw two or three, if abroad or to be sent abroad, for the same sum, and of the same date, for fear of loss or miscarriage, which carry a condition with them that only one shall be paid. 3 New Abr. 603. Molloy, b. 2. cap. 10. §. 10.

An usance is said to be regularly a month. Molloy 277. 1 Shew. 317. But yet varies according to the customs of particular countries, and therefore, where the plaintiff declared on a bill of exchange drawn at Amsterdam, payable at London, at two usances, and did not shew what the two usances were, judgment was given for the defendant; for the court could not take notice of foreign usances which vary, being longer in one place than in another. 1 Salk. 131. Buckley ver. Cambell. Therefore, if there are three bills for the same sum, and an action is brought on one of them, and the plaintiff declare, that the money in billis prædicta mentionat is not paid, this is sufficient without averring that it was not paid on the other bills, because the sum is the same in all the bills. Carth. 510. 1 Salk. 130. adjudged.

2. With regard to inland bills,

Inland bills of exchange are those drawn by one merchant residing in one part of the kingdom on another residing in some city or town within the same kingdom; and these also being found useful to trade and commerce, have been established on the same foot with foreign bills; but at Common law they differ from them in this, that there was no custom of protesting them, so as to subject the drawer to interest and damages in case of non-payment, as there was on foreign bills. 3 New Abr. 603. 1 Salk. 131. Borough v. Perkins.

To remedy this inconvenience it was enacted by the 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17. That bills of exchange drawn in England, &c. of 5 l. or upwards, payable at a certain number of days, &c. after acceptance, three days after it is due may be protested, and notice thereof must be given in 14 days after the protest. Provided that in case of bills lost or mislaid, drawer to give another.

But this statute was defective, because it could not operate, unless the party, on whom the bill was drawn, accepted it by under-writing the same, which few or none cared to do. 3 New Abr. 604.

To remedy which it was provided by 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. that in case of party refusing to underwrite a bill of exchange, such bill may be protested for non-acceptance. And it is thereby farther provided that no acceptance of inland bills of exchange shall be sufficient, unless the same be underwritten, nor the drawer thereof liable to costs, &c. And that no protest shall be necessary for non-payment, unless the bill be drawn for 20 l. or upwards. It is thereby also enacted, that if any person accept any such bill of exchange in satisfaction of any former debt, it shall be, esteemed full payment of such debt, if such person doth not take his due course to obtain payment thereof, by endeavouring to get the same accepted and paid, and make his protest as aforesaid. Provided that nothing in the said act contained shall extend to discharge any remedy, that any person may have against the drawer, acceptor, or indorser of such bill.

A writ of error was brought on a judgment by nil dicit, in an action against the drawer of an inland bill of exchange, and it was objected that since the act of 9 W. 3. no damage shall be recovered against the drawer upon a bill of exchange, without a protest, and therefore the action lies not, there being no protest.

But by Holt C. J. the statute never intended to destroy the action for want of a protest, but only to deprive the party of recovering interest and cost upon an inland bill against the drawer, without notice of non-payment by protest: for before the statute there was this difference between foreign and inland bills of exchange; if a bill was foreign, one could not resort to the drawer for non-acceptance or non-payment without a protest, and reasonable notice thereof. But in case of an inland bill, there was no occasion for a protest; but if any prejudice happened to the drawer, by the non-payment of the drawee, and that for want of notice of non-payment, which he to whom the bill is made ought to give, the drawer was not liable; and the word damages in the statute, was meant only of damages that the party is at of being longer out of money by the non-payment of the drawer, than the tenor of the bill purported, and not of damages for the original debt: and the protest was ordered for the benefit of the drawer; for if any damages accrue to the drawer for want of a protest, they shall be borne by him to whom the bill is made; and if no damages accrue to him, then there is no harm done him; and a protest is only to give a formal notice, that the bill is not accepted, or is accepted and not paid; and if in such case the damage sustained by the drawer, by his delay, amount to the value of the bill, there shall be no recovery; but otherwise he ought not to lose his debt; but that ought either to appear by evidence upon non assumpsit or by special pleading; and the act is very obscurely and doubtfully penned, and we must not by construction upon such an act to take away a man's right. And the judgment was affirmed per totam curiam. 1 Salk. 131. L. Raym. 993.

The defendant took up several goods of the plaintiff, who sent his servant with a bill to him for the money: The defendant orders the servant to write him a receipt in full of the bill, which he did, and thereupon he gave him a note upon a third person, payable in two months: The master sent several times to the third person, to present him the note, but could not get sight of him within the time, the party breaks, and all this appearing in evidence, and that the defendant went to sea the next day after he gave the note, now this action was brought, against the defendant for the money.

Holt, chief justice: If a man gives a note upon a third person in payment, and the other takes it absolutely as payment; yet if the party giving it knew the third person to be breaking, or to be in a failing condition, and the receiver of the note uses all reasonable diligence to get payment but cannot, this is a fraud, and therefore no payment; for the party failed before the money was payable. The chief justice directed for the plaintiff. Holt's Rep. 122. Popley v. Ashley.

3. With respect to promissory and negotiable notes.

The increase of trade, and necessity of paper credit, put bankers and others upon an expedient of bringing promissory notes within the custom of merchants and making them negotiable, as inland bills of exchange; but this the judges would not admit of, promissory notes being only considered, by the Common law, as evidences of a debt, and not assignable or negotiable in their own nature, 1 Salk. 24, 129. 6 Mod. 29. But it being found necessary to make use of this kind of credit it was enacted by the 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. That promissory notes, payable to order or bearer, may be assigned or indorsed, and action maintained thereon, as on inland bills of exchange.

It hath been adjudged that a note written by the plaintiff, and subscribed by the defendant, is a note made and signed by the defendant within this act; for the signing or subscribing is the lien, and the writing or making is only the mechanical part of it. Trin. 6 Ann. Ash. ver. Baron, in B. R.

Also it hath been held, that a note drawn, in these words, I promise to account with J. S. or his order, for 50l. value received by me, &c. is a good negotiable note, within the statute 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. and that the word account shall be construed the same as to pay, and not to render an account, as factor or bailiff; and the rather, because he is not only accountable to J. S. but likewise to his order; which he cannot be as factor or bailiff, and therefore it must be to pay the money to the indorsee, or order of J. S. Morris ver. Lea. Stra. 629.

III. Concerning the acceptance.

It is to be observed that an acceptance, by the custom of merchants, as effectually binds the acceptor, as if he had been the original drawer; and that having once accepted it, he cannot afterwards revoke it. Cro. Jac. 308. Hard. 487.

A very small matter will amount to an acceptance; and any words will be sufficient for that purpose, which shew the party's assent or agreement to pay the bill; as if upon the tender thereof to him, he subscribes, Accepted, or Accepted by me A. B. or, I accept the bill, and will pay it according to the contents; these clearly amount to an acceptance. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. §. 15.

If the party underwrites the bill, Presented such a day, or only the day of the month; this is such an acknowledgment of the bill as amounts to an acceptance. 3 New Abr. 610. Comb. 401.

If the party says, Leave your bill with me and I will accept it, or, Call for it to-morrow and it shall be accepted; these words, according to the custom of merchants, as effectually bind, as if he had actually signed or subscribed his name according to usual manner.

But if a man says, Leave your bill with me; I will look over my accounts and books between the drawer and me, and call to-morrow, and accordingly the bill shall be accepted; this does not amount to a complete acceptance; for the mention of his books and accounts shews plainly that he intended only to accept the bill, in case he had effects of the drawer's in his hands. And so it was ruled by the Lord Chief Justice Hale at Guildhall. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. §. 20.

A foreign bill was drawn on the defendant, and being returned for want of acceptance, the defendant said, that if the bill came back again he would pay it; this was ruled a good acceptance. 3 New Abr. 610. cites Mich. 6 Geo. 1. B. R. Carr v. Coleman.

The defendant was sued as acceptor, of a bill of exchange. And upon the evidence it appeared to be a parol acceptance only, which the Chief Justice ruled to be sufficient, that being good at Common law, and the stat. 3 & 4 Ann. cap. 9. which requires it to be in writing in order to charge the drawer with damages and costs, having a proviso that it shall not extend to discharge any remedy that any person may have against the acceptor. Upon this direction the jury found for the plaintiff. But the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas having lately ruled it otherwise, the court was moved for a new trial. And, in order finally to settle this point, it was ordered to be argued: and after argument the court was of opinion, that the direction in the present cause was right and agreeable to constant practice. Stran. 1000. 8 Geo. 2. Lumley v. Palmer.

An acceptance however, may be qualified, as thus; I accept this bill, half to be paid in money, and half bills. And this is good by the custom of merchants; for he who may refuse the bill totally may accept it in part; but he to whom the bill is due may refuse acceptance, and protest it so as to charge the drawer. Also it is said, that after such an acceptance, and refusal of payment, he hath the liberty of charging the drawer, that he had in case the bill had been accepted absolutely, and payment refused. 3 New Abr. 611. Cumb. 452. Petit v. Benson.

So the drawer may accept the bill to pay it at longer day than that on which it is made payable, and this shall bind him, but herein care must be taken, that the drawee, by such acceptance or agreement, be not a sufferer. 1 Molloy 283.

A bill was drawn the first of January; the person upon whom the bill was drawn, accepts it to be paid the first of March; the servant brings back the bill. The master perceiving this enlarged acceptance, strikes out the first of March, and puts in the first of January, and then sends the bill to be paid. The acceptor then refuses. Whereupon the person, to whom the monies were to be paid, strikes out the first of January, and put in the first of March again. On an action brought on this bill; the question was, whether these alterations did not destroy the bill? and ruled they did not. Per L. Ch. Ju. Pemberton, Price and Shute. Molloy, b. 2. c. 10. sect. 28.

If A. draw a bill payable such a day, and the drawee accept it some time after, he is liable; and in an action against him the plaintiff may declare, that secundum tenorem & effectum billæ he did not pay, &c. for the effect of the bill is the payment, and not the day of payment. Carth. 459, 460. 1 Salk. 127, 129. 1 Lutw. 233. Jackson ver. Pigot.

Having shewn what shall be a good acceptance, it will be proper to consider by whom the acceptance must be made.

A bill drawn on two must regularly have a joint acceptance; but by the custom of England, where there are two joint traders, and one accepts a bill drawn on both for him and partner, it binds both, if it concerns the joint trade; otherwise if it concerns the acceptor only in a distinct interest and respect. Salk. 126. Pinkney v. Hall. L. Raym. 175.

If a book-keeper, or servant, or other person have authority, or usually transacting business of this nature for the master, accept a bill of exchange, this shall bind such master. 3 New Abr. Law, 611.

But another person may accept the bill for the honour of the drawer; and if he pays the money in default of the party, he is to make a protest with declaration that he hath paid the same for the drawer's honour.

If a bill be accepted, and the person who accepted the same happens to die before the time of payment, there must be a demand made of his executors or administrators; and on non-payment, a protest is to be made, although the money becomes due before there can be administration, &c. A bill may be accepted for part, the party on whom drawn having no more effects in his hands; and there may be a protest for the residue.

Forging the acceptance of any bill of exchange, or the number or principal Sum of any accountable receipt, is made felony. Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 22.

IV. In regard to protest.

A protest is only but to subject the drawer to answer in case of non-acceptance or non-payment; nor does the same discharge the party acceptor if once accepted; for the payee, or person to whom payable, hath now two remedies, one against the drawer, and the other against the acceptor. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. sect. 17.

A protest does not raise any debt, but only serves to give formal notice that the bill is not accepted, or accepted and not paid; and this by the Common law was, and is still necessary on every foreign bill before the drawer can be charged; but it was not required on any inland bill, before the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17. Nor does the want of it since that statute destroy the remedy, which the party had before against the drawer, for the principal. 3 New Abr. Law, 612.

He, to whom a bill is payable, must generally resort to the drawee, and desire him to accept the bill before there can be a protest; but if he be dead, or cannot be found, these are good causes for protesting the bill; also, if after acceptance, the drawee dies, there is to be a demand of his executors or administrators, and in default of payment a protest; and in case the money becomes due before an executor or administrator can be appointed, yet this delay is sufficient cause to protest the bill. 3 New Abr. Law 612.

But if he to whom the bill is to be paid, dies, there can be no protest before a probate of his will, or administration granted; for none but his executors or administrators can give a legal discharge or acquittance for the money, and consequently no other person can sue for or demand the same; and though security be offered to indemnify the drawee against the executors, yet he is not obliged to accept thereof; being a matter left entirely to his consideration, to judge and determine on the sufficiency of such security; and in this case it is said, that if a public notary protest the bill, an action on the case lies against him. 3 New Abr. Law, 612.

If a man be not to be found, or being found, is not to be met with afterwards, it is cause sufficient for a protest: which is a sort of summons to a person to accept or pay a bill, with protestation against the refuser for exchange, interest, and all charges, damages and losses that may be sustained or occasioned by such refusal. Lex Mercat.

If a bill be left with a merchant to accept, which is lost or mislaid, he to whom it is payable, is to request the merchant to give him a note for the payment, according to the time limited in the bill; otherwise there must be two protests, the one for non-acceptance, and the other for non-payment; and though such note be given, yet if the merchant happens to fail, there must be a protest for non-payment in order to charge the drawer. 3 New Abr. Law, 613.

The protest is usually made by some notary publick, and such protest is, prima facie, good evidence that the bill was not accepted, or if accepted, that it was not paid, and sufficient to put the proof on the other side. 3 New Abr. Law, 613.

As to the time in which the protest is to be made, the law hath not determined it, but the same is to be left to a jury, who are to govern themselves according to the custom of merchants in these cases, and the usages of particular countries.

Merchants generally allow three days after a bill becomes due for the payment, and for non-payment within three days protest is made, but is not sent away till the next post after the time of payment is expired, and if Saturday be the third day, no protest is made till Monday. Molloy 284. 1 Show. 164.

And it is said, that where any bill is negotiated, if the same be to be paid at a certain day, and accepted, the protest must be on the day of payment; but if payable at sight, it must be protested the third day of grace: and when such bill of exchange is not paid, the interest thereon commences only from the time of demand. 2 Show. 164. 6 Mod. 138.

A protest on a foreign bill of exchange is absolutely necessary to intitle the party to recover against the drawer, not only interest and costs, but likewise the principal sum; and for this purpose the bill must be presented in a reasonable time; and in case of refusal or acceptance, or in case the drawee cannot be found, it must be protested in a reasonable time, and notice of such protest, as also notice of a protest after acceptance and non-payment given to the drawer in a reasonable time; for though the drawer is bound to the party, to whom the bill is payable, till payment be actually made, yet it is with this condition and proviso that protest be made in due time, and a lawful and ingenious diligence used for the obtaining payment of the money; and the reason hereof is, that the drawer might have had effects, or other means of his, upon whom he drew, to reimburse himself the bill, which since, for want of timely notice he hath remitted or lost, it were unreasonable the drawer should suffer through his neglect. 3 New Abr. Law 613.

As to inland bills, though a protest was not necessary at Common law in order to sue the drawer, and is only now necessary by the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17. and the 3 & 4 Anne c. 9. to intitle the party to interest and costs; yet convenient notice must be given by the party, to whom the bill is payable, to the drawer, of the drawee's refusal of payment, and if any damages accrue to the drawer for want of such notice, it must be borne by the person to whom the bill is payable; but this must be left to a jury, who are to determine herein according to the custom of merchants. 3 New Abr. Law 613.

V. With respect to indorsement.

Indorsement is a term known in law, which by the custom of merchants transfers the property of the bill or note to the indorsee; and is usually made on the back of the bill, and must be in writing; but the law hath not appropriated any set form of words as necessary to this ceremony, and therefore it hath been held, that if a man write on the back of a bill of exchange, This is to be paid to J. S. or The contents of this is to be paid to J. S. and sets his hand to it, this is a good indorsement. 3 New Abr. Law 609.

Clark having a bill of exchange payable to him or order, puts his name upon it, leaving a vacant space above, and sends it to J. S. his friend, who got it accepted: but the money not being paid, Clark brought an indebitatus assumpsit against the acceptor: and it was objected on evidence, that the property was transferred to J. S.

Et per Holt C. J. J. S. had it in his power to act either as servant or assignee: if he had filled up the blank space making the bill payable to him, that would have witnessed his election to have received it as indorsee; but that being omitted, his intention is presumed to act only as servant to Clark, whose name he would use only in order to write the acquittance over it. 1 Salk. 126. Clark v. Pigot. But quere if plaintiff might not have struck out the indorsement. Vide post.

A bill payable to a man's order is payable to himself, and he may bring an action thereon, averring that he made no order, &c. 1 Salk. 130. Comb. 401.

A bill of exchange was indorsed in this manner: Pay the contents of this bill unto the order of J. S. who brought his action as indorsee, averring he had made no order to any body to receive the money; and on demurrer it was objected, that J. S. could not maintain an action; because the indorsement was not to him, but to his order: but the court held the action well brought against the indorser; and that among tradesmen, this form of indorsement is commonly used, although it is intended to be made payable to the person, whose order is mentioned. 3 New Abr. Law 609.

As to the indorsing of bills, a difference has been taken between a bill payable to J. S. or bearer, and J. S. or order; that the first is not assignable by the contract, so as to enable the indorsee to bring an action, if the drawer refuse to pay; because there is no such authority given to the party by the first contract; and the effect of it is only to discharge the drawee, if he pays it to the bearer, though he comes to it by trover, theft, or otherwise; but when the bill is payable to J. S. or order, there an express power is given to the party to assign, and the indorsee may maintain an action. 1 Salk. 125. 3 Lev. 299. 1 Salk. 133. Skin. 343. Comb. 204. 466. But notes payable to J. S. or bearer, are negotiable, per 3 & 4 Anne c. 9.

Also, though an assignment of a bill, payable to J. S. or bearer, be no good assignment to charge the drawer with an action on the bill, yet it is a good bill between the indorser and indorsee, and the indorser is liable to an action for the money; for the indorsement is in nature of a new bill. 1 Salk. 125, 133. Skin. 343, 411.

So it hath been adjudged, that an indorsee of a bill, payable to J. S. or bearer, may maintain an action against the drawer; on alledging a special custom, that such bill bill should bind him, which custom is so found, or confessed by the defendant. 1 Salk. 125. 3 Lev. 299. &c.

Also, in cases of bills purchased at a discount, there is said to be this difference, that if it be a bill payable to A. or bearer, it is an absolute purchase; but if to A. or order, and it is indorsed blank, and filled up with an assignment, the indorser must warrant it as much as if there had been no discount. 1 Salk. 128.

A note payable to a feme sole, or order, who afterwards marries, can only be indorsed by the husband. Ca. L. and Eq. 246.

- If a bill of exchange is made payable to A. or order, who indorses it to B. who indorses it to C. which is protested for non-payment; B. may bring an action on this bill, notwithstanding his indorsement. 3 New Abr. Law 608. 1 Show. 163. Deckers v. Harriat.

The money is to be paid to him in whose favour the bill is drawn, or to the indorsee, in case it be indorsed over, of which indorsement the drawer and acceptor must take notice at their peril; also if there are several indorsers and indorsee, the last indorsee is intitled to the money. 3 New Abr. Law 608. Carth. 130.

It has been adjudged, that a bill of exchange cannot be indorsed for part, so as to subject the party to several actions; as if A. having a bill of exchange upon B. indorses part of it to J. S. J. S. cannot bring an action for his part; although he alledge a custom amongst merchants for such kind of indorsement; for the contract being intire, and subjecting him only to one man's action, no custom can make him liable to two or more actions for the same debt. 3 New Abr. Law 610. Carth. 466. Hawkins v. Cardy. 1 Salk. 65. S. C. where it is said, that the plaintiff should have acknowledged satisfaction for the rest. 3 New Abr. Law 610.

Every indorser of a bill is liable as the first drawer; the indorser is answerable, because the indorsement is in nature of a new bill. 1 Salk. 125.

But an indorser is not discharged without actual payment of the bill; unless there be some neglect or default in the indorsee, as where he doth not endeavour to receive the money in convenient time, and then the first drawer becomes insolvent. Ibid. 132. An indorser charges himself in the same manner as if he had originally drawn the bill: and a plaintiff need not prove the drawer's hand, as the indorser is a new drawer. 1 Salk. 127.

A blank-indorsement doth not transfer the property of a bill of exchange; though the person to whom indorsed may fill up the indorsement, so as to charge the indorser; for where one indorses his name on a bill, the indorsee may make what use of it he pleases, by way of assignment, acquittance, &c. 1 Salk. 126.

VI. Who liable, to whom payment to be made, and of suing the parties, &c.

With respect to this head, it is to be premised, that every drawer of a bill is liable to the payment thereof, as is every acceptor and indorser. Also if there are several indorsers of the same bill, the last indorsee may bring his action against the first indorser, or any of them; for the indorsement is, as it were, a new bill, or at least a warranty, as some books express it, by the indorser that the bill shall be paid. 3 New Abr. Law 607.

If a bill be drawn upon A. and he accepts it, and afterwards refuses payment, upon which the bill is protested, the person to whom it is payable may bring several actions against the acceptor and drawer; for the protest is no discharge of the acceptor. 3 New Abr. Law 607.

But though the drawer, acceptor, and indorser are all liable, yet the party can have but one satisfaction; and until such satisfaction is actually had, he may sue all, or any of them: and accordingly it was adjudged in the Exchequer Chamber, where the case was, An indorsee sued the drawer, and had judgment against him, and he also brought an action against the indorser, to which the indorser pleaded the judgment against the drawer: but the plea was held ill; for that the judgment was not satisfaction, without which the party could not be barred of the remedy, which he had against the other. 3 New Abr. Law 607.

And not only the drawer, acceptor, and indorser are liable, but also, by the custom of merchants, if one merchant draw a bill which is protested, and another hearing thereof declare, that he, for the honour of the drawer, will pay the contents, and thereupon subscribes in these or like words: I the undersigned do bind myself as principal according to the custom of merchants for the sum mentioned in the bill of exchange, whereupon this protest is made, &c. this shall as effectually bind him as if he had been the original drawer; and by this the person to whom the bill is payable hath his remedy both against such person as surety, and also against the principal; but the principal or original drawer is liable to him who subscribes for his honour. 3 New Abr. Law 608.

A. draws a bill upon B. who had effects enough in his hands to answer the bill, which some time after is protested, whereupon the bill is indorsed to A. the drawer, who brings an action as indorsee. Per Parker C. J. at Nisi prius, there being effects, the acceptance was not upon the honour of the drawer, and so the action is well brought; for when a merchant draws a bill on his correspondent, who accepts it, this is payment; for it makes him debtor to another person, who may bring his action; so that this is such a payment as may be set off upon a former action, and pleaded in bar of such action: But if there were no effects, the action would not lie; for it would have been an acceptance upon honour only, and the money would be recovered only to be recovered again. Vin. Abr. tit. Bills of Exchange (H. 12.) 12 Mod. Trin. 10 Anne, B. R. Louviere v. Lanbray.

It hath been held by some opinions, that though an indorser be liable, that yet, in an action against him, it must be alledged in the declaration, that the money was demanded of the drawer, he being the principal debtor, and the indorser only a surety, warranting payment in case the drawer made default; but the better opinion seems to be, that this is not material, every indorser being to be considered as making a new bill, or note, on whose credit alone perhaps the money was given, and the drawer not at all known to the indorsee; but it seems to be more advisable to give it in evidence, that there was a demand on the drawer, or an endeavour to find him out: but this also has been thought by some not to be necessary. 1 Salk. 126. cont. 1 Salk. 133.

If the indorsee of a bill accepts but two-pence from the acceptor, he can never resort to the drawer. L. Raym. 743. Taffel and Lee v. Lewis.

With respect to the person intitled to receive the money, it is to be paid to him in whose favour the bill is drawn, or to the indorsee, in case it be indorsed over; of which indorsement it seems the drawer, acceptor and drawee must take notice at their peril; also, if there are several indorsers and indorsee, the last indorsee is intitled to the money. Carth. 130.

If A. draws a bill of exchange, payable to B. for the use of C. and B. for valuable consideration indorses it over to D. D. may bring an action against A. the drawer; and he cannot plead, that the money was extended in his hands at the suit of the king, for a debt due from C. for C. being only cestui que trust, had only an equitable interest, and no legal remedy for the money; and B. is only responsible in equity to C. for the breach of trust. Carth. 5. Skin. 264. 1 Show. 5.

A bill of exchange directed to one to pay so much for value received, shall be a good discharge of the debt, if the bill be not returned back to the drawer in time, although it be not paid; for keeping the bill long, is evidence that he hath agreed to take the merchant as debtor. Ibid. 126. If a man pays a bill of exchange before due, and the person to whom paid fails before the time of payment, he shall be obliged to pay it again to the deliverer, because the drawer might have countermanded the same, or ordered the bill to be made payable to another person. A person gives a bill of exchange, &c. upon a third person to another in payment, and he takes it absolutely, if he knew the third person to be breaking or in a failing condition, and the receiver of the bill uses all diligence to get payment, but cannot, this is a fraud and no payment: though if a man takes a note or bill, bill, and after it is payable makes no demand, so that it might be paid if he had been diligent enough, then if the party on whom the bill is drawn fails, it is at the peril of him that took it. Mod. Caf. 147. A drawer of a bill of exchange is always answerable, by the value received, though there be no tender of the bill for payment, or it be not protested, unless the person on whom drawn break, and then it is otherwise, for in that case the party who paid the money for the bill loseth it. 2 Show. 319. Though it is said the words value received, are now not absolutely necessary to a bill of exchange; for when they are mentioned therein, the drawer must answer it at Common law; and if not, then by the custom of merchants. 1 Show. 5. Mod. Caf. L. & E. 267. Vide Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. According to the case of Banbury v. Liffet and Gilly, Stra. 1211. the words value received are absolutely necessary in a bill of exchange. So resolved, in that case, where it was left to a special jury of merchants.

VII. With regard to the action, &c.

It seems agreed, that against the drawer an action of debt, or a general indebitatus assumpsit will lie; for he having received the money, the law raises a contract, and lays him under an obligation to pay it; but it hath been adjudged, that neither an action of debt, nor an indebitatus assumpsit will lie against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, and therefore the remedy against him must be by a special action on the case founded on the custom of merchants; for the acceptance is only a collateral engagement to pay the debt of another, in the same manner as a promise by a stranger to pay, &c. if the creditor will forbear his debt. 3 New Abr. Law 614. Hard. 485.

But tho' a general indebitatus assumpsit will not lie against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, yet if A. delivers money to B. to pay over to C. and give C. a bill of exchange drawn upon B. and B. accepts it, C. may have an indebitatus assumpsit against B. as having received money to his use, but must not declare only upon the bill of exchange accepted. 3 New Abr. Law 614. 1 Vin. 153. 1 Rel. Abr. 32.

Where a bill is drawn payable to A. B. or bearer, an assignee must sue in the name of him to whom it is made payable, and not in his own name; otherwise a stranger finding the bill, might recover: if it be made payable to A. B. or order, there an assignee must sue in his own name, because the order must be made by indorsement, &c. 3 Salk. 67.

As to the manner of declaring on a bill of exchange, this is said to have varied; the declaration in some cases being general, sometimes special, and laid with an express promise, and at other times without it: but it seems to be now settled, that the custom of merchants concerning bills of exchange being part of the Common law, of which the judges will take notice ex officio, it is unnecessary to set forth the custom specially in the declaration, and that it is sufficient to say, that such a person, according to the usage and custom of merchants, drew the bill. 3 New Abr. Law 614.

As by the custom of merchants public notaries usually protest bills, it hath been held, that pleading protestavit seu protestari causavit, is sufficient; and that the party may plead protestavit, and give in evidence that the notary public did it. 3 New Abr. 613. Cumb. 153.

Debt against a merchant upon a bill by him payable at the feast of the purification called Candlemas-day; and after judgment for the plaintiff, it was moved in arrest thereof, because payment at Candlemas is not known in our law: but judgment was affirmed; for that amongst merchants such payment is known to be on the 2d of February; and the judges ought to take notice thereof for the maintenance of traffic. Vin. Abr. tit. Bill of Exchange, &c. (A.) 1 Yelv. 135. Mich. 6 Jac. B. R. Pierson v. Pounteys. Note; It seems by this case it is not necessary to aver in the declaration, that Candlemas-day was the 2d of February, though it would be better.

A person may plead the statute of limitations to an action upon a bill of exchange; and it is no good replication, that it was on account between merchants, where it appears to be for value received. Comber. 190, 392.

With respect to the evidence, it is to be observed, that an indorser of a bill of exchange, who has paid it, must prove the payment in an action against the acceptor. L. Raym. 742, 743. Mendez v. Gareroon.

Indorsee need not prove the drawer's hand, because, though it be a forged bill, the indorser is bound to pay it. 1 Salk. 127. pl. 9. Pasch. 11 W. 3. coram Holt at Guildball, Lambert v. Park.

If a man has a bill of exchange, he may authorise another to indorse his name upon it by parol; and when that is done, it is the same as if he had done it himself. Per Holt Ch. J. 12 Mod. 564. Mich. 13 W. 3. at Nisi prius. Anon.

If A. gives B. a bill of exchange on C. in payment of a former debt; this will not be allowed as evidence on non assumpsit unless paid, though B. kept it in his hands long after it was payable; for a bill shall never go in payment of a precedent debt, unless it be part of the contract that it should be so. Salk. 124. pl. 1. coram Holt Ch. J. at Guildball, 3 W. and M. Clark v. Mundel.

An action on a bill of exchange, being by an executor, and upon a debt laid to be due to testator, it was held necessary to prove that the acceptance was in the testator's time; per Holt Ch. J. 12 Mod. 447. at Nisi prius, coram Holt, Pasch. 13 W. 3. Anon.

For other matter concerning this head, see the foregoing divisions sparsim.

VIII. Of bills lost, stolen, or forged.

Concerning this head it is to be observed, that if a bank bill payable to A. B. or bearer, be lost, and it is found by a stranger, payment to him would indemnify the bank; yet A. B. may have trover against the finder, though not against his assignee for valuable consideration, which creates a property. 3 Salk. 71.

If a possessor of a bill by any accident loses it, he must cause intimation to be made by a notary public before witnesses, that the bill is lost or mislaid, requiring that payment be not made of the same to any person without his privity. And if any bill of exchange for five pounds or upwards, drawn in, or dated at and from any place of this kingdom, shall be lost, the drawer of the bill shall give another bill of the same tenor, security being given to indemnify him in case the bill so lost be found again. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17.

Stealing of bills of exchange, notes, &c. is felony of the same degree, as if the offender had robbed the owner of so much money, &c. And the forging bills of exchange, or notes for money, indorsements, &c. is felony, by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. 9 Geo. 2. c. 18. And vide 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. f. 78. And by 7 Geo. 2. c. 22. Forging the acceptance of a bill of exchange is felony without benefit of clergy.

There are not only bills of exchange, but bills of credit between merchants, the forms whereof are as follow:

Form of a bill of exchange.

250l. sterling.

London, 10 August 1770.

A T double usance pay this my first bill of exchange to Mr. C. D. merchant, or order, the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds sterling, for the value here received of the said C. D. And place it to account as by advice from

Yours, &c. A. B.

To Mr. E. F. merchant, in Amsterdam.

Form of a bill of credit.

T HIS present writing witnesseth, That I A. B. of London, merchant, do undertake, to and with C. D. of, &c. merchant, his executors and administrators, that if he the said C. D. do deliver, or cause to be delivered unto E. F. of, &c. or to his use, any sum or sums of money amounting to the sum of, &c. of lawful British money, and shall shall take a bill under the hand and seal of the said E. F. confessing and shewing the certainty thereof; that then I, my executors or administrators having the same bill delivered to me or them, shall and will immediately, upon the receipt of the same, pay, or cause to be paid unto the said C. D. his executors or assigns, all such sums of money as shall be contained in the said bill, at, &c. For which payment in manner and form aforesaid, I bind myself, my executors, administrators and assigns by these presents. In witness, &c.

Form of a protest of a bill of credit.

K NOW all men, That I A. B. on the day, &c. at the usual place of abode of C. D. have demanded payment of the bill of which the above is a copy, which the said C. D. did not pay, wherefore I the said A. B. do hereby protest the said bill. Dated, &c.

A common bill or note for money.

I Promise to pay to Mr. C. D. or order, the sum of one hundred pounds (for value received) within twenty-one days after the date hereof (or on demand, &c.) Witness my hand this twentieth day of August 1770.

100l. os. od.

A. B.

Bill of lading, Is a memorandum signed by masters of ships, acknowledging the receipt of the merchants goods, &c. Vide Lex Mercatoria.

Bill of sale, Is a solemn contract under seal, whereby a man passes the right or interest that he hath in goods and chattels; for if a man promises or gives any chattels without valuable consideration, or without delivering possession, this doth not alter the property, because it is nudum pactum unde non oritur actio; but if a man sells goods by deed under seal duly executed, this alters the property between the parties, though there be no consideration, or no delivery of possession, because a man is estopped to deny his own deed, or affirm any thing contrary to the manifest solemnity of contracting. Yelv. 196. Cró. Jac. 270. 1 Brown. 111. 6 Co. 18.

But what is chiefly to be considered under this head, is the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 5. by which it is enacted, "That all fraudulent conveyances of lands, &c. goods and chattels, to avoid the debt or duty of another, shall (as against the party only, whose debt or duty is so endeavoured to be avoided) be utterly void, except grants made bona fide, and on a good (which is construed a valuable) consideration. And by the latter clause of that statute it is provided, That all parties to such fraudulent conveyance, who being privy thereunto, shall wittingly justify the same to be done bona fide and on good consideration, or shall alien or assign any lands, lease or goods so to them conveyed as aforesaid, shall forfeit one year's value of the lands, lease, rent, common, or other profit out of the same, and the whole value of the goods; and being thereof convicted shall suffer half a year's imprisonment without bail; the forfeiture to be divided between the queen and the party convicted.

A. being indebted to B. in 400l. and to C. in 20l. C. brings debt against him, and pending the writ, A. being possessed of goods and chattels to the value of 300l. makes a secret conveyance of them all, without exception, to B. in satisfaction of his debt; but notwithstanding, continues in possession of them, and sells some of them, and others of them, being sheep, he sets his mark on: and resolved that it was a fraudulent gift and sale within the aforesaid statute, and shall not prevent C. of his execution for his just debt; for though such sale hath one of the qualifications required by the statute, being made to a creditor for his just debt, and consequently on a valuable consideration; yet it wants the other; for the owners's continuing in possession, is a fixed and undoubted character of a fraudulent conveyance, because the possession is the only indiciu of the property of a chattel, and therefore this sale is not made bona fide. 3 Co. 80. Mo. 638. 2 Bull. 226.

As the owner's continuing in possession of goods after his bill of sale of them, is an undoubted badge of a fraudulent conveyance, because the possession is the only indiciu of the property of a chattel, which is a thing unfixed and transitory; so there are other marks and characters of fraud; as a general conveyance of them all without any exception; for it is hardly to be presumed, that a man will strip himself intirely of all his personal property, not excepting his bedding and wearing apparel, unless there was some secret correspondence and good understanding settled between him and the vendee, for a private occupancy of all, or some part of the goods for his support; also a secret manner of transacting such bill of sale, and unusual clauses in it; as that it is made honestly, truly, and bona fide; are marks of fraud and collusion; for such an artful and forced dress and appearance give a suspision and jealousy of some defect varnished over with it. 3 Co. 81. Mo. 638.

If goods continue in the possession of the vendor after a bill of sale of them, though there is a clause in the bill that he shall account annually with the vendee for them, yet it is a fraud; since if such colouring were admitted, it would be the easiest thing in the world to avoid the provisions and cautions of the aforesaid act. Mo. 638.

If A. makes a bill of sale of all his goods, in consideration of blood and natural affection to his son, or one of his relations, it is a void conveyance in respect of creditors; for the considerations of blood, &c. which are made the motives of this gift, are esteemed in their nature inferior to valuable considerations, which are necessarily required in such sales, by 13 Eliz. cap. 5.

If A. makes a bill of sale to B. a creditor, and afterwards to C. another creditor, and delivers possession at the time of the sale to neither; afterwards C. gets possession of them, and B. takes them out of his possession, C. cannot maintain trespass, because the first bill of sale is fraudulent against creditors, and so is the second, yet they both bind A. and B.'s is the elder title, and the naked possession of C. ought not to prevail against the title of B. that is prior, where both are equally creditors, and possession at the time of the bill of sale is delivered over to neither. Abr. Eq. 148.

Fraud may be given in evidence, to defeat a fraudulent and covinous conveyance, and the party that offers it need not plead it; for the acts to prevent fraud are to be construed literally in suppression of the mischief; besides, it were an hardship to force the party to plead a thing that is managed with so much subtlety, that he cannot attain a competent knowledge of it to plead it in due time. 5 Co. 60.

Bill of Store, A kind of licence granted at the custom-house to merchants, to carry such stores and provisions as are necessary for their voyage, custom free. And bill of sufferance is a licence granted to a merchant, to suffer him to trade from one English port to another, without paying custom. An. 14 Car. 2. c. 11.

Billets of Gold, (Fr. billet) Are wedges or ingots of gold, mentioned in the statute 27 E. 3. c. 27.

Billet Wood, Is small wood for fuel, which must be three foot and four inches long, and seven inches and a half in compass, &c. Justices of peace shall inquire by the oaths of six men of the assise of billet, and being under size, it is to be forfeited to the poor. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 14. Vide 9 An. c. 15. 10 An. c. 6. See Fuel.

Billinggate market to be kept every day, and toll is appointed by statute: all persons buying fish in this market may sell the same in any other market by retail; but none but fishmongers shall sell them in shops: if any person shall buy any quantity of fish at Billinggate for others, or any fishmonger shall ingross the market, they incur a penalty of 20l. And fish imported by foreigners shall be forfeited, and the vessel, &c. See 10 & 11 H. 3. c. 24. 1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 18. f. 1. &c. Vide Fish and Fishermen.

Billus, A stick or staff, which in former times was the only weapon for servants.—Si quis in servum transeat, in signum fignam hujus transfontionis billum vel strubulum, vel deinceps ad hunc modum servitutis arma suscipiat, & in manum domini mittat. Leg. II. 1. c. 78.

Binnarium, binna, benna, Stews or water penned up for feeding and preserving of fish.—Expense in pisce ad instaurandum binnarium empto xlii. Consuetud. Dom. de Farrend. MS. f. 29. Vide Stat. 3 Ed. 1.

Biothanetus, One who deserves to come to an untimely end. Ordericus Vitalis, writing of the death of William Rufus, who was shot by Walter Tyrrel, tells us, that the bishops, considering his wicked life and bad exit, adjudged him ecclesiastica veluti biothanetum absolutione indignum. Lib. 10. p. 782.

Birretum, A thin cap fitted close to the shape of the head: and is also used for the cap or coif of a judge, or serjeant at law. Spelm.

Births, Burials, and Marriages, &c. By statute, a duty was granted on births and burials of persons, from 50*l.* a duke, &c. down to 10*s.* and 2*s.* And the like on marriages; also bachelors, above twenty-five years of age, were to pay 1*s.* yearly. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 6. Exp. as to the duties.

Bisacutus, An iron weapon double edged, so as to cut on both sides. Fecit eidem unam plagam mortalem de quadam bisacuta. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 33.

Bisantium, besantine, or besunt, An ancient coin first coined by the Western emperors at Bizantium or Constantinople. It was of two sorts, gold and silver; both which were current in England. Chaucer represents the gold besantine to have been equivalent to a ducket; and the silver besantine was computed generally at two shillings. In some old leases of land there have been reserved, by way of rent, unum bisantium, vel duos solidos.

Bi-scot, At a session of sewers held at Wigenhale in Norfolk, 9 Ed. 3. it was decreed, That if any should not repair his proportion of the banks, ditches and causeys by a day assign'd, XII*d.* for every perch unrepair'd should be levied upon him, which is called a bi-scow: and if he should not, by a second day given him, accomplish the same, then he should pay for every perch 2*s.* which is called bi-scot. Hist. of Imbanking and Draining, f. 254.

Bishop, (episcopus) Is the chief of the clergy in his diocese, and the archbishop's suffragan or assistant. He is elected by the king's conge d'eshire, or licence to elect the person named by the king, directed to the dean and chapter; and if they fail to make election in twenty days, they incur the penalty of a præmunire, and the king may nominate, &c. by letters patent. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. This was to avoid the power of the see of Rome. The dean and chapter having made their election certify it to the king, and the archbishop, &c. And then the King gives the royal assent under the Great Seal, directed to the archbishop, commanding him to confirm and consecrate the bishop elect: and on confirmation, a bishop hath jurisdiction in his diocese; but he hath not a right to his temporalities till consecration. The consecration of bishops, &c. is confirmed by act of parliament. It is held a bishop hath three powers; 1st, His power of ordination, which is gained on his consecration, and not before; and thereby he may confer orders, &c. in any place throughout the world. 2. His power of jurisdiction, which is limited and confined to his see. 3. His power of administration and government of the revenues; both which last powers he gains by his confirmation: and some are of opinion, that the bishop's jurisdiction, as to ministerial acts, commences on his election. Palm. Rep. 473, 474, 475. The king may not seize into his hands the temporalities of bishops but upon just cause, and not for a contempt, which is only finable. Bishops are allowed four years for payment of their first fruits, by a late statute, and every bishop may retain four chaplains. Vide 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. f. 14. 8 Eliz. c. 1. and Table to Statutes, tit. Bishops and Chaplains. A bishop hath his consistory court, to hear ecclesiastical causes; and is to visit the clergy, &c. He consecrates churches, ordains, admits, and institutes priests; confirms, suspends, excommunicates, grants licences for marriage, makes probate of wills, &c. 1 Inst. 96. 2 Rol. Abr. 230. He hath his archdeacon, dean and chapter, chancellor, and vicar-general, to assist him: may grant leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, of land usually letten, reserving the accustomed yearly rents. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. And vide 1 El. c. 19. f. 5. Leases otherwise made are void. Bishops may make concurrent leases for twenty-one years, upon leases for the like term, with confirmation of dean and chapter. Bishops are barons and lords of parliament. Bishopricks, The diocese of a bishop, or that circuit, wherein he hath jurisdiction. With respect to the nomination to bishopricks, vide Black. Com. 1 V. 378. 4 V. 107, 408, 423.

Bissa, (Fr. biche) cerva major, A hind. — Decimam venationis nostræ, scil. de cervis, bissis, damis, porcis & lais. Mon. Angl. vol. 1. fol. 648.

Bissextile, (bissextilis) Leap year, so called, because the sixth day before the calends of March is twice reckoned, viz. on the 24th and 25th of February; so that the bissextile year hath one day more than the others, and happens every fourth year. This intercalation of a day was first invented by Julius Cæsar, to make the year agree with the course of the sun. And to prevent all doubt and ambiguity that might arise thereupon, it is enacted by the statute de anno bissextili, 21 H. 3. That the day increasing in the leap-year, and the day next before, shall be accounted but one day. Brit. 209. Dyer 17. See Year. Vide also Black. Com. 2 V. 141.

Bissus, bifius, mica bifis, panis bifius, (Fr. pain bis) Brown bread, a brown loaf. Corwel.

Black Act, By Stat. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. so called, Persons hunting armed and disguised, and killing or stealing deer, or robbing warrens, or stealing fish out of any river, &c. or any persons unlawfully hunting in his majesty's forests, &c. or breaking down the head of any fishpond, or killing, &c. of cattle, or cutting down trees, or setting fire to house, barn, or wood, or shooting at any person, or sending anonymous letters, or signed with fictitious name, demanding money, &c. or rescuing such offenders, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. This act is made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42. And see farther 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. and 27 Geo. 2. c. 15. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 144, 208, 232, 244.

Black Lead, By 25 Geo. 2. c. 10. Entering mines of black lead, with intent to steal, is made felony; and by the same act offenders committed or transported for entering mines of black lead with intent to steal, escaping, or breaking prison, or returning from transportation, are excluded from clergy.

Black-Mail, (Fr. maille, a link of mail, or small piece of metal or money) Signifies in the north of England, in the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, &c. a certain rent of money, corn, or other thing, anciently paid to persons inhabiting upon or near the borders, being men of name and power, allied with certain robbers within the said counties; to be freed and protected from the devastations of these robbers. Anno 43 Eliz. cap. 13. These robbers were called mosi troopers, and several statutes have been made against them. The 9 Ed. 3. c. 4. mentions black money: and black rents are the same with black mail; being rents formerly paid in provisions and flesh. And by 18 Car. 2. c. 3. Notorious thieves, or spoil-takers in Northumberland or Cumberland are excluded clergy, or may be transported at discretion of the judge. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 43. 4 V. 243.

Blacks of Waltham, A set of desperate deer-stealers. See Waltham Blacks.

Black-Rod, The gentleman usher of the black rod is chief gentleman usher to the king: he belongs to the garter, and hath his name from the black rod, on the top whereof sits a lion in gold, which he carrieth in his hand. He is called in the Black Book, fol. 255. Lator virgæ nigre, & hostiarius; and in other places virgæ bajulus. His duty is ad portandum virgam coram domino rege ad festum sancti Georgii infra castrum de Windfore: and he hath the keeping of the chapter-house door, when a chapter of the order of the garter is sitting; and in the time of parliament, he attends on the house of peers. His habit is like ke to that of the register of the order, and garter king of arms; but this he wears only at the solemn times of the festival of St. George, and on the holding of chapters. The black rod he bears, is instead of a mace, and hath the same authority; and this officer hath anciently been made by letters patent under the great seal, he having great power; for to his custody all peers, called in question for any crime, are first committed.

Blackwell-hall. The public market of Blackwell-hall is to be kept every Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, at certain hours appointed; and the hall-keepers not to admit any buying or selling of woollen cloth at the said hall upon any other days or hours, on penalty of 100*l.* Factors selling cloth out of the market, shall forfeit 5*l.* &c. Registers of all the cloths bought and sold are to be weekly kept: and buyers of cloth otherwise than for ready money, shall give notes to the sellers for the money payable; and factors are to transmit such notes to the owners in twelve days, or be liable to forfeit double value, &c. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 9.

Bladarius, A cornmonger, meal man, or corn-chandler. It is used in our records for such a retailer of corn. Pat. 1 Ed. 3. par. 3. m. 13. See title Clothiers.

Blado, (bladum) In the Saxon signifies generally fruit, corn, hemp, flax, herbs, &c. Will. de Mobun released to his brother all the manor of T.—Salvo instauro suo & blado, &c. excepting his stock and corn on the ground. Hence bladier is taken for an ingrosser of corn or grain. — Sciant quod ego Willielmus Alreton, consensu & voluntate beatrix uxoris mee, dedi Agathe Gille pro duabus marcis argenti & una mensura bladi, duas solidatas redditus in villa Leominstr. &c. Ex libro Chartar. Priorat. Leominstric.

Blanch firmes, In ancient times the crown-rents were many times reserved in libris albis, or blanch firmes: In which case the buyer was holden de-albare firmam; viz. his base money or coin, worse than standard, was token down in the Exchequer, and reduced to the fineness of standard silver; or instead thereof, he paid to the King 12*d.* in the pound, by way of addition. Lowndes's Essay upon Coins, p. 5. Blank farm, Blount says, was a white farm; that is where the rent was paid in silver, and not in cattle. Blanks, a kind of white money coin'd by Hen. 5. in those parts of France which were then subject to England, the value whereof was 8*d.* Stow's Annals, p. 586. These were forbidden to be current in this realm. 2 Hen. 6. 9. As to blanch rent, see Black. Com. 2 V. 42.

Blandford, An act for rebuilding the town of Blandford in the county of Dorset, burnt down by fire in the Year 1731, and to determine all differences between proprietors, landlords and tenants of houses, and concerning ground, &c. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 16.

Blanhornum, A little bell, or rather ticinium. — Pecoris ticinium, & canis oppa & blanhornum, borum trium singulum est unum solidum valen. Log. Adelftan. cap. 8.

Blank-Bar, Is used for the same with what we call a common bar, and is the name of a plea in bar, which in an action of trespass is put in to oblige the plaintiff to assign the certain place where the trespass was committed: 2 Cro. Rep. 594.

Blanks, In judicial proceedings, certain void spaces sometimes left by mistake. A blank (supposing something material wanting) is a declaration, abates the same, 4 Ed. 4. 14. 20 H. 6. 18. And such a blank is a good cause of demurrer. Blanks in the imparlance roll aided after verdict for the plaintiff. Hob. 76. Parker v. Parker.

Blasarius, Is a word used to signify an incendiary.

Blasphemy, (blasphemia) Is an injury offered to God, by denying that which is due and belonging to him, or attributing to him what is not agreeable to his nature. Lindw. cap. 1. And blasphemies of God, as denying his being, or providence, and all contumelious reproaches of Jesus Christ, &c. are offences by the Common law, punished by fine, imprisonment, pillory, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 87. And by statute, if any one shall by writing, speaking, &c. deny any of the persons in the Trinity, to be God; assert there are more Gods than one, &c. he shall be incapable of any office; and for the second offence, be disabled to sue any action, to be executor, &c. and suffer three years imprisonment. 9 & 10 W. 3. cap. 32.

Likewise by 3 Jac. 1. c. 21. persons jestingly or prophaneely using the name of God, or of Jesus Christ, or of the Holy Ghost, or of the Trinity, in any stage play, &c. incurs a forfeiture of 10*l.*

Ble, Signifies light, colour, &c. And blee is taken for corn: As to Boughton under the Blee, &c.

Blench, A sort of tenure of land; as to hold land in blench, is by payment of a sugar-loaf, a couple of capons, a beaver-hat, &c. if the same be demanded in the name of blench, i. e. Nollus albe firmæ.

Blench-holding, The white-rents, or blanch-farms; reditus albi; this small kind of payment, called in Scotland blench-bolding, or reditus alba firmæ. Black. Com. 2 V. 42. n.

Blenheim, A noble and princely house erected in honour of the Duke of Marlborough at Woodstock near Oxford, which with the manor of Woodstock is settled on the Duke and his heirs, in consideration of the eminent services by him performed for the publick; and for building of which house the sum of 500,000*l.* was granted by parliament, &c. Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 6. 5 Ann. c. 3. & c. 4. 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 12. f. 34.

Bleta, (Fr. bleche) Pete, or combustible earth dug up and dry'd for burning. — Minister & fratres de Knareborough petunt quod ipse & eorum tenentes fodiant turbas & bletas in foresta de Knareborough. Rot. Parl. 35 Ed. 1.

Blinds, Boughs broken down from trees, and thrown in a way where deer are likely to pass.

Blisson, Corruptly called blissom, is when a ram goes to the ewe, from the teuton. Blets, the bowels.

Bloated fish or Herring, Are those which are half dried. Anno 18 Car. 2. c. 2.

Bloodeus, (Sax. blod) Deep red colour; from whence comes bloat and bloated, viz. sanguine and high coloured, which in Kent is called a blowing colour; and a blouse is there a red-fac'd wench. The prior of Burcester, A. D. 1425. gave his liveries of this colour. Paroch. Antiq. 596.

Blood, (sanguis) Is regarded in descents of lands; for a person is to be the next and most worthy of blood to inherit his ancestor's estate. 1 Inst. 13. See Jenk. Cent. 203.

Bloodwit, or blodwit, compounded of the Sax. blod, i. e. sanguis and wyte, an old English word signifying miseriordia, Is often used in ancient charters of liberties for an amercement for bloodshed. Skene writes it blud-wit; and says wit in English is injuria; and that blud-wit is an amerciamnt or unlaw (as the Scotch call it) for wrong or injury, as bloodshed is: for he that hath blud-wit granted him, hath free liberty to take all amerciaments of courts for effusion of blood. Fleta saith, Quod significat quietantiam misericordie pro effusione sanguinis. Lib. 1. cap. 47. And according to some writers, blod-wite was a customary fine paid as a composition and atonement for shedding or drawing of blood; for which the place was answerable, if the party were not discovered: and therefore a privilege or exemption from this fine or penalty, was granted by the King, or supreme Lord, as a special favour. So king Henry II. granted to all tenants within the honour of Willingford, Ut quieti sint de Hidaio, & blodewite, &c. — Paroch. Antiq. 114.

Bloody-hand, Is one of the four kinds of circumstances by which an offender is supposed to have killed deer in the King's forest: and it is where a trespasser is apprehended in the forest, with his hands or other parts bloody, though he be not found chasing or hunting of the deer. Manwood. In Scotland, in such like crimes, they say taken in the fact, or with the red hand. See Back-berrind.

Blubber, Is whale oil, before it is thoroughly boiled and brought to perfection. It is mentioned Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18.

Book-board, or book-board (librarium horreum) A place where books, evidences or writings are kept.

Bockland, (Sax. quasi bookland) A possession or inheritance held by evidence in writing. Bockland vero ea possidendi transmittique lege coarcebatur, ut nec dari licuit nec vendi, sed hereditibus relinquenda erat, in scriptis aliter permitteretur; Terra inde hereditaria nuncupata. LL. Aluredi, redii, cap. 36. Bockland signifies deed land; and it commonly carried with it the absolute property of the land, wherefore it was preserved in writing, and possessed by the Thanes or nobler sort, as Prædium nobile, liberum & immune à servitiis vulgaribus & servilibus, and was the same as allodium, descendable unto all the sons, according to the common course of Nations and of Nature, and therefore called gavelkind; devisable also by will, and thereupon termed Terræ Testamentales. Spelm. of Feuds. This was one of the titles which the English Saxons had to their lands, and was always in writing: there was but one more, and that was Folkland, i. e. Terra Populæaris, which passed from one to another without any writing. See Charterland. Also vide Squire on the Anglo-Saxon Government.

Boia, Chains or fetters, properly what we call bernicles. Quidam a dolore capitis liberatus est, adjungens genæ suæ boias, quibus S. Britstanus ligatus fuit. Hist. Elien. apud Whartoni Angl. Sac. part 1. p. 618.

Bois, (Fr.) Wood, and sub-bois, underwood. See Bosius.

Bolbagium, or boldagium, a little house or cottage. Blount.

Bolt, A bolt of silk or stuff, seems to have been a long narrow piece: in the accounts of the priory of Burcester. It is mentioned. Paroch. Antiq. p. 574.

Bolting, A term of art used in our Inns of Court, whereby is intended a private arguing of cases. The manner of it at Gray's Inn is thus: An ancient and two barristers sit as judges, three students bring each a case, out of which the judges chuse one to be argued, which done, the students first argue it, and after them the barristers. It is inferior to mooting, and may be derived from the Sax. bolt, a house, because done privately in the house for instruction. In Lincoln's Inn, Mondays and Wednesdays are the bolting days, in vacation time; and Tuesdays and Thursdays the moot days.

Bona fide. That we say is done bona fide, which is done really, with a good faith, without any fraud or deceit. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. 12 Car. 2. c. 18, &c.

Bona gestura, Good abearing, or good behaviour.—Et si per furorem vel aliquos manutentores renuerit invenire sufficientem securitatem de sua bona gestura erga balivos & comburgenses, &c. a prædicto burgo ejiciatur. MS. Codex de LL. Statutis & Consuetud. Burgi villæ Montgomer. fol. 15.

Bonaght, or bonaghty, was an exaction in Ireland, imposed on the people at the will of the lord, for relief of the knights called bonaghti, who served in the wars. Antiq. Hibern. p. 60.

Bona Notabilia. Where a person dies having at the time of his death goods in any other diocese, besides his goods in the diocese where he dieth, amounting to the value of 5*l.* at le. st. he is said to have bona notabilia, and then probate of his will, or granting administration, belongs to the archbishop of the province: but this doth not prejudice those dioceses where, by composition or custom, bona notabilia are rated at a greater sum. Can. 92, 93. Perkins, Sect. 489. And in the city of London bona notabilia are 10*l.* by composition. 4 Inft. 335. One that hath a debt upon bond or specialty, &c. in another diocese, hath bona notabilia. 1 Roll. Abr. 908. Tho' if a person happens to die in another diocese, than that wherein he lives, on a journey, what he hath about him above the value of 5*l.* &c. shall not be bona notabilia. Can. 93.

There must be several administrations, where a person dies leaving bona notabilia in each province of Canterbury and York; for administration granted in one province doth not extend to goods in the other, because the archbishops have distinct supreme jurisdictions; but then there is to be bona notabilia in several dioceses in each province. Dyer 305. 2 Lev. 86. If a man dies in one diocese, without any goods, and leaves to the value of 5*l.* in another diocese, the archbishop of that province may grant administration, as he hath a general jurisdiction there; though such administration is voidable by sentence. Cro. Eliz. 457. But where a bishop grants administration, and there are bona notabilia, such administration is merely void, for he had no jurisdiction out of his diocese. 5 Rep. 30. 1 Nels. Abr. 381. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 509, 510.

Bona Patria, An assise of country-men or good neighbours: It is sometimes called assisa bona patriæ, when twelve or more men are chosen out of any part of the country to pass upon a assise; otherwise called juratores, because they are to swear judicially in the presence of the party, &c. according to the practice of Scotland. Shene. See Affisors.

Bona peritura, Goods that are perishable. The Stat. 13 E. 1. cap. 4. which enacts, That where any thing escapes alive out of a Ship cast away, the Ship shall not be adjudged wreck, but the cargo shall be saved and kept by the view of the sheriff, &c. in the hands of those of the town where the same was found, so that if any one within a year and a day can make proof that the goods are his, they shall be restored to him, &c. Ordains, that if the goods within the ship be bona peritura, such things as will not endure for a year and day, the sheriff shall sell them, and deliver the money received to answer it. See 26 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Boncha, A bunch, is derived from the old Lat. bonna or bunna, a rising bank, for the bounds of fields: and hence bonum is used in Norfolk, for swelling or rising up in a bunch or tumour, &c.

Bond, Is a deed or obligatory instrument in writing, whereby one doth bind himself to another, to pay a sum of money, or do some other act; as to make a release, surrender an estate, for quiet enjoyment to stand to an award, save harmless, perform a will, &c. It contains an obligation, with a penalty: and a condition, which expressly mentions what money is to be paid, or other thing to be performed, and the limited time for the performance thereof; for which the obligation is peremptorily binding. It may be made upon parchment or paper, though it is usually on paper; and be either in the writ or third person; and the condition may be either in the same deed, or in another, and sometimes it is included within, and sometimes indorsed upon the obligation; but it is commonly at the foot of the obligation. Bro. Obl. 67. A memorandum on the back of a bond may restrain the same by way of exception. Moor 67.

This security is also called a specialty; the debt being therein particularly specified in writing, and the party's seal; acknowledging the debt or duty, and confirming the contract; rendering it a security of a higher nature than those entered into without the solemnity of a seal; and therefore bonds or specialties shall be preferred to simple contracts, in a course of administration; and from its being a higher security, it is held, that for a breach or non-performance an action of debt only will lie.

A bond is a chose in action, which cannot be assigned over, so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name; yet he has by the assignment such a title to the paper and wax, that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232.

Also in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignee alone becomes intitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595. Abr. Eq. 44.

The assignee must take it, subject to the same equity that it was subject to in the hands of the obligee; as if, on a marriage treaty, the intended husband enters into a marriage-brokers bond, which is afterwards assigned to creditors, yet it still remains liable to the same equity, and is not to be carried into execution against the obligor. 2 Vern. 595. Abr. Eq. 44.

If a man enters into a bond of such a sum, on condition to be void on payment of a lesser sum; or if a man bind himself in the penalty of 100*l.* that he will pay 50*l.* by such a day; after the day of payment is past, the penalty or sum of 100*l.* is the legal debt; and for so much it hath been resolved, an executor of an obligor of such forfeited bond, may cover the assets of his testator. Cro. Car. 490. 1 Vent. 354. 3 Lev. 368. Hill. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. The Bank of England v. Morris. Annals's Rep. temp. Hardwicke, 219, &c.

And as the penalty, by the bond's being forfeited, becomes the legal debt; so there was no remedy against such penalty, but by application to a court of equity, which relieves in those cases, on payment of principal, interest and costs: also tho' at law there can be no remedy medy beyond the penalty; because in that the obligee seems to have taken up his security; yet, as it is on the foundation of doing equal justice to both parties that equity proceeds, it will, on any application for a favour from the obligor, compel him to pay the principal, interest and costs, tho' exceeding the penalty. Show. Par. Ca. 15. Abr. Eq. 91, 92. 1 Salk. 154. 1 Vern. 342, 350. 509.

And this rule of compelling the party to do equity who seeks equity, seems to be the reason why an obligee shall have interest after he has entered up judgment; for tho' in strictness it may be accounted his own fault why he did not take out execution, and therefore not intitled to interest; yet, as by the judgment he is intitled to the penalty, it does not seem reasonable that he should be deprived of it, but upon paying him principal and the interest, which incurred as well before as after the entering up of the judgment. Abr. Eq. 92, 288. And see farther 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. which will be mentioned hereafter under its proper head.

Having shewn the nature of this security, it may be proper to consider.

- I. Who may be obligors and obligees.
- II. What words create such security.
- III. What ceremonies are requisite to a bond, wherein of signing, sealing and delivery.
- IV. Of the condition of a bond, what conditions deemed lawful, &c. and what shall be deemed a breach of the same.
- V. Of bonds void, or voidable: also how bonds may be discharged, and of the manner of pleading performance, &c.

I. All persons who are enabled to contract, and whom the law supposes to have sufficient freedom and understanding for that purpose, may bind themselves in bonds and obligations. 5 Co. 119. 4 C. 124. 1 Rol. Abr. 340.

But if a person is illegally restrained of his liberty, by being confined in a common gaol or elsewhere, and, during such restraint, enters into a bond to the person who causes the restraint, the same may be avoided for duress of imprisonment. Co. Lit. 253. 2 Inst. 482. vid. tit. Duress.

So in respect of that power and authority which a husband has over his wife, the bond of a feme covert is ipso facto void, and shall neither bind her nor her husband. See Baron and Feme.

So though an infant shall be liable for his necessities such as meat, drink, cloaths, physick, schooling, &c. yet if he bind himself in an obligation, with a penalty for payment of any of those, the obligation is void. Doct. and Stud. 113. Co. Lit. 172. Cro. Jac. 494 560. 1 Sid. 112. 1 Salk. 279. Cro. Eliz. 920 See Infants.

Also though a person non compos mentis shall not be allowed to avoid his bond, by reason of insanity and distraction, as no man can be allowed to stultify himself, because of the ill consequences that might attend counterfeited madness; yet may a privy in blood, as the heir, and privies in representation, as the executor and administrator, void such bonds; also if a lunatick after office found, enters into a bond, it is merely void. 4 Co. 124. Beverley's case. See Infants and Lunaticks.

But if an infant, feme covert, monk, &c. who are disabled by law to contract, and to bind themselves in bonds, enter together with a stranger, who is under none of these disabilities, into an obligation, it shall bind the stranger, though it be void as to the infant, &c. 1 Rol. Rep. 41.

If a servant makes a bill in form, Memorandum, that I have received of Edward Talbot, to the use of my master Serjeant Gaudy, the sum of 40*l.* to be paid at Michaelmas following, and thereto set his seal, this is a good obligation to bind himself; for though in the beginning of the deed, the receipt is said to be to the use of his master, yet the re-payment is general, and must necessarily bind him who sealed; and the rather, because otherwise the obligee would lose his debt, he having no remedy against Serjeant Gaudy. Yelv. 137. Talbot ver. Godbolt.

Infants, ideots, as also feme coverts may be obligees; and as to this the husband is supposed to assent, being for his advantage; but if he disagrees, the obligation hath lost its force; so that after the obligor may plead non est factum; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the bond is good, for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to his advantage. 5 Co. 119. b. Co. Lit. 3. a.

But a feme covert can neither be obligor nor obligee to her husband, nor vice versa, being but one person in law; also by the better opinion, a bond entred into, to a feme sole, by the person whom she afterwards marries, is, by the marriage, at law extinguished. See Baron and Feme.

An alien may be an obligee, for since he is allowed to trade and traffick with us, it is but reasonable to give him all that security which is necessary in his contracts, and which will the better enable him to carry on his commerce and dealings amongst us. Co. Lit. 129. b. Moor 431. Cro. Eliz. 142, 683. Cro. Car. 9. 1 Salk. 46. Fares. 15. See Alien.

Sole corporations, such as bishops, prebends, parsons, vicars, &c. cannot be obligees, and therefore a bond made to any of these, shall enure to them in their natural capacities; for no sole body politick can take a chattel in succession, unless it be by custom; but a corporation aggregate may take any chattel, as bonds, leases, &c. in its political capacity, which shall go in succession, because it is always in being. Cro. Eliz. 464. Dyer 48. a. Co. Lit. 9. a. 46. a. Hob. 64. 1 Rol. Abr. 515.

If a drunken man gives his bond, it binds him; and a bond without consideration is obligatory, and no relief shall be had against it, for it is voluntary, and as a gift. Jenk. Cent. 109. A person enters voluntarily into a bond, though there was not any consideration for it, if there be no fraud used in obtaining the same, the bond shall not be relieved against in equity: but a voluntary bond may not be paid in a course of administration, so as to take place of real debts, even by simple contract; yet it shall be paid before legacies. 1 Chan. Cnf. 157. An heir is not bound, unless he be named expressly in the bond; tho' the executors and administrators are.

It is clearly agreed, that two or more may bind themselves jointly in an obligation, or they may bind themselves jointly and severally; in which last case, the obligee may sue them jointly, or he may sue any one of them at his election; but if they are jointly and not severally bound, the obligee must sue them jointly; also, in such case, if one of them dies, his executor is totally discharged, and the survivor and survivors only chargeable. 2 Rol. Abr. 148. Dyer 19, 310. 5 Co. 19. Dal. 85. pl. 42. 1 Salk. 393. Carth. 61. 1 Lutw. 696.

If three enter into an obligation, and bind themselves in the words following, Obligamus nos & utrumque nostrum per se pro toto & in solido, these make the obligation joint and several. Dyer 19. b. pl. 114.

In a bond where several are bound severally, the obligee is at his election to sue all the obligors together, or all of them apart, and have several judgments and executions; but he shall have satisfaction but once, for if it be of one only, that shall discharge the rest. If an obligation is joint, and not several, all the obligors must be sued that are bound; and if one be prosecuted, he is not obliged to answer, unless the rest are sued likewise. Dyer 19, 310. Where two or more are bound in a joint bond, and only one is sued, he must plead in abatement, that two more sealed the bond, &c. and aver that they are living, and so pray judgment de billa, &c. And not demur to the declaration. Sid. 420.

If action be brought upon a bond against two joint and several obligors jointly, and both are taken by captia, here the death or escape of one, shall not release the other; but the same kind of execution must be taken forth against them: 'tis otherwise when they are sued severally. Hob. 59.

Also, if two or more be jointly bound, though regularly one of them alone cannot be sued, yet if process be taken out against all, and one of them only appears, but the others stand out to an outlawry, he who appeared shall be charged with the whole debt. 9 Co. 119.

If a bond is made to three, to pay money to one of them, they must all join in the action, because they are but as one obligee. Yelv. 177.

So if an obligation be made to three, and two bring their action, they ought to shew the third is dead. 1 Sid. 238, 420. 1 Vent. 34.

Though there be several obligees, yet a person cannot be bound to several persons severally; and therefore an obligation of 200*l.* to two, solvend' the one 100*l.* to the one, and the other to the other is a void solvend'. Dyer 350. a. pl. 20. Hob. 172. 2 Brownl. 207. Yelv. 177.

If A. bind himself in a sum to B. solvendum to C. who is a stranger, a payment to C. is a payment to B. in an action upon it, the count must be upon a bond solvend' to B. 1 Sid. 295. 2 Keb. 81.

In debt, the declaration was, that the defendant became bound in a bond of—, for the payment of—to him, his attorney or assigns, and on oyer of the bond it appeared, that the solvendum was to the plaintiff's attorney or assigns, without mention of himself; and on demurrer for this variance 'twas said that the declaration must not be according to the letter of the obligation, but according to the operation of the law thereupon. 6 Mod. 228. Robert v. Harnage.

So if A. makes a bond to B. solvendum to such person as he shall appoint; if B. does appoint one, payment to him is a payment to B. and if B. appoint none, it shall be paid to B. himself. 6 Mod. 228.

If A. by his bill obligatory, acknowledges himself to be indebted to B. in the sum of 10*l.* to be paid at a day to come, and binds himself and his heirs in the same bill in 20*l.* but does not mention to whom he is bound, yet the obligation is good, and he shall be intended to be bound to B. to whom he acknowledged before the 10*l.* to be due. 2 Rol. Abr. 148. Franklin versus Turner.

II. As to the words necessary.

A bond may be made by any words, in a writing sealed and delivered, wherein a man doth declare himself to have another man's money, or to be indebted to him; but the best form of making it, is that which is most used, 2 Shep. Abr. 477. If a bond be thus: Know all men by these presents, that I W. R. am bound to J. S. in the sum, &c. for payment of which, I give full power to him to levy the same upon the profits of such lands yearly till it be paid; in this case, the obligee may sue upon the obligation, or levy the money according to the said clause. 3 Leon. ca. 299.

So a writing in this form; Memorandum, I A. B. have agreed to pay J. S. 20*l.* tho' this be in the preterperfect tense, yet if it hath all other ceremonies essential, it shall amount unto an obligation. 1 Leon. 25.

Debt brought upon a bond of 60*l.* the bond was in Italian, and the sum therein expressed was in these words, viz. in cessanta libris, and adjudged to be good. Cro. Jac. 208. Parker v. Rennady.

In debt upon a bill obligatory, demanding thirty-two pounds four shillings and sevenpence; the defendant demanded oyer of the bill, and it was threty-two ponds four shillings and 7-pence, fo threty for thirty, and ponds for pounds; and on demurrer for this cause, it was adjudged for the plaintiff. Cro. Jac. 607. Hulbert v. Long.

An obligation made to one, to the use of J. S. will be good for him in equity. Bro. Ollig. Where a bond is made obligo me, &c. leaving out the words heredes, executores & administratores, this is good; and the executors and administrators shall be bound by it. Dyer 13.

III. As to the ceremonies requisite to a bond or obligation.

It is said, that there are only three things essentially necessary to the making a good obligation, viz. writing in paper or parchment, sealing and delivery; but it hath been adjudged not to be necessary, that the obligor should sign or subscribe his name; and that therefore if in the obligation the obligor be named Erlin, and he signs his name Erlwin, that this variation is not material; because subscribing is no essential part of the deed, sealing being sufficient. 2 Co. 5. a. Godard's case. Noy 21, 85. Moor 28. Stil. 97. 2 Salk. 412. 5 Mod. 281.

And though the seal be necessary, and the usual way of declaring on a bond is, that the defendant per scriptum suum obligatorium sigillo suo sigillatum acknowledged, &c. yet if the word sigillat' be wanting, it is cured by verdict and pleading over; for when he saith per scriptum suum obligatorium, &c. all necessary circumstances shall be intended; and if it were not sealed, it could not be his deed or obligation. Dyer 19. a. Cro. Eliz. 571, 737. Cro. Jac. 420. 2 Co. 5. 1 Vent. 70. 3 Lev. 348. 1 Salk. 141. 6 Mod. 306.

Also tho' sealing and delivery be essential in an obligation, yet there is no occasion in the bond to mention that it was sealed and delivered; because, as my Lord Coke says, these are things which are done afterwards. 2 Co. 5. a.

The name of the obligor subscribed, 'tis said, is sufficient, tho' there is a blank for his christian name in the bond. 2 Cro. 261. But where another christian name is in the bond, and the bond signed by the right name, though the jury find it to be his deed, the obligee cannot have judgment; for the name subscribed is no part of the obligation. 2 Cro. 558. 1 Mod. 107. In these cases, though there be a verdict, there shall not be judgment. Where an obligor's name is omitted to be inserted in the bond, and yet he signs and seals it; the court of Chancery may make good such an accident; and in case a person takes away a bond fraudulently, and cancels it, the obligee shall have as much benefit thereby, as if not cancelled. 3 Chan. Rep. 99, 184.

An obligation is good though it wants a date, or hath a false or impossible date; for the date, as hath been observed, is not of the substance of the deed; but herein we must take notice, that the day of the delivery of a deed or obligation is the day of the date, though there is no day set forth; and if a deed bear date one day, and be delivered at another, it was really dated when delivered, though the clause of Gerens dat' be otherwise. 2 Co. 5. Godard's case. Noy 21, 85, 86. Hob. 249. Stil. 97. Cro. Jac. 136, 264. Yelv. 193. 1 Salk. 76.

If a man declare on a bond, bearing date such a day, but does not say when delivered, this is good: for every deed is supposed to be delivered and made on the day it bears date; and if the plaintiff declare on a date, he cannot afterwards reply, that it was primo deliberat' at another day, for this would be a departure. Cro. Eliz. 773. 3 Lev. 348. 1 Salk. 141.

But if a bond bear date such a day, but was really delivered at a day after, the obligee may declare on a bond of such a date, but primo deliberat' at a day after; and if the obligee declare on a bond of such a date generally, the obligor may plead it was primo deliberat' on such a day after; but then he must traverse that it was delivered on the day of the date. 1 Brownl. 104. 1 Lev. 196.

A plaintiff may suggest a date in a bond, where there is none, or it is impossible, &c. where the parties and sum are sufficiently expressed. 5 Mod. 282. A bond dated on the same day on which a release is made of all things usque diem datus, &c. is not thereby discharged. 2 Rol. Rep. 255.

If the bond was delivered before the date, on issue, non est factum, joined on such a deed, the jury are not estopped to find the truth, viz. that it was delivered before the date, and it is a good deed from the delivery. 2 Co. 4, 6. 3 Keb. 332.

A person shall not be charged by a bond, though signed and sealed, without delivery, or words, or other thing, amounting to a delivery. 1 Leon. 140. But—

A bond or deed may be delivered by words, without any act of delivery; as where the obligor says to the obligee, go and take the said writing, or take it as my deed, &c. So an actual tradition, without speaking any word, is sufficient; otherwise, a man that is mute could not deliver a deed; but where on an issue of non est factum, the jury found that the defendant signed and sealed the obligation, and laid it on a table, and that the plaintiff came and took it up, this was held not to be the defendant's deed, without other circumstances found by the jury. Co. Lit. 36. a. Cro. Eliz. 835. Leon. 193 Cro. Eliz. 122.

IV. With respect to the condition, &c.

It is to be observed, that the condition of a bond must be to do a thing lawful; and bonds not to use trades, till or sow grounds, &c. are unlawful, for they are against the good of the publick, and the liberty of a freeman; and therefore void; and a condition of a bond to do any act malum in se, as to kill a person, &c. is void.

Conditions of bonds are to be not only lawful, but possible; and when the matter or thing to be done, or not to be done by a condition, is unlawful or impossible, or the condition itself repugnant, insensible or uncertain, the condition is void, and in some cases the obligation also. 10 Rep. 120. But sometimes an obligation may be single, to pay the money, where the condition is impossible, repugnant, &c. 2 Mod. 285. If a thing be possible at the time of entering into the bond, and afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God, the act of the law, or of the obligee, it is become void; as if a man be bound to appear next term, and dies before, the obligation is saved. A condition of a bond was, that J. S. should pay such a sum upon the 25th of December, or appear in Hilary term after in the court of B. R. He died after the 25th of December, and before Hilary term, and had not paid any thing: in this case the condition was not broken for non-payment, and the other part is become impossible by the act of God. 1 Mod. Rep. 265. And when a condition is doubtful, it is always taken most favourably for the obligor, and against the obligee; but so as a reasonable construction be made as near as can be according to the intention of the parties. Dyer 51. If no time is limited in a bond for payment of the money, it is due presently, and payable on demand. 1 Brownl. 53. But the judges have sometimes appointed a convenient time for payment, having regard to the distance of place, and the time wherein the thing may be performed. And if a condition be made impossible in respect to time, as to make payment of money on the 30th of February, &c. it shall be paid presently; and here the obligation stands single. Jones 140. Though if a man be bound in a bond with condition to deliver so much corn upon the 29th day of February next following, and that month hath then but twenty-eight days; it has been held, that the obligor is not obliged to perform the condition till there comes a leap-year. 1 Leon. 101. Sed qu. if intent of parties can be shewn? If the condition of a bond be, that the obligor shall make a sufficient estate of land by such a time, by the advice of others; and they advise an insufficient estate, which he makes accordingly, this, 'tis said, is a good performance of the condition: but if it is, that the obligor do make a good and sure estate, and he by advice of counsel makes an estate that is not good; this will be no performance thereof. Perk. Sect. 776. Keilw. 95. A bond made to enfeoff two persons, if one dies before the time is past, wherein it should be done; the obligor must enfeoff the survivor of them, or the condition will be broken: and if it be that B. and others shall enjoy land, and the obligor and B. the obligee do disturb the rest; by this the condition is broken. 4 Hen. 7. 1. Co. Lit. 384. Where one is bound to do an act to the obligee himself, the doing it to a stranger by appointment of the obligee, will not be a performance of the condition. 2 Bulst. 149. If the act be to be done at a certain place, where the obligor is to go to Rome, &c. and he is to do the sole act without limitation of time, he hath term during life to perform the same: if the concurrence of the obligor and obligee is requisite, it may be hastened by the request of the obligee. 6 Rep. 30. 1 Rol. Abr. 437. Where no place is mentioned for performance of a condition, the obligor is obliged to find out the person of the obligee, if he be in England, and tender the money, otherwise the bond will be forfeited: but when a place is appointed, he need seek no further. 1 Inst. 210. Lit. 340. And if, where no place is limited for payment of money due on a bond, the obligor, at or after the day of payment, meets with the obligee, and tenders him the money, but he goes away to prevent it, the obligor shall be excused. 8 E. 4. The obligor, or his servant, &c. may tender the money to save the forfeiture of the bond, and it shall be a good performance of the condition, if made to the obligee, though refused by him; yet if the obligor be afterwards sued, he must plead that he is still ready to pay it, and tender the money in court. Co. Lit. 208. The condition of a bond being for payment of money, it may be performed by giving any other thing in satisfaction, because the value of money is certain, and therefore may be satisfied by a collateral thing, if the obligee accepts it; but if the condition is to do a collateral thing, there 'tis otherwise, and paying money is no good satisfaction. 3 Bulst. 148.

When the condition of a bond is to do two things, or has divers points, and the obligee supposing a breach of one of them, doth sue the obligor; if issue being joined upon that, it is found against him, and he is barred, the whole obligation is discharged: and so long as that judgment is in force, he can never prosecute upon any other point. Dyer 371. 2 Shep. Abr. 487. Sed qu. per stat. Vide post.

In the performance of the condition of an obligation, the intention of the parties is chiefly to be regarded; and therefore a performance in substance is sufficient, tho' it differ in words or some immaterial circumstance; as if one be bound to deliver the testament of the testator, if he plead that he had delivered litteras testamentarias, it is sufficient. Fro. Condition, 158. 17 E. 4. 3. 1 Rol. Abr. 426.

If the condition of an obligation be to procure a lawful discharge, this must be by a release, or some discharge that is pleadable, and not by acquittance, which is but evidence. 1 Keb. 739.

If the condition of an obligation be, that the party shall not continue such an action, and he by his attorney, but without his privity, continues, this is said to be no breach of the condition. Cro. Jac. 525. 2 Rol. Rep. 63.

If the party, who is bound to perform the condition, disables himself, this is a breach; as where the condition is, that the feoffee shall re infeoff, or make a gift in tail, &c. to the feoffor, and the feoffee before he performs it, make a feoffment or gift in tail, or lease for life or years in presenti or futuro to another person, or marry or grant a rent-charge, or be bound in a statute or recognizance, or become professed; in all these cases the condition is broken; for the feoffee has either disabled himself to make any estate, or to make it in the same plight or freedom in which he received it; and being once disabled, he is ever disabled, though his wife should die, or the rent, &c. should be discharged, or he should be de-raigned, &c. before the time of the reconveyance. Co. Lit. 221, 222. Poph. 110. 1 Co. 25. a. 1 Rol. Abr. 447. 5 Co. 21. a.

Where the condition is in the conjunctive, regularly both parts must be performed; yet, to supply the intention of the parties, it is held, that if a condition in the conjunctive be not possible to be performed, it shall be taken in the disjunctive; as if the condition be, that he and his executors shall do such a thing, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because he cannot have an executor in his life-time; so if the condition be, that he and his assigns shall sell certain goods, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because both cannot do it. 1 Rol. Abr. 444. Owen 52. 1 Leon. 74. Gaulf. 71.

If several days are mentioned for payment of money on a bond, the obligation is not forfeited, nor can be sued until all the days are past: but in some cases the obligee may prosecute for the money due by the bond presently, though it be not forfeited; and by special wording the condition, the obligee may be able to sue the penalty on the first default. 1 Inst. 292.

V. Bonds may be either rigid or voidable.

As if an infant seal a bond, and be sued thereon, he is not to plead non est factum, but must avoid the bond by special pleading; for this bond is only voidable, and not in itself void. 5 Rep. 119. But if a bond be made by a feme covert, she may plead her coverture, and conclude non est factum, &c. her bond being void. 10 Rep. 119.

If a bond depends upon some other deed, and the deed becomes void, the bond is also void. A bond made with condition not to give evidence against a felon, &c. is void; but the defendant must plead the special matter. Vide Wilson, par. 2. p. 341, &c. Condition of a bond to indemnify a person from any legal prosecution, is against law, and void. 1 Lutw. 667. And if a sheriff takes a bond as a reward for doing of a thing, it is void. 3 Salk. 75. Interlineation in a bond in a place not material, will not make the bond void; but if it be altered in a part material, it shall be void. 1 Nelf. Abr. 391. And a bond may be void by rasure, &c. As where the date, &c. is rased after delivery; which goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23. If the words in a bond at the end of the condition, That then this obligation to be void, are omitted, the condition will be void; but not the obligation.

Bonds may likewise be discharged by act of the party or by act of law.

The acceptance of a new bond will not discharge the old one, as a judgment may. Hob. 68. One bond cannot be given in satisfaction of another; but this is where given by the obligor himself, for it may be by others. 1 Mod. 221. If a bond be to pay money at such a time, &c. it is no plea for the obligor to say he did pay it; he must shew at what time, or else it may be taken that the performance was after the time limited. Noy's Max. 15. If a bond be of twenty years standing, and no demand be proved thereon, or good cause of so long forbearance shewn to the court, upon pleading solvit ad diem, it shall be intended paid. Mod. Ca. 22. Payment of money, without acquittance, is an ill plea to action of debt upon a single bill: but 'tis otherwise upon a bond with condition. Dyer 25.

But by 4 An. c. 16. If an action of debt be brought on single bill, or judgment, after money paid, such payment may be pleaded in bar. So of a bond with a condition, upon payment of principal and interest due by the condition, though such payment was not strictly made according to the condition, yet it may be pleaded in bar.

And it is further enacted by the said statute, sect. 14. "That if at any time, pending an action upon any such bond with a penalty, the defendant shall bring into court, where the action is depending, all principal money and interest due on such bond, and also all such costs, as have been expended in any suit or suits in law or equity upon such bond; the said money so brought in shall be deemed and taken to be in full satisfaction and discharge of the said bond; and the court shall and may give judgment to discharge every such defendant of and from the same accordingly."

Bonds also, as hath been said, may be discharged by operation of law.

If several obligors are bound jointly and severally, and the obligee make one of them his executor, it is a release of the debt, and the executor cannot sue the other obligor. 8 Co. 136. 1 Salk. 300. And vide 1 Jou. 345.

But though it be a release in law, in regard it is the proper act of the obligee, yet the debt by this is not absolutely discharged, but it remains assets in his hands, to pay both debts and legacies. Cro. Car. 373. Yelv. 160.

If a feme sole obligee take one of the obligors to husband, this is said to be a release in law of the debt being her own act. 8 Co. 136. a. March. 128.

If one obligor makes the executor of the obligee his executor, and leaves assets, the debt is deemed satisfied; for he has power, by way of retainer, to satisfy the debt; and neither he nor the administrator de bonis non, &c. of the obligee can ever sue the surviving obligor. Hob. 10.

But if two are bound jointly and severally to A. and the executor of one of them makes the obligee his executor, yet the obligee may sue the other obligor. 2 Lev. 73.

If two are jointly and severally bound in an obligation, and the obligee release to one of them, both are discharged. Co. Lit. 232. a.

Three were bound jointly and severally in an obligation, and an action was brought against one of them, who pleaded that the seal of one of the others was torn off, and the obligation cancelled, and therefore void against all. Upon demurrer it was adjudged, that the obligation, by the tearing off the seal of one of the obligors, became void against all, notwithstanding the obligors were severally bound. 2 Lev. 220. 2 Sbouv. 289. Sed qu. if it was by accident, and not with intent to discharge that obligor, if a court of equity would not give relief? Indeed we should think, that as the courts of law are now very liberal in their construction of the Common law, as founded on reason, and the universal, immutable principles of justice, the tearing off one of the seals by accident might be pleaded in reply.

As to the pleading of performance, the defendant must set forth in what manner he hath performed it. Thus—

In debt on a bond, with condition for performance of several things, the defendant pleads quod conditio ejusdem facti nunquam infracta fuit per se ipsum, &c. and held an ill plea: because, for saving the bond, it is necessary for the defendant to shew how he hath performed the condition; and this sort of pleading was never admitted. 2 Vent. 156.

So if he had pleaded performavit omnia, it had been ill; for the particulars being expressed in the condition, he ought to plead to each particularly; but if the condition were for performance of covenants in an indenture, performance generally were a good plea. 1 Lev. 302. This must be understood where the covenants are set forth, and appear to be all in the affirmative. For if some are in the affirmative, some in the negative, or any in the disjunctive, the defendant should plead specially.

In debt on an obligation for payment of money, &c. the defendant pleads, that at the time and place paratus fuit to pay the money, but that nobody was there to receive it; and held ill on a general demurrer, for want of an obtulit solvere, for the tender only is traversable, not the paratus. 3 Lev. 104.

In debt on a bond with condition, the defendant pleads a collateral plea, which is insufficient; the plaintiff demurs, and hath judgment, without assigning a breach; for the defendant, by pleading a defective plea, by which he would excuse his non-performance of the condition, saves the plaintiff the trouble of assigning a breach, and gives him advantage of putting himself on the judgment of the court, whether the plea be good or not; but if the plaintiff had admitted the plea, and made a replication which shewed no cause of action, it had been otherwise; but if the replication were idle, and the defendant demurred, yet the plaintiff should have judgment, without assigning a breach. 1 Lev. 55, 84. 3 Lev. 17, 24.

And in all cases of debt on an obligation with condition, (that of a bond to perform an award only excepted) if the defendants plead a special matter, that admits and excuses a non-performance, the plaintiff need only answer, and falsify the special matter alledged; for he that excuses a non-performance admits it, and the plaintiff need not shew that which the defendant hath supposed and admitted. Salk. 138.

But if the defendant pleads a performance of the condition, though it be not well pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication must shew a breach; for then he has no cause of action, unless he shew it; and this difference will give the true reason, and reconcile the following cases. 1 Salk. 138. 1 Lev. 55, 84, 226. 1 Saund. 102, 159, 317. 3 Lev. 17, 24. 1 Vent. 114. Cro. Eliz. 320. Yelv. 78.

In debt on a bond, the defendant may have several pleas in bar; as if the plaintiff sue as executor, the defendant may plead the release of the testator for part, and for the residue the release of the plaintiff, so he may plead payment as to part, and as to the rest an acquittance. 1 Salk. 180.

In debt on an obligation the defendant cannot plead nihil debet, but must deny the deed by pleading non est factum; for the seal of the party continuing, it must be dissolved eo ligamine quo ligatur. Hard. 332. Hob. 218.

In bonds to save harmless, the defendant being prosecuted, is to plead non damnificatus, &c.

The stealing of any bond or bill, &c. for money, being the property of any one, made felony as if offenders had taken other goods of like value. See Stat. 2 Gro. 2. c. 25. See Penalty.

Form of a bond for payment of money.

KOW all men by these presents, That I A. B. of the parish, &c. in the county, &c. gentleman, am held and firmly bound to C. D. of, &c. in the county aforesaid, esquire, in one hundred pounds of good and lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said C. D. or his certain attorney, his executors, administrators or assigns; To which payment well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators, firmly by these presents, sealed with my seal: dated the sixth day of May in the first year of the reign of our sovereign lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, &c. and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-one.

The Condition of this obligation is such, That if the above bound A. B. his heirs, executors or administrators do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid unto the above named C. D. his executors, administrators or assigns, the full sum of fifty-two pounds and ten shillings of lawful money of Great Britain, on or before the sixth day of November next ensuing the date hereof; then this obligation to be void, or otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue. Or it may be thus: That if the said A. B. &c. do pay to the said C. D. &c. the full sum of fifty pounds, with interest for the same after the rate of five pounds per centum per ann. (or with lawful interest) on the day, &c. then, &c. and the last is the best form.

Bondage, Is slavery; and bondmen, in Domesday, are called servi, but rendered different from villani.—Et de toto tenemento, quod de ipso tenet in bondagio in foca de Nortone cum pertin. Mon. Angl. 2. par. fol. 609. Bonda is said to be a master of a family. See Nativus.

Bond-Tenants, copyholders, and customary-tenants, sometimes called bond-tenants. For according to Calthorpe on Copyholds, 51, 54. all those kinds of tenants agree in substance and kind of tenure; all their lands being holden in one general kind, that is, by custom and continuance of time; and the diversity of their names doth not alter the nature of their tenure. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 147, 148.

Books. By 25 Hen. 8. c. 15. No person shall buy any printed books brought from beyond sea to sell the same again, and no one shall buy books by retail brought from beyond sea by any stranger. Likewise the prices of books, excessively increased, shall be qualified by the king's great officers.

By Stat. 7 Ann. c. 14. sect. 10. If any book shall be taken, or otherwise lost out of any parochial library, any justice may grant his warrant to search for it; and if it shall be found, it shall, by order of such justice, be restored to the library.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 36. No person shall import or sell books first written and printed in this kingdom, and reprinted abroad, under the penalty of 5*l.* and double the value of every book so imported or sold.

As to the right of an author to the books he composes, vide Black. Com. 2 V. 405, &c. on literary property. And the case of Millar and Taylor in B. R. about Easter term 9 Geo. 3. Determined, that the author, or his assignee hath perpetual property.

From the seventh to the eleventh century books were very scarce. To that was chiefly owing the universal ignorance which prevailed, during that period. After the Saracens conquered Egypt in the seventh century, the communication with that country (as to Europe, &c.) was almost entirely broken off; and the papyrus no longer in use. So that paper was used, and as the price of that was high, books became extremely rare, and of great value. Vide Robertson's History of Charles the Fifth, 1 V. 233, 234. And Murat. Ant. Ital. V. 3. p. 833.

In the eleventh century the art of making paper was invented, the number of manuscripts was thereby increased, and the study of the sciences greatly facilitated. Vide Robertson's History of Charles the Fifth, 1 V. 235, &c.

Booting, or Botting Corn, Rent corn, anciently so called. The tenants of the manor of Haddenham in com. Bucks, formerly paid booting corn to the prior of Rocheſter. Antiq. of Purveyance, fol. 418. It is thought to be so called, as being paid by the tenants by way of bote, or boot, viz. as a compensation to the lord for his making them leases, &c.

Bozdagium, The tenure called bordlands. See Ordin. Just. Itin. in insula de Jersey.

Bozdaría, A cottage, from the Sax. bord, domus.—Cum 18 servis, 16 villanis, 10 bordis, & 60 acris prati, &c.

Bozdarí, or Bozdbanni, These words often occur in Domesday, and some think they mean boors, husbandmen, or cottagers. In the Domesday inquisition they were distinct from the villani; and seemed to be those of a less servile condition, who had a bord or cottage, with a small parcel of land allowed to them, on condition they should supply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other small provisions for his board or entertainment. Some derive the word bordarii from the old Gall. bords, the limits or extreme parts of any extent; as the borders of a country, and the borderers inhabitants in those parts. — Dicuntur bordarii, vel quod in tuguriis (quæ cottagia vocant) habitabant; seu villarum limitibus, quasi borderers. Spelm.

Bozd-halfpeny, Signifies a small toll, by custom paid to the lord of the town for setting up boards, tables, booths, &c. in fairs and markets: it is derived from three Saxon words, bræd. i. e. board, halve, in behalf of, and penning, a toll; which in the whole makes a toll for, or in behalf of boards.

Bozdlands, The demesnes which lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Et dominicum quod quis habet ad mensam suam & proprie, sicut sunt bordlands, i. e. dominicum ad mensam. Braët. lib. 4, tract. 3. c. 9.

Bozplode, Was a service required of tenants to carry timber out of the woods of the lord to his house: or it is said to be the quantity of food or provision, which the bordary, or bordman, paid for their bord-lands. The old Scots had the term of burd, and meat-burd for victuals and provisions; and burden sack, for a sack full of provender: from whence it is probable came our burden.

Bozd-Service, A tenure of bord lands; by which some lands in the manor of Fulham in com. Mid. and elsewhere, are held of the bishop of London, and the tenants do now pay six-pence per acre in lieu of finding provision, anciently for their lord's board or table. Blount.

Bozg-Brygch, borg-bryce, or burg-brych, (Sax.) A breach or violation of suretyship, pledge-breach, or of mutual fidelity.

Bozough, (Fr. burg, Lat. burgus, Sax. borboe) Signifies a corporate town, which is not a city; and also such a town or place as sends burgesses to parliament, the number whereof you may find in Crompt. Jurisd. f. 24. Verstegan saith, that burg, or burgh, whereof we make our borough, metaphorically signifies a town having a wall, or some kind of inclosure about it: and all places that in old time had among our ancestors the name of borough, were one way or other fenced or fortified. Lit. sect. 104. But sometimes it is used for villa insignior, or a country town of more than ordinary note, not walled. Lindewood upon the Provincial (ut singula de sensibus) says to this effect. Aliqui interpretantur burgum esse castrum, vel locum ubi sunt crebra castra, vel dicitur burgus ubi sunt per limites habitacula plura constituta: but he afterwards thus defines it: Burgus dici potest villa quæcunque, alia a civitate, in qua est universitas approbata. A borough is a place of safety, protection and privilege, according to Saxnær; and in the reign reign of King Hen. 2. burghs had so great privileges, that if a bondman or servant remained in a borough a year and a day, he was by that residence made a freeman. Glanville. And why these were called free burghs, and the tradesmen in them free burgeses, was from a freedom to buy and sell, without disturbance, exempt from toll, &c. granted by charter: and parliament boroughs are said to be either by charter, or towns holden of the king in ancient demesne. Brady. It is conjectured that borhse or borough, was also formerly taken for those companies consisting of ten families, which were to be pledges for one another: and we are told by some writers that it is a street or row of houses close to one another. Braet. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10. Lamb. Duty of Const. p. 8. Vide Squire's Anglo Saxon Government, 236, 247, 251, 254, 258, 262, 264. Trading boroughs were first formed in the time of Alfred. Squire 247, 251. Vide also Black. Com. 1 V. 114. 2 V. 82.

Borough Courts. Vide Courts, and Com. Dig. 2 V. 496. § ante & post.

Borough-holders, or Burtholders, quasi burhoe ealders. Are the same officers with borough-heads, or head-boroughs; who (according to Lambert) were the head men, or chief pledges of boroughs, chosen by the rest to speak and act in their names in those things that concerned them. See Headborough. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 114, 356. 4 V. 406.

Borough-English, (Sax. Borhoe Englisc) Is a customary descent of lands, in some ancient borhaghs, and copyhold manors, that estates shall descend to the youngest son; or if the owner hath no issue, to his younger brother, as in Edmuntun, &c. Ritcb. 102. It has been observed, that the original of this old custom proceeded from the lord of certain lands having the privilege to lie with their tenants wives the first night after marriage; wherefore in time the tenants obtained this custom, on purpose that their eldest sons (who might be their lord's bastards) should be incapable to inherit their estates. Præf. 3 Mod. Rep. But the reason of the custom of borough english (Littleton says) is because the youngest is presumed in law to be least able to provide for himself. Lit. 165. This custom goes with the land, and guides the descent to the youngest son, although there be a devise to the contrary. 2 Lev. 138. If a man seised in fee of lands in borough english, make a feoffment to the use of himself and the heirs male of his body, according to the course of the Common law; and afterwards die seised, having issue two sons, the youngest son shall have the lands by virtue of the custom, notwithstanding the feoffment. Dyer 179.

If a copyhold in borough english be surrendered to the use of a person and his heirs, the right will descend to the youngest son according to the custom. 1 Mod. 102. And a youngest son shall inherit an estate in tail in borough english. Noy 106. But an heir at Common law shall take advantage of a condition annexed to borough english land; though the youngest son shall be intitled to all actions in right of the land, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 396. And the eldest son shall have tithes arising out of land borough english; for tithes of common right are not inheritances descendable to an heir, but come in succession from one clergyman to another. Ibid. 347. Borough english land being descendable to the youngest son, if a younger son dies without issue male leaving a daughter, such daughter shall inherit jure representationis. 1 Salk. 243. It hath been adjudged, where a man hath several brothers, the youngest may inherit lands in borough english: yet it is said where a custom is that land shall go to the youngest son, it doth not give it to the youngest uncle, for customs shall be taken strictly; and those which fix and order the descents of inheritance, can be altered only by parliament. Dyer 179. 4 Leon. 384. Jenk. Cent. 220.

By the custom of borough english, the widow shall have the whole of her husband's lands in dower, which is called her free-bench; and this is given to her the better to provide for the younger children, with the care of whom she is intrusted. Co. Lit. 33, 111. F. N. B. 150. Mo. pl. 566. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 75. 2 V. 83.

Borough Goods, devisable. As before the statutes of 32 & 34 Hen. 8. No lands were devisable at the Common law, but in ancient baronies; so at the making of the statute of Acton Burnel, 11 Ed. 1. c. 1. it was doubted whether goods were devisable but in ancient boroughs: for by the writ de rationabili parte bonorum, anciently the goods of a man were partible between his wife and children. By the Common law, lands could not be devised from the heir; and here it seems as if goods were also not devisable from the wife and children, before the statute 11 Ed. 1. c. 1.

Bozel-fells, i. e. Country people, from the Fr. boire, flocus, because they covered their heads with such stuffs. Blount.

Borrowing, A man borrows money, corn, or such thing of another; he may not expect the same again, but the like, or so much: but if one lend me a horse, &c. he must have the same restored. If a thing be used to any other end or purpose than that for which it was borrowed, the party may have his action on the case for it, though the thing be never the worse; and if what is borrowed be lost, although it be not by any negligence of mine, as if I be robbed of it; or where the thing is impaired or destroyed by my neglect, admitting that I put it to no more service than that for which borrowed, I must make it good: so where I borrow a horse, and put him in an old rotten house ready to fall which falls on and kills him, I must answer for the horse. But if such goods borrowed perish by the act of God in the right use of them; as where I put the horse, &c. in a strong house, and it fall and kill him, or it dies by disease, or by default of the owner, I shall not be charged. Co. Lit. 89. 29 Aff. 28. 2 H. 7. 11. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 454.

Bofcage, (bofcagium) Is that food which wood and trees yield to cattle; as mast; &c. from the Ital. bosco, silva: but Manwood observes, to be quit de bofcagio, is to be discharged of paying any duty of wind-fall wood in the forest.

Boscaria, Wood houses from boscus; or ox houses from bos. — Ut ipsi possunt domos & boscaria satis competentia edificare. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 302.

Boskus, An ancient word used in our law, signifying all manner of wood: the Italians make use of bosco in the same sense; as the French do bois. Boskus is divided into high-wood or timber, hautbois, and coppice or underwoods, sub-bois: but the high-wood is properly called salvus; and in Fleta we read it maerium. — Cum una Carecta de mortuo bosco. Pat. 10 H. 6.

Bosinnus, A certain rustical pipe, mentioned in ancient tenures. By inquisition after the death of Lawrence Hastings, earl of Pembroke, 22 E. 3. the manor of Aspon Cantlow in com. Warw. is returned to be held of the king in capite by these words: Quod quidem manerium per se tenetur de domino rege in capite per servitium inveniendi unum hominem peditem, cum quodam arcu sine corda, cum uno bosinno sine cappa, &c. Ex Record. Tur. Lond.

Botlar, An ox stall. This word occurs in Mat. Paris. anno 1234. And in Ingulphus. — Facit tum borrea, botlaria, ovilia, &c.

Bot, (Sax.) Signifies a recompence, satisfaction or amends: hence comes manbote, compensation, or amends for a man slain, &c. In king Ina's laws is declared what rate was ordained for expiation of this offence, according to the quality of the person slain. Lamb. cap. 99. From hence likewise we have our common phrase, to-bot, i. e. compensationis gratia. There are houfe-bote, plough-bote, &c. privileges to tenants in cutting of wood, &c. Vide those words, and Shene verbo Bote. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 35.

Botelless, sine remedio. In the charter of H. 1. to Thos. archbishop of York, it is said, that no judgment or sum of money shall acquite him that commits sacrilege; but he is in English called botelless, viz. without emendation. Lib. Albus penes Cap. de Subnet. Int. Plac. Trin. 12 Ed. 2. Ebor. 48. We retain the word still in common speech; as it is botelless to attempt such a thing; that is, it is in vain to attempt it.

Botellaria, A buttery or cellar, in which the botts and bottles of wine, and other liquors are repositied. —

Veniet ad palatium regis, & ibit in botellarium, & extrahet a quocunque vase in dicta botellaria invento, vinum quantum viderit necessarium pro factura unius picberi claretti. Anno 31 Ed. 1.

Botha, A booth, stall, or standing in a fair or market. — Et duas mensuras liberas ad bothas suas faciendas. Mon. Ang. 2 par. fol. 132.

Bothagium, Boothage, or customary dues paid to the lord of the manor or soil, for the pitching and standing of booths in fairs or markets. — Picagium, stallagium, bothagium & tollagium, &c. de novo mercato infra villam de Burceator; Cam. Oxon. Paroch. Antiq. p. 680.

Botluna, or butbna, seems to be a park where cattle are inclosed and fed. Hezor Boetius, lib. 7. cap. 123. Botbena, and signifies a barony, lordship, &c. Skene.

Botiler of the King, (pincerna regis) Is an officer that provides the King's wines, who (according to Fleta) may by virtue of his office take out of every ship laden with sale wines, Unum dalium eligere in prora navis ad opus regis, & aliud in puppe, et pro qualibet pecia reddere tantum 20 solid. mercatori. Si autem plura inde habere volueris, bene liceat, dum tamen pretium fide dignorum iudicio pro rege apponatur. Fleta lib. 2. cap. 21. This officer shall not take more wine than he is commanded, of which notice shall be given by the steward of the King's house, &c. on pain of forfeiting double damages to the party grieved; and also to be imprisoned and ranomed at the pleasure of the King. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 21. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3.

Bottomry, (sumus nauticum) Is when the master of a ship borrows money upon the keel or bottom of his ship, and binds the ship itself; that if the money be not paid by the day assigned, the creditor shall have the ship. But it is generally where a person lends money to a merchant, who wants it to traffick, and is to be paid a greater sum at the return of the ship, standing to the hazard of the voyage; in regard to which, though the interest be greater than five per Cent. or what is allowed by law, it is not usury. For money lent to sea is allowed a larger interest than money advanced on land, by reason it is furnished at the hazard of the lender, and if the ship perishes, the lender shares in the loss; so that there is no real security, as in case of lands, &c. And the greater the danger is, the greater may be the profit reasonably required for the money advanced. Lex Mercat. 122.

Money lent on bottomry is either on the bare ship (the usual way) or upon the person of the borrower, and sometimes upon both: the first is where a man takes up money, and obliges himself, that if such a ship shall arrive at such a port, then to repay perhaps in long voyages near double the sum lent; but if the ship happens to miscarry, then nothing. But when money is lent at interest, it is delivered at the peril of the borrower, and the profit of this is merely the price of the loan; whereas the profit of the other, is a reward for the danger and adventure of the sea, which the lender takes upon himself, and makes the interest lawful. See Laws 206, 207 Then there is usura marina, joining the advanced money and the danger of the sea together; and this is obligatory sometimes to the borrower's ship, goods and person. Where bonds or bills of bottomry are sealed, and the money is paid, if the ship receives injury by storm, fire, &c. before the beginning of the voyage, then the person borrowing only runs the hazard, unless it be otherwise provided; as that if the ship shall not arrive at such a place, at such a time, &c. there the contract has its beginning from the time of the sealing: but if the condition be that if such a ship shall sail from London to any port abroad, and shall not arrive there, &c. then, &c. there the contingency hath not its beginning till the departure.

A master of a ship may not take up money on bottomry in places where his owners reside, except he be a part owner, and then he may only take up so much as his part will answer in the ship; for if he exceeds that, his own estate is liable to make satisfaction; but when a master is in a strange country, where there are no owners, nor any goods of theirs, nor of his own; and for want of money he cannot perform his voyage, there he may take up money upon bottomry, and all the owners are chargeable thereto; but this is understood where money cannot be procured by exchange, or any other means: and in the first case, the owners are liable by their vessel, though not in their persons; but they have their remedy against the master of the ship. Leg. Oloron, l. 4. Vide Molloy, b. 2.

11. §. 11. Some masters of ships who had insured or aken up money upon bottomry to a greater value than their adventure, having made it a practice to cast away and destroy the ships under their charge; by Stat. 10 Car. 2. c. 6. it is made felony, and the offenders shall suffer death.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. every sum lent on bottomree or at respondentia upon any subjects ships to or from the East Indies, shall be lent only on the ship; or the merchandise laden on board her, and so expressed in the condition of the bond, and the benefit of salvage shall be allowed to the lender, who alone shall have right to make assurance on the money lent. And no borrower of money, on bottomree or at respondentia as aforesaid, shall recover more on any assurance than the value of his interest, exclusive of the money borrowed. And if the value of his interest doth not amount to the money borrowed, he shall be responsible to the lender for the surplus, notwithstanding the ship and merchandise be totally lost.

By 19 Geo. 2. c. 32. obligees in bottomree bonds are admitted to claim, and after the loss or contingency shall have happened, to prove their debts, in cases of bankruptcy, in like manner as if the loss or contingency had happened before the time of the issuing of the commission of bankruptcy against the obligor.

The defendant had lent 300*l.* on bottomry bond, and afterwards insured 450*l.* on that ship with the plaintiff for six guineas per cent. premium, as interested for money lent, &c. The ship outlived the time at which the money was payable, and afterwards was lost in the East Indies. The defendant recovered the money on the bottomry bond, and afterwards sued the insurers upon their policy, who brought their bill to be relieved, for that the money insured by the policy was the money lent upon the bottomry, and that the defendant was no other-wise interested in the ship; and that the money being paid, no use ought to be made of the policy. The court decreed the policy to be delivered up. 2 Eq. Ab. 371. Trin. 1692. Goddard and Garret. S. C. 2 Vern. 269. where it is held, that a person having no interest but his bottomry bond, cannot insure; and that a person who has no interest in the ship or cargo cannot insure, though the policy was interested or not; but insurances are for the benefit of traders only, not that others unconcerned should make unreasonable gain.

As to the forms of a bill of bottomry, and of a bottomry bond, &c. they are printed and sold by the Stationers.

Bobata Terra, As much land as one ox can plough, — Cujus singula bobatz sunt quindcem acra terra. Mon. Angl. par. 3. fol. 91. See Oxbang.

Bouche of Court, Commonly called budge of court, was a certain allowance of provision from the King, to his knights and servants, that attended him in any military expedition. The French avoir bouche a court, is to have an allowance at court, of meat and drink: from bouche, a mouth. But sometimes it extended only to bread, beer, and wine. And this was anciently in use as well in the houses of noblemen, as in the King's court, as appears by the following indenture. — *Ceste endenture fait parentre lui nobles hommes Monsieur Tho. Beauchamp, Comte de Warwick, d'une part, & Monsieur Johan. Russell de Strengesham Chevalier, de autre part, tesmoigne que le dit Johan. est, &c. Bow-bearer, An under officer of the forest, whose office is to oversee, and true inquisition make, as well of sworn men as unworn in every bailiwick of the forest; and of all manner of trespasses done, either to vert or venison, and cause them to be presented, without any concealment in the next court of attachment, &c. Crompt. Jurif. fol. 201.

Bowyers, One of the ancient companies of the city of London. A bowyer dwelling in London, was to have always ready fifty bows of elm, witch-hazel, or ash, well made and wrought, on pain of 10s. for every bow wanting; and to sell them at certain prices, under the penalty of 40s. Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 10. And parents and masters were to provide for their sons and servants, a bow and two shafts, and cause them to exercise shooting, on pain of 6s. and 8d. c. c. by our ancient statutes. 12 Ed. 4. 33 H. 8.

Bracinnum, A brewing: the whole quantity of ale brewed at one time, for which tolfeſtor was paid in some manors. Bracina a brew-house. MS. penes Will. Dugdale, &c.

Branding in the hand, or face, a punishment inflicted by law for various offences, as by burning, with a hot iron, after the offender hath been allowed clergy. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 360, 370.

Brandy, A liquor made chiefly in France, and extracted from the lees of wine. In the Stat. 20 Car. 2. cap. 1. upon an argument in the Exchequer Anno 1668. whether brandy were a strong water or spirit, it was resolved to be a spirit: but in the year 1669, by a grand committee of the whole House of Commons, it was voted to be a strong-water perfectly made. See the Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 4. In lieu of custom duties, granted by 7 & 8 W. 3. on brandy imported from France, there shall be paid by the importer for every gallon of single proof 1s. and double proof 2s. &c. by Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 27. See farther for the duties on brandy, 33 Geo. 2. c. 9. and 2 Geo. 2. c. 5. And for offences in running brandy, see Custom.

Brasium, Signifies malt: in the ancient statutes brasior is taken for a brewer, from the Fr. brasseur; and at this day is used for a malster or malt-maker. It was resolved 18 Ed. 2. Quod venditio brasii non est venditio victua- lium, nec debet puniri sicut venditio panis, vini & cervisie, & hujusmodi, contra formam statuti. To make malt was a service paid by some tenants to their lords.—In manerio de Pidington quilibet virgatarius præparabit domino unum quarterium brasii per annum, si dominus inveniet bos-

Brass, Is to be sold in open fairs and markets, or in the owners houses, on pain of 10l. and to be worked according to the goodness of metal wrought in London, or shall be forfeited: also searchers of brass and pewter are to be appointed in every city and borough by head officers, and in counties by justices of peace, &c. and in default thereof, any other person skilful in that mystery, by oversight of the head officer, may take upon him the search of defective brass, to be forfeited, &c. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 6. Brass and pewter, bell-metal, &c. shall not be sent out of the kingdom, on pain of forfeiting double value, &c. 33 Hen. 8. c. 7. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 37.

Breach of close, Every unwarrantable entry on another's soil, the law calls a trespass, by breaking his close, the words of the writ of trespass. Black. Com. 3 V. 209.

Breach of Covenant, The not performing of any covenant, expressed or implied in a deed, or the doing an act, which the party covenanted not to do. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 155, 6. Vide post, Breach of Promise.

Breach of Duty, The not executing any office, employment, or trust, &c. in a due and legal manner. Vide Black. Com. 3 V. 163, 4.

Breach of Peace, Offences against the public peace, are either such as are an actual breach of the peace, or constructively so, by aiding to make others break it. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 142, &c.

Breach of the peace severely amerced in former times. Madox's Ex. 1 V. 557.

Breach of Pound, The breaking any pound or place where cattle or goods distrained are deposited, to rescue such distress. Vide Black. Com. 3 V. 146.

Breach of Prison, Breach of prison, by the offender himself, when committed for any cause, was felony at the Common law. 1 Hal. P. C. 607. So was conspiring to break it. Bract. l. 3. c. 9. But this severity is mitigated by the statute de frangentibus prisonam. 1 Ed. 2. which see. To break prison, when lawfully committed for treason or felony, remains still felony at the Common law: if on any inferior charge, 'tis still punishable, as an high misdemeanor, by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 128.

Breach of Promise, (violatio fidei) A breaking or violating a man's word. And breach signifies where a person commits any breach of the condition of a bond, or his covenant, &c. entered into, on action upon which the breach must be assigned. In debt on bond, conditioned to give account of goods, &c. a breach must be alleged, or the plaintiff will have no cause of action. 1 Saund. 102. And when a breach is assigned it must not be general, but must be particular; as in action of covenant for not repairing of houses, the breach ought to be assigned particularly, what is the want of reparation. If one covenant he was seised, and breach is assigned that he was not seised, it must be set forth who is seised, &c. Cro. Jac. 369. But on mutual promise for one to do an act, and in consideration thereof another to do some act, as to sell goods, &c. for so much money, a general breach that the defendant hath not performed his part, is well assigned. 3 Lev. 319.

If the condition of a bond consists of several parts, the defendant in pleading is to shew that he hath performed the several matters contained in the condition: but where a covenant consists of several parts in the affirmative, performance generally is a good plea. Syd. 215. In case of bond for performance of an award, if the defendant pleads any matter by which he admits a non-performance, and excuses it, the plaintiff in his replication must shew the award, and assign the breach, that the court may see an award was made, and judge whether it was good or not; for if it should be of a void part thereof, it need not be performed. 1 Salk. 138.

Breaches assigned ought to be according to the very words of the condition or covenant; when they may be well enough though too general. 1 Lutw. 326. Where a thing a thing is to be done by 1 person or his assigns, the breach is to be that it was done neither by the one nor the other. 5 Mod. 133. If a person is to tender a conveyance, &c. to another, his heirs or assigns, breach assigned that the defendant did not tender a conveyance to the plaintiff, without the words his heirs or assigns, is good: but if the tender be to be made by another man, his heirs, &c. and not to him, it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 139.

Where a lessee for years is to leave all the timber on the land, which was growing there at the time of the lease, and he cut down any trees, though he leaves the timber on the land at the end of his lease, this is a breach of covenant: for in contracts the intention of parties is chiefly to be considered. Raym. 464. If lands are only excepted out of a lease, and a person is disturbed in enjoying them by the lessee, this is no breach of covenant; though it is said it might be otherwise if a way, common, &c. be excepted. Moor 553. A person brings an action for a covenant broken, he ought to assign the breach of it in such a manner, that the defendant may take an issue. 1 Lill. Abr. 240. If several breaches are assigned, and the defendant demurs upon the whole declaration, the plaintiff shall have judgment for all that are well assigned, for they are as several actions. Cr. Jac. 557. Where a declaration assigns no particular breach of covenant, it is cured by verdict, though ill upon demurrer. 1 Vent. 114, 126.

Formerly a plaintiff could assign but one breach in action of debt upon a bond for performance of covenants, though several things were broken; for one breach being proved, was a forfeiture of the bond: but in action of covenant, as many breaches might be assigned as the plaintiff would, because the plaintiff might have a particular damage upon each covenant broken; and a several issue must be taken upon every breach. 1 Nels. Abr. 406. And now by statute, in action on bond for performance of covenants, the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, and the jury shall assess damages and costs for such breaches as are proved to be broken. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 10. And where judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in such action on a demurrer, Nil dicit, &c. he may suggest on the roll as many breaches as he thinks fit; upon which a writ of enquiry shall go, &c. And if before execution executed, the defendant brings the costs and damages into court, execution shall be stayed; and the plaintiff shall acknowledge satisfaction, if the execution be executed: but the judgment shall still stand as a security to answer the future breach of any covenant in the deed; for which the plaintiff or his executors, &c. may have a scire facias upon such judgment against the defendant. Stat. ibid. And see Bond, Condition, and Covenant.

Bread and Bect, The assize of bread, beer, and ale, &c. is granted to the Lord Mayor of London and other corporations: bakers, &c. not observing the assize to be set in the pillory. Stat. 51 H. 3. St. 1. ord. Pistor. & 51 H. 3. St. 6. Vide 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15.

The assize of bread is regulated, by 8 Ann. c. 18. and 1 Geo. 1. c. 26. The 3 Geo. 2. c. 29. inflicts a penalty on selling at a higher price than is set by the Lord Mayor. By the 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. bakers marks are to be set on their bread. But see 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. containing new regulations concerning the assize of bread, and to prevent adulteration. And see farther 32 Geo. 2. c. 18. how penalties not appropriated by 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. shall be distributed. And lastly see 3 Geo. 3. c. 6. and 11 wherein there are farther regulations concerning the assize of bread, and for preventing the adulteration thereof.

Bread of Treet, or Trite, (panis tritici) Is bread mentioned in the statute 51 Hen. 3. of assize of bread and ale; wherein are particularised wastel bread, cockes bread, and bread of treet, which answer to the three sorts of bread now in use, called white, wheaten, and house-hold bread. In religious houses they heretofore distinguished bread by these several names, panis armigerorum, panis conventualis, panis puerorum, & panis famulorum. Antiq. Not.

Brecca, (from the Fr. breche) A breach or decay. In some ancient deeds there have been covenants for repairing muros & breccas, portas & fossata, &c. — De brecca agua inter Woolwich & Greenwich superuidend. Pat. 16 Ric. 2. A duty of 3d. per ton on shipping was granted for amending and stopping of Dagenham breach, by Stat. 12 Ann. c. 17.

Brede, A word used by Bracton for broad; as too large and too brede, is proverbially too long and too broad. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15. There is also a Sax. word rede signifying deceit. Leg. Canut. c. 44.

Bredmite, (Sax. bread and white) A fine or penalty imposed for defaults in the assize of bread: to be exempt from which, was a special privilege granted to the tenants of the honour of Wallingford by King Hen. 2. Paroch. Antiq. 114.

Brehon. In Ireland the judges and lawyers were anciently stiled brehons; and thereupon the Irish law called the brehon law. 4 Inst. 358. Vide Edm. Spencer's state of Ireland, p. 1513. edit. Hughes. In a parliament held at Kilkenny, 40 Ed. 3. under Lionel Duke of Clarence, the then Lientenant of Ireland, the brehon law was formally abolished. Black. Com. 1 V. 100.

Brenagium, A payment in bran, which tenants anciently made to feed their lords hounds. Floun.

Bretoyfe, or Bretoise, The law of the marches of Wales, in practice among the ancient Britos. — Ego Henricus de Penebrugge dedi omnibus liberis burgenfibus meis burgi mei de Penebrugge omnes libertates & liberas consuetudines secundum legem de Bretoyfe, &c. Pat. sine dat. Here legem de Bretoyfe is said to signify legem marchiarum; for Penebrugge, now called Pembridge, is a town in Herefordshire which borders upon Wales.

Breve, Is any writ by which a man is summoned or attached to answer in action, or whereby any thing is commanded to be done in the King's courts, in order to justice, &c. It is called breve from the brevity of it; and is directed either to the chancellor, judges, sheriffs, or other officers; the various forms of it you may see in the register. — Breve, quia breviter & paucis verbis intentionem proferentis exponit & explanat, &c. Bract. lib. 5. Tract. 5. cap. 17. See Stens de verb. Breve. Vide Writ.

Breve perquirere, To purchase a writ or licence of trial, in the King's courts, by the plaintiff, qui breve perquisivit: and hence comes the usage of paying 6s. 8d. fine to the King, where the debt is 40*l.* and of 10*s.* where the debt is 100*l.* &c. in suits and trials for money due upon bond, &c.

Breve de Resto, A writ of right, or licence for a person ejected out of an estate, to sue for the possession of it when detained from him. Vide Resto.

Brevia testata. 'Tis mentioned by the feudal writers. Vide Feud. l. 1. 64. Our modern deeds are in reality nothing more than an improvement or amplification of the brevia testata. Black. Com. 2 V. 307.

If brewers mix any sugar, molasses, &c. in brewing beer or ale, they shall forfeit 20*l.* Stat. 1 Ann. cap. 3. See 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15. 1 Will. & M. c. 24. 10 & 11 Will. c. 21. 9. Ann. c. 12. 12 Ann. Stat. 1. c. 2. See Excise.

Bribery, (from the Fr. briber, to devour or eat greedily) Is a high offence, where a person in a judicial place takes any fee, gift, reward or brokerage, for doing his office, but of the King only. 3 Inst. 145. But taken largely it signifies the receiving, or offering, any undue reward, to or by any person concerned in the administration of publick justice, whether judge, officer, &c. to act contrary to his duty; and sometimes it signifies the taking or giving a reward for a publick office. 3 Inst. 9.

To take a bribe of money, though small, is a great fault ;
 ges servants may be punished for receiving bribes.
 If a judge refuse a bribe offered him, the offerer is punishable. Fertefcue, cap. 51.

Bribery in judicial or ministerial officers is punished by fine and imprisonment. Before the statute 25 Ed. 3.
 Bribery in a judge was looked upon as so heinous an offence, that it was sometimes punished as high treason; and it is at this day punishable, with forfeiture of office, fine and imprisonment. In the reign of King James I.
 the Earl of M. lord treasurer of England, being impeached by the Commons, for refusing to hear petitions referred to him by the King, till he had received great bribes, &c.
 was by sentence of the lords, deprived of all his offices, and disabled to hold any for the future, or to sit in parliament; also he was fined fifty thousand pounds, and imprisoned during the King's pleasure. 1 Hawk. P. C.
 170. In the eleventh year of King George I. the Lord Chancellor M—— had a milder punishment: he was impeached by the commons with great zeal, for bribery, in selling the places of Masters in Chancery for exorbitant sums, and other corrupt practices, tending to the great loss and ruin of the suitors of that court; and the charge being made good against him, being before divested of his office, he was sentenced by the lords to pay a fine of thirty thousand pounds, and imprisoned 'till it was paid.
Vide the Trial. 'Tis said that one of the peers (if not two) who voted against him, had been possessed of the office of Chancellor, and sold the places of Masters in Chancery, whenever vacant!

By statute, the chancellor, treasurer, justices of both benches, barons of the exchequer, &c. shall be sworn not to ordain or nominate any person in any office for any gift, brokerage, &c. 12 R. 2. c. 2. And the sale of offices concerning the administration of publick justice, &c. is prohibited on pain of forfeiture and disability, &c. by 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16. In the construction of the last mentioned statute, it has been resolved that the offices of the ecclesiastical courts are within the meaning of that act, as well as the offices in the courts of Common law; and it hath been adjudged, that one who contracts for an office, contrary to the purport of the said statute 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 16.
 is so disabled to hold the same, that he cannot be restored to a capacity of holding it by any grant or dispensation whatsoever. Cro. Jac. 269, 386. Hawk. P. C. 171.

Officers of the customs, &c. taking any bribe or reward, whereby the crown shall be defrauded, shall forfeit 100*l.* and be rendered incapable of any office. Stat. 14
Car. 2. c. 11. But there is a saving clause for the first offence, acknowledging it in two months. No person setting up for member of parliament, shall after the teste of the writ of election, or after any place becomes vacant, give any bribe of money, meat, drink, gift, reward, &c.
 in order to be elected, on pain of disability to serve in parliament. 7 W. 3. cap. 4. And electors taking bribes, are disabled to vote, and to hold any office or franchise, and as well he that takes as he that offers a bribe, shall forfeit 500*l.* &c. by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. And see 9 Geo. 2. c. 38. As to bribery in magistrates, vide
Black. Com. 4 V. 139. And as to bribery in elections, Bribeur, (Fr. bribeur) Seems to signify in some of our old statutes, one that pilfers other mens goods. 28 Ed.

 2. cap. 1.

Brickalls, An engine mentioned in Blount, by which walls were beat down.

Bricks, Are to be made between the 1st day of March and 29th of September, and shall be burnt either in kilns, or distinct clamps, &c. Also place-bricks when burnt, must not be less than nine inches long, two inches and a half thick, and four and a quarter wide, on pain of forfeiting 20*s.* a thousand, &c. Searchers of bricks and tiles shall be appointed by justices of peace in their quarter sessions, who are to make presentments, and may be fined 10*l.*
 for defaults: combinations to advance the price of bricks, ingrossing them, &c. incurs a penalty of 20*l.* And mixing mould, soil or mud with brick earth, is liable to penalties. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. cap. 33. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 15.
 But bricks may be made of brick earth and sea-coal ashes sifted, not exceeding a certain quantity; and cladders or breeze may be used with coal in the burning of bricks, and stock-bricks and place-bricks burnt in the same clamp, being set in distant parcels, &c. by 3 Geo. 2. c. 22. and see 6 Geo. 1. c. 6. what quantity of bricks may be carried in one load in London, and concerning the carrying of bricks and tiles as ballast, see Tiles.

Bridge, (pons) A building of stone or wood erected a-cross a river, for the common ease and benefit of travellers. Publick bridges, which are of general conveniency, are of common right to be repaired by the whole inhabitants of that county in which they lie. Hale's
P. C. 143. 13 Co. 53. Cro. Car. 365.

But a corporation aggregate, either in respect of a special tenure of certain lands, or in respect of a special prescription; also any other person, by reason of such a special tenure, may be compelled to repair them. Hale's
P. C. 143. Dalt. c. 14.

At Common law those who are bound to repair publick bridges, must make them of such height and strength, as shall be answerable to the course of the water; and they are not trespassers if they enter on any land adjoining to repair them, or lay the materials necessary for the repairs thereon. Dalt. cap. 16. Common bridges being built for the common ease of the people, of common right ought to be repaired by the county; but a particular person, town, &c. may be bound to repair them by tenure, or prescription. 6 Mod. 307. And if a man erects a bridge for his own use, and the people travel over it as a common bridge, he shall notwithstanding repair it:
 though a person shall not be bound to repair a bridge, built by himself for the common good and publick convenience, but the county must repair it. 2 Inst. 701.
 1 Salk. 359. Where inhabitants of a county are indicted for not repairing a bridge, they must set forth who ought to repair the same, and traverse that they ought. 1 Vent.
 256. A vill may be indicted for a neglect in not repairing a bridge; and the justices of peace in their sessions may impose a fine for defaults. And any particular inhabitant of a county, or tenant of land chargeable to repairs of a bridge, may be made defendant, and be liable for not repairing it, and be liable to pay the fine assessed by the court for the default of the repairs; who are to have their remedy at law for a contribution from those who are bound to bear a proportionable share of the charge.
 6 Mod. 307.

If a manor is held by tenure of repairing a bridge, or highway, which manor afterwards comes into several hands, in such case every tenant of any parcel of the demesnes and services, is liable to the whole charge, but shall have contribution of the rest; and this though the lord may agree with the purchasers to discharge them of such repairs, which only binds the lord, and doth not alter the remedy which the publick hath. 1 Darv. Abr.
 744. 1 Salk. 358.

So if a manor, subject to such charge, comes into the hands of the crown, yet the duty upon it continues; and any person claiming afterwards under the crown, the whole manor, or any part thereof, shall be liable to an indictment or information, for want of due repairs. 1 Salk.
 358.

If part of a bridge lie within a franchise, those of the franchise may be charged with the repairs for so much:
 also by a special tenure, a man may be charged with the repairs of one part of a bridge, and the inhabitants of a county are to repair the rest. Hawk. P. C. 221. Raym.
 384, 385.

Indictments for not repairing of bridges, will not lie but in case of common bridges on highways; though it hath been adjudged they will lie for a bridge on a common footway. Mod. Caf. 256. Not keeping up a ferry, being a common passage for all the King's people, is indictable, as well as not keeping up bridges. 1 Salk. 12.
 All householders dwelling in any county or town, whether they occupy lands or not; and all persons who have land in their own possession, whether they dwell in the same county or not, are liable to be taxed as inhabitants, towards the repairs of a public bridge, by the Stat. 22 H.
8. cap. 5. Where it cannot be discovered who ought to repair a bridge, it must be presented by the grand jury in quarter-sessions; and after their inquiry, and the order of sessions upon it, the justices may send for the constables of every parish, to appear at a fixed time and place, to make a tax upon every inhabitant, &c. But it has been usual, in the levying of money for repairs of bridges, to charge every hundred with a sum in gross, and to send such charge to the high constables of each hundred, who send their warrants to the petty constables, to gather it, by virtue whereof they assess the inhabitants of parishes in particular sums, according to a fixed rate, and collect it, and then they pay the same to the high constables, who bring it to the sessions.

This method of raising money, though it be contrary to the statute 22 H. 8. c. 5 has been observed some years past; but by the 1 Ann. cap. 18. justices in sessions, upon presentment made of want of reparations, are to assess every town, parish, &c. in proportion towards the repairs of a bridge; and the money assessed is to be levied by the constables of such parishes, &c. and being demanded, and not paid in ten days, the inhabitants shall be distrained; and when the tax is levied, the constables are to pay it to the high constable of the hundred; who is to pay the same to such persons as the justices shall appoint, to be employed according to the order of the justices, towards repairing of the bridge: and the justices may allow any person concerned in the execution of the act 3*d.* per pound out of the money collected. All matters relating to the repairing and amending of bridges, are to be determined in the county where they lie, and no presentment or indictment shall be removed by certiorari. And by this statute, the evidence of the inhabitants of those places where the bridges are in decay, shall be admitted at any trial upon an information or indictment, &c.

By 14 Geo. 2. c. 33. the justices at their general sessions, may purchase or agree with persons for any piece of land, not above one acre, near to any county-bridge, in order to enlarge or more conveniently rebuild it; and the ground shall be paid for out of the money raised by 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. for better assessing, collecting, and levying, &c. No persons are compellable to make a new bridge but by act of parliament: and the inhabitants of the whole county cannot of their own authority change a bridge from one place to another. If a man has toll for men and cattle passing over a bridge, he is to repair it; and toll may be paid in these cases, by prescription, or statute. See County Rates. And vide Black. Com. 1 V. 357. 4 V. 167, 417.

Bridge-masters. There are bridgemasters of London-bridge, chosen by the citizens, who have certain fees and profits belonging to their office, and the care of the said bridge, &c. Lex London. 283.

Brief, (brevis) An abridgment of the client's case, made out for the instruction of counsel, on a trial at law; wherein the case of the plaintiff, &c. is to be briefly but fully stated, the proofs must be placed in due order, and proper answers made to whatever may be objected against the client's cause, by the opposite side; and herein great care is requisite, that nothing be omitted to endanger the cause. Form of a Brief, see Pract. Solic. p. 311.

Brief al Cbesque, A writ to the bishop, which in Impedit shall go to remove an incumbent, unless he recover or be presented pendente lite. 1 Keb. 386.

Briefs, or licences to make collection for lofs by fire. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 14. Vide Church-wards.

Briga, (Fr. brigue) Debate or contention.—Et posuit terram illam in brigam, & intricavit terram, scilicet, per diversa fraudulenta suffraganea; Ideo committitur Marrese. Ebor. Hill. 18 Ed. 3. Rot. 28.

Brigandine, (Fr. in Lat. lorica) is a coat of mail or ancient armour, consisting of many jointed and scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body. This word is mentioned in 4 & 5 P. & M. cap. 2. and some confound it with haubergeon; and others with brigantine, a long but low-built vessel, swift in sailing, used at sea.

Brigantes, A word used for Yorkshire, Lancashire, bishoprick of Durham, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. Blount.

Brigbote, or Brug-bote, Signifies to be freed from the reparation of bridges. It is compounded of the Sax. brig, a bridge, and bote, which is a yielding of amends, or supplying a defect: but this is more properly bruck-bote, from the Germ. bruck, i. e. a bridge, and bote, a compensation; and it is used for the liberty or exemption of being free from tribute or contribution towards the mending or re-edifying of bridges. Plena, lib. 1. c. 47. Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 622.

Bristol, A great city, famous for trade: the mayor, burgesses, and commonalty of the city of Bristol, are conservators of the river Avon from above the bridge there to Kings-Road, and so down the Severn to the two islands called Holmes; and the Mayor and justices of the said city, may make rules and orders for preserving the river, and regulating pilots, masters of ships, &c. Also for the government of their markets: and the streets are to be kept clean and paved; and lamps or lights hung out at night. Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 23. No person shall act as a broker in the city of Bristol, till admitted and licensed by the Mayor and Aldermen, &c. on pain of forfeiting 500*l.* and those who employ any such, to forfeit 50*l.* &c. by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 31. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 20. the Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. is rendered more effectual so far as it relates to the paving and enlightening the streets; and divers regulations are made in relation to the hackney coachmen, halliers, draymen and carters, and the markets and sellers of hay and straw, within the said city and liberties thereof. See Brokers.

Brocage, (brocagium) The wages or hire of a broker; which is also termed brokerage. 12 R. 2. c. 2. and 11 H. 4.—Ex broccagio, vel alio sinistro pacto. Rot. Stat. 31 Ed. 3.

Brocella, This word, as interpreted by Dr. Thoroten, signifieth a wood; and it is said to be a thicket or covert of bushes and brush wood, from the obsolete Lat. brusca, terra bruscosa, & brocia, Fr. broce, brocelle: and hence is our brauce of wood, and broufing of cattle.—Dedi unam brocellam vocat. &c. Reg. de Thurgaton, MS.

Brocha, (from the Fr. broche) An awl, or large packing needle, the use whereof is very well known. A spit in some parts of England is called a broche; and from this word comes to pierce or broach a barrel. That it was an iron instrument, you may learn from the following authority.—Henricus de Havering tenet manerium de Norton in Com. Essex, per serjeantiam incendendi unum hominem, cum uno equo, &c. & uno sacco de corio, & una brochia ferrea. Anno 13 Ed. 1.

Brochia, A great can or pitcher. Pract. lib. 2. tract. 1. cap. 6. Where it seems that he intends saccus to carry dry, and brochia liquid things.

Brochalfpeny, or Broadhalfpeny. See Bordhalfpeny.

Brokers, (broccatores, broccarii & auxionarii) Are those that contrive, make and conclude bargains and contracts between merchants and tradesmen, in matters of money and merchandize, for which they have a fee or reward. These are exchange brokers; and by the statute 10 R. 2. cap. 1. they are called broggers; also broggers of corn is used in a proclamation of Queen Elizabeth, for badgers. Baker's Chron. fol. 411. The original of the word is from a trader broken, and that from the Sax. broc, which signifies misfortune, which is often the true reason of a man's breaking; so that the broker came from one who was a broken trader by misfortune, and none but such were formerly admitted to that employment; and they were to be freemen of the city of London, and allowed and approved by the Lord Mayor and aldermen, for their ability and honesty. By the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 20. they are to be licensed in London by the Lord Mayor, who gives them an oath, and takes bond for the faithful execution of their offices: if any persons shall act as brokers, without being thus licensed and admitted, they shall forfeit the sum of 500*l.* And persons employing them 50*l.* And brokers are to register contracts, &c. under the like penalty: also brokers shall not deal for themselves, on pain of forfeiting 200*l.* They are to carry about them a silver medal, having the King's arms and the arms of the city, &c. and pay 40*s.* a year to the chamber of the city. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 16. A penalty of 500*l.* is inflicted on lawful brokers selling shares of stock not authorized by act of parliament; by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. Brokers negotiating or transacting contracts, on premiums to accept or refuse stock, or in the nature of wagers, &c. relating to the value, incur the like penalty of 500*l.* And negotiating agreements knowingly, for the sale of stock, where the seller is not actually possessed of the same, &c. shall forfeit 100*l.* And brokers shall keep a book called the broker's book; in which they shall enter all contracts and agreements, with the names of the buyers and sellers, and day of making contracts, &c. to be produced when required, on pain of 50*l.* Stat. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 8. And see farther 3 Geo. 2. c. 31. concerning the admission of brokers in the city of Bristol.

There are likewise pawn-brokers, who commonly keep shops, and let out money to poor necessitous people upon pawns, for the most part on extortion; but these are more properly pawn-takers, and are not of that antiquity or credit as the former; nor do the statutes allow them to be brokers, though now commonly so called. These brokers often deal in stolen goods, as they buy them cheap, and are a great nuisance: notwithstanding there is a law declaring that wrongful sale of goods stolen, &c. to and by brokers, shall not alter the property; and if they do not discover such goods at the request of the owner, they are to forfeit double value. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 21. The reason of exorbitant interest being taken by these brokers, is the want of witnesses to prove the contract, or other proof of the money taken, but the party's own evidence; but they may be punished for their extortion on an action, qui tam, &c. See Pawn.

Brok, An old sword or dagger. — Jurati dicunt super sacramentum, quod Johannes de Monemne miles per Robertum armigerum suum, percussit Adam Gilbert capellandum de Wilton in gutture quodam gladio, qui dicitur brok, per quod propinquior erat morti, &c. Rot. Parl. 35 Ed. 1.

Bruised, Bruised or injured with blows, wounds, or other casualty. Cowel.

Brothel-houses, Lewd places, being the common habitations of prostitutes. King Hen. 8. by proclamation, in the 37th year of his reign, suppressed all the stews or brothel-houses, which had long continued on the bank side in Southwark, contrary to the law of God and of the land. 3 Inst. 205. A brothelman was a loose idle fellow; and a feme bordelier or brothelier, a common whore. And horelman is a contraction of brothelman. Chaucer. See Lewdy-House.

Bruere, This the Latins call erica, and signifies heath ground; and brueria, briars, thorns, or heath, from the Sax. brær, briar. — Humphry duke of Gloucester grants the forester of Shotore and Stowode, tantum de arboribus & brueriis, quantum pro vestura indiguerit, habebit. Paroch. Antiq. 620.

Bruius, A wood or grove; Fr. breil, breuil, a thicket or clump of trees in a park or forest. Hence the abbey of Bruer, in the forest of Wichwood in com. Oxon: and Bruel, Brebul, or Brill, a hunting seat of our ancient kings in the forest of Bernwood in com. Bucks.

Bruietus, A small coppice or wood. — Dedimus Willielmo B. Licentiam claudendi duos bruilletos, qui sunt extra regardum foreste nostre quorum unus est inter Swinburn & Estorbrig. Car. Ric. 1. Bruella seems likewise to signify a little wood, or heathy ground. — In dominicis bosci domini episcopi, scil. in bruellis ex parte australi regii itineris. Reg. Priorat. de Wermey, fol. 24.

Bruscia, Sometimes signifies a wood: and in Mon. Angl. Charta nostra confirmavimus centum acras tam de terra quam de bruscia de manerio de Riveria. Monast. tom. 1. pag. 773.

Brusua and Brusula, Brouse or brushwood. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 773.

Bubbles, The South-sea project, and various other schemes, similar to the end intended, that of defrauding the subject, though different as to the means, called by the name of bubbles. The Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. makes all unwarrantable undertakings by unlawful subscriptions subject to the penalties of a perjury.

Bucklarium, A buckler. — Et quod malefactores noñtiter cum gladiis & bucklariis, ac aliis armis, &c. Clauf. 26 Ed. 1. m. 8. intus.

Buckstall, A toil to take deer, which by the Stat. 19 Hen. 7. is not to be kept by any person that hath not a park of his own, under penalties. There is a privilege of being quit of amerciaments for buckstalls. — Et sint quieti de chevagio, bondpeny, & buckstall, & de omnibus missricordiis, &c. Privileg. de Semplingham. See 4 Inst. 306.

Bucksheat, Is the same with French wheat, used in many counties of this kingdom: in Essex it is called brank; and in Worcestershire, crap. It is mentioned in the Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 5.

Bucinus, A military weapon for a footman. — Petrus de Chetwood tenet — per serjeantiam inveniend. unum hominem peditem, cum una lancea, & uno bucino ferreo, &c. Tenures, pag. 74.

Buggery, or sodomy, Comes from the Italian buggerare, to bugger; and it is defined to be a carnal copulation against nature, and this is either by the confusion of species; that is to say, a man or a woman with a brute beast, or of sexes, as a man with a man, or man unnaturally with a woman. 12 Co. Rep. 36. This sin against God, nature, and the law, 'tis said was brought into England by the Lombards. Rot. Parl. 50 Ed. 3. numb. 58. Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 6. And in ancient times, according to some authors, it was punishable with burning, though others say with burying alive: but at this day it is felony excluded clergy, and punished as other felonies. 25 H. 8. cap. 6. and 5 Eliz. 17.

By the articles of the navy, (22 Geo. 2. c. 33.) If any person in the fleet shall commit the unnatural and detestable sin of buggery or sodomy, with man or beast; he shall be punished with death by the sentence of a court martial.

It is felony both in the agent and patient consenting, except the person on whom committed be a boy under the age of discretion; when 'tis felony only in the agent: also persons present, aiding and abetting to this crime, are all principals; and the statutes make it felony generally: there may be accessaries before and after the fact; but though none of the principal offenders shall be admitted to clergy, the accessaries are not excluded it. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 670. For many years past the crime of buggery has been greatly practised, and without any exemplary punishment of the committers of it; till anno 12 Geo. 1. a great number of these wretches were convicted of the most abominable practices, and three of them put to death; which seasonable justice seems to have given a check to the before growing evil.

In every indictment for this offence, there must be the words, rem habuit veneram & carnaliter cognovit, &c. and of consequence some kind of penetration and emission must be proved; but any the least degree is sufficient. 1 Hawk. 6. The general words of these indictments are, that A. B. on such a day, at, &c. with force and arms, made an assault upon C. D. and then and there wickedly, devilishly, feloniously, and against the order of nature, committed the venereal act with the said C. D. and carnally knew him, and then and there wickedly, &c. did with him that sodomitical and detestable sin called buggery, (not to be named among Christians) to the great displeasure of God, and disgrace of all mankind, &c. This crime is excepted out of our acts of general pardon. Vid. Black. Com. 4 V. 215.

Buildings, If a house new built exceeds the ancient foundation, whereby that is the cause of hindering the lights or air of another house, action lies against the builder. Hob. 131. In London a man may place ladders or poles upon the ground, or against houses adjoining for building his own; but he may not break ground: and builders of houses ought to have licence from the mayor and aldermen, &c. for a board in the streets, which are not to be incumbered. Cit. Lib. 30. 146. In new building of London, it was ordained, that the outsidies of the buildings be of brick or stone, and the houses for the principal streets to be four stories high, having in the front balconies, &c. by Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 3. And vide 6 Ann. c. 31. 7 Ann. c. 17. & 11 Geo. 1. c. 28. & 33 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 24. If any person build any new house in London, he must erect a party-wall of brick or stone between house and house, of the thickness of two bricks in length in the ground story, &c. or he shall forfeit 50*l.* leviable by warrant of justices of peace. And party-pipes are to be fixed on the sides of such houses, for conveying water falling from the tops thereof thereof into the channels, &c. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 30. 11 Geo. 1. c. 28. And see further 19 Car. 2. c. 3. 22 Car. 2. c. 11. 7 Ann. c. 17. 5 Eliz. c. 4. 35 Eliz. c. 6. 33 Geo. 2. c. 30. 4 Geo. 3. c. 14. & 6 Geo. 3. c. 37. See Fire.

Bull, (bullā) A brief or mandate of the pope or bishop of Rome, from the lead or sometimes gold seal affixed thereto, which Mat. Paris, anno 1237, thus describes: In bulla domini papae stat imago Pauli a dextris crucis in medio bullae figurata, & Petri a sinistris. These decrees of the pope are often mentioned in our statutes, as 25 Ed. 3. c. 28 H. 8. cap. 16. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. and 13 Eliz. cap. 2. And have been heretofore used, and of force in this land: but by the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 16. it was enacted, That all bulls, briefs and dispensations had or obtained from the bishop of Rome, should be void. And by 13 Eliz. c. 2. vide 23 Eliz. c. 1. If any person shall obtain from Rome any bull or writing to absolve or reconcile such as forsake their due allegiance, or shall give or receive absolution by colour of such bull, or use or publish such bull, &c. it is high treason.

Bull and Boar, By the custom of some places, a parson may be obliged to keep a bull and a boar for the use of the parishioners, in consideration of his having tithes of calves and pigs, &c. 1 Rel. Abr. 559. 4 Mod. 241.

Bulls Salts, As much salt as is made at one wealing or boiling: a measure of salt, supposed to be twelve gallons. Mon. Angl. tom. 2.

Bullion, (Fr. billon) The ore or metal whereof gold is made; and signifies with us gold or silver in billets, in the mass before it is coined. Anno 9 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Bultel, Is the bran or refuse of meal after dressed; also the bag wherein it is dressed is called a bulter, or rather boulter. The word is mentioned in the statute de assisa panis & cervisiae, anno 51 Hen. 3. Hence comes bulted or bouted bread, being the coarsest bread.

Bur, A sort of records of the Chancery lying in the office of the Rolls; in which are contained, the files of bills and answers, of hab. cor. cum causa, certiorari's, attachments, &c. fiere facias's, certificates of statute staple, extents and liberates, superfedeas's, bails on special pardons, bills from the Exchequer of the names of sheriffs, letters patent surrendered and deeds cancelled, inquisitions, privy seals for grants, bills signed by the king, warrants of escheators, customers, &c.

Burcheta, (from the Fr. berche) A kind of gun used in forests.

Burcifer Regis, Purse-bearer, or keeper of the king's privy purse. Pat. 17 Hen. 8.

Burbate, To jest or trifle. — Quod nulli veniant ad turniandum vel burdandum, nec ad alias quasunque aventuras, &c. Mat. Paris, Addit. p. 149

Burgage, (burgagium) An ancient tenure proper to boroughs, whereby the inhabitants by custom hold their lands or tenements of the king, or other lord of the borough, at a certain yearly rent. Old Tenures. It is kind of socage tenure, and signifieth the service whereby the borough is holden; and the king hath nothing to do with heirs of this land, whether they be under fourteen, or above that age, and under twenty-one. 1 Inst. 109. Jenk. Cent. 127. Swinburn ranks it inter ignobiles tenuras. And 37 Hen. 8. c. 20. Item non utimur facere fidelitatem vel servitium forinsecum domini feodorum pro terris & tenementis nostris, nisi tantummodo redditus nostros de eisdem terris exeuntes; quia tenemus terras & tenementa nostra per servitium burgagii, ita quod non habemus medium inter nos & dominum regem. MS. Codex de LL. Statutis & Consuetud. Burgi villae Montgomer. a temp. Hen. 2.—Anciently a dwelling-house in a borough-town was called a burgage. —Sciant quod ego Editha, &c. Dedi—in liberam, puram & perpetuam elemosinam totum illud burgagium cum edificiis & pertin. suis quod jacet in villa Leominstr. Ex libro chartarum priorat. Leom'. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 82. 4 V. 412.

Burgh, A small walled town, or place of privilege, &c. See Borough.

Burg-bote, (from burg, castellum, and bote compensatio) Is a tribute or contribution towards the building or repairing of castles, or walls of a borough or city: from which divers had exemption by the ancient charters of the Saxon kings. Rastal. burg-bote significat quietantiam reparationis murorum civitatis vel burgi. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47.

Burgeses, (burgarii & burgeses) Are properly men of trade, or the inhabitants of a borough or walled town; but we usually apply this name to the magistrates of such a town, as the bailiff and burgeses of Leominster, &c. In Germany, and other countries, they confound burges and citizen; but we distinguish them as appears by the statute 5 R. 2. c. 4. where the classes of the commonwealth are thus enumerated, count, baron, banneret, chivalier de counter; citizen de citee; burges de burgh. See Co. Lit. 80. We now also call those burgeses, who serve in parliament, for any borough or corporation: and no man is qualified to be such a burges, that hath not an estate of 300 l. a year, clear of all incumbrances. Stat. 9 Ann. cap. 7. But see Stat. 33 Geo. 2. c. 20. Burgeses of our towns are called in Doomsday, the hemines of the king, or of some other great man; but this only shews whose protection they were under, and is not any infringement of their civil liberty. Squire Ang. Sax. Gov. 260. n.

Burglary, (burglaria, from the Sax. burgh, domus, or arx, & laron, furtum) Is where a man breaketh and entereth the house of another in the night-time, to the intent to commit some felony, whether the intention be executed or not. 4 Co. 49. In the natural signification, burglary is nothing but the robbing of a house; but our law restrains it to robbing a house by night, or breaking in with an intent to rob, or do some other felony: and the like offence committed by day is called house-breaking, to distinguish it from burglary. It is an offence excluded the benefit of clergy, and may be committed a great many ways: and if a man hath two houses, and resides sometimes in one of the houses, and sometimes in the other, if the house he doth not inhabit is broken by any person in the night, it is burglary. Poph. 52. 18 Eliz. c. 7.

And when several come with a design to commit burglary, and one does it, while the rest watch near the house, here his act is, by interpretation, the act of all of them. Wood 377. If thieves pretend business to get into a house by night, and thereupon the owner of the house opens his door, and they enter and rob the house, this is burglary. Kel. 42. Also if a person be within the house, and steal goods, and then open the house on the inside, and go out with the goods, this is burglary, though the thief did not break the house. 3 Inst. 64. If a thief unlocks a door, or draws the latch of a room to rob, &c. or if one comes down a chimney, opens a window, breaks a hole in the wall, &c. all these are a breaking: and if the thief set his foot over the threshold of the door of the house, or put his hand, pistol, &c. within the door or window, it is an entry sufficient to make it burglary. H. P. C. 80, 81.

Every entrance into the house by a trespasser is not a breaking in this case, but there must be an actual breaking. As if the door of a mansion house stand open, and the thief enters, this is no breaking. So it is if the window of the house be open, and a thief with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is no burglary, because there is no actual breaking of the house. But if the thief breaketh the glass of the window, dow, and with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is burglary, for there was an actual breaking of the house. 3 Inst. 64. These acts amount to an actual breaking, viz. opening the casement, or breaking the glass window, picking open the lock of a door, or putting back the lock, or the leaf of a window, or unlatching the door that is only latched. 1 Hal. H. 552.

One of the servants of the house opened his lady's chamber door, which was fastened with a brass bolt, with design to commit a rape; and it was ruled to be burglary, and the defendant was convicted and transported. Stran. 481.

Though the house is to be a mansion-house, and the out-houses adjoining to the mansion-house are part thereof, wherein this crime may be committed; but not a barn, stable, &c. at any distance from the house. 4 Rep. 40. Part of a house divided from the rest, having a door of its own to the street, this is a mansion-house of him who hires it. Kel. 84.

To break and enter a shop, not parcel of the mansion-house, in which the shop-keeper never lodges, but only works or trades there in the day-time, is not burglary, but only larceny; but if he, or his servant, usually or often lodge in the shop at night, it is then a mansion-house, in which a burglary may be committed. 1 H. H. 557, 558.

It is not necessary to make it burglary, that any person be actually in the house at the very time of the offence committed. 1 Harv. 103.

A chamber in an inn of court, where one usually lodges, is a mansion-house; for every one hath a several property there. But a chamber where any person doth lodge as an inmate, cannot be called his mansion; though if a burglary be committed in his lodgings, the indictment may lay the offence to be in the mansion-house of him that let them. 3 Inst. 65. Kel. 83. If the owner of the house breaks into the rooms of his lodgers, and steals their goods, it cannot be burglary to break into his own house, but it is felony to steal their goods. Wood's Inst. 378. A lodger in an inn hath a special interest in his chamber; so that if he opens his chamber door, and takes goods in the house, and goes away, it seems not to be burglary. And where A. enters into the house of B. in the night, by the doors open, and breaks open a chest, and steals goods without breaking an inner door; it is no burglary by the Common law, because the chest is no part of the house: though it is felony ousted of clergy by statute; and if one break open a counter or cupboard, fixed to a house, it is burglary. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 554. See 3 W. & M. c. 9.

The intention to commit felony to make burglary must be of such a fact, as was felony at Common law; and not of a felony newly made by act of parliament: but the offences of burglary and felony may be joined in the same indictment; and where a man commits burglary, and at the same time steals goods out of the house, if he be acquitted of the burglary, he may notwithstanding be indicted of the larceny. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 245. Taking away goods from a dwelling-house in the night or day, where any person is therein; and breaking any shop, ware-house, &c. and taking away goods privately to the value of 5*s.* though no person be therein, is burglary, by Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. And a reward of 40*l.* is given by the statute for apprehending a burglar, and prosecuting him to conviction. 5 Ann. cap. 31. See Stat. 12 Ann. cap. 7. by which if any person shall enter into the mansion-house of another, by day or by night, without breaking the same, with an intent to commit felony, or being in such house shall commit any felony, and shall in the night time break the said house to get out, he shall be guilty of burglary, and ousted of the benefit of clergy, in the same manner as if he had broken and entered the house in the night-time, with intent to commit felony. And see 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. & 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. concerning payment of the rewards for apprehending and convicting of burglars. See likewise 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. which provides, That the charges of prosecuting and convicting a burglar shall be paid by the treasurer of the county where the burglary was committed.

An indictment for burglary.

Dorset, ff. THE jurors, &c. upon their oath present, that A. B. of, &c. in the said county, labourer, on the day of, &c. in the year of the reign, &c. with force and arms, did feloniously break and enter the mansion-house of C. D. esquire, at, &c. in the county aforesaid, in the night-time, that is to say, between the hours of ten and eleven of the clock in the evening of the same day (one E. F. then being in the same house in the peace of God and of our sovereign lord the king) and then and there feloniously did, take and carry away twenty pounds of lawful money, and also, &c. of the goods and chattels of the said C. D. then and there found in the said house, against the peace of our said lord the king, his crown and dignity.

Burrochium, A burrock, or small ware over a river, where wheels are laid for the taking of fish. Coruel.

Bursa, A purse. Reddendo inde ad bursam abbatis vi. d. ad festum sancti Michaelis, &c. Ex lib. Chart. Priorat. Lecomitir.

Bursaria, The bursery, or exchequer of collegiate and conventual bodies; or the place of receiving and paying, and accounting by the bursarii, or bursers, A. D. 1277. Computaverunt patres Radulphus de Meriton, & Stephanus de Oxon. de bursaria domus Bercestre coram auditoribus. Paroch. Antiq. p. 288. But the word bursarii did not only signify the bursars of a convent or college; but formerly stipendiary scholars were called by the name of bursarii, as they lived on the burse or fund or publick stock of the university. At Paris, and among the Cistercian monks, they were particularly termed by this name:—and—in ea universitate (scil. Oxon.) sunt clara collegia a regibus, reginis, episcopis, & principibus fundata, & ex stipendiis eorum scholastici plurimi utuntur, quos Parisienses bursarios vocamus. *Johan. Major. Gest. Bussa, An old word signifying a great ship. Blount's Dict.

Buttillus, A bushel; from butta, butta, buttis, a standing measure: and hence butticella, butticellus, buttillus, a less measure. Some derive it from the old Fr. bouts, leather continents of wine; whence come our leather budget and bottles. Kenner's Gloss.

Busta and Butsus, busta, and buscus, &c. The same with brucia and brusula.

Buttard, A large bird of game, usually found on downs and plains, mentioned in the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 11.

Butchers,

Butchers, Are to sell their meat at reasonable prices, or shall forfeit double the value, to be levied by warrant of two justices of peace, &c. And conspiring to sell their meat at certain rates; or selling flesh of cattle dying of the murrain, &c. are liable to divers penalties by statutes 7 Ed. 2. 23 Ed. 3. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. Butchers are not to kill meat in their scalding-houses, or within the walls of London, &c. Nor buy any fat cattle to sell again, on pain of forfeiting the value; but this shall not extend to selling calves, lambs, or sheep dead, from one butcher to another. Stat. 4 Hen. 7. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 19. And see farther 21 Hen. 8. c. 8. 22 Hen. 8. c. 6. 24 Hen. 8. c. 3. 2 Hen. 8. c. 1. 27 Hen. 8. c. 9. 33 Hen. 8. c. 11. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. 15. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. 3 Car. c. 1. 15 Car. 2. c. 8.

By Stat. 5 Ann. c. 34. sect. 2. Butchers within ten miles of London not to sell fat cattle alive or dead to one another. But by 7 Ann. c. 6. they may sell dead calves or sheep. See likewise 9 Ann. c. 11. and title Hides.

Butt, (butticum) A measure of wine, &c. well known among merchants, and containing 126 gallons of Malmsey wine, by Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

Butter and Cheese. Justices of peace in sessions may restrain retailing butter and cheese; which is to be sold in open shop, and not above a barrel of butter or wey of cheese at one time, under penalties. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. cap. 21. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 22. Every Kilderkin of butter shall contain 112 pounds, the firkin 56, and pot 14 pounds of good butter, besides the casks and pots; and old bad butter shall not be mixed with good, nor shall butter be repacked for sale, which incurs forfeiture of double value, &c. And sellers and packers of butter shall pack it in good casks, and set their names thereon, with the weight of the cask and butter, on pain of 10s. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 26. Butter and cheese may be transported: buyers of butter are to put marks on casks; and persons opening them afterwards, or putting in other butter, &c. 17. Bye, Words ending in by or bee, signify a dwelling place or habitation, from the Sax. bye.

By-laws, (bilagines, from the Goth. by, pagus, and lagen, lex) Are laws made obiter, or by the by; such as orders and constitutions of corporations, for the governing of their members; of courts-leet and court-baron; commoners or inhabitants in vills, &c. made by common assent, for the good of those that made them, in particular cases whereunto the publick law doth not extend; so that they bind farther than the common or statute law: guilds and fraternities of trades, by letters patent of incorporation, may likewise make by-laws, for the better regulation of trade among themselves, or with others. Kitch. 45, 72. 6 Rep. 63.

In Scotland those laws are called laws of birlaw or bur-law; which are made by neighbours elected by common consent in the birlaw courts, wherein knowledge is taken of complaints betwixt neighbour and neighbour; which men so chosen are judges and arbitrators, and stiled birlaw-men. And birlaws, according to Skene, are leges rusticorum, laws made by husbandmen, or townships, concerning neighbourhood amongst them. Skene, pag. 33.

A power of making by-laws is included in the very act of incorporating, and incident to every corporation aggregate, without express words in the charter; and all by-laws must ever be subject and squared to the rule of the general law of the realm, as subordinate to it. Hob. 211.

The inhabitants of a town, without any custom, may make ordinances or by-laws, for repairing of a church, or highway, or any such thing, which is for the general good of the publick; and in such cases, the greater part shall bind all: though if it be for their own private profit, as for the well ordering of their common, or the like, they cannot make by-laws without a custom to warrant it; and if there be a custom, the greatest part shall not bind the rest in these cases, unless it be warranted by the custom. 5 Rep. 63.

Every city and town corporate hath power to make by-laws, for the better government of the body politick. Hob. 211. 5 Mod. 429. But a corporation cannot make a by-law to bind strangers which are not of their body, or to extend to places out of the jurisdiction of the makers: nor may by-laws be made in the form of acts of parliament. 1 Nels. Abr. 411. Also by-laws may not be made to restrain a person from setting up his trade, it being against the Common law to restrain men from trades: a by-law that no person who is not a freeman of a corporation shall set up a trade, under a penalty, hath been adjudged void and against law; as it excludes those who have served apprenticeships in the corporations, who by law may use trades. 1 Lutw. 562.

By-laws ought to be for the common good and benefit of all those who live in the place where made; and restraining men from using trades cannot be for common good, so that such by-laws have been condemned: but such a by-law warranted by particular custom, as that no strange artificer who is not free of that place shall use any art within the same, hath been held good. Nels. Lutw. 175. A custom that no foreign tradesman shall use or exercise a trade in a town, &c. will warrant that which a grant cannot do; and where custom has restrained, a by-law may be made that upon composition foreigners may exercise a trade. Carter 120.

A by-law by a corporation may inflict a penalty, recoverable by distress, or action of debt, and be good. 1 Danv. Abr. 738. But 'tis said it cannot be made under a certain penalty to be levied by distress, and sale of the offender's goods. 2 Vent. 182. For a by-law may not be made on pain of forfeiture of goods: nor may it inflict imprisonment, being contrary to Magna Charta. 2 Inst. 54. Where by-laws are good, notice of them is not necessary, because they are presumed for the better government and benefit of all persons living in those particular limits where made, and therefore all persons therein are bound to take notice of them. 1 Lutw. 404.

The freeholders in a court leet may make by-laws relating to the publick good, which shall bind every one within the leet. 2 Danv. 457. And a court-baron may make by-laws, by custom, and add a penalty for the non-performance of them. But all by-laws are to be reasonable; and ought to be for the common benefit, and not private advantage of any particular persons; and must be consonant to the publick laws and statutes, as subordinate to them. Goldb. 79. And by Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 7. By-laws made by corporations are to be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40 l. Vide the Statute. Vide also Black Com. 1 V. 475. And as to actions on by-laws, ib. 3 V. 159.

Cabal, (cabala) A junto or private meeting; from a doctrine or science practised by the Jews. 'Tis a mysterious doctrine among the Jews, received by oral tradition from their fathers, and at last compiled into a body, in their Talmud. It also signifies a skill or science practised by the more modern Jews, in discovering mysteries and expositions from the numbers that letters of words make.

Caballa (from the Lat. caballus) Belonging to a horse. Domesday.

Cablith, (cablicium) Signifies brushwood, according to the writers of the forest laws: but Sir Henry Spelman thinks it more properly windfall-wood, because it was written of old cadibulum, from cadere: or if derived from the Fr. chablis, it also must be windfall-wood.—Item dicunt, quod ceppeg & cablicia vento prostrat. valent, &c. Inq. de an. 47 H. 3.

Cables for shipping; making them of old materials, which shall contain seven inches in compass when made and tarred, &c. is liable to a forfeiture of four times the value, by Stat. 35 Eliz. c. 8. And see 21 Hen. 8. c. 12.

Cachepolus or Cacherellus, An inferior bailiff, a catchpole.—*In stipendiis ballivi XIII. IV. d. in stipendiis unius cachepoli IX. Cade, Of herrings is 500, of sprats 1000. Book of Rates, fol. 45. But it is said, that anciently 600 made the cade of herrings, and six score to the hundred, which is called Magnum Centum.

Cadet, The younger son of a gentleman; particularly applied to a volunteer in the army, waiting for some post.

Caep Gildum, The restoring goods or cattle. Blount. See Ceapgild.

Cagis, A cage or coop for birds.—Mandatum est vicecom. Wilts. quod emat in baliua sua 300 gallinas, &c. cum cagis, in quibus eadem gallinae poni possunt. Ex Rot. Claus. 38 H. 3.

Calamus, A cane, reed, or quill; comprised among merchandise or drugs to be garbled. 1 Jac. 1. c. 19.

Calangium and Calangia A challenge, claim, or dispute.—Sciant quod ego Godfridus, &c. dedi, &c. sine aliqua reclamacione seu calangio, &c. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. fol. 252.

Calcerum, Calcea, A causey or common hard way, maintained and repaired with stones and rubbish, from the Lat. calx, chalk, Fr. chaux, whence their chauffee and our causway, or path raised with earth, and paved with chalk-stones, or gravel. Calcearum operations were the work and labour done by the adjoining tenants: and calcagium was the tax or contribution paid by the neighbouring inhabitants towards the making and repairing such common roads; from which some persons were especially exempted by royal charter. Kennet's Gloss.

Calefagium, A word signifying a right to take fuel yearly.—Confirmamus panagium, herbagium & calefagium in foresta nostra. Blount.

Calendar See 24 Geo. 2. c. 23. for the establishment of the new stile, and 25 Geo. 2. c. 30. which enacts, that the opening of commons, and doing other things depending on the moveable feasts shall be according to the new calendar.

Calendar of Prisoners. A list of all the prisoners names, in the custody of each respective sheriff. Where prisoners are capitally convicted at the assizes, the judge may command execution to be done, without any writ. And the usage now is, for the judge to sign the calendar, which contains all the prisoners names, with their several judgments in the margin, and this calendar is left with the sheriff. As, for a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, "hanged by the neck." Formerly in the days of Latin and abbreviation, "sus. per coll." for "suspendatur per collum." Staundford, P. C. 182. And this is the only warrant that the sheriff has, for so material an act, as the taking away the life of another.

Vide Mr. Justice Blackstone's judicious observations thereon, Com. 4 V. 396, 7.

Calends, (calenda) Among the Romans was the first day of every month, being spoken of it by it self, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together: and if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month; as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month, which comes so much before the month named; as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, the 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months. Hepton's Concord, p. 69. In the dates of deeds, the day of the month, by nonas, ides, or calends, is sufficient. 2 Inst. 675. See Ides.

Caliburne, The famous sword of the great King Arthur. Hoveden and Brompton in Vita R.

Callico. No person shall wear in apparel any printed or dy'd callico, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* And drapers selling any such callico, shall forfeit 20*l.* But this doth not extend to callicoes dyed all blue. Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 7. And persons may wear stuff, made of linen yarn and cotton wool, manufactured and printed with any colours in Great Britain; so as the warp be all linen yarn, without incurring any penalty, by Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 4. See Linen.

Calling the Plaintiff. It is usual for a plaintiff, when he or his counsel perceives that he has not given evidence sufficient to maintain his issue, to be voluntarily nonsuited, or withdraw himself: whereupon the crier is ordered to call the plaintiff; and if neither he, nor any one for him, appears, he is nonsuited, the jurors are discharged, the action is at an end, and the defendant shall recover his costs. But this is not (like a verdict) a bar to the plaintiff's bringing another action, when he can get better proof, &c.

Cambrick. By the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 36. and 21 Geo. 2. c. 26. No one shall wear in any garment or apparel, or vend, utter, sell, or expose to sale, (except for exportation) or for hire make up for, in, or upon, any garment or wearing apparel, any cambrick or French lawn, under the penalty of 5*l.* to the informer, on complaint before a justice of peace within six days after the offence committed; the penalty to be levied by distress on the offender's goods. The wearer excused on discovering and giving sufficient proof against the vender, if sold after the 24th of June 1748. The importation of cambricks and French lawns prohibited but on security of exporting them within three years. Camera, From the old Germ. Cam. Cammer, crooked; whence comes our English kenbo, arms in kenbo. But camera at first signified any winding or crooked plat of ground; as unam cameram terrae, i. e. a nook of land. Du Fresne. Afterwards the word was applied to any vaulted or arched building; and by degrees more particularly restrained to an upper room or chamber: and it is now often used in the law, in the business of a judge, where persons are to be brought before him apud cameram suam situat. in Serjeants-Inn, &c. The present Irish use cama for a bed. See Kennet's Gloss.

'Tis used in philosophy with the word obscura, signifying a dark chamber. But more particularly, camera obscura obscura is the name of an optic machine; wherein (the light only coming through a double convex glass) objects exposed to broad day-light, and opposite to the glass are represented inverted upon any white surface, placed within the machine in the focus of the glass. The first who observed this phenomenon was Baptista Porta, lib. 4. c. 2. Magia naturalis. A darkened chamber may be made to answer the same purposes. By the use of a second glass collecting the rays of light, objects are delineated in their natural position, &c.

Camisia, A garment belonging to priests, called the Alb. — Indutus camisia linea quæ communi nomine dicitur Alb. Pct. Blesensis.

Camoca, A word used to signify a garment made of silk, or something better: Unum vestimentum pro serialibus diebus album de camoca. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. pag. 81.

Campana bajula, A small hand bell, much in use in the ceremonies of the Roman church; and retained among us by sextons, parish clerks, and criers.——*Quatuor eas muneribus patriarcha donavit, altari videlicet portatili consecrata, campana bajula, baculo insigni, & tunica ex auro contexta. Candles and Chandlers. If any chandlers mix with their wares any thing deceitfully, &c. the candles shall be forfeited. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8. And a tax or duty is granted on candles, of 4*d.* per pound for those made with wax, and one half-penny a pound for all other candles, (besides a duty upon tallow) by 8 Ann. cap. 9. The makers of candles are not to use melting-houses without making a true entry, on pain of 100*l.* and to give notice of making candles to the excise officer for the duties, and of the number, &c. or shall forfeit 50*l.* Stat. 11 Geo. 1. cap. 30. Vide 23 Geo. 2. c. 21. and 26 Geo. 2. c. 32. See Wax-Chandlers.

Candlemas-Day, The feast of the purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, being the second day of February instituted in memory and honour of the purification of the said virgin in the temple of Jerusalem, the fortieth day after her happy child-birth, according to the law of Moses, and the presentation of our blessed Lord; It is called Candlemas, or a Mas of candles, because before mas was said that day, the church consecrated and set apart for sacred use, candles for the whole year, and made a procession with hallowed candles in remembrance of the divine light, wherewith Christ illuminated the whole church at his presentation in the temple, when by old Simoon filed, A light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of his people Israel, St. Luke, cap. 2. ver. 32. This festival is no day in court, for the judges sit not; and it is the grand day in that term of all the inns of court, whereon the judges usually observe many ancient ceremonies, and the societies which seem to vie with each other, have sumptuous entertainments, accompanied with musick, and almost all kinds of diversions.

Canon, Is a law or ordinance of the church; and the Greek word canon, from whence is derived the canon law, signifies a rule, because it leads a man straight, neither drawing him from one side nor the other, but rather correcting him. The canon law consists partly of certain rules taken out of the scripture; partly of the writings of the ancient fathers of the church; partly of the ordinances of general and provincial councils; and partly of the decrees of the Popes in former ages. And it is contained in two principal parts, the decrees and the decretals: the decrees are ecclesiastical constitutions made by the Pope and Cardinals, and were first gathered by Ivo bishop of Carnat, who lived about the year 1114, but afterwards perfected by Gratian, a benedictine monk, in the year 1149, and allowed by Pope Eugenius, to be read in schools, and alledged for law. They are the most ancient, as having their beginning from the time of Constantine the Great, the first christian Emperor of Rome. The decretals are canonical epistles written by the Pope, or by the Pope and Cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons for the ordering and determining of some matter of controversy, and have the authority of a law; and of these there are three volumes, the first whereof was compiled by Raymundus Bartinius, chaplain to Gregory the Ninth, and at his command about the year 1231. The second volume is the work of Boniface the Eighth, collected in the year 1298. And the third volume, called the Clementines, was made by Pope Clement the Fifth, and published by him in the council of Vienna, about the year 1308. And to these may be added some novel constitutions of John the 22d, and some other bishops of Rome.

As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities and decrees of ecclesiastical persons with their manner of election, ordination, &c. So the decretals contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts; and the first title in every of them, is the title of the blessed trinity, and of the catholick faith, which is followed with constitutions and customs, judgments and determinations in such matters and causes as are liable to ecclesiastical cognizance, the lives and conversation of the clergy, of matrimony and divorces, inquisition of criminal matters, purgation, penance, excommunication, &c. But some of the titles of the Canon law are now out of use, and belong to the Common law: and others are introduced, such as trials of wills, bastardy, defamation, &c.

Trials of tithes were anciently in all cases had by the Ecclesiastical law; though at this time this law only takes place in some particular cases. Thus much for the Canon law in general; and as to the Canon laws of this kingdom, by the statute 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. it is declared, that all Canons not repugnant to the King's prerogative, nor to the laws, statutes, and customs of the realm, shall be used and executed. By this statute, Canons made in convocation are to be confirmed by the King, and have the royal assent: and it has been adjudged that Canons made in convocation, and confirmed by the King, do bind as firmly in all ecclesiastical causes, as acts of parliament do in other cases; for by the Common law, every bishop in his diocese, and each archbishop in his province, and the convocation may make Canons, which shall be binding within their jurisdictions. The convocation for the province of Canterbury was held at London, anno 1603. in the first year of the reign of King James I. by

I. by the King's writ, and they had a licence under the great seal, to consult and agree to such Canons as they should think fit; whereupon they made several Canons concerning the government of the church, religion, the clergy, &c. which had the royal assent, and were ratified and confirmed by that King, for him, his heirs, and successors, pursuant to the statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. which Canons thus warranted by act of parliament, are the laws of the land to this day. See Treatise of Laws, p. 402 &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 416. The general Canon law is no further in force here than it hath been received, and is consistent with the Common or Statute law.

With respect to the effects of the Canon law in Europe, in antient times, its forms and maxims, which were become universally respectable from their authority in the spiritual courts, contributed not a little towards the improvement of jurisprudence. But, we must not consider it politically, with respect to the end for which it was framed, but merely as a code of laws respecting the rights and property of individuals, and attend only to the civil effects of its decisions concerning these. Vide Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 62, 63.

The plan of ecclesiastical jurisprudence was more perfect than that in the civil courts: but this was to dispose the laity to suffer the usurpations of the clergy. Vide id. 63.

Vide farther as to the Canon law, in Black. Com. 1 V. 14, 19, 78, 82, 83. 4 V. 414, 415.

Canon Religiosorum, A book wherein the religious of convents had a fair transcript of the rules of their order, which were frequently read among them as their local statutes; and this book was therefore called Regula and Canon. The publick books of the religious were the four following. 1. Missale, which contained all their offices of devotion. 2. Martyrologium, a register of their peculiar saints and martyrs, with the place and time of passion. 3. Canon or Regula, the institution and rules of their order. 4. Necrologium or Obituarium, in which they entered the deaths of their founders and benefactors, to observe the days of commemoration of them. Kennet's Gloss.

Cantel, (Cantellum) Seems to signify the same with what we now call lump, as to buy by measure, or by the lump: but according to Blount it is that which is added above measure.—Nullum genus bladi vendatur per cumulum seu cantellum, præter avenam, brassum & farinam. Stat. de Pistor. cap. 9. Also a piece of any thing, as a cantel of bread, and the like.

Cantred, (Cantredus) A British word from cant, or cantre, which in the British tongue signifies centum, and tret, a town or village, is in Wales an hundred villages: for the Welsh divide their countries into cantreds, as the English do into hundreds. This word is used 28 H. 8. c. 3.

Capacity, (capacitas) An ability, or fitness to receive: and in law it is where a man or body politick, is able to give or take lands, or other things, or to sue actions. Our law allows the King two capacities, a natural and a politick: in the first, he may purchase lands to him and his heirs; in the latter, to him and his successors. An alien born hath sufficient capacity to sue in any personal action, and is capable of personal estate; but he is not capable of lands of inheritance; and in a real action, it is a good plea of the defendant to say the plaintiff is an alien born, and pray if he shall be answered. Dyer 3. Persons attainted of treason or felony, Idiots, lunaticks, infants, feme coverts without their husbands, &c. are not capable to make any deed of gift, grant, or conveyance, unless it be in some special cases. But all other persons, void of impediments, are capable of making grants and conveyances, and to sue and be sued, being twenty-one years of age; and at fourteen, their age of discretion, they are capable by law to marry, be a witness, &c. 1 Inst. 171, 172.

Vide farther as to capacity to purchase, and to convey, Black. Com. 2 V. 290. And as to a capacity of guilt, ib. 4 V. 20.

Cape, (Lat.) Is a writ judicial, touching plea of lands or tenements; so termed, as most writs are, of that word in it, which carries the chief intention or end thereof: and this writ is divided into cape magnum and cape parvum, both of which take hold of things immoveable.

Cape Magnum, or the grand cape, Is a writ that lies before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant: and in the Old Nat. Brew. it is defined to be, where a man hath brought a præcipe quod reddat of a thing touching plea of land, and the tenant makes default at the day to him given in the original writ, then this writ shall go for the King to take the land into his hands; and if the tenant came not at the day given him thereby, he loseth his land, &c. See Reg. Jud. fol. 1. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 3. c. 1.

Cape Parvum, or petit cape, Is where the tenant is summoned in plea of land, and comes on the summons, and his appearance is recorded; if at the day given him he prays the view, and having it granted makes default; then shall issue this writ for the King, &c. Old Nat. Brew. 162. The difference between the grand cape and petit cape is, that the grand cape is awarded upon the tenant's not appearing, or demanding the view in such real actions, where the original writ does not mention the particulars demanded; and the petit cape is after appearance or view granted: and whereas the grand cape summons the tenant to answer for the default, and likewise over to the demandant: petit cape summons the tenant to answer the default only: and therefore it is called petit cape; though some say it hath its name, not because it is of small force, but by reason it consists of few words. Reg. Jud. fol. 2. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 44.

Cape ad Valentiam, This is a species of cape magnum, and is where I am impleaded of lands, and vouch to warrant another, against whom the summons ad avarrantizandum hath been awarded, and he comes not at the day given; then if the demandant recover against me, I shall have this writ against the vouchee, and recover so much in value of the lands of the voucher, if he hath so much; if not, I shall have execution of such lands and tenements as shall after descend to him in fee; or if he purchases afterwards, I shall have against him a return, &c. And this writ lies before appearance. Old Nat. Br. 161.

Capella. Before the word chapel was annexed to an oratory, or depending place of divine worship: it was used also for any sort of chest, cabinet, or other repository of precious things, especially of religious reliques. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 580.

Capellus, A cap, bonnet, or other covering for the head.—Capite discooperto sine capello, cum una garlanda de latitudine, &c. Tenures, p. 32.—Capellus ferreus, an helmet or iron head-piece, Quicumque laicus habuerit in catallis ad valentiam decem marcarum habeat halbergellum & capellum ferri, & lanceam. Hoveden, pag. 61.

—Capellus militis is likewise an helmet or military head-piece. Consuetud. Domus de Farendon, MS. fol. 21.

Capias, Is a writ of process of two sorts; one whereof is called capias ad respondendum, before judgment, where an original is sued out, &c. to take the defendant and make him answer the plaintiff: and the other a writ of execution, after judgment, being of divers kinds, as capias ad satisfaciendum, capias utlagatum, &c. The capias ad respondendum in C. B. is drawn from the præcipe, which serves both for the original and capias, and the return of the original is the title of the capias. If a capias be special, in debt, covenant, &c. the cause of action must be recited at large, and you are to set forth the substance of your intended declaration, as you are also in your original. The usual course is to take out the capias, and sue out the original after, although it is supposed to be sued out before, because the original cannot be so speedily sued out at all times: and where the cause of action is for debt, and requires bail, the best way is to make an at etiam capias, the original to which is only a bare clausum fregit; and when you come to judgment, you may file a new original to warrant such judgment. If a capias be special, by Præcipe quod reddat, &c. and there is any mistake in the name, alias dicitur, or sum, it may be pleaded in abatement, and a new original afterwards will not cure it; but you are forced to discontinue our action, or enter a cassatur, and to begin de novo. There may be an alias and a pluries capias, bearing title from the return of each other, if the defendant be not taken on the first writ. See Pract. Solic. p. 290.

The word sicut alias, and sicut pluries, distinguish the alias and pluries from the capias.

Capias ad Satisfaciendum. A judicial writ which issues out of the record of a judgment, where there is a recovery in the courts at Westminster, of debt, damages, &c. And by this writ the sheriff is commanded to take the body of the defendant in execution, and him safely to keep, so that he have his body in court at the return of the writ, to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and damages. Vide 1 Lill. Abr. 249. It is usual to take out this writ, where the defendant hath no lands nor goods, whereof the debt recovered may be levied: and when the body is taken upon a ca. sa. and the writ is returned and filed, it is an absolute and perfect execution against the defendant, and no other execution can be against his lands or goods. Where a person dies in execution, his lands and goods are liable to satisfy the judgment, by statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. See Roll. Abr. 904. In case two persons are bound jointly and severally, and prosecuted in two courts, whereupon the plaintiff hath judgment and execution by cap. ad satisfac. against one of them; if he after have an elegit against the other, and his lands and goods are delivered upon it, then he that is in prison shall have audita querela. Hob. 2. 57. Where one taken on a cap. ad satisfaciendum escapes from the sheriff, and no return is made of the writ, nor any record of the award of the capias; the plaintiff may bring a scire fac. against him, and on that what execution he will. Roll. 904. And if the defendant rescue himself, the plaintiff shall have a new capias, the first writ not being returned. Ibid. 901.

A defendant being brought into court by virtue of a cap. ad satisfaciendum, the plaintiff was asked, whether he would pray that the prisoner might be committed? who answered he would not; because the party was not able to pay, and had escaped from the sheriff, against whom he intended to bring his action; therefore the defendant was discharged. 1 And. ca. 166. A capias ad satisfaciendum lieth not against a peer; nor against his executors or administrators, but where a devastavit is returned by the sheriff, &c. 1 Lill. 250. If the defendant cannot be taken upon a capias in the county where the action is laid, there may issue a testatum ca. sa. into another county; and so of the other writs.

Capias Utlagatum. Is a writ that lies against a person who is outlawed in any action, by which the sheriff apprehends the party outlawed, for not appearing upon the exigent, and keeps him in safe custody till the day of return, and then presents him to the court, there to be ordered for his contempt; who, in the Common Pleas, was in former times to be committed to the Fleet, there to remain till he had sued out the King's pardon, and appeared to the action. And by a special capias utlagatum in the same writ the sheriff is commanded, to seize all the defendant's lands, goods and chattels, for the contempt to the King; and the plaintiff, (after an inquisition taken thereupon, and returned into the Exchequer) may have the lands extended, and a grant of the goods, &c. whereby to compel the defendant to appear; which when he doth, if he reverse the outlawry, the same shall be restored to him. Old Nat. Br. 154. A defendant may appear in person, and reverse an outlawry: and in B. R. one may appear by attorney, &c. Also when a person is taken upon a capias utlagatum, the sheriff is to take an attorney's engagement to appear for him, where special bail is not required; and his bond with sureties to appear, where 'tis required. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. This writ is either general, against the body; or, as I have before observed, it is special, against the body, lands and goods. See Outlawry.

As to the forms of these writs they may be found in the common books of practice.

Capias pro fine. Is where one, who is fined to the King for some offence committed against a statute, does not discharge the fine according to the judgment: whereupon his body is to be taken by this writ, and committed to prison until he pay the fine. 'Tis used in other cases, for not making out some pleas in civil actions. 3 Rep. 12. By the Stat. 5 W. & M. c. 12. capiaturs fines are taken away in several cases. See Fines for Offences.

Capias in Withernam. A writ lying for cattle in Withernam; which is, where a distress taken is driven out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot make deliverance in replevin, when this writ issues to the sheriff to take as many beasts of the distrainer, &c. Reg. Orig. 82, 83. Vide Withernam.

Capiatur. (judgment quod) Formerly if final judgment was for the plaintiff, it was also considered that the defendant should be either amerced, for his wilful delay of justice in not immediately obeying the King's writ, by rendering the plaintiff his due, (5 Rep. 49.) or be taken up, (capiaturs) to pay a fine to the King, in case of any forcible injury. But now by Stat. 5 W. & M. 12. capias shall not issue for this fine, but plaintiff shall pay 6s. 8d. and be allowed it against defendant in costs. Therefore in judgments in Common Pleas, they enter that the fine is remitted: in King's Bench they take no notice of any fine or capias. Salk. 54. Carth. 390.

Capita, (distribution by) i. e. To every man an equal share of personal estate, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis. Black. Com. 2 V. 517.

Capita, (succession by) Where the claimants are next in degree to the ancestor, in their own right, and not by right of representation. Black. Com. 2 V. 217, 218.

Capitale, Signifies a thing which is stolen, or the value of it. Leg. H. 1. cap. 59.

Capitale vivens, Hath been used for live cattle.—Reddam de meo proprio decimas deo, tam in viventi capitali, quam in mortuis fructibus terræ. Leg. Athelstan.

Capite, (from caput, i. e. Rex, unde tenere in capite, est tenere de rege, omnium terrarum capite) An ancient tenure, whereby a man held lands of the King immediately as of the crown, whether by knight's service, or in socage. This tenure was likewise called, tenure holding of the person of the King: and a person might hold of the King, and not in capite; that is, not immediately of the crown, but by means of some honour, castle, or manor belonging to it. According to Kitcher, one might hold land of the King by knight's service, and not in capite; because it might be held of some honour in the King's hands, descended to him from his ancestors, and not immediately of the King, as of his crown. Kitch. 129. Dyer 44. F. N. B. 5.

The very ancient tenure in capite, was of two sorts; the one principal and general, and the other special or subaltern; the principal and general was of the King as caput regni, & caput generalissimum omnium feodorum, the fountain whence all feuds and tenures have their main original: the special was of a particular subject, as caput feudi, seu terræ illius, so called from his being the first that granted the land in such manner of tenure; from whence he was stiled capitalis dominus, &c. But tenure in capite is now abolished; and by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. All tenures are turned into free and common socage: so that tenures hereafter to be created by the King are to be in common socage only; and not by capite, knight's service, &c. Blount.

Capitulum, A word used to signify what we now call poll money.

Capitulum, A covering for the head. 'Tis mentioned in the statute 1 Hen. 4. and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses shall be worn by all degrees of persons.

Capituli Agri, The head-lands, lands that lie at the head or upper end of the lands or furrows.—Canonici (Burcester) concesserunt hominibus de Wrechwike duas acras prati pro capitibus suarum crostarum tenus rivulum versus molendinum, &c. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 137.

Capitula Ruralia, Assemblies or chapters held by rural deans and parochial clergy within the precinct of every distinct deanery; which at first were every three weeks; afterwards once a month, and more solemnly once a quarter. Cowel.

Capcion, (capcio) Is when a commission is executed, the commissioners subscribe their names to a certificate, declaring when and where the commission was executed; which in law is called a capcion. And these capcions relate chiefly to business of three kinds, i. e. to commissions to take fines of lands, to take answers in chancery, and and depositions of witnesses: on the taking of a fine it is thus: Capt. & cogn. die &c. anno, &c. apud, &c. And on the back, Executio istius comm. patet in quadam schedul. eidem comm. annex. On the taking of an answer in Chancery, the caption is at bottom as follows: Capt. fuit hæc respons. super sacram. supranominat. def. Willielmi B. die & anno, &c. apud, &c. coram nobis, &c. And on the back of the commission, Executio istius com., &c. On the taking depositions of witnesses, only the execution on the back is indorsed, as Executio istius comm. in quad. schedul. &c. The caption being included in the title of the depositions. Sometimes it is usual to add to the caption, virtut. commission. dom. regis nobis & al. direct., &c. These captions and the executions of the commissions must be now in English, by the late statute, 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. And vide 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. and 6 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Captain, (capitaneus) One that leadeth or hath the command of a company of soldiers: and is either general, as he that hath the governance of the whole army: or special, he that leads but one band.—There is also another sort of captains, Qui urbium præfati sunt, &c. Blount.

Captives, An act was made for relief of captives taken by Turkish, Moorish, and other pirates, and to prevent taking of others in time to come. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 24. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 402.

Capture, (captura) The taking of a prey, an arrest, or seizure: and it particularly relates to prizes taken by privateers, in time of war, which are to be divided between the captors, &c. St. 14 Car. 2. c. 14. and 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 25. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 401.

Caput Baronis, Is the castle or chief seat of a nobleman; which descends to the eldest daughter, if there be no son, and must not be divided among the daughters like unto lands, &c.

Caput Anni, New year's day, upon which of old was observed the festum stultorum.

Caput Junii, In our records is used for Ass Wednesday, being the head, or first day of the beginning of the Lent-Fast. Paroch. Antiq. p. 132.

Caput loci, The head or upper end of any place; ad caput villæ, at the end of the town.

Caput lupinum, Antiently an outlawed felon was said to have caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf.—Now the wilful killing of such a one would be murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497. And vide Bracton, fo. 125.

By the Athenian laws, if a criminal would not surrender himself to justice, he might be capitally condemned, and any one might kill him. See Demosthenes's third Philippic.

Caputagium, Some think this word signifies head or poll money, or the payment of it: but it is rather what we otherwise call chevageum.

Car and Char, The names of places beginning with car and char signify a city, from the Brit. caer, viz. Civitas, as Carlisle, &c.

Caravana, A caravan, or joint company of travellers in the eastern countries, for mutual conduct and defence.—Egressa caravana nostra de Joppa versus exercitum veniebat onusta victualibus & aliis citellis necessariis. Gaufrid. Vinefau Richardi Regis, Iter Hierosol. lib. 5. cap. 52.

Carcan, Is sometimes expounded for a pillory: as is carcannum for a prison. LL. Canuti Regis.

Carcatus, Signifies laden; a ship with her freight.—De corpore cujuslibet magnæ navis carcatus cum rebus venalibus 4 denar. Pat. 10 R. 2.

Cards and Dice, A duty of 6d. per pack on all playing cards, and of 5s. for every pair of dice, shall be paid to the crown for thirty-two years; the cards and dice to be carried to the stamp office and marked, &c. And using them unstamp'd, is liable to a penalty of 5l. Stat. 9 & 10 Ann. c. 19.

Limitation of the time of prosecution upon bonds for exporting cards and dice, 5 Geo. 1. c. 19. sect. 48. Penalty on defacing the stamp of cards or new-spotting dice, 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. sect. 55. An additional duty of 6d. on every pack of cards, and 5s. on every pair of dice, 29 Geo. 2. c. 13. See Stamps.

Careffa and Careffata, A cart and cartload.—Quinque careffatas claufuræ, ad prædictæ terræ claufuram sustinendam. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. f. 340.

Caretarius, or Careffarius, A carter. Blount. See Carreta.

Cariffia, Dearth, scarcity, dearthness.—Rex majori & vic. London, salutem. Querela archiepiscoporum, comitum, quod de bobus, vaccis, mulionibus, &c. Magna, & quasi intollerabilis est cariffia hiis diebus sub, &c. Pat. 8 Ed. 1.

Caritas, Ad caritatem, poculum caritatis, A grace cup; or an extraordinary allowance of wine, or other liquor, wherein the religious at festivals drank in commemoration of their founders and benefactors. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. A. S. f. 29.

Carb, A quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a furler. Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 2.

Carnarium, A charnel house, or repository for the bones of the dead.—In carnario subius capellam, &c. Offa humana, &c. bumata de licentia sacriffæ qui pro tempore fuerit, qui dicti carnarii clavem & custodiam habebit specialem, ut usq; ad resurrectionem generalem honestius conserventur, a carnibus integre denudata reponi volumus & observari.—Cartular. fundationis capellæ sancti Johannis in oc. id. parte Eccl. Norwic. per Joh. Norwic. Episc. Dat. 4 Oct. 1316.

Carno, This word hath been used for an immunity or privilege, as appears in Crompt. Jurisd. fol. 191.

Carpetmalls, Cloth made in the Northern parts of England, of a coarse kind, mention'd in 7 Jac. 1. cap. 16.

Carr, Is a kind of cart with wheels. Vide Caruca.

Carrat, A weight of four grains in diamonds, &c. And this word 'tis said was formerly used for any weight or burden.

Carreta, Hath been taken for a carriage, cart, or wain load; as Carreta fæni is used in an old charter for a load of hay. Kennet's Gloss.

Carrels, Closets, or apartments for privacy and retirement.—Three pews or carrels, where every one of the old monks, after they had dined, did resort, and there study.—Davies Mon. of Durham, p. 31.

Carrick or Carrack, (carrucha) A ship of great burden, so called of the Italian word carico or carco, which signifies a burden or charge: it is mentioned in the statutes 2 R. 2. c. 4. and 1 Jac. c. 33. They were not only used in trade, but also in war, as Walsingh. in Hen. 5. f. 394. viz. Galli conduxerant classem magnarum navium carricarum, &c. qua regnum Angliæ molestant.

Carrier. Is a person that carries goods for others for his hire.

A common carrier having the charge and carriage of goods, is to answer for the same, or the value to the owner, Co. Litt. 78. And where goods are delivered to a carrier, and he is robbed of them, he shall be charged, and answer for them, because of the hire. 1 Roll. Abr. 338.

An hoyman who undertakes to carry goods, must deliver them safe at all events, except damaged by the act of God, or the King's enemies. Dall v. Hall, Wilf. par. 1. fo. 281.—Vide 1 Salk. 18. 1 Vent. 190, 238.

If a common carrier, who is offered his hire, and who has convenience, refuses to carry goods, he is liable to an action in the same manner as an inn-keeper who refuses to entertain a guest, or a smith who refuses to shoe a horse. 2 Show. Rep. 329.

One brought a box to a carrier, in which there was a large sum of money, and the carrier demanded of the owner what was in it, he answered, it was filled with silks, and such like goods, upon which the carrier took it, and was robbed; and adjudged that the carrier was liable to make it good: but a special acceptance, as provided there is no charge of money, would have excused the carrier. 1 Vent. 238. 4 Rep. 83.

A person delivered to a carrier's book-keeper two bags of money sealed up, to be carried from London to Exeter, and told him that it was 200l. and took his receipt for the same, with promise of delivery for 10s. per Cent. carriage and risque: though it be proved that there was 400l. in the bags, if the carrier be robbed he shall answer only for 200l. because there was a particular undertaking for the carriage of that sum and no more, and his reward which makes him answerable, extends no farther. Cartbeu's Rep. 486. If a common carrier loses goods he is intrusted to carry, a special action on the case lies against him, on the custom of the realm; and not trover: and so of a common carrier by boat. 1 Roll. Abr. 6. An action will lie against a porter, carrier or bargeman, upon his bare receipt of the goods, if they are lost by negligence. 1 Sid. 36. Also a lighterman spoiling goods he is to carry, by letting water come to them, action of the case lies against him on the common custom. Palm. 528.

If A. and several others take their passage in a ferry-boat, and being upon the water a tempest arises, so that they are in danger of being drowned; upon which, to preserve their lives, several of the goods are cast overboard, among which, a pack of goods of A.'s of great value is thrown over; A. shall not have an action against the bargemen. 2 Bull. 280. If one be not a common carrier, and takes hire, he may be charged on a special assumpsit; for where hire is taken, a promise is implied. Cro. Jac. 262. A common carrier may have action of trover or trespass for goods taken out of his possession by a stranger; he having a special property in the goods, and being liable to make satisfaction for them to the owner: and where goods are stolen from a carrier, he may bring an indictment against the felon as for his own goods, though he has only the possessory, and not the absolute property; and the owner may likewise prefer an indictment against the felon. Kel. 39. If a carrier be robbed of goods, either he or the owner may bring an action against the hundred, to make it good. 2 Saund. 380. Where a carrier entrusted with goods, opens the pack, and takes away and disposes of part of the goods, thus shewing an intent of stealing them, will make him guilty of felony. H. P. C. 61. And it is the same if the carrier receives goods to carry them to a certain place, and carrieth them to some other place, and not to the place agreed. 3 Inst. 367. That is, if he do it, with intent to defraud the owner of them. If a carrier, after he hath brought goods to the place appointed, take them away privately, he is guilty of felony; for the possession which he received from the owner being determined, his second taking is in all respects the same as if he were a meer stranger. 1 Hawk. P. C. 90. See Larceny, &c.

By the 3 Car. 1. c. 1. Carriers are not to travel on the Lord's Day.

By the Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12. The justices are to assess the price of land carriage of goods to be brought into any place within their jurisdiction, by any common carrier, who is not to take more under the penalty of 5*l.* And by the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 28. A carrier is not to take more for carrying goods from any place to London than is settled by the justices for the carrying goods from London to such a place, under the same penalty.

Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 8. sect. 9. Commissioners for regulating navigation of the river Thames to rate the price of water carriage.

Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 22. sect. 3. Justices of the city of London to assess the rates of carrying goods between London and Westminster.

Carriers and waggons are to write or paint on their waggons or carts their names and places of abode. See Cart, Highways.

Carriages how drawn, &c. Vide Carts, Waggons.

Cart-bote, The Saxon word bote, is of the same signification with the French word estovers, and cart-bote is used, to be employed in making and repairing instruments of husbandry. Black. Com. 2 V. 35.

Carts. By the Stat. 2 W. & M. Stat. 2. c. 8. §. 19. & 18 Geo. 2. c. 33. The wheels of every cart or dray for the carriage of any thing from and to any place where the streets are paved, within the bills of mortality, &c. shall contain six inches in the felly, not be shod with iron, nor be drawn with above two horses, under the penalty of 40*s.* By the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 33. They may be drawn with three horses and not more, and the wheels being of six inches breadth, when worn may be shod with iron, if the iron be of the full breadth of six inches, made flat, and not set on with rose headed nails: and no person shall drive any cart, &c. within the limits aforesaid, unless the name of the owner and number of such cart, &c. be placed in some conspicuous place of the cart, &c. and his name be entered with the commissioners of hackney coaches, under the penalty of 40*s.* and every person may seize and detain such cart till the penalty be paid. By the Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 57. 24 G. 2. c. 43. 27 G. 2. c. 16. The driver of any such cart, &c. riding upon such cart, &c. not having a person on foot to guide the same, shall forfeit 10*s.* any person may apprehend the offender. And by the Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 6. In London, or within ten miles, no person shall carry in any waggon or cart, having the wheels shod with iron, more than twelve sacks of meal, containing five bushels each, nor more than twelve quarters of malt, or seven hundred and a half of bricks, nor one chaldron of coals, under penalty of forfeiting one of the horses to any person who shall seize the same, in manner as by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 12.

On changing property new owner's name to be affixed, 30 Geo. 2. c. 22. sect. 5. Carriages travelling with goods for hire to be deemed common stage waggons, 30 Geo. 2. c. 28. sect. 13. See those statutes, and also see Highways, Waggons.

Caruca, (Fr. charrue) A plough; from the old Gallic carr, which is the present Irish word for any sort of wheel'd carriage: hence charl and carl, a ploughman or rustick. Vide Karle.

Carucage, (carucagium) Is a tribute imposed on every plough, for the public service: and as hidage was a taxation by hides, so carucage was by carucates of land. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. f. 294.

Carucate, or Carbe of Land, (carucata terra) A plough-land; which in a deed of Thomas de Arden, 19 Edw. 2. is declared to be one hundred acres, by which the subjects have sometimes been taxed; whereupon the tribute so levied was called carvagium, or carucagium. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 26. But Skene says, it is as great a portion of land as may be tilled in a year and a day by one plough; which also is called bilda, or bida terra, a word used in the old British laws. And now by statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 29. a plough-land, which may contain houses, mills, pasture, meadow, wood, &c. is 50*l.* per annum. Littleton, in his chapter of tenure in socage, saith, that foca idem est quod carucata, a foke or plough-land are all one. Stow says, King Hen. 3. took carvage, that is, two marks of silver of every knight's fee, towards the marriage of his sister Isabella to the emperor. Stow's Annals, page 271. And Rastal, in his exposition of words, tells us, carvage is to be quit, if the King shall tax all the lands by carves; that is, a privilege whereby a man is exempted from carvage. The word carve is mentioned in the Stat. 28 Ed. 1. of wards and reliefs, and in Magna charta, c. 5. And anno 1200. Fasta est pax inter Johannem regem Angliæ & P. regem Franciæ, &c. Et mutuavit regi Franciæ 30 millia marcarum, pro quibus collectum est carvagium in Angliâ, scil. 111*s.* pro quolibet aratro. Ex Reg. Priorat. de Dunstable in Bibl. Cotton. See Co. Litt. 69. and Kennet's Gloss.

Carucatarius, He that held lands in carvage, or plough-tenure. Paroch. Antiq. p. 354.

Cafe. See Actions on the Cafe. And Black. Com. 3 V. 51, 122. 4 V. 435. Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Action, and Actions on the Cafe.

Cassatum and Cassata, By the Saxons called hide; by Bede, familia, is a house with land sufficient to maintain one family; Rex Angl. Ethelred, de 310 Cassatis, unum trierem, &c. Hoveden anno 1008. And Hen. Huntingdon, mentioning the same thing, instead of cassata writes bilda.

Cassite, A Saxon word signifying a mulct. Blount.

Casside, Is a little sack, purse, or pocket.—Præsulit in cassidili toxicum mellitum. Mar. Westm.

Cask, An uncertain quantity of goods; and of sugar contains from eight to eleven hundred weight. There are also casks for liquors, of divers contents; and none shall transport any wine cask, &c. except for victualling ships under a certain penalty, by Stat. 35 Eliz. c. 11. §. 2.

Cassock, or Cassula, A certain garment belonging to the priest, quasi minor cassâ. See Tassals.

Castel, or Castle, (castellum) Is well known to be a fortress in a town; and with us is a principal mansion of a nobleman. In the time of H. 2. there were in England 1115 castles; and every castle contained a manor: but during the civil wars in this kingdom these castles were demolished, so that generally there is only the ruins or remains of them at this day. 2 Inst. 31.

Castellain, (castellanus) The lord, owner, or captain of a castle, and sometimes the constable of a fortified house. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 2. cap. 16. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 7. It hath likewise been taken for him that hath the custody of one of the king's mansion-houses, called by the Lombards curtes, in English courts; though they are not castles or places of defence. 2 Inst. 31. And Manwood, in his Forest Laws, says there is an officer of the forest called castellanus.

Castellarium, Castellarit, The precinct or jurisdiction of a castle. — Et unum tostum juxta castellarium. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. f. 402.

Castellozum Operatio. Castle-work, or service and labour done by inferior tenants, for the building and upholding of castles of defence; toward which some gave their personal assistance, and others paid their contribution. This was one of the three necessary charges, to which all lands among our Saxon ancestors were expressly subject. — Liberi ab omni servitio, excepta trinoda necessitate; pontis & arcis constructione, & expeditione contra hostem. — And after the conquest an immunity from this burden was sometimes granted. As King Hen. II. granted to the tenants within the honour of Wallingford — Ut sint quieti de operationibus castellorum: Paroch. Antiq. pag. 114. It was unlawful to build any castle without leave of the king, which was called castellatio: hec mittant hominem in misericordia regis, viz. Infractio pacis, infidelitatis & proditio, despectus de eo, castellatio sine licentia. Du Fresne.

Castigatory for scolds. A woman, indicted for being a common scold, if convicted, shall be sentenced to be placed on a certain engine of correction, called the trebucket, castigatory, or ducking stool, which in the Saxon language signifies the scolding stool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking stool, because the residue of the judgment is, that, when she is so placed therein, she shall be plunged in the water for her punishment. 3 Inst. 219. Black. Com. 4 V. 169. Though this punishment is now disused, the editor (J. M.) remembers to have seen the remains of one, on the estate of a relation of his in Warwickshire, consisting of a long beam, or rafter, moving on a fulcrum, and extending to the centre of a large pond, on which end the stool used to be placed.

Castleward, (castlegardum, vel wardum castri) An imposition laid upon such persons as dwell within a certain compass of any castle, towards the maintenance of such as watch and ward the castle. Magna Charta, cap. 19, 20. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 48. It is sometimes used for the circuit itself which is inhabited by those that are subject to this service. Castle guard rents were paid by persons dwelling within the liberty of any castle, for the maintaining of watch and ward within the same. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. f. 2.

Castel, and Chester: The names of places ending in these words are derived from the Lat. castrum; for this termination at the end was given by the Romans to those places where they built castles.

Castration, The offence of mayhem by castration, is, according to all our old writers, felony: and this, altho' the mayhem was committed upon the highest provocation. Bract. fo. 144. 3 Inst. 62. Black. Com. 4 V. 206.

Casual Ejector, In ejectment, a nominal defendant, and who continues such until appearance by or for the tenant in possession. Vide Black. Com. 3 V. 202.

Casu Consimili, Is a writ of entry, granted where tenant by the curtesy, or tenant for life, aliens in fee or in tail, or for another's life; and is brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so aliens to his prejudice, and in the tenant's life-time. It takes its name from this; that the clerks of the Chancery did, by their common assent, frame it to the likeness of the writ called in casu proviso, according to the authority given them by the Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 24. which statute, as often as there happens a new case in Chancery something like a former, yet not specially fitted by any writ, authorises them to frame a new form answerable to the new case, and as like the former as they may. 7 Rep. 4. Sec Fitz. Nat. Br. fo. 206.

Casu Proviso, A writ of entry given by the statute of Gloucester, cap. 7. where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for life, &c. and lies for him in reversion against the alienee. Fitz. N. B. 205. This writ, and the writ of casu consimili, supposes the tenant to have aliened in fee, though it be for life only: and a casu proviso may be without making any title in it, where a lease is made by the demandant himself to the tenant that doth alien; but if an ancestor lease for life, and the tenant alien in fee, &c. the heir in reversion must have this writ with the title included therein. F. N. B. 206, 207.

Casus Omissus, Is where any particular thing is omitted out of, and not provided against by a statute, &c.

Catals, Catalla, Goods and chattels. See Chattels.

Catallis capris nomine Distictionis, Is a writ that lies where a house is within a borough, for rent going out of the same; and warrants the taking of doors, windows, &c. by way of distress for the rent. Old Nat. Br. 66.

Catallis Reddendis, A writ which lieth where goods being delivered to any man to keep till a certain day, are not upon demand delivered at the day. It may be otherwise called a writ of detinue: and is answerable to adlio depositi in the Civil law. See Reg. Orig. 139. and Old Nat. Br. 63.

Catapulta, A warlike engine to shoot darts: but 'tis rather taken for a cross bow. — Edmundus Willoughby tenet unum messuagium & sex bovatas terræ in Carleton et de manerio de Shelford per servitium unius catapultæ per annum pro omni servitio. Lib. Schedul. de Term. Mich. 14 H. 4. Notr. fol. 210.

Catacopus, This word signifies an archdeacon: Herefordensis ecclesiæ catacopus. Du Cange.

Catchland. In Norfolk there are some grounds which it is not known to what parish they certainly belong, so that the minister who first seizes the tithes, does by that right of pre-occupation enjoy them for that year: and the land of this dubious nature is there called catchland, from this custom of seizing the tithes. Cowel.

Catchpole, (quasi one that catches by the poll.) See Catchpollus. Sheriffs officers are commonly so called.

Cathedral, (ecclesia cathedralis) Is the church of the bishop, and head of the diocese: wherein the service of the church is performed with great ceremony. Statutes used in the government of cathedral and collegiate churches since the restoration, &c. to be good and valid: but her majesty might alter, or make new statutes for the settling the visitation of them. Stat. 6 Ann. cap. 21.

Cathedratick, (cathedraticum) Is a sum of 2*s.* paid to the bishop by the inferior clergy, in argumentum subjectionis & ob honorem cathedralis. Hist. Procurat. & Synodalis, p. 82.

Catzurus, A hunting horse. — Willielmus Fitz Alan dat regi duos bonos catzuros, pro habendis duabus feriis apud Norton. Tenures, pag. 68. Vide Chacurus.

Cattle, Shall be bought in open fair or market, and not sold again in the same market, on pain of forfeiture. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 19. None may buy any cattle, and sell them again alive, until he hath fed them five weeks in his own ground, or where he hath common, upon pain to forfeit double the value, by Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. Farmers, graziers, &c. may not have or keep above 2000 sheep, accounting 120 to the hundred, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* for every sheep: and he that keeps above 120 sheep, or 20 beasts upon any pasture ground proper for milch kine, and not commonable, shall yearly for every 60 sheep or 10 cattle keep one milch cow, and bring up one calf, &c. under the penalty of 20*s.* Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 13. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 3. No cattle may be imported, dead or alive, but shall be liable to forfeiture: but horses, cows, swine, &c. may be transported, paying the duties. 18 Car. 2. cap. 2. 22 Car. 2. cap. 13. Factors shall not buy cattle, other than swine or calves, within 80 miles of London, under penalties; and drovers of cattle are to be licensed by justices of peace, &c. 22 & 23 Car.

Car. 2. c. 19. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. The stealing of sheep, or any other cattle, or wilfully killing them, with intent to steal their carcases, is felony by 14 Geo. 2. c. 6. See 15 Geo. 2. c. 34.

His majesty, to make regulations for preventing the spreading of the distemper among the cattle, 19 Geo. 2. c. 5. 20 Geo. 2. c. 4. 23 Geo. 2. c. 23. 24 Geo. 2. c. 54. 25 Geo. 2. c. 31. 26 Geo. 2. c. 34. 27 Geo. 2. c. 14. 28 Geo. 2. c. 18. 29 Geo. 2. c. 28. & 30 Geo. 2. c. 20.

By Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7. Maliciously, unlawfully, and willingly to kill any horses, sheep, or other cattle in the night-time, is felony; but the felon may make his election to be transported for seven years.

Cauda terræ, A land's end, or the bottom of a ridge in arable land. Cartul. Abbat. Glasf. fol. 117.

Caveat, Is a kind of process in the spiritual court to stop the institution of a clerk to a benefice, or probate of a will, &c. When a caveat is entered against an institution, if the bishop afterwards institutes a clerk, it is void; the caveat being a superseatas: but a caveat has been adjudged void when entered in the life-time of the incumbent. A caveat entered against a will stands in force for three months; and this is for the caution of the ordinary, that he do no wrong: though 'tis said the temporal courts do not regard these sorts of caveats. 1 Roll. Rep. 191. 1 Nels. Abr. 416, 417. Vide Black. Com. 3 V. 98, 246.

Cabers, Offenders relating to the mines in Derbyshire, who are punishable in the berghmote, or miners court.

Caulceus, anno 6 H. 6. cap. 5. Ways pitched with flint, or other stones. See Calcetum.

Caurfines, (Caurfni) Were Italians that came into England about the year 1235, terming themselves the pope's merchants, but driving no other trade than letting out money; and having great banks in England, they differed little from Jews, save (as history says) that they were rather more merciless to their debtors. Some will have them called Caurfines, quasi, causa urfini, bearish and cruel in their causes; others Courfni, or Corfni, as coming from the isle of Corfica: but Cowel says, they have their name from Caorsium, Caorfi, a town in Lombardy, where they first practised their arts of usury and extortion; from whence spreading themselves, they carried their cursed trade through most parts of Europe, and were a common plague to every nation where they came. The then bishop of London excommunicated them: and King Hen. 3. banished them from this kingdom in the year 1240. But being the pope's solicitors and money-changers, they were permitted to return in the year 1250, though in a very short time after, they were driven out of the kingdom again for their intolerable exactions. Mat. Paris. 403.

Causa Matrimonii prælocuti, Is a writ which lies where a woman gives land to a man in fee-simple, &c. to the intent he should marry her, and he refuseth to do it in any reasonable time, being thereunto required. Reg. Orig. 66. If a woman makes a feoffment to a stranger of land in fee, to the intent to infeoff her, and one who shall be her husband; if the marriage shall not take effect, she shall have the writ of causa matrimonii prælocuti, against the stranger, notwithstanding the deed of feoffment be absolute. New Nat. Br. 456. A woman infeoffed a man upon condition that he should take her to wife, and he had a wife at the time of the feoffment; and afterwards the woman, for not performing the condition, entered again into the land, and her entry was adjudged lawful, though upon a second feoffee. Lib. Ass. anno 40 Ed. 3. The husband and wife may sue the writ causa matrimonii prælocuti against another who ought to have married her: but if a man give lands to a woman to the intent to marry him, although the woman will not marry him, &c. he shall not have his remedy by writ causa matrimonii prælocuti. New Nat. Br. 455.

Causam nobis significes, A writ directed to a mayor of a town, &c. who was by the king's writ commanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee, on his delaying to do it, requiring him to shew cause why he so delays the performance of his duty. 4 Rep.

Causes and Effects. In most cases the law hath respect to the cause, or beginning of a thing, as the principal part on which all other things are founded: and herein the next, and not the remote cause is most looked upon, except it be in covinous and criminal things: and therefore that which is not good at first will not be so afterwards; for such as is the cause, such is the effect. Plowd. 208, 268. If an infant or feme covert make a will, and publish it, and after die of full age, or sole, the will is of no force, by reason of the original cause of infancy and coverture. Finch 12. A lord distrains his tenant for rent before due, the tenant may justify to make rescous, the lord having no just cause to distrain. Co. Lit. 106. And if a man acknowledge a statute by duress, &c. he may have an audita querela to avoid it. Fitz. Abr. 104. Where the cause ceaseth, the effect or thing will cease. 1 Co. Inst. 13.

Cautione admittenda, Is a writ that lies against a bishop, who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandment of holy church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66. And if a man be excommunicated, and taken by a writ of significavit, and after offers caution to the bishop to obey the church, and the bishop refuseth it; the party may sue out this writ to the sheriff to go against the bishop, and to warn him to take caution, &c. But if he stand in doubt whether the sheriff will deliver him by that writ, the bishop may purchase another writ, directed to the sheriff reciting the case, and in the end thereof; Tibi præcipimus, quod ipsum A. B. a prisona prædictæ nisi in præsentia tua cautionem pignorat. ad minus eidem episc. de satisfaciend. obtuleris, nullatenus deliberes absque mandato nostro, seu ipsius episcopi in hac parte speciali, &c. When the bishop hath taken caution, he is to certify the same into the Chancery, and thereupon the party shall have a writ unto the sheriff to deliver him. New Nat. Br. 142. Vide this subject fully treated of in British Liberties.

Cæpgitte, A word derived from the Sax. cæp, signifying pecus, cattle; and gild, i. e. solutio; and hence it is solutio pecudis: from this Saxon word gild, 'tis very probable, we have our English word yield; as yield, or pay. Cowel.

Ceter Lecti, Is the top, head, or tester of a bed. — Dedit ad cameram prioris unum lectum cum celere & curtis blodei coloris. Hist. Elen. apud Whartoni Angl. Sac. par. 1. p. 673.

Celcratius, The butler in a monastery: in the universities they are sometimes called manicler, and sometimes caterer, and steward.

Cendula, Small pieces of wood laid in form of tiles, to cover the roof of a house. — Mandatum ad cendulas & lattas nostras carandas de parco ad domus reficiendas. Pat. 4 Hen. 3. p. 1. m. 10.

Cenegild, This is an expiatory mulct, paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelm.

Cenellæ, Acorns, from the oak, in our old writings, persona cenellarum, is put for the pannage of hogs, or running of swine, to feed on acorns.

Cenninga, Was notice given by the buyer to the seller, that the thing sold was claimed by another, that he might appear and justify the sale: it is mentioned in the laws of Atelstan apud Brompton, cap. 4.

Censaria, A farm, or house and land, let ad censum at a standing rent: it comes from the Fr. cense, which signifies signifies a farm. — Henricus Stormy tenet maneria in com Wilts, per servitium custodiendi bullivum totius forestæ de Savernake & censariam, quæ vocatur la ferme in foresta prædicta. Temp. Ed. 3. Tenures, p. 88.

Censarii, Farmers. — Ibi sunt nunc 14 censarii, habentes septem carucatas. Blount.

Censuales, A species or class of the oblati, or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries, i. e. those, who to procure the protection of the church, bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent out of their estates to a church or monastery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain services. Robert. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 271, 2. Potgiesserus de Statu Servorum, lib. 1. cap. 1. sect. 6, 7.

Censure, A custom called by this name (from the Lat. census, which has been expounded to be a kind of personal money, paid for every poll) observed in divers manors in Cornwall and Devon, where all persons residing therein above the age of sixteen are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11 d. per poll, and 1 d. per ann. ever after; and these thus sworn are called censers. — Item erat quædam custodia quæ vocatur censure proveniens de illis qui manent in burgo de Lestreythiel. Survey of the Duchy of Cornwall.

Centeuarii, Were petty judges under sheriffs of counties, that had rule of an hundred, and judged smaller matters among them. 1 Vent. 211.

There were inferior judges, so called in France: in the reign of Charles the Bald the highways were so much infested by banditti, whose acts of violence were become so common, that by many they were scarce considered as criminal, for which reason these inferior judges, called centenarii, were required to take an oath, that they would neither commit any robbery themselves, nor protect such as were guilty of that crime. Robert. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 1 V. 329. Capital. edit. Balur. Vol. 2. p. 63, 68. See also Black. Com. 1 V. 115.

Ceola, A large ship. The word is mentioned in Malmesbury. Lib. 1. c. 1.

Cepi Corpus, Is a return made by the sheriff, upon a capias, or other process to the like purpose, that he hath taken the body of the party. F. N. B. 26.

Ceppagium, The stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled. — Qui forestarii ceperint coersiones, ceppagia & eschaetas quercuum sive aliarum arborum, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 41.

Ceragium, Cerage, a payment to find candles in the church. Matt. Paris. See Waxfoot.

Certainty, Is a plain, clear, and distinct setting down of things, so that they may be understood. 5 Rep. 121. A convenient certainty is required in writs, declarations, pleadings, &c. But if a writ abate for want of it, the plaintiff may have another writ: 'tis otherwise if a deed become void by incertainty, the party may not have a new deed at his pleasure. 11 Rep. 25, 121. Dyer 84. That has certainty enough, that may be made certain: but not like what is certain of itself. 4 Rep. 97. See Incertainity.

In actions that affirm property in the plaintiff, certainty is more necessary than in others, yet after verdict the courts have dispensed with the certainty formerly necessary. Rep. Temp. Hardwicke, per Annaly, Franklin and Reeves 118, 119.

Certificando de recognitione Stapule, Is a writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor a statute staple taken before him, where the party himself detains it, and refuseth to bring in the same. Reg. Orig. 152. There is the like writ to certify a statute-merchant; and in divers other cases. Ibid. 148, 151, &c.

Certificate, Is a writing made in any court to give notice to another court of any thing done therein, which is usually by way of transcript, &c. And sometimes it is made by an officer of the same court, where matters are referred to him, or a rule of court is obtained for it, containing the tenor and effect of what is done. The clerks of the crown, assize and peace, are to make certificates into B. R. of the tenor of indictments, convictions, &c. under penalties, by the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 14. 3 W. & M. c. 9.

A judge of Nisi prius cannot certify for costs out of court. Ford v. Parr & al. Wils. par. 2. fo. 21. See Tab. to Statutes, tit. Certificate. As to certificate for costs, vide Black. Com. 3 V. 214. Into Chancery, ib. 453. Of Bankrupt, id. 2 V. 482. Of Poor, id. 1 V. 364. and Trial by Certificate, id. 3 V. 333.

Certification of Writ of Habeas Writellin, (certificatio assise novæ diffinitione, &c.) Is a writ granted for the re-examining of a matter passed by assise before justices: and this is used where a man appearing by his bailiff to an assise brought by another hath lost the day; and having something more to plead for himself, which the bailiff did not, or might not plead for him, desires a farther examination of the cause, either before the same justices, or others, and obtains letters patent to them to that effect; whereupon he brings a writ to the sheriff to call both the party for whom the assise passed, and the jury that was impanelled on the same, before the said justices at a certain day and place, when the same is to be examined: and it is called a certificate, because therein mention is made to the sheriff, that upon the party's complaint of the defective examination, as to the assise passed, the king hath directed his letters patent to the justices for the better certifying of themselves, whether all points of the said assise were duly examined. Reg. Orig. 200. F. N. B. 181. Brañon, lib. 4. c. 13. Horn's Mirr. lib. 3.

Certiorari, A writ issuing out of the Chancery to an inferior court, to call up the records of a cause there depending, that justice may be done therein, upon complaint that the party who seeks the said writ hath received hard usage, or is not like to have an indifferent trial in the said court. Fitz. N. B. fol. 242. A certiorari issues sometimes out of Chancery, and sometimes out of the King's Bench, and lies where the king would be certified of a record, in any court of record; and the king may send such writ to any of the said courts, to certify such record before him in Banco, or in the Chancery, or before such other justices, where he pleases to have the same certified. F. N. B. 145.

This writ is either returnable in the King's Bench, and then hath these words, nobis mittatis; or in the Common Bench, and then has justiciariis nostris de banco; or in the Chancery, and then hath in Cancellaria nostra, &c.

Certiorari lies to the courts of Wales; and the cinque ports, counties palatine, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 287. Indictments from inferior courts, and proceedings of the quarter-sessions of the peace, &c. may be removed into B. R. by certiorari: and 'tis said a certiorari to remove an indictment is good, although it bear date before the taking thereof: but on a certiorari the very record must be returned, and not a transcript of it; for if so, then the record will still remain in the inferior court. 2 Lill. 253. In B. R. the very record itself of indictments is removed by certiorari; but usually in Chancery, if a certiorari be returnable there, it removes only the tenor of the record, and therefore if it be sent from thence into the King's Bench, they cannot proceed either to judgment or execution, because they have but such tenor of the record before them. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 215.

And although on a habeas corpus to remove a person, the court may bail or discharge the prisoner: they can give no judgment upon the record of the indictment against him, without a certiorari to remove it, but the same stands in force as it did, and new process may issue upon it: but 'tis otherwise in civil causes. Ibid. 211. If an indictment be one, but the offences several, where four persons are indicted together; a certiorari to remove this indictment against two of them, removes it not as to the others, but as to them the record remains below. 2 Hale's Hist. 214.

Where a certiorari is by law grantable for an indictment, at the suit of the king, the court is bound to award it, for it is the king's prerogative to sue in what court he pleases: but it is at the discretion of the court to grant or not, at the prayer of the defendant: and the court will not grant it for the removal of an indictment before justices of gaol delivery, without some special cause; or where there is so much difficulty in the case; that the judge desires it may be determined in B. R. &c. Also indictments of perjury, forgery, or for heinous misdemeanors, the court will not grant a certiorari to remove at the instance of the defendant. 2 Hawk. P. C. 287.

Where issue is joined in the court below, it is a good objection against granting a certiorari: and if a person doth not make use of this writ till the jury are sworn, he loses the benefit of it. Mod. Ca. 16. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 5. After conviction, a certiorari may not be had to remove an indictment, &c. unless there be special cause; as if the judge below is doubtful what judgment is proper to be given, when it may: and after conviction, &c. it lies in such cases where writ of error will not lie. 1 Salk. 149. The court on motion in an extraordinary case will grant a certiorari to remove a judgment given in an inferior court; but this is done where the ordinary way of taking out execution is hindered in the inferior court. 1 Lill. Abr. 253.

In common cases a certiorari will not lie to remove a cause out of an inferior court, after verdict. It is never sued out after a writ of error, but where diminution is alleged: and when the thing in demand does not exceed 5*l.* a certiorari shall not be had, but a writ of error or attain. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 23. A certiorari is to be granted on matter of law only: and in many cases there must be a judge's hand for it. 1 Lill. 252. Certiorari's to remove indictments, &c. are to be signed by a judge: and to remove orders, the fiat for making out the writ must be signed by some judge. 1 Salk. 150.

In vacation time a certiorari may be granted by any of the judges of B. R. and security is to be found before it is allowed. By statute no certiorari is to be granted out of B. R. to remove an indictment before justices of peace at the sessions, before trial, unless motion be made in open court, and the party indicted find security by two persons in 20*l.* each to plead to the indictment in B. R. &c. And if the defendant prosecuting the certiorari be convicted, the court of B. R. shall order costs to the prosecutor of the indictment. Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 11. If on a certiorari to remove an indictment the party do not find manucaptors in the sum of 20*l.* to plead to the indictment, and try it, according to the statute, it is no superfedeas. Mod. Ca. 33. And a procedendo may be granted where bail is not put in before a judge, on a certiorari.

It has been ruled that a certiorari ought not to be granted to remove any order of justices, where an appeal lies to the sessions, before the matter is determined on the appeal. 1 Salk. 147. Yet certiorari lies to justices of peace, &c. even in cases where they are empowered by statute finally to hear and determine. 1 Mod. 44. But things may not be removed from before justices of peace, which cannot be proceeded in by the court where removed; as in case of refusing to take the oaths, &c. which is to be certified and inquired into, according to the statute. 1 Salk. 145. And where the court which awards the certiorari cannot hold plea on the record, there but a tenor of the record shall be certified; for otherwise if the record was removed into B. R. as it cannot be sent back, there would be a failure of right afterwards. 1 Danv. Abr. 792. But a record sent by certiorari into B. R. may be sent after by mittimus into C. B. Ibid. 789. And a record into B. R. may be certified into Chancery, and from thence be sent by mittimus into an inferior court, where an action of debt is brought in an inferior court, and the defendant pleads that the plaintiff hath recovered in B. R. and the plaintiff replies Nul tiel record, &c. 1 Saund. 97, 98.

If a certiorari be prayed to remove an indictment out of London or Middlesex, three days notice must be given the other side, or the certiorari shall not be granted. Raym. 74. The court of B. R. will grant a new certiorari to affirm a judgment, &c. Though generally one person can have but one certiorari. Cro. Jac. 369. Returns of certiorari's are to be under seal: and the person to whom a certiorari is directed may make what return he pleases, and the court will not stop the filing of it, on affidavit of its falsity, except where the publick good requires it: the remedy for a false return is action on the case, at the suit of the party injured; and information, &c. at the suit of the king. 2 Hawk. P. C. 295.

A certiorari being once delivered, makes all subsequent proceedings on the record erroneous; whether the proceedings are before or after its return. It is said the Lord Chancellor, or any judge of the courts of record at Westminster, may bring a record to one another, without a certiorari; but not a judge of an inferior court, &c. 1 Nelf. 417, 418. A certiorari may be had to inferior courts; but not to a court superior, or that has equal jurisdiction, in which case day is given to bring in the record, &c. And on a certiorari to remove a record out of an inferior court, the stile of their court, and power to hold plea, and before whom, ought to be shewn on their certificate. Jenk. Cent. 114, 232. If a cause be removed from an inferior court by certiorari, the pledges in the court below are not discharged; because a defendant may bring a certiorari, and thereby the plaintiff may lose his pledges. Skin. Rep. 244, 246.

Certiorari not granted to remove an indictment from the Old Bailey, unless on extraordinary occasions. The King v. Ferguson, Rep. temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 369.

A certiorari to remove an order of bailardy should be applied for in six months, Rex v. Howlett, Wilf. par. 1. fo. 35.

Proceedings upon the excise laws shall not be superseded by certiorari. 12 Car. 2. c. 23. & 24.

Indictments for the repair of highways, pavements, &c. not removable but in special cases, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 6. 22 Car. 2. c. 12. & 3 W. & M. c. 12. And vide tit. Highways.

A certiorari may be granted to remove an indictment touching the highway, bridges, &c. on a suggestion, &c. that the right to repair may come in question. 5 W. & M. c. 11.

The security to be taken on allowance of a certiorari, to remove a conviction of deer-stealing. 3 W. & M. c. 10. On the game laws, 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. & 5 & Ann. c. 14. On the act to prevent excessive gaming, 12 Geo. 2. c. 28.

No judgment or order to be removed by certiorari, without sureties found. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Certiorari, to remove proceedings of justices, to be applied for within six calendar months, and upon six days notice to the justices. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18.

For the several cases in which a certiorari is not grantable, see the table to the quarto edition of the Statutes at Large.

Form of a certiorari to certify the record of a judgment:

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the mayor and sheriffs of our city of E. and to every of them, in our court at the Guildhall there, greeting: Whereas A. B. hath lately in our said court in the said city, according to the custom of the same court, impleaded C. D. late of, &c. in an action of debt upon demand of thirty pounds; and thereupon in our said court before you, obtained judgment against the said C. for the recovery of the said debt: and we being desirous for certain reasons, that the said record should by you be certified to us, do command you, that you send under your seals the record of the said recovery, with all things touching the same, into our court before us at Westminster, on the day, &c. plainly and distinctly, and in as full and ample manner as it now remains before you, together with this writ; so that we on the part of the said A. may be able to proceed to the execution of the said judgment, and do what shall appear to us of right ought to be done. Witnesses, &c.

Cert-Money, (quasi certain money) Is head-money, paid yearly by the tenants of several manors to the lords thereof, for the certain keeping of the leet; and sometimes to the hundred: as the manor of Hook, in Dorsetshire, pays cert-money to the hundred of Egerdon. In ancient records this is called certum letæ. See Common Fine.

Cervisarii. The Saxons had a duty called drinclean, that is, tributio potus, payable by their tenants; and such tenants were in Domesday called cervisarii, from cervisia, ale, their chief drink: though cervisarius vulgarly signifies a beer or ale brewer.

Cetura, A mound, fence, or inclosure. — Willielmus de Lucy miles, dedit Thomæ S. ministro domus de Thelesford, licentiam domus & portas levare, ædificare, & cum ceruris & muris includere, &c. Cart. priorat. de Thelesford, MS.

Cessat Executio. In trespass against two persons, if it be tried and found against one, and the plaintiff takes his execution against him, the writ will abate as to the other; for there ought to be a cessat executio till it is tried against the other defendant. 10 Ed. 4. 11. See Execution, &c.

Cessavit. Is a writ that lies in divers cases, upon this general ground, that he against whom it is brought, hath for two years neglected to perform such service, or to pay such a rent, as he is tied to by his tenure, and hath not upon his lands or tenements sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. F. N. B. 280. And if a tenant for years of land at a certain rent, suffers the rent to be behind two years, and there is no such distress to be had upon the land; then the landlord shall recover the land: but if the tenant come into court before judgment given, and tender the arrearages and damages, and find security that he shall cease no more in payment of the rent, then the tenant shall not lose his land. Terms de Ley.

By statute, if a free-farmer cease to pay his rent two years, the lessor may have a cessavit, and recover the land: and in this case, the heir of the demandant may maintain a cessavit against the heir or assign of the tenant. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 4. But in other cases, the heir may not bring this writ for cessure in the time of his ancestor: and it lies not but for annual service, rent, and such like; not for homage or fealty. If a man cease to pay his rent and services for two years, and inclose the land, so as the lord cannot distress, if he lay not open the gates or hedges of the land which make the inclosure, the lord shall have a cessavit, although the tenant hath sufficient cattle upon the land to be distrained for the rent: for the land ought to be open, and likewise there should be sufficient to distress for the rent, &c. And where the tenant suffereth the land to lie fresh, not occupied for two years together, it is said this writ will lie. New Nat. Br. 463, 464.

The lord shall have a writ of cessavit against tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee to another: but the donor of an estate-tail shall not have a cessavit against the tenant in tail: though if a man make a gift in tail, the remainder over in fee to another, or to the heirs of the tenant in tail, there the lord of whom the lands are holden immediate, shall have a cessavit against the tenant in tail, because that he is tenant to him, &c. Ibid. If the lord distrains pending the writ of cessavit against his tenant, the writ shall abate. The writ cessavit is directed to the sheriff, To command A. B. that, &c. he render to C. D. one messuage, which he holds by certain services, and which ought to come to the said C. by force of the statute, &c. because the said A. in doing those services had ceased two years, &c.

Cessavit de Cantaria. Lies where a man gives land to any house of religion or parson, to say divine service, provide alms for the poor, &c. If the said services be not done in two years, the donor or his heirs shall have this writ against him that holds the land thus given, after such cessure. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 41.

Cesse. Signifies an assessment or tax, and is mentioned in the Stat. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 3. Cesse or ceasse, in Ireland, is an exaction of victuals, at a certain rate, for soldiers in garrison. Antiq. Hibernie.

Cession. (cessio) A ceasing, yielding up, or giving over. And is when an ecclesiastical person is created bishop, or a parson of a parsonage takes another benefice, without dispensation, or otherwise not qualified, &c. In both cases their first benefices become void, and are in the law said to be void by cession: and to those benefices that the person had who was created bishop, the king shall present for that time, whoever is patron of them; and in the other case the patron may present. Cowel. Not only a benefice with cure may be said to be void by cession, when the incumbent thereof accepts of another benefice, but also when such incumbent is made a bishop; for thereby all his ecclesiastical preferments which he had before, whether with, or without cure, are actually void. Vaugb. 19. But it is not the election of any one to be a bishop, and confirmation thereof, that doth void his former preferments, until consecration be also had: and by dispensation of retainer, a bishop may retain some, or all of those preferments he was intitled to before he was bishop. Dyer 223. The cession on promotion of a bishop, not making an avoidance in the common way, and it being by the king's means that the livings are void, whose presentation in such a case is only as it were an exchange of one life for another, intitles the king to present to those livings, and as he is supreme patron. Cession makes a living void, without any resignation, deprivation, &c. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 392.

Cessor. (Lat.) A loiterer; but more particularly used for him who ceaseth, or neglects so long to perform a duty, that he thereby incurs the danger of the law. Old Nat. Br. 136.

Cessure, or cesser. Is used for ceasing, giving over; or departing from. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 1.

Cestui que Trust. Is he who hath a trust in lands or tenements, committed to him for the benefit of another. Anno 12 Car. 2. cap. 30. And lands of cestui que trust may be delivered in execution, where any person is seised in trust for another. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. And see 19 H. 7. c. 15. 27 H. 8. c. 10. If the person intrusted doth not perform his trust, he is compellable in the Chancery, &c.

Cestui que Use. (Fr. cestui à l'usage de qui) Signifies him to whose use any other man is enfeoffed of lands or tenements. 1 Rep. 133. Feoffees pro uses were formerly deemed owners of the lands; but now the possession is adjudged in cestui que use, and without any entry he may bring assise, &c. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. Cro. Eliz. 46. See Use.

Cestui que Vie. Is he for whose life any lands or tenements are granted. Perk. 97. And if tenant for term of another's life dieth, while cestui que vie is living; now, by the Common law, he that first entereth, shall hold the land as occupant during such other person's life. —diss. 41, 388. But this is prevented by making leases for the lives of others to the lessees, their heirs or executors, during the life of cestui que vie, &c. And the Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. charges such lands for debt. See Occupant.

Chace. Is a station of game, more extended than a park, and less than a forest: and is sometimes taken for the liberty of chasing or hunting within such a district. And according to Blount it hath another signification, i. e. the way through which cattle are drove to pasture, commonly called in some places a drove way; Ut si quis omnino viam obstruat vel chaceam per quam ingredi solet pasturæ. Bracton, lib. 4. c. 44. Vide Chase.

Chaceare ad lepores, vel vulpes: To hunt hare or fox. —Licet, &c. chaceare ad lepores & vulpes in manerio suo de Dambam. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. 87.

Chacurus. (from the Fr. chasseur) A horse for the chase; or rather a hound or dog, a courser. Ret. 7 Johan.

Chafe, from the Fr. chauffer to heat, whence our chafing dish.

Chafetwax. An officer in Chancery, that fitteth the wax for sealing of the writs, and such other instruments as are there made to be issued out: so in France calefactores ceræ sunt, qui regis literis in Cancellaria ceram imprimunt. Corauius.

Chaffers. Seem to signify wares or merchandise; and we yet use chaffering for buying and selling, though we take it to be generally a kind of bartering of one thing for another. It is mentioned in the Stat. of 3 Ed. 4. c. 4.

Chains. (hanging in). By 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. The judge before whom a murderer is convicted shall, in passing sentence, direct him to be executed on the next day but one, (unless the same shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following), and that his body be delivered to the surgeons, to be dissected and anatomized; and that the judge may direct his body to be afterwards hung in chains, but in no wise to be buried without dissection. A power is allowed to the judge, upon good and sufficient cause, to respite the execution, and relax the other restraints of this act. Black. Com. 4 V. 202.

Chaldron or Chalder of coals, contains thirty-six bushels heaped up, according to the bushel sealed for that purpose at Guildhall, London. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 2.

Chalasing. The merchants of the staple require to be eased of divers new impositions, as chalking, ironage, wharfage, &c. Ret. Parl. 50 Ed. 3.

Challenge,

Challenge, Calumnia (from the Fr. challenger) is used in the law for an exception to jurors, who are returned to pass on a trial. And this challenge to jurors is either made to the array, or to the poll: to the array is, when exception is taken to the whole number impanelled; and to the poll is, when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent. Challenge to jurors is also divided into challenge principal or peremptory; and challenge per cause, i. e. upon cause or reason: challenge principal or peremptory, is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or further examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned for felony, may challenge peremptorily the number allowed him by law, one after another, alleging no cause, but his own dislike, and they shall be put off, and new taken in their places: but yet there is a difference between challenge principal, and challenge peremptory; this being used only in matters criminal, and barely without cause alleged; whereas that is in civil actions for the most part, and by assigning some such cause of exception, as being found true the law allows. Staufd. P. C. 124, 157. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap. 14. In treason, and petit treason, the number of thirty-five jurors may be peremptorily challenged, without shewing any cause, in favour of life; and in murder and felony, twenty: and more may be challenged shewing cause. 1 Inst. 155. 22 H. 8. c. 14. 1 P. & M. cap. 10.

A person indicted of treason may challenge thirty-five of those returned on the panel of jurors to try him, without cause shewn; and if two or more are to be tried, they may challenge so many each, but then they are to be tried singly, or all may challenge that number in the whole, and be tried jointly. 3 Salk. 81. By Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 14. It is treason for compassing to kill the King, &c. no challenge shall be allowed, but for malice. If a prisoner challenge peremptorily more than allowed, he is to be dealt with as one standing mute, &c. And some statutes which take away the benefit of clergy from felons, exclude those their clergy who peremptorily challenge more than twenty, whereby they are liable to judgment of death. 2 Hawk. P. C. 414. Vide 22 H. 8. c. 14. 28 H. 8. c. 1. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. §. 11. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. But if the offender be within the benefit of the clergy, the challenge shall be over-ruled, and the party put upon his trial.

The King cannot challenge peremptorily in murder, &c. without shewing cause. Moor 595. And by Stat. 33 Ed. 1. St. 4. if those who prosecute for the King challenge a juror, they shall assign the cause; and if they allege not a good cause, the inquest shall be taken. All peremptory challenges are to be taken by the party himself; and where there are divers challenges, they must be taken all at once. But there can be no challenge till the jury is full; and then the array is to be challenged before one of them is sworn. Hob. 235. Where the King is party, if the other side challenge a juror above the number allowed by law, he ought to shew the cause of his challenge immediately. 1 Bulst. 191. A defendant shall shew all causes of challenge, before the King shall shew any. 2 Hawk. 413. And the King ought not to shew his cause of challenge before all the jurors are called over; for if there are enough besides those challenged, there will be no occasion to shew any cause why he challenged the rest: but if there are not enough, then he must shew the cause of his challenge. Raym. 473.

There may be a principal cause of challenge to the array, and a challenge to the favour: a principal cause of challenge is in respect of partiality or default of the sheriff, &c. and not in respect of the persons returned; and this partiality in the sheriff, may be by reason of kindred, or affinity to the plaintiff or defendant; or if one of the jury is returned at the nomination of the plaintiff or defendant; if a knight be not returned, when a peer is party, &c. 1 Inst. 156, 157.

Challenge to the favour is where the plaintiff or defendant is tenant to the sheriff, or if the sheriff's son hath married the daughter of the party, &c. and is also when either party cannot take any principal challenge, but sheweth cause of favour; and causes of favour are infinite. But where the King is party, one shall not challenge the array for favour, though the King may do it. Wood.

Inst. 592. Where challenge is to the favour, by reason of kindred to the sheriff, you must shew how kin, and then the challenge is good. 1 Nels. Abr. 423. If one of the parties is of affinity to a juror, the juror hath married the plaintiff's daughter, &c. If a juror hath given a verdict before in the cause, matter or title; if one labours a juror to give his verdict: if after he is returned, a juror eats and drinks at the charge of either party; if the plaintiff, &c. be his master, or the juror hath any interest in the thing demanded, &c. these are challenges to the favour. 2 Rol. Abr. 636. Hob. 294.

If the juror is convicted and attainted of treason, felony, perjury, adjudged to the pillory, or other punishment, whereby he becomes infamous, or is outlawed, or excommunicate; these are all principal challenges: but in these cases and others, he that challengeth, is to shew the record, if he will have it take place as a principal challenge; otherwise he must conclude to the favour, unless it be a record of the same court. 1 Inst. 157. A person under prosecution for any crime, may before indicted, challenge any of the grand jury, as being outlawed, &c. or returned at the instance of the prosecutor, or not returned by the proper officer, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 215.

As a peer ought not to be sworn on juries, he may be challenged: but a peer of the realm tried for treason or felony, shall not challenge any of his peers. Trials per pais 130. A juror may be challenged for defect, as well as for any crime; as defect of birth, where he is an alien born; of age, because a minor; or of estate, for want of ten pounds per annum freehold, &c. in the same county, or a tradesman five pounds a year, by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. In corporation towns freemen worth forty pounds in goods; are qualified to be jurors for trying of felonies. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 13. But on trials in London for high treason, every juror ought to have such freehold, &c. as is required by 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. And common jurors there, are to have lands or goods of one hundred pounds value, &c. by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. §. 19. A principal challenge, being found true, is sufficient without leaving it to triers: but if some of a jury are challenged for favour, they shall be tried by the rest of the jury, whether indifferent. 1 Inst. 158. And where a challenge is made to the array, the court appoint two triers, who are sworn, and then the cause of favour is shewed to them, which may be called the issue they are to try; and if 'tis proved, then they give their verdict that they are not indifferently impanelled; and this is entered of record: but if the favour is not proved, then they say that the jury was indifferently impanelled, and so the trial goes on, without making any entry of the matter. 1 Bulst. 114.

If one take a principal challenge against a juror, he cannot afterwards challenge that juror for favour, and waive his former challenge: but a challenge may be made to the polls, after made to the array. Wood 592. A new jury is to be impanelled by the coroner, where the array is qualified for partiality, &c. of the sheriff. If there be cause of challenge against the sheriff, the process is to be directed to the coroners; and if there is cause of challenge against them, the court will appoint certain elisors, against whose return no challenge can be taken to the array, though it may be to the polls. Trials per pais 15.

If a plaintiff or defendant have action of battery, &c. against the sheriff, or the sheriff against them, it is cause of challenge: and if either of the parties have action of debt against the sheriff; or if the sheriff hath any parcel of land depending on the same title as the parties; or if he, or his bailiffs who returned the jury, be under the distress of either party, &c. These are good causes of challenge. Ibid. 154. Where one of the jurors hath a suit at law depending with the plaintiff, 'tis good challenge. Stile 129. An action depending betwixt either of the parties and a juror, implying malice, is cause of challenge: and a juror may be challenged for holding lands by the same title as the defendant. 2 Leon. 40. If a person owes suit of court, &c. to a lord of a hundred who is plaintiff, it is a principal challenge, as he is within the distress of the plaintiff. Dyer 176. But it is said to be no challenge that a person is in debt to either party. 1 Nels. Abr. 426. A juror returned by a wrong name, may be challenged and withdrawn, so that the jury shall not be taken; yet a tales may be granted. 1 Lill. Abr. 260. And if a juror declares the right of either of the parties, &c. it is cause of challenge: though it hath been ruled that it is not sufficient cause of challenge, that a juror delivered his opinion touching the title of the land in question; because his opinion may be altered on hearing the evidence. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R.

If there are two demandants in a real action, or two tenants, and one challenge a juror, and the other will not, the juror (the challenge being allowed) shall be drawn against the rest. 11 H. 6. 15. Jenk. Cent. 114 To say of a person to be tried for any crime, that he is guilty, or will be hanged, &c. is good cause of challenge; but the prisoner must prove it by witnesses, and not out of the mouth of the jurymen, who may not be examined: and though a jurymen may be asked upon a voir dire whether he hath any interest in the case, or whether he hath a freehold, &c. yet a jurymen or a witness, shall not be examined, whether he hath been convicted of felony, or guilty of any crime, &c. which would make a man discover that of himself which tends to make him infamous, and the answer might charge him with a misdemeanor. 1 Salk. 153.

Default of hundredors is cause of challenge by the Common law; but by statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. every venire facias for trial of issues in any court of record, shall be awarded of the body of the proper county; though this extends only to civil causes, and not to appeals of felony, indictments, &c.

In a writ of right, four knights were returned; they must appear with their swords, or it will be good cause of challenge. Moor 67. If one challenge a juror, and the challenge is entered, he may not afterwards have him sworn on the jury. And if the defendant do not appear at the trial when called, he loseth his challenge to the jurors, though he afterwards appear. 1 Lill. Abr. 259. When the jury appear at a trial, before the secondary calls them to be sworn, he bids the plaintiff and defendant to attend their challenges, &c. Peremptory challenge taken away in high treason, per 33 H. 8. c. 23. But this seems to be altered or rather repealed by 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 10. §. 7. &c. Vide these two statutes in the quarto edition, with the references, in the margin of the same.—Also vide 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18. And Tab. to Stat. tit. Challenge, Juries. See Jury.

Challenge to fight, either by word or letter, or to be the bearer of such challenge, punishable by fine and imprisonment, on indictment, or information. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 149, 150.

Chamberdekins, or Chamber-deacons, were certain poor Irish scholars, clothed in mean habit, and living under no rule; banished England by Stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 7. 8.

Chamberlain, (camerarius) Is variously used in our laws, statutes and chronicles: as first there is Lord Great Chamberlain of England, to whose office belongs the government of the palace at Westminster, and upon all solemn occasions the keys of Westminster-Hall, and the court of Requests are delivered to him; he disposes of the sword of state to be carried before the King when he comes to the parliament, and goes on the right hand of the sword next to the King's person: he has the care of providing all things in the House of Lords in the time of parliament; to him belongs livery and lodgings in the King's court, &c. And the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeoman usher, &c. are under his authority.

The Lord Chamberlain of the Household has the oversight and government of all officers belonging to the King's chamber, (except the bed-chamber, which is under the Groom of the Stole), and also of the wardrobe; of artificers retained in the King's service, messengers, comedians, revels, musick, &c. The sergeants at arms are likewise under his inspection; and the King's chaplains, physicians, apothecaries, surgeons, barbers, &c. And he hath under him a Vice-Chamberlain, both being always Privy Counsellors.

There were formerly Chamberlains of the King's courts 7 Ed. 6. cap. 1. And there are Chamberlains of the Exchequer who keep a controlment of the pells of receipts and exitus, and have in their custody the leagues and treaties with foreign princes, many ancient records, the two famous books of antiquity called Domesday, and the Black book of the Exchequer; and the standards of money, and weights, and measures are kept by them. There are also Under-chamberlains of the Exchequer, who make searches for all records in the treasury; and are concerned in making out the tallies, &c. The office of Chamberlain of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 16. Besides these, we read of a Chamberlain of North Wales. Stow. p. 641.

A Chamberlain of Chester, to whom it belongs to receive the rents and revenues of that city; and when there is no prince of Wales, and earl of Chester, he hath the receiving and returning of all writs coming thither out of any of the King's courts.

The Chamberlain of London, who is commonly the receiver of the city rents payable into the chamber; and hath great authority in making and determining rights of freemen, concerning apprentices, orphans, &c.

Chambers of the King, (Regie camera) The havens or ports of the kingdom are so called in our ancient records. Mare Claus. fol. 242.

Chambre depint, Anciently St. Edward's chamber, now called the painted chamber.

Champerty, or champerty, (from the Fr. champ, a field, and parti divided, or the Lat. campus, and partitio, because the parties in champerty agree to divide the thing in question) Signifies a bargain with the plaintiff or defendant in any suit, to have part of the land, debt, or other thing sued for, if the party that undertakes it prevails therein. 1 Inst. 368. This seems to have been an ancient grievance in our nation; for notwithstanding the several statutes of 3 Ed. 1. cap. 25. 13 Ed. 1. c. 49. 28 Ed. 1. c. 11. and 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 2. &c. and a form of a writ framed to them; yet 4 Ed. 3. cap. 11. and 32 Hen. 8. c. 9. enacted, That whereas former statutes provided redress for this evil in the King's Bench only, from henceforth it should be lawful for justices of the Common Pleas, justices of assize, and justices of peace in their quarter sessions, to inquire, hear and determine this and such like cases, as well at the suit of the King, as of the party: and this offence is punishable by Common law and statute; the Stat. 33 Ed. 1. St. 2. makes the offenders liable to three years imprisonment, and a fine at the King's pleasure. By the Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 11. it is ordained, that no officer, nor any other, shall take upon him any business in suit, to have part of the thing in plea; nor none upon any covenant, shall give up his right to another; and if any do, and be convicted thereof, the taker shall forfeit to the King so much of his lands and goods as amounts to the value of the part purchased, &c. for such maintenance.

In the construction of these statutes, it hath been adjudged, that under the word covenant, all kinds of promises and contracts are included, whether by writing, or parol: that rent granted out of land in variance, is within the statute of champerty: and grants of part of the thing in suit made merely in consideration of the maintenance, are within the meaning of this statute; but not such as are made in consideration of a precedent honest debt, which is agreed to be satisfied with the thing in demand when recovered. F. N. B. 172. 2 Inst. 209. 2 Roll. Abr. 113.

It is said not to be material, whether he who brings a writ of champerty, did in truth suffer any damage by it; or whether the plea wherein it is alledged be determined or not. 1 Hawk. 257. A conveyance executed hanging a plea, in pursuance of a bargain made before, is not within the statutes against champerty: and if a man purchase land of a party, pending the writ, if it be bona fide, and not to maintain, it is not champerty. F. N. B. 272. 2 Roll. Abr. 113. But it hath been held, that the purchase of land while a suit of equity concerning it is depending, is within the purview of the statute 28 E. 1. St. 3. c. 11. Moor 665. A lease for life, or years, or a voluntary gift of land, is within the statutes of champerty; but not a surrender made by a lessee to his lessor: or a conveyance relating to lands in suit, made by a father to his son, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 258.

The giving part of the lands in suit, after the end of it, to a counsellor for his wages, is not champerty, if there be no precedent bargain relating to such gift: but if it had been agreed between the counsellor and his client before the action brought, that he should have part for his wages, then it would be champerty. Bro. Champert. 3. And it is dangerous to meddle with any such gift, since it carries with it a strong presumption of champerty. 2 Inst. 564. If any attorney follow a cause to be paid in gross, when the thing in suit is recovered, it hath been adjudged that this is champerty. Hob. 117. Every champerty implies maintenance; but every maintenance is not champerty; for champerty is but a species of maintenance. Crom. Jur. 39. 2 Inst. 208.

Champertors, By statute, are those who move pleas or suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own procurement, or by others, and sue them at their proper costs, to have part of the land in variance, or part of the gain. 33 Ed. 1. St. 2.—Champertores, vel campi participes, sunt qui per se vel per alios placita movent, vel mouere faciunt, & ea suis sumptibus prosequuntur ad campi partem, vel pro parte lucri habenda. Stat. 2. Artic. super Chart. 11.

Champerty, (campi-partitio) Is a species of maintenance, and punished in the same manner. Black. Com. 4 V. 134, 5.

Champion, (campio) Is taken in the law not only for him that fights a combat in his own cause, but also for him that doth it in the place or quarrel of another. Bract. lib. 3. Trañ. 2. cap. 21. And in Sir Edward Rish's notes on Upton, fol. 36. you will find that Henry de Farnberg for 30 marks fee, did by charter covenant to be champion to Roger abbot of Glastenbury. An. 42 Hen. 3. These champions, mentioned in our law books and histories, were usually hired; and any one might hire them, except parricides, and those who were accused of the highest offences: before they came into the field, they shaved their heads, and made oath that they believed the persons who hired them, were in the right, and that they would defend their cause to the utmost of their power; which was always done on foot, and with no other weapon than a stick or club, and a shield: and before they engaged, they always made an offering to the church, that God might assist them in the battle. When the battle was over, the punishment of a champion overcome, and likewise of the person for whom he fought, was various: If it was the champion of a woman for a capital offence, she was burnt, and the champion hanged: if it was of a man, and not for a capital crime, he not only made satisfaction, but had his right hand cut off; and the man was to be close confined in prison, till the battle was over. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35. See Combat.

Champion of the King, (campio regis) Is an ancient officer, whose office it is at the coronation of our Kings, when the King is at dinner, to ride armed cap-a-pie into Westminster-Hall, and by the proclamation of a herald make a challenge, That if any man shall deny the King's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat, &c. Which being done, the King drinks to him, and sends him a gilt cup, with a cover full of wine, which the champion drinks, and hath the cup for his fee. This office, ever since the coronation of King Richard II. when Baldwin Froville exhibited his petition for it, was adjudged from him to Sir John Dymocks his competitor, (both claiming from Marmion), and hath continued ever since in family of the Dymocks; who hold the manor of Scriwally in Lincolnshire, hereditary from the Marmions, by grand serjeanty, viz. That the lord thereof shall be the King's champion, as aforesaid. Accordingly Sir Edward Dymocks performed this office at the coronation of King Charles II. And a person of the name of Dymocks performed it, at the coronation of his present majesty George the Third.

Champs des Mars, and les champs de Mai, Assemblies of the ancient Gaule, to deliberate on whatever related to the general welfare of the nation. These assemblies were called champs, because, according to the custom of all the barbarous nations, they were held in the open air, in some plain, capable of containing the vast number of persons who had a right to be present. They were denominated champs de Mars and de Mai, from the months in which they were held. Every freeman seems to have had a right to be present in these assemblies. Robert. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 357.

Chance, Where a man commits an unlawful act, by misfortune, or chance, and not by design, it's a deficiency of the will; as here it observes a total neutrality, and doth not co-operate with the deed; which therefore wants one main ingredient of a crime. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 26, 7. See Homicide.

Chancellor, (Cancellarius) Was at first only a chief notary or scribe under the Emperor, and was called Cancellarius, because he sat infra Cancellor, to avoid the crowd of the people. This word is by some derived from Cancellor, and by others from Cancellis, an inclosed or separated place, or chancel, encompassed with bars, to defend the judges, and other officers from the press of the publick. And Cancellarius originally, as Lupanus thinks, signified only the register in court; Grapharius, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis judicium actis dant operam: but this name and officer is of late times greatly advanced, not only in this, but in other kingdoms; for he is the chief administrator of justice, next to the sovereign, who anciently heard equitable causes himself.

All other justices in this kingdom are tied to the strict rules of the law, in their judgments; but the Chancellor hath power to moderate the written law, governing his judgment by the law of nature and conscience, and ordering all things juxta equum & bonum: and having the King's power in these matters, he hath been called the keeper of the King's conscience. According to a late treatise, the Chancellor originally presided over a political college of secretaries, for the writing of treaties, grants, and other public business; and that the court of equity under the old constitution was held before the King and his counsel in the palace, where one supreme court for business of every kind was kept: and at first the Chancellor became a judge to hear and determine petitions to the King, which were referred to him; and in the end as business increased, the people intitled their suits to the Chancellor, and not the King: and thus the Chancellor's equitable power had by degrees commencement by prescription. Hist. Chan. p. 3, 10, 44, &c.

Staunford says, the Chancellor hath two powers; one absolute, the other ordinary; meaning, that although by his ordinary power, in some cases, he must observe the form of proceeding as other inferior judges; in his absolute power he is not limited by the law, but by conscience and equity, according to the circumstances of things. And though Polydore Virgil, in his history of England makes William the First, called the Conqueror, the founder of our Chancellors; yet our antiquary Mr. Dugdale, has shewn that there were many Chancellors of England long before that time, which are mentioned in his Origines Juridicales, and catalogues of Chancellors; and Sir Edward Coke in his fourth Institute saith, it is certain, That both the British and Saxon Kings had their Chancellors, whose great authority under their Kings were in all probability drawn from the reasonable custom of neighbouring nations, and the Civil law.

He that bears this chief magistracy, is stiled the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, which is the highest honour of the long robe; being made so per traditionem magni sigilli sibi per dominum regem, and by taking his oath: and a Chancellor may be made so at will, by patent, but 'tis said not for life, for being an ancient office, it ought to be granted as hath been accustomed. 2 Inst. 87. But Sir Edward Hyde, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, had a patent to be Lord Chancellor for life, though he was dismissed from that office, and the patent declared void. 1 Sid. 338.

By the Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 18. the Lord Chancellor and Keeper have one and the same power; and therefore since that statute, there cannot be a Lord Chancellor and Lord Keeper at the same time; before there might, and hath been. 4 Inst. 78. King Hen. 5. had a great seal of gold, which he delivered to the Bishop of Durham, and made him Lord Chancellor, and also another of silver, which he delivered to the Bishop of London to keep; but at this day there being but one great seal, there cannot be a Lord Chancellor and Lord Keeper at once, and because they are but one office, as is declared by 5 Eliz. c. 18. and the taking away the seal determines the office 1 Sid. 338. But the Lord Bridgman was Lord Keeper and Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, at the same time; which offices were held not to be inconsistent Ibid. By 1 W. & M. cap. 21. Commissioners appointed to execute the office of Lord Chancellor, may exercise all the authority, jurisdiction, and execution of laws, which the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, of right ought to use and execute, &c. since which statute this high office hath been several times in commission; though generally on the dissolution of a Chancellor, till another was appointed.

The Lord Chancellor, now there is no Lord High Steward, is accounted the first officer of the kingdom and he not only keeps the King's great seal, but all patents, commissions, warrants, &c. from the King, are perused by him before signed: and he has the disposal of all ecclesiastical benefices in the gift of the crown under 20 l. a year in the King's books, which has occasioned this office to be formerly possessed by a clergyman. He by his oath swears well and truly to serve the King and to do right to all manner of people, &c. In his judicial capacity, he hath divers assistants and officers, viz. The Master of the Rolls, the Masters in Chancery, &c. And in matters of difficulty, he calls one or more of the chief justices, and judges to assist him in making his decrees; though in such cases they only give their advice and opinion, and have no share of the judicial authority.

As to the Master of the Rolls, he hath judicial power and is an assistant to the Lord Chancellor when present, and his deputy when absent, but he has certain causes assigned him to hear and decree, which he usually doth on certain days appointed at the chapel of the rolls, being assisted by one or more Masters in Chancery: he is, by virtue of his office, chief of the Masters of Chancery, and chief clerk of the petty-bag office.

The twelve Masters in Chancery sit some of them in court, and take notice of such references as are made to them, to be reported to the court, relating to matters of practice, the state of the proceedings, accounts, &c. and they also take affidavits, acknowledge deeds and recognizances, &c.

The six clerks in Chancery transact and file all proceedings by bill and answer; and also issue out some patents that pass the great seal; which business is done by their under clerks, each of whom has a seat there, and whereof every six clerk has a certain number in his office, usually about ten.

The Curitor of the court, four and twenty in number, make out all original writs in Chancery, which are returnable in C. B. &c. and among these the business of the several counties is severally distributed.

The Register is a place of great importance in this court, and he hath several deputies under him, to take cognizance of all orders and decrees, and enter and draw them up, &c.

The Master of the Subpoena Office issues out all writs of subpoena.

The Examiners are officers in this court, who take the depositions of witnesses, and are to examine them, and make out copies of the depositions.

The Clerk of the Affidavits files all affidavits used in court, without which they will not be admitted.

The Clerk of the Rolls sits constantly in the rolls to make searches for deeds, offices, &c. and to make out copies.

The Clerks of the Petty-Bag Office, in number three, have great variety of business that goes through their hands, in making out writs of summons to parliament, conge d'elires for bishops, patents for customers; liberates upon extent of statute-staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, &c. And also relating to suits for and against privileged persons, &c. And the clerks of this office have several clerks under them.

The Usher of the Chancery had formerly the receiving and custody of all money ordered to be deposited in court, and paid it back again by order: but this business hath been of late assumed by the Masters in Chancery.

And anno 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. a new officer was appointed by statute, called Accountant-General, to receive the money lodged in court, and convey the same to the Bank, to be there kept for the suitors of the court.

Then there is a Serjeant at Arms, to whom persons standing in contempt are brought up by his substitutes as prisoners.

A Warden of the Fleet, who receives such prisoners as stand committed by the court, &c.

And besides these officers, there is a Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; Clerk and Controller of the Hanaper; Clerk for inrolling letters patent, &c. not employed in proceedings of equity, but concerned in making out commissions, patents, pardons, &c. under the great seal, and collecting the fees thereof. A Clerk of the Faculties, for dispensations, licences, &c. Clerk of the Presentations, for benefices of the crown in the Chancellor's gift; Clerk of Appeals, on appeals from the courts of the Archbishop to the court of Chancery: and divers other officers, who are constituted by the Chancellor's commission.

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. A great officer, whose office is principally to determine controversies between the King and his tenants of the dutchy land, and otherwise to direct all the King's affairs belonging to that court. The Chancellor is the chief judge of the Dutchy Court, who in difficult points of law is usually assisted by two judges of the Common law, out of one court or other, to decide the matter in question: this court is held in Westminster-Hall, and was formerly much used in relation to suits between tenants of dutchy lands, and against accountants and others for the rents and profits of the said lands. Under the Chancellor of the Dutchy, are an Attorney of the Court, one Chief Clerk or Register, and several Auditors, &c. This officer is mentioned in the Stat. 3 Ed. 6. c. 1. and 5 id. c. 26.

Chancellor of the Exchequer. Is likewise a great officer, who 'tis thought by many was originally appointed for the qualifying extremities in the exchequer: he sometimes sits in court, and in the exchequer-chamber; and with the judges of the court, orders things to the King's best benefit. He hath by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. power with others, to compound for the forfeitures upon penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into to the King: he hath also great authority in the management of the royal revenue, &c. which seems of late to be his chief business, being commonly the first commissioner of the treasury. And though the court of equity in the Exchequer-chamber, was intended to be holden before the treasurer, Chancellor, and barons; it is usually before the barons only. When there is a Lord-treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer is Under-treasurer.

Chancellor of the Order of the Garter. Stow's Annals, pag. 706. Chancellor of the Universities. See 9 Hen. 5. c. 8. Chancellor of the Diocese, 32 Hen. 8. c. 15. Chancellor in Cathedral Churches: his office is thus described in the Monasticon, and the statute of Litchfield, viz.—Lectiones legendas in ecclesia per se vel per suum vicarium audire, male legentes emendare, scholas conferre, sigilla ad causas conferre, litteras capituli facere & consignare, libros servare, quotiescunque voluerit predicationes in ecclesia vel extra ecclesiam prædicare, & cui voluerit predicationis officium assignare. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. p. 24, 339.

Chancemedley, (from the Fr. chance, hapus, and mêler, miscere) Signifies the casual killing of a man not without the killer's fault, though without any evil intention; and is where a person is doing a lawful act, and a person is killed by chance thereby: for if the act be unlawful, it is felony. If a person casts (not intending harm) a stone, which happens to hit one, whereof he dies: or shoots an arrow in a highway, and another that passeth by is killed therewith: or if a workman, in throwing down rubbish from a house, after warning to take care, kills a person: or a school-master in correcting his scholar, a master his servant, or an officer in whipping a criminal, in a reasonable manner, happens on occasion his death: it is chancemedley and misadventure. 3 Inst. 56. Dalt. 351.

But if a man throws stones in a highway, where persons usually pass: or shoot an arrow, &c. in a market place, among a great many people: or if a workman cast down rubbish from a house, in cities and towns, where people are continually passing: or a school-master, &c. correct his servant or scholar, &c. exceeding the bounds of moderation, it is man-slaughter; and if with an improper instrument of correction, as with a sword or iron bar, or by a kicking, stamping, &c. in a cruel manner, it is murder. Terms de Ley, H. P. C. 58, 31, &c. Kel. 40, 65, 113. If a man whips his horse in a street to make him gallop, and the horse runs over a child and kills it, it is manslaughter: but if another whips the horse, 'tis manslaughter in him, and chancemedley in the rider. H. P. C. 48, 59. And if two are fighting, and a third person coming to part them is killed by one of them, without any evil intent, yet this is murder in him; and not manslaughter by chancemedley or misadventure: and if they were met with premeditated malice, the one intending to kill the other, then it is murder in both. Terms de Ley. In chancemedley the offender forfeits his goods; but hath a pardon of course. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9. See Homi. ide.

Chancery, (cancellaria) Is the highest court of judicature in this kingdom next to the parliament, and of very ancient institution. The jurisdiction of this court is of two kinds; ordinary, or legal; and extraordinary, or absolute. The ordinary jurisdiction, is that wherein the Lord Chancellor in his proceedings and judgments, is bound to observe the order and method of the Common law; and in such cases the proceedings have been usually in Latin, and filed or inrolled in the petty-bag office: and the extraordinary or unlimited power, is that jurisdiction which this court exercises in cases of equity, wherein relief is to be had by way of English Bill and answer.

The Ordinary Court holds plea of recognisances acknowledged in the Chancery, writs of scire facias for repeal of letters patent, writs of partition, &c. and also of all personal actions, by or against any officer of the court; and by acts of parliament of several offences and causes: all original writs; commissions of bankrupt; of charitable uses; of ideots, and lunacy, &c. issue out of this court, for which it is always open; and sometimes a superfedeas or writ of privilege, hath been here granted to discharge a person out of prison: one from hence may have an habeas corpus, prohibition, &c. in the vacation; and here a subpoena may be had to force witnesses to appear in other courts, when they have no power to call them. 4 Inst. 79. 1 Danv. Abr. 776.

But in prosecuting causes, if the parties descend to issue, this court cannot try it by jury; but the Lord Chancellor delivers the record into the King's Bench to be tried there; and after trial had, it is to be remanded into the Chancery, and there judgment given: though if there be a demurrer in law, it shall be argued and adjudged in this court.

When there is demurrer upon part, and issue upon part, the record being in B. R. that court ought to give judgment, because there can be but one execution; and if the record come thither entirely, they cannot send it back again. 1 Mod. Rep. 29. But see 4 Inst. 80. Upon a judgment given in this court, a writ of error lies returnable in B. R. 4 Inst. 83.

Ordinary Court, or Court of Equity, proceeds by the rules of equity and conscience, and moderates the rigour of the Common law, considering the intention rather than the words of the law. It gives relief for and against infants, notwithstanding their minority: and for and against married women, notwithstanding their coverture: in some cases a woman may sue her husband for maintenance; she may sue him when he is beyond sea, &c. and be compelled to answer without her husband: all frauds and deceits, for which there is no redress at Common law: all breaches of trust and confidence; and accidents, as to relieve obligors, mortgagors, &c. against penalties and forfeitures, where the intent was to pay the debt, are here remedied: for in Chancery, a forfeiture, &c. shall not bind, where a thing may be done after, or compensation made for it. 1 Danv. 752. 2 Vent. 352: Rel. Abr. 373.

Also this court will give relief against the extremity of unreasonable engagements, entered into without consideration: oblige creditors that are unreasonable, to compound with an unfortunate debtor: and make executors, &c. give security and pay interest for money that is to lie long in their hands. 2 Vent. 346. Here executors may sue one another, or one executor alone be sued without the rest: order may be made for performance of a will: it may be decreed who shall have the tuition of a child: this court may confirm title to lands, though one hath lost his writings; render conveyances, defective through mistake, &c. good and perfect; but not defects in a voluntary conveyance, unless where intended as a provision for younger children. 2 Vent. 265.

In Chancery, copyholders may be relieved against the ill usage of their lords: inclosures of lands that are common be decreed; and this court may decree money or lands given to charitable uses: things in action upon assignment on consideration: oblige men to account with each other: avoid the bar of actions, by the statute of limitations, &c. for debts thus barred, are still debts in equity, and the duty remains. 1 Danv. Abr. 749, 750, &c. 1 Salk. 154.

But in all cases, where the plaintiff can have his remedy at law, he ought not to be relieved in Chancery: and a thing which may be tried by a jury, is not triable in this court. Danv. 763. Also long leases, as for 1000 years; naked promises; verbal agreements not executed; estates deriv'd under conceal'd titles, &c. have been refused relief in this court: and mortgages are not relievable in equity after twenty years, where no demand has been made, or interest paid, or there are not other particular circumstances, &c. 2 Vent. 340. A bond, when neither the principal nor interest hath been demanded in 20 years, will be presumed in equity to be satisfied, and be decreed to be cancelled; and a perpetual injunction may be granted to stay proceedings thereon. 1 Ch. Rep. 79. Finch Rep. 78. A deed appearing to be cancelled, has been decreed to be a good deed, on special circumstances: and a defendant having suppressed a settlement, whereby a remainder in tail was limited, &c. upon proof that the deed came to his hands, the plaintiff had a decree in Chancery to hold the estate. 1 Ch. Caf. 249. 2 Vern. Rep. 380. Articles of agreement upon marriage reduc'd into writing, though not sign'd by either party, being proved to be agreed to, were decreed to be perform'd. 2 Vern. 200. Also an agreement in writing made since the statute of frauds, has been decreed to be discharged by parol. 1 Vernon's Rep. 240. An underhand agreement may be set aside as fraudulent: and articles, a deed of conveyance executed, and a fine in pursuance thereof, were set aside in Chancery for fraud, where the party was imposed upon. Ibid. 205. A deed not fraudulent at first, may become so afterwards; and if one add a seal to a note, which is good without it, he will lose his security; and a bill of exchange being gained by fraud, equity will relieve against it, and decree that the money shall be repaid, &c. 2 Vern. 123, 162.

A release shall be avoided for fraud, where there is suppressio veri, or suggestio falsi; and a release may be set aside in Chancery by reason of the misapprehension of the party that gave it. 1 Vern. Rep. 20, 32. A will concerning lands, may be avoided in a court of equity when obtained by fraud: a mortgage made by a man subsequent to his will shall be a revocation pro tanto only in equity, and not of the whole will, &c. 2 Ch. Rep. 97. An heir may be relieved in equity against a contingent contract, made during his father's life, to pay a large sum of money, if he outlives his father, when it is unconscionable. 2 Chan. Rep. 397. And a broker who had made it his business to sell goods at extravagant rates to young persons, to be paid for one upon the deaths of their fathers, was decreed to deliver up securities thus obtained for great sums, on payment of what he had really paid to the plaintiff, and for his use, &c. 1 Vern. 467.

A purchaser of land, without notice of an incumbrance, shall not be hurt thereby in equity; and in pleading a purchase, purchase, the defendant ought to deny notice of incumbrances, &c. No interest will be allowed in Chancery for book-debts; nor shall interest money be allowed to be made principal on securities, so as to make interest upon interest, unless it be where interest money is reduced to a stated sum, &c. 3 Ch. Rep. 65. 1 Vern. 169. 2 Ch. Rep. 286.

It has been held, that the court of Chancery cannot assess damages for a trespass, &c. but it ought to be ascertained by a jury at law, and not otherwise. 1 Ch. Rep. 230. A bill may be brought for discovering the contents of a letter, which would discharge the plaintiff of an action at law, before verdict. 3 Ch. Rep. 17. Indentures of apprenticeship have been decreed to be delivered up, and the money given with the apprentice to be paid back by the master, on ill usage of the apprentice, &c. Finch Rep. 125. Charity lands being let at a great under-value, as was found by inquisition, on a commission of charitable uses, the lease was avoided in equity, and the lessee decreed to pay the arrears in rent according to the first value, and to yield up the possession. 2 Vern. 415.

A grazier's cattle, driving to London, were distrained in grounds for the innkeeper's rent, and in replevin the landlord had judgment at law; but the grazier was relieved in equity against it. 2 Vern. Rep. 129. Trials and issues at law are frequently directed out of the court of Chancery; and sometimes it is ordered, that after trial, the parties shall resort to the court on the equity reserved, &c. This court will not retain a suit for any thing under 10*l.* value, except it be in cases of charity; nor for lands, &c. under 40*s.* per annum: and refuses relief in suits where the substance of them tends to the overthrow of an act of parliament; or any fundamental point of the Common law.

If a man loses his obligation, he shall not be relieved for his debt, being against a maxim in law. 1 Danv. 754. And an executor in a court of equity ought not to be compelled to pay legacies before bonds, &c. for this is against the common law: so in many other cases. Ibid. 756. And where a man by his own act destroys his remedy at law, he shall not be relieved in equity: but in case of an apparent fraud, or in a dubious case in law, of which the party could not have conscience, relief may be had in equity against a statute. Ibid. 755, 759. Defendants may not be regularly relieved in Chancery, after judgment at law: though decrees are made in such cases: but on persons being committed for non-performance, they have been formerly discharged by habeas corpus. Cro. Elix. 220. 1 Rel. Rep. 252. 1 Nels. Abr. 432.

It is common to give relief in Chancery, notwithstanding there is an agreement between the parties that there shall be no relief in law or equity. 1 Mod. 141, 305. And where a party hath both law and equity on his side, it will prevail against equity only. 1 Danv. Abr. 773, which vide. If a portion be given to a woman, provided she marries not without consent of a certain person, although she marries without such consent, she shall be relieved in Chancery, and have her portion: but if the portion, on such marriage, had been limited over to another, it would be otherwise. 1 Danv. 752. 1 Mod. 300. If a father, on the marriage of his son, take a bond of the son that he shall pay him so much, &c. this is void in equity, being adjudged by coercion while he is under the awe of his father. 1 Salk. 158. Also where a son, without privity of the father, treating in equity, gives bond, to return any part of the portion, the match it is void. Ibid. 156. A man is not bound to discover the consideration of a bond generally given, which in itself implies a consideration. Hard. 200. If a factor to a merchant hath money in his hands, it shall be accounted his own; for equity cannot follow money; but it may goods to make them, the merchant's, which may be known, though money cannot. 1 Salk. 260.

Money articulated to be laid out in land, shall be taken as land in equity, and descend to the heir. Ibid. 154. Personal estate in the hands of executors, shall be applied in discharge of the heir, where there is sufficient assets to pay the debts and legacies. 1 Danv. 770. There shall be no bill in equity against an executor, to discover asset before a suit commenced at law. Hard. 115. Sed qu legal assets shall be applied in a course of administration; but equitable assets amongst all the creditors proportionably, on a bill brought, &c. 2 Vern. Ch. Rep. 62. Where trustees convert money raised out of land for payment of debts, to their own use, the heir shall have the land discharged, which hath borne its burden, and the trustees are liable to the debts in equity. 1 Salk. 153. If lessee for years, without impeachment of waste, about the end of his term cuts down timber-trees, the court of Chancery by injunction may stop the cutting down of the trees, it being against the public good to destroy timber. 1 Rel. Abr. 380. And tenant after possibility of issue extinct, or for life, punishable of waste, may be stopped in equity from pulling down houses, &c. 1 Danv. 761.

The king cannot create a court of equity at this day; but the same must be done by act of parliament. 4 Inst. 84. And though the power of the Chancery is very great, and it may restrain other courts that exceed their jurisdiction, and remove suits to itself by certiorari, yet it is no court of record; and therefore 'tis said can bind the person only, and not the estate of the defendant, &c. And if he will not obey the decree of the court, he must be committed to the Fleet till he does. 1 Danv. Abr. 749.

There are several statutes relating to the court of Chancery. By 28 Ed. 1. c. 5. The court of Chancery is to follow the king. By the 18 Ed. 3. stat. 5. The oaths of the clerks in Chancery are appointed. The Chancellor and Treasurer may correct errors in the Exchequer. Whosoever shall find himself grieved with any statute shall have his remedy in Chancery. 36 Ed. 3. c. 9. 31 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 12. And sec 15 R. 2. c. 12. 17 R. 2. c. 6. & 4 H. 8. c. 9.

No subpoena or other process of appearance, shall issue out of Chancery, &c. till after a bill is filed, (except bills for injunctions to stay waste, or suits at law commenced), and a certificate thereof brought to the subpoena office. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. And for preventing vexatious suits, it is enacted, that upon the plaintiff's dismissing his own bill, or the defendant's dismissing the same for want of prosecution, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant full costs, &c. Stat. ibid. Persons in remainder, or reversion of any estate, after the death of another, on making affidavit in the court of Chancery, that they have cause to believe such other person dead, and his death concealed by the guardian, trustees or others, may move the Lord Chancellor to order such guardian, trustees, &c. to produce the person suspected to be concealed; and if he be not produced, he shall be taken to be dead, and those in reversion, &c. may enter upon the estate: and if such person be abroad, a commission may be issued for his being viewed by commissioners. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 18.

Infants under the age of twenty-one years, seized of estates in trust, or by way of mortgage, are enabled by statute to make conveyances thereof; or they may be compelled thereto, by order of the court of Chancery, &c. upon petition and hearing of the parties concerned. 7 Ann. c. 9. See the statute of King George 2. whereby idiots and lunatics seized of estates in trust, &c. may make conveyances by order of the Chancery, &c. 4 Geo. 2. c. 10. By the following acts the power of the masters was abridged, on their misemploying the suitors money, which is now to be paid into the bank of England:

is granted for relief of the suitors, and as a common stock of the court of Chancery. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. & 33. All orders and decrees made and signed by the Master of the Rolls, shall be deemed and taken to be good and valid orders and decrees of the court of Chancery; but not to be enrolled till signed by the Lord Chancellor, and subject to reversal, &c. by him. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 30.

A defendant not appearing after subpoena issued, but keeping out of the way to avoid being served with the process; on affidavit that he is not to be found, and suspected to be gone beyond sea, or to abscond, &c. the court of Chancery may make an order for his appearance at a certain day, a copy of which is to be published in the Gazette, &c. and then if he do not appear, the plaintiff's bill shall be taken pro confesso, and defendant's estate sequestered, sequestered, &c. But persons out of the kingdom, returning in seven years, may have a rehearing in six months, and be admitted to answer; otherwise to be barred, by final decree. 1 Geo. c. 25.

By 1 Geo. 2. c. 24. Part of the suitor's cash is to be placed out at interest, for defraying the charge of the Accountant-General's office. And see 23 Geo. 2. c. 25 for making good deficiencies to the clerk of the Master, and for augmenting the income of the Master of the Rolls.

By 1 Geo. 3. c. 1. The king is empowered to grant a sum not exceeding 5000*l.* per annum to the Chancellor.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 32. Part of the suitor's cash is to be placed at interest, to be applied to the Accountant-General's third clerk, and other purposes.

The proceedings in Chancery are, first to file the bill of complaint, signed by some counsel, setting forth the fraud or injury done, or wrong sustained, and praying relief: after the bill is filed, process of subpoena issues to compel the defendant to appear: and when the defendant appears, he puts in his answer to the bill of complaint, if there be no cause for plea to the jurisdiction of the court, in disability of the person, or in bar, &c. Then the plaintiff brings his replication, unless he files exceptions against the answer as insufficient, referring it to a Master to report, whether it be sufficient or not; to which report exceptions may be also made. The answer, replication, and rejoinder, &c. being settled, and the parties come to issue, witnesses are to be examined upon interrogatories, either in court, or by commission in the country, wherein the parties usually join; and when the plaintiff and defendant have examined their witnesses, publication is to be made of the depositions, and the cause is to be set down for hearing, after which follows the decree.

If the plaintiff dismisseth his own bill, or the defendant dismisseth it by reason of want of prosecution, as already observed, or if the decree is in behalf of the defendant, the bill is dismissed with costs to be taxed by a Master. If the defendant doth not appear, on being served with the process of subpoena, in order to answer, upon affidavit of the service of the writ, an attachment will issue out against him: and if a non est inventus is returned, an attachment with proclamation goes forth against him; and if he stands further out in contempt, then a commission of rebellion may be issued, for apprehending him, and bringing him to the Fleet prison, in the execution whereof the persons to whom directed may justify breaking open doors. If the defendant stands further in contempt, a serjeant at arms is to be sent out to take him; and if he cannot be taken, a sequestration of his land may be obtained till he appears. And if a decree, when made, be not obeyed, being served upon the party under the seal of the court, all the aforementioned processes of contempt will issue out against him, for his imprisonment till he yields obedience to it.

If a bill in Chancery be exhibited against a peer, the course is for the Lord Chancellor to write a letter to him; and if he doth not put in his answer, then a subpoena issues, and then an order to shew cause why a sequestration should not go forth; and if he still stands out, then a sequestration shall be had; for there can be no process of contempt against his person. Where there is any error in a decree in matter of law, there may be a bill of review, which is in nature of a writ of error; or an appeal to the House of Lords. A party grieved with a decree in Chancery, on petition to the king, it hath been adjudged that the matter might be referred by the king to the judges, who may reverse the decree, &c. 3 Bull. 116.

But it is now usual to appeal to the House of Lords; which appeals are to be signed by two noted counsel, and exhibited by way of petition: the petition or appeal is lodged with the clerk of the house of Lords, and read in the house, whereon the appellee is ordered to put in his answer, and a day fixed for hearing the cause; and after counsel heard and evidence given on both sides, the lords will affirm or reverse the decree of the Chancery, and finally determine the cause by a majority of votes, &c. Though it is observed on an appeal to the Lords from a decree in Chancery, no proofs will be permitted to be read as evidence, which were not made use of in the Chancery. Preced. Canc.

214. If a bill be brought where the Lord Chancellor is party to the suit, it must be directed to the King's Majesty; for no man may be both judge and party in a cause. See Chancellor.

And as to the jurisdiction of the court, its modes of proceeding, and the various cases wherein it relieves, &c. vide Cam. Dig. 2 P. tit. Chancery, where those subjects are fully and methodically treated of.

Changer. An officer belonging to the king's mint, whose office consists chiefly in exchanging coin for bullion, brought in by merchants or others: it is written after the old way, chaunger, Stat. 2 Hen. 6. cap. 12.

Chanter, (cantor) A singer in the choir of a cathedral church; and is usually applied to the chief of the singers. This word is mentioned in 13 Elix. c. 10. At St. David's cathedral in Wales, the chanter is next to the bishop; for there is no dean. Camb. Britan.

Chantry, or Chaunter; (cantaria) A little church, chapel, or particular altar, in some cathedral church, &c. endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass, and officiate divine service for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appointed. Stat. 37 Hen. 8. cap. 4. 1 Ed. 6. cap. 14. and 15 Car. 2. cap. 9. Of these chantries mention is made of forty-seven belonging to St. Paul's church in London, by Dugdale, in his history of that church. In an ancient MS. there is this record—Sciante, &c. quod ego Reginaldus Seward dedi Willielmo Crumpe capellano Cantarie beate Marie de Yarpol, unam parcellam pasture, &c. Dat apud Leominstrie die Martis prox. post festum Sancti Hilarii, An. 7 Hen. 5.

Chapel, (capella, Fr. chapelle) Is either adjoining to a church, for performing divine service; or separate from the mother-church, where the parish is wide, which is commonly called a chapel of ease. And chapels of ease are built for the ease of those parishioners who dwell far from the parochial church, in prayer and preaching only; for the sacraments and burials ought to be performed in the parochial church. 2 Rel. Abr. 340.—Ad capellam non pertinet baptisterium neque sepultura. Selden of Tithes, p. 265. These chapels are served by inferior curates, provided at the charge of the rector, &c. And the curates therefore removable at the pleasure of the rector or vicar: but chapels of ease may be parochial, and have a right to sacraments and burials, and to a distinct minister, by custom; (though subject in some respects to the mother-church;) and parochial chapels differ only in name from parish churches, but they are small, and the inhabitants within the district are few. In some places chapels of ease are endowed with lands or tithes, and in other places by voluntary contributions; and in some few districts there are chapels which baptize and administer the sacraments, and have chapel-wardens; but these chapels are not exempted from the visitation of the ordinary, nor the parishioners who resort thither from contributing to the repairs of the mother-church; especially if they bury there; for the chapel generally belongs to, and is as it were a part of the mother-church; and the parishioners are obliged to go to the mother-church, but not to the chapel. 2 Rel. Abr. 289. And hence it is said, that the offerings made to any chapel are to be rendered to the mother-church; unless there be a custom that the chaplain shall have them.

Publick chapels, annexed to parish churches, shall be repaired by the parishioners, as the church is; if any other persons be not bound to do it. 2 Inft. 489. Besides the fore mentioned chapels, there are free chapels, perpetually maintained and provided with a minister, without charge to the rector or parish; or that are free and exempt from all ordinary jurisdiction; and these are where some lands or rents are charitably bestowed on them. Stat. 37 Hen. 8. cap. 4. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. Then there are private chapels, built by noblemen, and others, for private worship, in or near their own houses, maintained at the charge of those noble persons to whom they belong, and provided with chaplains and stipends by them; which may be erected without leave of the bishop, and need not be consecrated, though they anciently were so, nor are they subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary. And also chapels in the Universities, belonging to particular colleges, which though they are consecrated, and sacraments are administered there, yet they are not liable to the visitation of the bishop, but of the founder. 2 Inst. 363.

Chapelry, (capellania) Is the same thing to a chapel, as a parish to a church; being the precinct and limits thereof: it is mentioned in the statute 14 Car. 2. c. 9.

Chaperon, (Fr.) A hood or bonnet, anciently worn by the knights of the garter, as part of the habit of that noble order: but in heraldry it is a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of the horses that draw a hearse at a funeral. See Stat. 1 R. 2. cap. 17.

Chapters, (Lat. capitula, Fr. chapitres, i. e. chapters of a book) Signify in our Common law a summary of such matters as are to be enquired of, or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assize, or of peace, in their sessions. Britton, cap. 3. useth the word in this signification: and chapters are now most commonly called articles, and delivered by the mouth of the justice in his charge to the inquest; whereas, in ancient times, (as appears by Bracon and Britton) they were, after an exhortation given by the justices for the good observation of the laws and the king's peace, first read in open court, and then delivered in writing to the grand inquest, for their better observance; and the grand jury were to answer upon their oaths to all the articles thus delivered them, and not put the judges to long and learned charges to little or no purpose, for want of remembering the same, as they do now, when they think their duty well enough performed, if they only present those few of many misdemeanors which are brought before them by way of indictment. It is to be wished that this order of delivering written articles to grand juries were still observed, whereby crimes would be more effectually punished: in some inferior courts, as the court leet, &c. in several parts of England, it is usual at this day for stewards of those courts to deliver their charges in writing to the juries sworn to enquire of offences. Horne, in his Mirror of justices, expresses what these articles were wont to contain. Lib. 3. cap. des Articles in Eyre. And an example of articles of this kind, you may find in the book of assizes. f. 138.

Chaplain, (capellanus) Is most commonly taken for one that is depending upon the king, or other noble person, to instruct him and his family, and say divine service in his house, where there is usually a private chapel for that purpose. The king, queen, prince, princess, &c. may retain as many chaplains as they please; and the king's chaplains may hold any number of benefices of the king's gift, as the king shall think fit to bestow upon them. An archbishop may retain eight chaplains; a duke, or a bishop, six; a marquis or earl, five; viscount, four; baron, knight of the garter, or lord chancellor, three; a dutches, marchioness, countess, baroness, the treasurer, and controller of the king's house, the king's secretary, dean of the chapel, almoner, and master of the rolls, each of them two; the chief justice of the king's bench, &c. one; all which may purchase a licence or dispensation, and take two benefices with cure of souls. Stat. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 13. Also every judge of the King's Bench and Common Pleas; and chancellor and chief baron of the Exchequer, and the king's attorney and solicitor general, may each of them have one chaplain, attendant on his person, having one benefice with cure, who may be non-resident on the same, by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 16. And the groom of the stole, treasurer of the king's chamber, and chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaster, may retain each one chaplain. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 28. If a nobleman hath his full number of chaplains allowed by law, and retains one more, who has dispensation to hold plurality of livings, it is not good. 1 Cro. 723.

A person, retaining a chaplain, must not only be capable thereof at the time of granting the instrument of retainer, but he must continue capable of qualifying till his chaplain is advanced: and therefore if a duke, earl, &c. retain a chaplain, and die; or if such a noble person be attainted of treason; or if an officer, qualified to retain a chaplain, is removed from his office, the retainer is determined: but where a chaplain hath taken a second benefice before his lord dieth, or is attainted, &c. the retainer is in force to qualify him to enjoy the benefices.

And if a woman that is noble by marriage, afterward marries one under the degree of nobility, her power to retain chaplains will be determined; though 'tis other wise where a woman is noble by descent, if she marry under degree of nobility, for in such case her retainer before or after marriage is good. A baroness, &c. during the coverture, may not retain chaplains; if she doth, the lord, her husband, may discharge them, as likewise her former chaplains, before their advancement. 4 Rep. 118.

A chaplain must be retained by letters testimonial under hand and seal, or he is not a chaplain within the statute; so that it is not enough for a spiritual person to be retained by word only to be a chaplain, by such person as may qualify by the statutes to hold livings, &c. although he abide and serve as chaplain in the family. And where a nobleman hath retained and thus qualified his number of chaplains, if he dismisses them from their attendance upon any displeasure, after they are preferred, yet they are his chaplains at large, and may hold their livings during their lives; and such nobleman, though he may retain other chaplains in his family, merely as chaplains, he cannot qualify any others to hold pluralities while the first are living: for if a nobleman could discharge his chaplain when advanced, to qualify another in his place, and qualify other chaplains, during the lives of chaplains discharged, by these means he might advance as many chaplains as he would, whereby the statutes would be evaded. 4 Rep. 90.

Chapter, (capitulum) Is a congregation of clergymen under the dean in a cathedral church: congregatio clericorum in ecclesia cathedrali, conventuali, regulari vel collegiata. This collegiate company is metaphorically termed capitulum, signifying a little head, it being a kind of head, not only to govern the diocese in the vacation of the bishoprick, but also in many things to advise and assist the bishop when the see is full, for which, with the dean, they form a council. 1 Inst. 103. The chapter consists of prebends or canons, which are some of the chief men of the church, and therefore are called capita ecclesie; they are a spiritual corporation aggregate, which they cannot surrender without leave of the bishop, because he hath an interest in them; they, with the dean, have power to confirm the bishop's grants; during the vacancy of an archbishoprick, they are guardians of the spiritualties, and as such have authority by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 21. to grant dispensations; likewise as a corporation they have power to make leases, &c.

When the dean and chapter confirm grants of the bishop, the dean joins with the chapter, and there must be the consent of the major part; which consent is to be expressed by their fixing of their seal to the deed, in one place, and at one time, either in the chapter-house, or some other place; and this consent is the will of many joined together. Dyer 233. A chapter is not capable to take by purchase or gift, without the dean, who is the head of the body: but there may be a chapter without a dean, as the chapter of the collegiate church of Southwell; and grants by or to them are as effectual as other grants by dean and chapter. Yet where there are chapters without deans, they are not properly chapters: and the chapter in a collegiate church, where there is no episcopal see, as at Westminster and Windor, is more properly called a college.

Chapters are said to have their beginning before deans; and formerly the bishop had the rule and ordering of things without a dean and chapter, which were constituted afterwards; and all the ministers within his diocese were, as his chapter, to assist him in spiritual matters. 2 Roll. 454. 3 Co. 75. The bishop hath a power of visiting the dean and chapter: but the dean and chapter have nothing to do with what the bishop transacts as ordinary. 3 Rep. 75. Though the bishop and chapter are but one body, yet their possessions are for the most part divided; as the bishop hath his part in right of his bishoprick; the dean hath a part in right of his deanery; and each prebendary hath a certain part in right of his prebend; and each too is incorporated by himself. And deans and chapters have some of them ecclesiastical jurisdiction in several parishes, (besides that authority they have have within their own body), executed by their officials; also temporal jurisdiction in several manors belonging to them, in the same manner as bishops, where their stewards keep courts, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 229. It has been observed, that though the chapter have distinct parcels of the bishop's estate assigned for their maintenance, the bishop hath little more than a power over them in his visitations, and is scarce allowed to nominate half of those to their prebends, who were originally of his family: but of common right it is said he is their patron. Roll. ibid.

Charge of justices in sessions, &c. See Chapters, or Chapitres.

Charge and Discharge, A charge is said to be a thing done that bindeth him that doth it, or that which is his, to the performance thereof: and discharge is the removal, or taking away of that charge. Terms de Ley. Land may be charged divers ways; as by grant of rent out of it, by statutes, judgments, conditions, warranties, &c. Lands in fee simple may be charged in fee; and where a man may dispose of the land itself, he may charge it by a rent, or statute, one way or other. Lit. sect. 648. Moor Ca. 129. Dyer 10. If one charge land in tail, and land in fee-simple, and die; the land in fee only shall be chargeable. Bro. Cha. 9. Lands entailed may be charged in fee, if the estate-tail be cut off by recovery: if tenant in tail charge the land, and after levy a fine or suffer a recovery of the lands, to his own use; this confirms the charge, and it shall continue. 1 Co. Rep. 61. A tenant for life charges the land, and then makes a feoffment to a stranger, or doth waste, &c. whereby it is forfeited, he in reversion shall hold it charged during his (the tenant's) life: and if one have a lease for life or years of land, and grant a rent out of it; if after he surrenders his estate, yet the charge shall continue so long as the estate had endured, in case it had not been surrendered. 1 Rep. 67, 145. Dyer 10.

If a feme sole, lessee for years, takes husband, and he charges the land and dies, she may avoid it; for the husband might have given or forfeited, but he may not charge it. Bro. Cha. 41. If one jointenant charge land, and after release to his companion and die, the survivor shall hold it charged: but if it had come to him by survivorship, it would be otherwise. 6 Rep. 76. 1 Shep. Abr. 325. He that hath a remainder or reversion of land, may charge it; because of the possibility that the land will come into possession, and then the possession shall be charged. But where one leases land for life, and grants the reversion or remainder over to A. B. who charges the land, and dies, and the tenant for life is heir to the fee; in this case he shall hold it discharged, for he had the possession by purchase, though he had the fee by descent. Bro. 11, 16. 1 Rep. 62. If a rent be issuing out of a house, &c. and it falls down, the charge shall remain upon the soil. 9 E. 4. 20. But when the estate is gone upon which the charge was grounded, there generally the charge is determined. Co. Lit. 349. And in all cases where any executory thing is created by deed, there by consent of all the parties it may be by deed defeated and discharged. 10 Rep. 49. Vide Discharge.

Charitable Corporation. A society of persons in the late reign obtained a statute to lend money to industrious poor, at 5 l. per cent. interest on pawns and pledges, to prevent their falling into the hands of the pawn-brokers, and therefore they were called the Charitable corporation: but they likewise took 5 l. per cent. for the charge of officers, warehouses, &c. And in the fifth year of King Geo. 2. the chief officers of this corporation, by connivance of the principal directors, absconded and broke, and defrauded the public prosecutors of great sums; for relief of the sufferers wherein, as to part of their losses, several statutes were made and enacted. See Stat. 5 Geo. 2. cap. 31, 32. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 11.

Charitable Uses, Where any lands, &c. are given to charitable uses, commissions of inquiry, and deeds how made and taken, &c. See Chancery and Mortmain. Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36. Lands given to alms and aliened, may be recovered by the donor, 13 Ed. 1. c. 41. Lands, &c. may be given for the maintenance of houses of correction, or of the poor, 35 Elix. c. 7. sect. 27. Commissioners to inquire of money given to poor prisoners, 22

23 Car. 2. c. 20. sect. 11. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. sect. 9, 10. Money given to put out apprentices, either by parishes or publick charities, to pay no duty, 8 Ann. c. 9. sect. 40. Mr. Norton's Will to Charitable Uses, 6 Geo. 2. c. 32. 11 Geo. 2. c. 37. See Mortmain. And vide also Black. Com. 2 V. 273, 376. 3 V. 428.

Charcoal, Are pit-coal when charred or charked, so called in Worcestershire; as sea-coal thus prepared at Newcastle is called coke.

Charge of Lead, Is a quantity of lead consisting of thirty pigs, each pig containing six stone wanting two pounds, and every stone being twelve pounds.—La charge de plumbo constat ex 30 foinellis, & qualibet foinella continet 6 petras, exceptis duabus libris, & qualibet petra constat ex 12 libris. Affisa de ponderibus. Rob. 3. R. Scot. cap. 22.

Charta, A word made use of not only for a charter, for the holding an estate; but also a statute. See Magna Charta.

Charte, A card, chart, or plain which mariners use at sea, mentioned 14 Car. 2. cap. 33.

Chartel, (Fr. cartel) A letter of defiance, or challenge to a single combat; in use heretofore to decide difficult controversies at law, which could not otherwise be determined. Blount.

Charter, (Lat. charta, Fr. chartres, i. e. instrumenta) Is taken in our law for written evidence of things done between man and man: whereof Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 26. says thus, Fiunt aliquando donationes in scriptis, sicut in chartis, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, propter brevem hominum vitam, &c. And Britton, in his 39th chapter, divides charters into those of the king, and those of private persons. Charters of the king are those whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or body politick; as a charter of exemption, of privilege, &c. Charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence committed against the king's crown and dignity; and of these there are several sorts, viz. charta pardonationis utlagaria, charta pardonationis se defendendo, &c. and others mentioned in Reg. Writs 287, 288, &c. Charter of the forest, wherein the laws of the forest are comprised, such as the charter of Canutus, &c. Kitch. 314. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 14.

Charters of private persons are deeds and instruments for the conveyance of lands, &c. And the purchaser of lands shall have all the charters, deeds and evidences as incident to the same, and for the maintenance of his title. Co. Lit. 6. Charters belong to a feoffee, although they be not sold to him, where the feoffor is not bound to a general warranty of the land; for there they shall belong to the feoffor, if they be sealed deeds or wills in writing: but other charters go to the tertenant. Moor Ca. 687. The charters belonging to the feoffor in case of warranty the heir shall have, though he hath no land by descent, for the possibility of descent after. 1 Rep. 1. See Magna Charta.

Charteter, In Cheshire, a freeholder is called by this name. Sir P. Ley's Antiq. fol. 356.

Charter-Governments in America. Our colonies, with respect to their interior policy, are properly of three sorts. 1. Provincial establishments, the constitutions of which depend on the respective commissions issued by the crown to the governors, and the instructions which usually accompany those commissions; under the authority of which, provincial assemblies are constituted, with the power of making local ordinances, not repugnant to the laws of England. 2. Proprietary governments, granted out by the crown to individuals, in the nature of feudatory principalities, with all the inferior regalities, and subordinate powers of legislation, which formerly belonged to the owners of counties palatine: yet still with these express conditions, that the ends for which the grant was made be substantially pursued, and that nothing be attempted which may derogate from the authority of the mother country. 3. Charter governments, in the nature of civil corporations, with the power of making by-laws, for their own interior regulation, not contrary to the laws of England; and with such rights and authorities as are specially given them in their several charters of incorporation. The form of government in most of them is borrowed from that of England. They have a governor named named by the king (or in some proprietary colonies by the Proprietor) who is his representative or deputy; they also have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the king and council here in England. Their general assemblies, which are their house of commons, together with their council of state, being their upper house, with the concurrence of the king, or his representative the governor, make laws suited to their own emergency. Such is the account given by Blackstone in his Com. 1 V. 108.

As to the appeal, it may not be improper to observe, that we conceive 'tis only in the nature of a reference, by way of arbitration; the parties entering into bond in America, to abide by the determination of the king in council here, as the editor (J. M.) hath been informed by a gentleman well acquainted with the subject.

Charter-land, (terra per chartam) Is such as a man holds by charter, that is by evidence in writing otherwise called freehold. Anno 19 H. 7. cap. 13. This in the time of the Saxons was called bockland, which was held (according to Lambard) with more commodious and easy conditions than fokland was, i. e. lands held without writing; because that was hereditaria, libera atque immunis; whereas, fundus sine scripto censum pensabat annuum, atque officiorum quadam servitute est obligatus: priorem viri plerumque; nobiles, atque ingenui; posteriorem rustici fere & pagani possidebant: illam nos vulgo freehold & per chartam; hanc ad voluntatem domini appellamus. Lamb. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 90.

Charter-party, (Lat. charta partita, Fr. chartre parti, i. e. a deed or writing divided) Is what among merchants and sea-faring men we commonly call a pair of indentures, containing the covenants and agreements made between them, touching their merchandise and maritime affairs. 2 Inst. 673. And charter-parties of affreightment settle agreements, as to the cargo of ships, and bind the master to deliver the goods in good condition at the place of discharge, according to agreement; and the master sometimes obliges himself, ship, tackle and furniture, for performance.

The Common law construes charter-parties, as near as may be, according to the intention of them, and not according to the literal sense of traders, or those that merchandise by sea, but they must be regularly pleaded. In covenant by charter-party, that the ship should return to the river of Thames, by a certain time, dangers of the sea excepted, and after in the voyage, and within the time of the return, the ship was taken upon the sea by pirates, so that the master could not return at the time mentioned in the agreement; it was adjudged that this impediment was within the exception of the charter-party, which extends as well to any danger upon the sea by pirates and men of war, as dangers of the sea by shipwreck, tempest, &c. Stile 132. 2 Roll. Abr. 248.

A ship is freighted at so much per month that she shall be out, covenanted to be paid after her arrival at the port of London; the ship is sent away coming up from the Downs, but the lading is all preserved, the freight shall in this case be paid; for the money becomes due monthly by the contract, and the place mentioned is only to ascertain where the money is to be paid, and the ship is intitled to wages, like a mariner that serves by the month, who if he dies in the voyage, his executors are to be answered pro rata. Molloy de Jur. Maritim. 260. If a part-owner of a ship refuse to join with the other owners in setting out of the ship, he shall not be intitled to his share of the freight; but by the course of the admiralty, the other owners ought to give security if the ship perish in the voyage, to make good to the owner standing out his share of the ship. Sir Lionel Jenkins, in a case of this nature, certified that by the law marine and course of the admiralty, the plaintiff was to have no share of the freight; and that it was so in all places, for otherwise there would be no navigation. Lex Mercat. 100. See Freight.

Forms of charter-parties of affreightment are sold ready printed.

Chart's Reddendis. Is a writ which lies against him that hath charters of feoffment entrusted to his keeping, and refuseth to deliver them. Reg. Orig. 159.

Chafe, (Fr. chaffe) In its general signification is a great quantity of woody ground lying open, and privileged for wild beasts and wild fowl: and the beasts of chafe properly extend to the buck, doe, fox, &c. and in common and legal sense to all the beasts of the forest. 1 Inst. 233. But if one have a chafe within a forest, and he kill or hunt any stag or red deer, or other beasts of the forest, he is fineable. 1 Jones's Rep. 278.

A chafe is of a middle nature between a forest and a park, being commonly less than a forest, and not endowed with so many liberties, as the courts of attachment, swainmote, and justice-seat; though of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity both of keepers, and wild beasts or game, than a park. A chafe differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest in its proper and true nature cannot; and from a park, in that it is not enclosed, and hath a greater compass, and more variety of game, and officers likewise. Crompt. in his Jurisd. fol. 148. says a forest cannot be in the hands of a subject, but it forthwith loseth its name, and becomes a chafe: but fol. 197. he says, a subject may be lord and owner of a forest, which though it seems a contradiction, yet both sayings are in some sort true; for the king may give or alienate a forest to a subject, so as when it is once in the subject, it loseth the true property of a forest, because the courts called the justice-seat, swainmote, &c. do forthwith vanish, none being able to make a Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the forest, but the king, yet it may be granted in so large a manner, as there may be attachment, swainmote, and a court equivalent to a justice-seat. Manwood, part 2. c. 3. 4.

A forest and a chafe may have different officers and laws: every forest is a chafe, & quiddam amplius; but any chafe is not a forest. A chafe is ad communem legem, and not to be guided by the forest laws; and it is the same of parks. 4 Inst. 314. A man may have a free chafe as belonging to his manor in his own woods, as well as a warren and a park in his own grounds; for a chafe, warren and park are collateral inheritances, and not issuing out of the soil; and therefore if a person hath a chafe in other men's grounds, and after purchaseth the grounds, the chafe remaineth. Ibid. 318. If a man have freehold in a free chafe, he may cut his timber and wood growing upon it, without view or licence of any; though it is not so of a forest: but if he cut so much that there is not sufficient for covert, and to maintain the game, he shall be punished at the suit of the king: and so if a common person hath a chafe in another's soil, the owner of the soil cannot destroy all the covert, but ought to leave sufficient thereof, and also browewood, as hath been accustomed. 11 Rep. 22. And it has been adjudged, that within such chafe, the owner of the soil by prescription may have common for his sheep, and warren for his conies, but he cannot furchase with more than has been usual, nor make coney-burrows in other places than hath been used. Ibid. If a free chafe be inclosed, it is said to be a good cause of seizure into the king's hands. It is not lawful to make a chafe, park or warren, without licence from the king under the broad seal. See Black. Com. 2 V. 38, 416. 4 V. 408.

Chasoy, An hunting horse.—Dederunt mihi unum chasorem, &c. Leg. Will. 1. cap. 22. And in another chapter it is written cacorem.

Chastellaine. A noble woman: quasi castelli domina.

Chastity. The Roman law (Ff. 48, 9. 1.) justifies homicide in defence of the chastity either of one's self or relations; and so also, according to Selden, (de Legib. Hebræor. l. 4. c. 3.) stood the law in the Jewish Republic. The English law likewise justifies a woman, killing one who attempts to ravish her. (Bac. Elem. 34. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.) So the husband or father may justify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by consent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6. And without doubt the forcibly attempting a crime, of a still more detestable nature, may be equally resisted by the death of the unnatural aggressor. For the one uniform principle, that runs through our own and all other laws, seems to be this; that where a crime, in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. Black. Com. 4 V. 181.

Chattels, or Catals, (catalla) Comprehend all goods moveable and immoveable, except such as are in nature of freehold, or parcel of it. The Normans call moveable goods only, chattels; but this word by the Common law extends to all moveable and immoveable goods: and the Civilians denominate not only what we call chattels, but also land, bona. But no estate of inheritance or freehold, can be termed in our law goods and chattels; though a lease for years may pass as goods. Chattels are either personal or real: personal, as gold, silver, plate, jewels, household-stuff, goods and wares in a shop, corn sown on the ground, carts, ploughs, coaches, saddles, &c. Cattle, &c. as horses, oxen, kine, bullocks, sheep, pigs, and all tame fowls and birds, swans, turkeys, geese, poultry, &c. and these are called personal in two respects, one because they belong immediately to the person of a man; and the other, for that being any way injuriously withheld from us, we have no means to recover them but by personal action. Chattels real are such as either appertain not immediately to the person, but to some other thing by way of dependency, as a box with charters of land, &c. or such as are issuing out of some immoveable thing to a person, as a lease, or rent for term of years: and chattels real concern the realty, lands and tenements, leases for years, interest in advowsons, in statutes-merchant, &c. And also include corn cut, trees cut, &c. 1 Inst. 118. Noy's Max. 49. But deeds relating to a freehold, obligation, &c. which are things in action, are not reckoned under goods and chattels; though if writings are pawned, they may be chattels: and money hath not been accounted goods or chattels; nor are hawks or hounds such, being feræ naturæ. 8 Rep. 33. Terms de Ley 103. Kitch. 32.

Personal estate is usually taken for money, goods, bonds, leases for years, &c. And chattels personal are not only moveable and immoveable, but some are animate, as horses, &c. and others inanimate, as beds, &c. A collar of SS. garter of gold, buttons, &c. belonging to the dress of a knight of the garter, are not jewels to pass by that name in personal estate, but ensigns of honour. Dyer 59. The law will not suffer the devise of a personal chattel, with a remainder over; but a devise of a chattel real, with remainder over, hath been in some cases adjudged good in equity. 2 And. 185. The use of personal things, such as plate, jewels, &c. may be given to one, and the remainder to another; and in that case the property is veiled in the last devisee. Owen 33. But a devise of the use of money has been adjudged a devise of the money itself; and so a devise of the use of books, medals, &c. and limitations over have been declared void. 1 Chan. Rep. 129. 2 Chan. Rep. 167.

Chattels personal are, immediately upon the death of the testator, in the actual possession of the executor, as the law will adjudge, though they are at never so great a distance from him; chattels real, as leases for years of houses, lands, &c. are not in the possession of the executor till he makes an entry, or hath recovered the same; except there be a lease for years of tithes, where no entry can be made. 1 Nelf. Abr. 437. Leases for years, tho' for 1000 years; leases at will, estates of tenants by elegit, &c. are chattels, and shall go to the executor: all obligations, bills, statutes, recognizances and judgments, shall be as a chattel in the executor, &c. Bro. Obl. 18. F. N. B. 120.

But if one be seised of land in fee on which trees and grafs grow, the heir shall have these, and not the executor; for they are not chattels till they are cut and severed, but parcel of the inheritance. 4 Rep. 63. Dyer 273. The game of a park with the park, fish in the pond, and doves in the house with the house, go to the heir, &c. and are not chattels: though if pigeons, or deer, are tame, or kept alive in a room; or if fish be in a trunk, &c. they go to the executors as chattels. Noy 124. 11 Rep. 50. Kelw. 88. An owner of chattels is said to be seised of them; as of freehold the term is, that a person is seised of the same.

Chance-medley, Is of pretty much the same import with chance-medley. The former, in its etymology, signifies an affray in the heat of blood, or passion; the latter, a casual affray. The latter is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of homicide by misadventure; whereas it appears by the Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 5. and our ancient books, (Staundy. P. C. 16.) that it is properly applied to such killing, as happens in self-defence, upon sudden rencounter. 3 Inst. 55. 57. Foster 275. 6. Black. Com. 4 V. 184.

Chaumpert, A kind of tenure mentioned Pat. 35 Ed. 3. To the hospital of Bowes in the isle of Guernsey. Blount.

Chaunter, A singer in a cathedral. See Chanter.

Chauntry-rents, Are rents paid to the crown by the servants or purchasers of chauntry-lands. 22 Car. 2. c. 6.

Chats, Are deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty; as by playing with false dice; or by causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from those in which it was written; or by persuading a woman to execute writings to another as her trustee, upon an intended marriage, which in truth contained no such thing, but only a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment; or by suppressing a will; and such like. 1 Hawk. 188.

Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 1. sect. 2. If any person falsely and deceitfully get into his hands or possession any money or other things of any other persons by colour of any false token, &c. being convicted, shall have such punishment by imprisonment, setting upon the pillory, or by any corporal pain (except pains of death) as shall be adjudged by the persons before whom he shall be convicted. See the Statute.

Lord Coke observes hereupon, that for this offence the offender cannot be fined, but corporal pain only inflicted. 3 Inst. 133.

But Mr. Serjeant Hawkins (p. 188.) observes, that a person has been fined 500*l.* for this offence.

As there are frauds which may be relieved civilly, and not punished criminally (with the complaints whereof the courts of equity do generally abound); so there are other frauds, which in a special case may not be helped civilly, and yet shall be punished criminally. Thus, if a minor goes about the town, and pretending to be of age, defrauds many persons, by taking credit for a considerable quantity of goods, and then insuing on his menage; the persons injured cannot recover the value of their goods, but they may indict and punish him for a common cheat. Barl. 100.

By 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. Persons convicted of obtaining money or goods by false pretences, or of sending threatening letters in order to extort money or goods, may be punished by fine and imprisonment, or by pillory, whipping, or transportation. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 157. 173.

Exchequer-Roll, Is a roll or book containing the names of such as are attendants on, and in pay to the King or other great personages, as their household servants. Stat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 1. It is otherwise called the chequer roll, and seems to take its etymology from the Exchequer. 14 Hen. 8. c. 13.

process shall be made to the exigent where the offence was done, and if the offender then fly into the county of Chester, the outlawry shall be certified to the officers there. 1 H. 4. c. 18. The sessions for the county palatine of Chester, is to be kept twice in the year, at Michaelmas and Easter: And justices of peace, &c. in Chester shall be nominated by the Lord Chancellor. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 5. 3. H. 8. c. 43. Recognizances of statutes merchant may be acknowledged, and fines levied before the Mayor of Chester, &c. for lands lying there. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 31. But no writ of protection shall be granted in the county palatine. See County. Palatine. And Black. Com. 1 V. 116. 3 V. 78.

Chebage, (chevadium, from the Fr. chef, i. e. caput.) Is a tribute or sum of money formerly paid by such as held lands in villenage to their lords in acknowledgment, and was a kind of head or poll money. Of which Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 10. says thus; Chevadium dicitur recognitio in signum subjectionis & domini de capite suo. Lambard writes this word chivage; but it is more properly chiefage: and anciently the Jews, whilst they were admitted to live in England, paid chevage or poll money to the King, as appears by Pat. 8 Ed. 1. par 1. It seems also to be used for a sum of money, yearly given to a man of power for his protection, as a chief head or leader: but the Lord Coke says, that in this signification, it is a great misprision for a subject to take sums of money, or other gifts yearly of any, in name of chevage, because they take upon them to be their chief heads or leaders. Co. Litt. 140.

Chebantia, A loan or advance of money upon credit; Fr. chavarice, goods, stock.—Idem prioratus pene destructus, & possessionis sue ad plurimos terminos pro plurimis chebantis alienata existunt. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. pag. 629.

Cheberil, (cheverillus) A young cock, or cockling. Pat. 15 H. 3.

Chebistance, (from the Fr. chevir, i. e. Venir a chief de quelque chose, to come to the head or end of a business) Signifies an agreement or composition made; an end or order set down between a creditor or debtor; or sometimes an indirect gain in point of usury, &c. In our statutes it is often mentioned, and most commonly used for an unlawful bargain or contract. Stat. 37 Hen. 8. c. 9. 13 Eliz. c. 5 & 8. 21 Jac. 1. c. 17. and 12 Car. 2. c. 13. See Black. Com. 2 V. 474.

Chief Rents, The rents of freeholders of manors often so called, i. e. reditus capitales.—They are also denominated quit-rents, quieti redditus; because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. Black. Com. 2 V. 42.

Chief Pledge, (pligius vel vas capitalis) Mentioned 20 Hen. 6. c. 8. See Borough-head and Borough-holder.

Chief (Tenants in) Tenants in capite, holding immediately under the King, in right of his crown and dignity. Black. Com. 2 V. 60.

Children, Are in law a man's issue begotten on his wife. In case land be given by will to a man and his children, who has such alive, the devisee takes only an estate for life; but if there be no child living, it is held to be an estate-tail. 1 Vent. 214, 225. See qu. for the intent of the testator should be considered. A devise to one's children. prima facie, refers only to such as are alive at the time of making the will; though were the same to children living at his death, a child in ventre sa mere, may be looked upon as living. 1 Peer Williams 244, 342. Also a son, with which a wife is priviment ensent, is adjudg'd living at the time of the testator's death, to prevent an estate going over to another, &c. Ibid. 486. If a sum of money is given in trust for the children of another person, and he had only one child and several grand-children, the child only shall take; yet it is said if such person had not any child living, the grandchildren might have taken by the name of children. 2 Vern. 106. Abr. Caf. Eq. 202. A father being about to make his will, and thereby intending to have made provisions for his younger children; his son and heir dissuaded him from doing it, and promised that he would take care his brothers and sisters should have the provisions; upon which the father forbore making them, and they were decreed in Chancery against the heir; his promise being by fraud. Preced. Canc. 4. And where a person going to suffer a recovery, in order to provide for younger children, was kept from it by the heir in tail, he promising to do for them himself; it has been ruled he should do it after the father's death. Ibid. 5. See Administrator. See also Posthumous.

Childwit, (Sax.) Is a fine or penalty of a bond-woman unlawfully begotten with child. Prior habeat gersumam de nativa sua impregnata sine licentia maritandi. Ex. Reg. Priorat' de Cokestord. Cowel says, it signifieth a power to take a fine of your bond-woman gotten with child without your consent: and within the manor of Writtle in Com. Essex, every reputed father of a base child pays to the lord for a fine 3s. 4d. where it seems to extend as well to free as bond-women; and the custom is there called childwit to this day.

Chimin, (Fr. chemin, i. e. via.) In law phrase is a way; which is of two sorts; the King's highway, and a private way. The King's highway, (chiminus regius) is that in which the King's subjects, and all others under his protection, have free liberty to pass, though the property of the soil where the way lies, belongeth to some private person. A private way is that in which one man or more have liberty to pass through the ground of another, by prescription or charter; and this is divided into chimin in gross, and chimin appendant. Chimin in gross is where a person holds a way principally and solely in itself; chimin appendant is that way which a man hath as appurtenance to some other thing: as if he rent a close or pasture, with covenant for ingress and egress through some other ground in which otherwise he might not pass. Kitch. 117. Co. Litt. 56. It is said a way may not be claimed by prescription as appendant or appurtenant to an house, because it is only an easement and no interest; but a person may prescribe for a way from his house through a certain close, &c. to church, though he himself hath lands next adjoining to his said house, through which of necessity he must first pass; for the general prescription shall be applied only to the lands of others. Yelu. 159. 1 Danv. Abr. 785. See Highway.

Chiminage, (chiminagium) Is toll due by custom for having a way through a forest; and in ancient records it is sometimes called pedagium. Crompt. Jurisd. 189. Co. Litt. 56.—Telonium quod in forestis exigebant forestarii a plaustris & equis oneris causa eo venientibus. Chart. Forest. cap. 14. Et nullus forestarius qui non sit forestarius de feodo, &c. capiat chiminagium, &c.

Chimney-Money, Otherwise called hearth-money, a duty to the crown on houses. By statute 14 Car. 2. cap. 2. Every fire-hearth and stove of every dwelling or other house within England and Wales (except such as pay not to church and poor) shall be chargeable with 2s. per annum, payable at Michaelmas and Lady-Day to the King and his heirs, and successors, &c. which payment was commonly called chimney-money. This tax being much complained of, as burthensome to the people, hath been long since taken off, and others imposed in its stead; among which that on windows of houses, laid 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 18. 5 Ann. c. 13. 8 Ann. c. 4. 20 Geo. 2. c. 3. &c. &c. has by some persons been esteemed almost equally grievous. Chipp, Cheap, Chipping, Signifies the place to be a market-town, as Chippenhaw, &c. Blount.

Chippingabel, or cheapingavel, Toll for buying and selling.

Chirgemot, Circgemot chircgemot, (Sax.) forum ecclesiasticum.—Quousque chirgemot discordantes inveniunt, vel amore congregat, vel sequestret judicio. Leg. Hen. c. 8. 4 Inst. 321.

Chirograph, (chirographum, or scriptum chirographatum.) Any publick instrument of gift or conveyance, attested by the subscription and crosses of witnesses, was in the time of the Saxons called chirographum; which being somewhat changed in form and manner by the Normans, was by them stiled charta: in following times, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made their deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counter-part, and in the middle between the two copies, they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied or cut asunder in an indented manner, the sheet or skin of parchment; which being delivered to the two parties concerned, were proved authentick by matching with and answering to one another: and when this prudent custom had for some time prevailed, then the word chirographum was appropriated to such bipartite writings or indentures. Anciently when they made a chirograph or deed, which required a counter-part, they ingrossed it twice upon one piece of parchment contrariwise, leaving a space between, in which they wrote in great letters the word Chirograph; and then cut the parchment in two, sometimes even, and sometimes with indenture, through the midst of the word: this was afterwards called dividenda, because the parchment was so divided or cut; and this said the first use of these chirographs was in Henry the Third's time.

Chirograph was of old used for a fine; the manner of ingrossing whereof, and cutting the parchment in two pieces, is still observed in the chirographer's office: but as to deeds, that was formerly called a chirograph, which was subscribed by the proper hand-writing of the vendor or debtor, and delivered to the vendee or creditor: and it differed from syngraphus, which was in this manner, viz. Both parties, as well the creditor as debtor, wrote their names and the sum of money borrowed, on paper, &c. and the word Syngraphus in capital letters in the middle thereof, which letters were cut in the middle, and one part given to each party, that upon comparing them (if any dispute should arise) they might put an end to the difference. The chirographs of deeds have sometimes concluded thus,—Et in hujus rei testimonium huic scripto in modum chirographi confecto vicissim sigilla nostra apposuimus. The chirographs were called charta divisa, scripta per chirographum divisa, charta per alphabetum divisa; as the Chirographs of all fines are at this time. Kennet's Antiq. 177. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 94.

Chirographer of fines, (chirographus finium & concordiarum, of the Greek Χειρογράφος, a compound of Χειρ, manus a hand, and γράφω, scribo, to write, a writing of a man's hand) Signifies that officer in the Common Pleas which ingrosseth fines acknowledg'd in that court into a perpetual record, after they are examined and passed in the other offices, and that writes and delivers the indentures of them to the party: and this officer makes out two indentures, one for the buyer, another for the seller; and also makes one other indented piece, containing the effect of the fine, which he delivers to the custos brevium, which is called the foot of the fine. The chirographer likewise, or his deputy, proclaims all the fines in the court every term, according to the statute, and endorses the proclamation upon the backside of the foot thereof; and always keeps the writ of covenant, and note of the fine: and the chirographer shall take but 4*s.* fee for a fine, on pain to forfeit his office, &c. Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 8. 23 Eliz. c. 3. 2 Inst. 468.

Chirurgion. See Surgeon.

Chivalry, (servitium militare) Comes from the Fr. chevalier, and in our law is used for a tenure of lands by knights service; whereby the tenant was bound to perform service in war unto the King, or the mesne lord of whom he held by that tenure. And chivalry was either general or special; general, where it was only in the feoffment that the tenant held per servitium militare, without any specification of serjeanty, escuage, &c. Special, when it was declared particularly by what kind of knight-service the land was held.

For the better understanding of this tenure, it hath been observed, that there is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown by some service; and therefore all our freeholds that are to us and our heirs, are called feuda or feoda, fees, as proceeding from the King, for some small yearly rent, and the performance of such services as were originally laid upon the land at the donation thereof; for as the King gave to the great nobles, his immediate tenants, large possessions for ever, to hold of him for this or that service or rent; so they in time parcelled out to such others as they liked the same lands, for rents and services as they thought good: and these services were by Littleton divided into two sorts, chivalry and socage; the first whereof was martial and military, the other rusticall; chivalry therefore was a tenure of service, whereby the tenant was obliged to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, being of two kinds, either regal, that is held only of the King, or common, where held of a common person: that which might be held only of the King was called franktenure or serjeantia, and was again divided into grand and petit serjeanty; the grand serjeanty was where one held lands of the King by service, which he ought to do in his own person, as to bear the King's banner or spear, to lead his host, or to find a man at arms to fight, &c. Petit serjeanty was when a man held lands of the King, to yield him annually some small thing towards his wars, as a sword, dagger, bow, &c.

Chivalry that might be holden of a common person, was termed scutagium, escuage, that is service of the shield, which was either uncertain or certain; escuage uncertain was likewise twofold, first, where the tenant was bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars, either himself or sending a sufficient man in his place, there to be maintained at his cost so long as was agreed upon between the lord and his first tenant, at the granting of the fee; and the days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of land so holden; as if it extended to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was to follow his lord forty days; and if but to half a knight's fee, then twenty days; if a fourth part, then ten days, &c. and the other kind of this escuage was called castleward, where the tenant was obliged by himself or some other, to defend a castle, so often as it should come to his turn; and there were called escuage uncertain; because it was uncertain how often a man should be called to follow his lord to the wars, or to defend a castle, and what his charge would be therein.

Escuage certain was where the tenure was set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such service; as that a man should pay yearly for every knight's fee twenty shillings, for half a knight's fee ten shillings, or some like rate; and this service, because it is drawn to a certain rent, groweth to be of a mixt nature, not merely socage, and yet socage in effect, being now neither personal service nor uncertain, Littleton. The tenure called chivalry had other condition annexed to it: but there is a great alteration made in these things by the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. whereby tenures by knights service of the king, or any other person, in capite, &c. and the fruits and consequences thereof are taken away and discharged; and all tenures are to be construed and adjudged to be free and common socage, &c.

Chocolate. See Coffee.

Chop-church, (ecclesiarum permutatio) Is a word mentioned in a statute of King Hen. 6. by the sense of which, it was in those days a kind of trade, and by the judges declared to be lawful: but Brooke in his abridgment says, it was only permissible by law: it was without a doubt a nick-name given to those that used to change benefices; as to chop and change is a common expression. 9 Hen. 6. cap. 65. Vide Litera missa omnibus episcopis, &c. contra Choppe-Churches, anno 1391. Spelm. de Con. vol. 2. p. 642.

Choral, (choralis) Signifies any person that by virtue of any of the orders of the clergy, was in ancient time admitted to sit and serve God in the choir; which in Latin is termed chorus: and Mr. Dugdale in his history of St. Paul's Church says, that there were formerly six Chorals belonging to that church.

Chorepiscopi, Suffragan or Rural Bishops, anciently delegated by the prime diocesan; their authority was restrained by some councils, and their office by degrees abolished; lished; after whom the Rural Deans were so commissioned to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, till inhibited by Pope Alexander the Third. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 639.

Chose, (Fr.) A thing; used in the Common law with divers epithets; as chose local, chose transitory, and chose in action. Chose local is such a thing as is annexed to a place, as a mill, and the like: and chose transitory is that thing which is moveable, and may be taken away, or carried from place to place: chose in action is a thing incorporeal, and only a right; as an annuity, obligation for debt, &c. And generally all causes of suit for any debt, duty, or wrong, are to be accounted chores in action: and it seems chose in action may be also called chose in suspense, because it hath no real existence or being, nor can properly be said to be in our possession. Bro. Tit. Chose in Action.

When a man can bring an action for some duty, viz. debt upon bond, or for rent; or action of covenant, or trespass for goods taken away, or such like; these are chores in action: and as they are things whereof a person is not possessed, but is put to his action for recovery of them, they are therefore called chores in action. 1 Lill. Abr. 264. A person disseises me of land, or takes away my goods; my right or title of entry into the lands, or action and suit for it, and so for the goods, is a chose in action: so a debt on an obligation, and power and right of action to sue for the same. 1 Brownl. 33. And a condition and power of re-entry into land upon a feoffment, gift or grant, before the performance of the condition, is of the nature of a chose in action. Co. Litt. 214. 6 Rep. 50. Dyer 244. If one have an advowson, when the church becomes void, the presentation is but as a chose in action, and not grantable: but 'tis otherwise before the church is void. Dyer 296. Where a man hath a judgment against another for money, or a statute, these are chores in action. An annuity in fee to a man and his heirs, is grantable over: but it has been held, that an annuity is a chose in action, and not grantable. 5 Rep. 89. Fitz. Grant, 45. A chose in action cannot be transferred over; nor is it deviseable: nor can a chose in action be a satisfaction, as one bond cannot be pleaded to be given in satisfaction for another; but in equity chores in action may be assignable; and the King's grant of a chose in action is good. Cro. Jac. 170, 371. Chan. Rep. 169.

When bonds are assigned, it is done with power of attorney to receive and sue in the assignor's name; so that though in this case a chose in action is said to be assignable over, yet it amounts to little more than a letter of attorney to sue for the debt. Wood's Inst. 282. A man may authorise another to sue for a debt due by specialty in his name, and by agreement promise it to him when recovered; or he may give, grant or assign the writing, and so deprive himself of the means to recover the debt, though such a debt itself being a chose in action, cannot be regularly assigned over. 1 Shep. Abr. 337. Charters, where the owner of the land hath them in possession, are grantable: a possibility of an interest or estate in a term for years, is near to a chose in action, and therefore may not be granted; but a possibility, joined with an interest, may be a grantable chattel. Co. Litt. 265. * 4 Rep. 66. Moor Ca. 1128. And this the law doth provide to avoid multiplicity of suits, and the subversion of justice, which would follow if these things were grantable from one man to another. Dyer 30. Plowd. 185.

But by release chores in action may be released and discharged for ever: but then it must be to parties and privies in the estate, &c. For no stranger may take advantage of things in action; save only in some special cases; as upon the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 8. Co. Litt. 214. 22w. 9, 85. A chose in action, as an obligation, &c. is not within the Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 7. concerning larceny by servants, in going away with or imbeziling their master's goods, to the value of 40s. And generally these are of no use to any but the owner. Hawk. P. C. 92, 93. But see Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 25. And Black. Com. 2 V. 389, 397, 442. 4 V. 434.

Chrism A consecration of oil and balsam consecrated by the bishop, and used in the Papish ceremonies of baptism, confirmation, and sometimes ordination.

Chrismale, Chrismal, chrifom, the face-cloth, or piece of linen laid over the child's head at baptism, which in ancient times was a perquisite due to the parish priest.—Mulieres sequentes debent offerre chrismalia infantum, nec chrismalia debent alienari, nec in aliquos usus mitti debent, nisi in usus ecclesie. *Statut. Chrismatis denarii, Chrifom-pence, Money paid to the diocesan, or his suffragan, by the parochial clergy, for the chrism consecrated by them about Easter, for the holy uses of the year ensuing. This customary payment being made in Lent near Easter, was in some places called Quadragesimalis, and in others Paschalis and Easter-pence. The bishop's exaction of it was condemn'd by Pope Pius XI. for simony and extortion; and thereupon the custom was released by some of our English bishops: As Robert bishop of Lincoln, by express charter.—Sciatis nos remississe clericis omnibus infra episcopatum Lincolniensem paschalem consuetudinem quam chrismatis denarios vocant.—*Cartular. Christianitatis Curia, The court christian, or ecclesiastical judicature. See Court Christian.

Christianity. As Dr. Robertson very justly observes, with respect to christianity, when first introduced into Europe, it was corrupted. The people did not receive it pure. The presumption of men, had added to the simple and instructive doctrines of christianity, the theories of a vain philosophy, that attempted to penetrate into mysteries, and to decide questions which the limited faculties of the human mind are unable to comprehend or to resolve. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 73, 4. However its influence was very great in freeing mankind from the bondage of the feudal policy. Vide ib. 208, 9. As to offences against christianity, see Black. Com. 4 V. 44. Christianity is part of the law of England. Black. Com. 4 V. 59.

Christians, (primitive) Were averse to the principles of toleration. The reason, as mentioned by Dr. Robertson, was, when the christian revelation declared one supreme Being to be the sole object of religious veneration, prescribed the form of worship most acceptable to him, whoever admitted the truth of it held, of consequence, every other mode of religion to be absurd and impious, (which was not the case among the Heathens). Hence the zeal of the first converts to the christian faith in propagating its doctrines, and the ardour with which they laboured to overturn every other form of worship. Hist. Emp. C. V. 3 V. 334.

Church, (ecclesia) Is a temple or building consecrated to the honour of God and religion, and anciently dedicated to some saint, whose name it assumed; or it is an assembly of persons united by the profession of the same christian faith, met together for religious worship; and if it hath administration of the sacraments and sepulture, it is in law adjudged a church. If the King founds a church, he may exempt it from the ordinary's jurisdiction; but 'tis otherwise in case of a subject.

The manner of founding churches in ancient times was, after the founders had made their applications to the bishop of the diocese, and had his licence; the bishop or his commissioners set up a cross, and set forth the church-yard where the church was to be built; and then the founders might proceed in the building of the church, and when the church was finished, the bishop was to consecrate it; and then, and not before, the sacraments were to be administered in it. Stillingfleet's Ecclesiast. Cases. But by the Common law and custom of this realm, any person who is a good christian, may build a church without licence from the bishop, so as it be not prejudicial to any ancient churches; though the law takes no notice of it as a church, till consecrated by the bishop, which is the reason why church and no church, &c. is to be tried and certified by the bishop. And in some cases, though a church has been consecrated, it must be consecrated again; as in case any murder, adultery, or fornication be committed in it, whereby it is defiled; or if the church be destroyed by fire, &c.

The ancient ceremonies in consecrating the ground on which the church was intended to be built, and of the church

Church itself after it was built, were thus : when the materials were provided for building, the bishop came in his robes to the place, &c. and having prayed, he then perfumed the ground with incense, and the people sung a collect in praise of that saint to whom the church was dedicated ; then the corner-stone was brought to the bishop, which he crossed, and laid for the foundation : and a great feast was made on that day, or on the saint's day to which it was dedicated ; but the form of consecration was left to the discretion of the bishop, as it is at this day.

Some bishops, who have consecrated churches, on entering into them have pronounced the place to be holy, In the name of the Father, &c. then with their retinue of grave divines went round the church, repeating the hundredth psalm, and a form of prayer, concluding, We consecrate this church, and set it apart to thee, O Lord Christ, as holy ground, &c. After which, turning to the communion table, and having bowed to it several times, they pronounced blessings on those who should be benefactors, and curses against those who should prophane that place : and then a sermon hath been preached, and the sacrament administered with more than common ceremony of bowing, kneeling, &c.

A church in general consists of three principal parts, that is, the belfrey or steeple, the body of the church with the isles, and the chancel : and not only the freehold of the whole church, but of the church-yard, are in the parson or rector ; and the parson may have an action of trespass against any one that shall commit any trespass in the church or church-yard ; as in the breaking of seats annexed to the church, or the windows, taking away the leads, or any of the materials of the church, cutting the trees in the church-yard, &c.

The property of the bells, books, and other ornaments, and the goods of the church, is in the parishioners ; but the custody of them is in the church-wardens, who may maintain action of trespass against such as shall wrongfully take them away. 1 Roll. Rep. 255. If a man erect a pew in the church, or hang up a bell, &c. therein, they therefore become church goods, though not expressly given to the church ; and he may not afterwards remove them. The parson only is to give licence to bury in the church ; but for defacing a monument in a church, &c. the builder or heir of the deceased may have an action. 2 Cro. 367. And a man may be indicted for digging up the graves of persons buried, and taking away their burial dresses, &c. The property whereof remains in the party who was the owner when used, and 'tis said an offender was found guilty of felony in this case, but had his clergy. Co. Lit. 113.

Though the parson hath the freehold of the church, he hath not the fee-simple, which is always in abeyance ; but in some respects the parson hath a fee-simple qualified. Litt. 644, 645. The use of the body of the church, and the seats fixed to the freehold, is common to all the parishioners that pay to the repairs thereof. The chancel of the church is to be repaired by the parson, unless there be a custom to the contrary ; and for these repairs, the parson may cut down trees in the church-yard, but not otherwise. 35 Ed. 1. The church-wardens are to see that the body of the church and steeple are in repair ; but not any isle, &c. which any person claims by prescription, to him or his house : concerning which repairs the Canons require every person who hath authority to hold ecclesiastical visitation to view their churches within their jurisdictions once in three years, either in person, or cause it to be done ; and they are to certify the defects to the ordinary, and the names of those who ought to repair them ; and these repairs must be done by the church-wardens, at the charge of the parishioners. Can. 86. 1 Mod. 236. By the Common law, parishioners of every parish are bound to repair the church : but by the Canon law, the parson is obliged to do it ; and so it is in foreign countries. 1 Salk. 164. In London the parishioners repair both the church and the chancel. The Spiritual court may compel the parishioners to repair the church, and excommunicate every one of them till it be repaired ; but those that are willing to contribute shall be absolved till the greater part agree to a tax, when the excommunication is to be taken off ; but the Spiritual Court cannot assess them towards it. 1 Mod. 194. 1 Ventr. 367. For though this court hath power to oblige the parishioners to repair by ecclesiastical censures ; yet they cannot appoint in what sum, or set a rate, for that must be settled by the church-wardens, &c. 2 Mod. 8. Where a church is so much out of repair, that 'tis necessary to pull it down, in such case, upon a general warning to the parishioners, the major part, meeting, may make a rate for pulling it down, and rebuilding it on the old foundation, and it shall be good ; and if any parishioner refuse to pay his proportion, they may libel against him in the Ecclesiastical Court. 2 Mod. 222. And if a church be down, and the parish is increased, the greater part of the parish may raise a tax for the necessary enlarging it, as well as the repairing thereof, &c. 1 Mod. 237. But in some of our books it is said, that if a church falls down the parishioners are not obliged to rebuild it ; though they ought to keep it in due repair. 1 Ventr. 35.

In a case where church-wardens made a rate for repairs of the church, it was adjudged that the parishioners ought to assess the rate, and they are bound to repair the church. 1 Salk. 165. Church rates for repairs, are to be made by the church-wardens and the major part of the parishioners, which shall bind the others, after a general notice given ; and if the parishioners refuse or neglect to meet, upon such notice ; or if on meeting they refuse to make a rate, then the church-wardens and overseers of the poor may make a rate, and levy it upon the inhabitants, being first confirmed by the ordinary or archdeacon. And rates for repairing of churches, &c. are of ecclesiastical cognisance ; and to be recovered in the Ecclesiastical Court : also if a parish is unequally rated, those who are grieved must plead it in the Spiritual Court, being sued there. 1 Ventr. 367. 2 Roll. Abr. 291.

These rates must be made upon the whole parish, and not on particular persons ; and the charge is in respect of the land, upon every occupier, &c. If the owner lives in another parish, he shall be rated for repairs in the parish where the lands lie, and not where he liveth ; for though the charge is upon the person, yet 'tis in regard of his lands : if he let the same by lease, then he shall be charged in respect of the rent reserved, and the farmer shall make up the rest. 2 Roll. Rep. 270.

For church ornaments, utensils, &c. the charge is upon the personal estates of the parishioners ; and for this reason persons must be charged for these, where they live : but though generally lands ought not to be taxed for ornaments, yet by special custom, both lands and houses may be liable to it. 2 Inst. 489. Cro. Eliz. 843. Hutley 131. It has been resolved that no man shall be charged for his land to contribute to the church reckonings, if he do not reside in the same parish. Moor 554. The communion tables are to be kept in repair in churches, and covered in time of divine service with a carpet, &c. And the ten commandments to be set up at the east end of every church or chapel, and other chosen sentences of scripture upon the walls. And at the common charge shall be provided a strong chest with a hole in the upper part thereof, having three keys, of which one shall be kept in the custody of the parson, and the other two by the church-wardens severally ; which chest is to be fixed in a proper place in the church, to collect the alms for the poor ; and the alms shall be quarterly distributed to the poor, in the presence of the chief of the parish. Can. 82, 83.

By statute, churches not above six pounds a year, in the King's books, by assent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, may be united : and in cities and corporations, &c. churches may be united by the bishop, patrons, and chief magistrates, unless the income exceeds 100*l.* per ann. and then the parishioners are to consent, &c. 37 Hen. 8. cap. 21. 17 Car. 2. cap. 3.

For compleading of St. Paul's Church, and repairing Westminster Abbey, a duty of 2*s.* per chaldron on coals is granted ; and the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop of London, Lord Mayor, &c. are appointed Commissioners : and the church-yard is to be inclosed, and no persons build thereon, except for the use of the church. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 14. 1 Ann. cap. 2. Fifty new churches are to be be built in or near London and Westminster, for the building whereof a like duty is granted upon coals, and commissioners appointed to purchase lands, ascertain bounds, &c. The rectors of which churches shall be appointed by the crown, and the first churchwardens and vestrymen &c. are to be elected by the commissioners. 9 Ann. cap. 22. A duty is also granted on coals imported into London, to be appropriated for maintaining of ministers for the fifty new churches. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 23. A minister, by ordination of priesthood, receives authority to preach in the church, though he is nevertheless to have a licence from the bishop of the diocese, &c. If a layman be admitted and instituted to a benefice, and doth administer the sacraments, marry, &c. these acts performed by him during the time he continues parson in fact, are good. 3 Cro. 775.

Ministers are to declare their assent to the thirty-nine articles of religion, &c. and are bound to read morning and evening prayers, on every holyday, on the 5th of November, the 30th of January, and on the 29th of May, as on the Lord's Day. And if any minister shall use any form of church service but such as is in the Book of Common Prayer, &c. he shall forfeit a year's profit of his living, and suffer six months imprisonment for the first offence; and for the second offence be deprived &c. Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. And if a parson, in reading prayers, stand or sit when he is appointed to kneel, or kneel when he should stand, &c. he is punishable by this statute. If any persons deprave the Book of Common Prayer, &c. they shall be imprisoned six months, and forfeit 100 marks. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. And vide 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 1.

Every person is to repair to his parish church every Sunday, on pain of forfeiting 1*s.* for every offence; and being present at any form of prayer used contrary to the Book of Common Prayer, is punished with six months imprisonment, &c. 1 Eliz. cap. 2. 23 Eliz. cap. 1. Persons above sixteen years of age, who absent from church above a month, are to forfeit 20*l.* per month, &c. But protestant dissenters are exempted from penalties, by 1 W. & M. c. 18. And a person is not so bound to go to his parish church, but upon reasonable excuse he may go to another; of which excuse the spiritual courts are judges. 2 Roll. Rep. 438, 455. No man shall cover his head in the church in time of divine service, except he have some infirmity, and then with a cap; and all persons are to kneel and stand, &c. as directed by the Common Prayer during service. Can. 18.

No ill language is to be used, or noise made in churches or church-yards; and persons striking others there, are to be excommunicated, and lose one of their ears: and a man may not lawfully return blows in his own defence in these cases. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 4. Disturbing ministers officiating divine service, incurs three months imprisonment, and a forfeiture of 20*l.* by Stat. 1 M. cap. 3. and 1 W. & M. c. 18. Any person may be indicted for indecent or irreverent behaviour in the church; and those that offend against the acts of uniformity, are punishable either by indictment upon the statute, or by the ordinary, &c. See likewise the following statutes concerning this head, Mag. Chart. 9 Hen. 3. c. 1.—5 Ed. 3.—13 Ed. 1. stat. 2. c. 6.—3 Ed. 1. stat. 2.—21 Ed. 1. c. 3.—9 Ed. 2. stat. 1. c. 10.—50 Ed. 3. c. 5.—1 Ric. 2. c. 5. & 15 R. 2. c. 15.—For statutes concerning the churches of particular places, see the Table to the Statutes at Large, quarto edition, title Churches.

An indictment for not coming to church.

Wilts, ff. THE jurors, &c. That A. B. of M. in the said county, gent. on the day of, &c. in the year of the reign, &c. being of the age of sixteen years and upwards, did not repair to his parish church of M. aforesaid, or to any other church, chapel, or usual place of common prayer and divine service, at any time within the space of one month next after the said day of, &c. in the year above-mentioned, but did willingly and obstinately, without any lawful or reasonable excuse, forbear to do the same, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, in contempt of our said lord the now king and his laws, and against the peace, &c.

Church-wardens, (ecclesie guardiani) Are ancient officers chosen yearly in Easter week, by the minister and parishioners of every parish, to look to and take care of the church and church-yard, and the things belonging to the same.

Under this head it will be proper to consider,

- I. Of the election of church-wardens, and of exemptions from being elected.
- II. Of their interest in the things belonging to the church.
- III. Of their power and duty.
- IV. Of their accounts.

I. As to their election.

They are to be chosen by the joint consent of the parishioners and minister; and by custom the minister may choose one, and the parishioners another; or by custom the parishioners alone may elect both, though it be against the canon. 1 Vent. 267. For

By Can. 89. All church-wardens or questmen in every parish, shall be chosen by the joint consent of the minister and the parishioners, if it may be; but if they cannot agree upon such a choice, then the minister shall choose one, and the parishioners another: and without such a joint or several choice, none shall take upon them to be church-wardens.

But although the greatest part of the parishes in London choose the church-wardens by custom; yet in all the new erected parishes the canon shall take place (unless the act of parliament, in virtue of which any church was erected, shall have specially provided that the parishioners shall choose both;) inasmuch as no custom can be pleaded in such new parishes. Gibf. 215.

In some cases the lord of the manor prescribeth for the appointment of church-wardens: and this shall not be tried in the ecclesiastical court, although it be a prescription of what appertains to a spiritual thing. God. 153.

They are sworn into their offices by the archdeacon; and if the archdeacon refuseth to swear a churchwarden, a mandamus shall issue to compel him. 3 Cro. 551. As the parishioners choose churchwardens, who have a trust reposed in them by the parish as temporal officers, they are the proper judges of their ability to serve, and not the archdeacon who swears them. 5 Mod. 325.

With respect to exemptions concerning this office.

All peers of the realm, by reason of their dignity, are exempt from the office of churchwarden. Gibf. 215. So are all clergymen, by reason of their order. Id. In like manner all parliament men, by reason of their privilege. Id.

If an attorney be made a churchwarden of a parish, he shall have a writ of privilege, shewing his privilege to be discharged thereof, by reason of his attendance in court.

No person living out of the parish, although he occupies lands within the parish, may be chosen churchwarden; because he cannot take notice of absences from church, nor disorders in it, for the due presenting of them. Gibf. 215.

By the 1 W. & M. c. 18. Dissenters being chosen churchwardens may act by deputy. And teachers of congregations taking the oaths and subscribing the declaration, are exempted from this office.

By 6 W. 3. c. 4. Apothecaries are likewise exempted.

By 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. All persons who have prosecuted a felon to conviction, are exempted from the office in the parish where the offence was committed.

II. As to their interest.

Churchwardens are a corporation to sue and be sued for the goods of the church; and they may purchase goods, but not lands, except it be in London, by custom.

In the city of London, by special custom, the churchwardens, with the minister, make a corporation for lands as well as goods; and may as such, hold, purchase and take lands for the use of the church, &c. And there is another

Another custom in London, for the parishioners to choose both churchwardens exclusive of the minister; who is also there excused from repairing the chancel of the church. 2 Cro. 325. 1 Inst. 3. 1 Rel. Abr. 330. They may have appeal of robbery for stealing the goods of the church. 1 Rel. Abr. 393. Cro. Eliz. 179.

But the churchwardens have no right to, or interest in the freehold and inheritance of the church, which alone belongs to the parson or incumbent. Comp. Incumb. 381.

Also Churchwardens cannot release to the prejudice of the church; nor can they dispose of the church goods, without the consent of the vestry. If they waste the goods of the church, the new churchwardens may have actions against them, or call them to account before the ordinary; though the parishioners cannot have an action against them for wasting the church goods, for they must make new churchwardens, who must prosecute the former, &c. 1 Danv. Abr. 788. 2 Cro. 145. Bro. Account 1.

They have such a special property in the organ, bells, parish-books, bible, chalice, surplice, &c. belonging to the church, that for the taking away, or for any damage done any of these, they may bring an action at law, and therefore the parson cannot sue for them in the spiritual court. 1 New Abr. 372.

III. In regard to their power.

They have, with the consent of the minister, the placing the parishioners in the seats of the body of the church, appointing gallery-keepers, &c. reserving to the ordinary a power to correct the same: and in London, the churchwardens have this authority in themselves. Particular persons may prescribe to have a seat, as belonging to them by reason of their estates, as being an ancient messuage, &c. and the seats having been constantly repaired by them: also one may prescribe to any isle in the church, to sit and bury there, always repairing the same. 3 Inst. 202. 2 Cro. 366. If the ordinary displaces a person claiming a seat in a church by prescription, a prohibition shall be granted, &c. 12 Rep. 106. The parson impropriate has a right to the chief seat in the chancel; but by prescription another parishioner may have it. Noy's Rep.

Besides their ordinary power, the churchwardens have the care of the benefice during its vacancy: and as soon as there is any avoidance, they are to apply to the chancellor of the diocese for a sequestration; which being granted, they are to manage all the profits and expences of the benefice for him that succeeds, plough and sow his glebes, gather in tithes, thrash out and sell corn, repair houses, &c. and they must see that the church be duly served by a curate approved by the bishop, whom they are to pay out of the profits of the benefice. 2 Inst. 489. They are to join with the overseers of the poor, in making rates for relief of the poor, setting up trades for employing them, placing out poor apprentices, settling poor persons, &c. And in the execution of their whole office, by statutes 43 Eliz. c. 2. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. 3 W. & M. c. 11, &c.

The churchwardens have no power to make any rate themselves, exclusive of the parishioners, their duty being only to summon the parishioners, who are to meet for that purpose, and when they are assembled, a rate made by the majority present shall bind the whole parish, although the churchwardens voted against it. See Comp. Incumb. 389.

But if the churchwardens give the parishioners due notice, that they intend to meet for that purpose, and the parishioners refuse to come, or being assembled, refuse to make any rate, they may make one without their concurrence; for as they are liable to be punished in the ecclesiastical courts for not repairing the church, it would be unreasonable that they should suffer by the wilfulness and obstinacy of others. 1 Vent. 367. 1 Mod. 79, 194.

The churchwardens, in summoning the parishioners, need not do it from house to house, but a general public summons at the church is sufficient, and the major part of them, that appear upon such summons, will bind the whole parish. 1 Vent. 367. Comp. Incumb. 389.

There may be select vestries elected in parishes to make rates, and take the churchwardens accounts, &c. But those that do not pay to any church-rates have no votes, except the parson or vicar.

Concerning their duty.

The churchwardens are to take care of the repairs of the church; and if they erect, or add any thing new to the same, they must have the consent of the parishioners or vestry; and if in the church, the licence of the ordinary. 2 Inst. 489. 1 Vent. 367.

The churchwardens shall suffer no man to preach within their churches, without producing his licence: and they are to keep the keys of the belfrey, and take care that the bells be not rung without good cause, to be allowed of by the minister and themselves. Can. 50, 80.

Churchwardens are to see that all the parishioners duly resort to their parish church, and there continue during the time of divine service; they are not to permit any to stand idle, walk, or make any noise in the church, or to contend for places, &c. they may apprehend those that disturb the minister, &c. and justify the appealing any disorder in the church or church-yard; they are to chastise disorderly boys, and take off the hats of those who would irreverently keep them on. 1 Saund. 13.

Further, they must search alehouses on Sundays, that there be no persons therein, during the divine service; and execute warrants against those who profane the Lord's Day, &c. Also levy penalties on persons not coming to church, against profaners of the Sabbath in pastimes, tippling, &c. and for drunkenness, cursing and swearing, &c. by divers statutes. And they are to present to the ordinary all things presentable by the ecclesiastical laws, which relate to the church, the parson, and parishioners: these presentments are made upon oath, and usually twice a year, especially at the visitation: and what relates to the church, is chiefly of repairs, and whether there be a box for alms, in the church, a Bible, Common Prayer Book, and Book of Canons, a desk for the reader, cushion for the pulpit, a communion table, table cloth, cups and covers for bread, flagons and font, a register-book, king's arms set up, Lord's prayer, creed and commandments in fair letters, &c.

What concerns the parson is, whether he reads the thirty-nine articles twice a year, and the canons once in the year, preaches every Sunday good doctrine, reads the Common Prayer, celebrates the sacraments, preaches in his gown, visits the sick, catechises children, marries according to law, &c.

And what relates to the parishioners is, whether they come to church, and duly attend the worship of God, if baptism be neglected, women not churched, persons marrying in prohibited degrees, or without banns or licence, alms-houses or schools abused, legacies given to pious uses, &c. They must likewise present crimes and offences, such as drunkenness, fornication, adultery, incest, blasphemy, &c. and by statute popish recusants: and if they refuse to make presentments, the parsons or vicars, &c. may present to the bishop all crimes committed in their parishes. Can. 117. 3 Cro. 291. 1 Vent. 114.

It is their duty to collect the charity-money upon briefs, which are to be read in churches, and the sums collected, &c. to be indorsed on the briefs in words at length, and signed by the minister and churchwardens; after which they shall be delivered, with the money collected to the persons undertaking them, in a certain time, under the penalty of 20*l.* A register is to be kept of all money collected, &c. Also the undertakers in two months after the receipts of the money, and notice to sufferers, are to account before a Master in Chancery, appointed by the Lord Chancellor. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 14. They are to sign certificates of receiving the sacrament by persons, to qualify them to bear offices, &c. And in London, and within the bills of mortality, they must fix fire-cocks, keep engines, &c. in their parishes, under the penalty of 10*l.* For the maintenance whereof the parish is to be assessed: and the first person who brings in a parish engine, or other large engine with a socket, &c. when any fire happens, shall be paid as an encouragement 30*s.* the person that brings in the second engine 20*s.* and the third 10*s.* &c. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 31. 7 Ann. c. 17. They are likewise to levy and receive penalties by particular statutes. 3 C. 1. c. 3. 9 Geo. 2. c. 23. 22 C. 2. c. 8. 16 C. 2. c. 19. 22 C. 2. c. 8. 6 Ann. c. 31. And see 32 Car. 2. c. 2. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27. 11 Geo. 2. c. 26. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. 7 Geo. 3. c. 42.

IV. Concerning their manner of accounting.

At the end of the year the churchwardens are to yield just accounts to the minister and parishioners, and deliver what remains in their hands to the parishioners, or to the new churchwardens: in case they refuse, they may be presented at the next visitation, or the new officers may by process call them to account before the ordinary, or sue them by writ of account at Common law. And if all the parish have allowed their accounts of the church goods, the ordinary may nevertheless call them to account before him too, and punish them if he find cause; but in laying out their money, they are punishable for fraud only, not indiscretion. If their receipts fall short of their disbursements, the succeeding churchwardens may pay them the balance, and place it to their account. 1 Rel. Abr. 121. Can. 89, 109, &c. Disputes arising about churchwardens accounts are to be decided before the ordinary: and for disbursements of any sum not exceeding 40*s.* the churchwardens oath alone is a sufficient proof; but for all sums above, receipts are to be produced, &c. If churchwardens through improvidence, indiscretion or negligence, either waste the church goods in their custody, or much damnify the parish; on proof thereof they may be removed at any time, by the authority of the ordinary. 8 El. 4. 6. 13 Co. 70.

By the Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11. In all actions to be brought in the courts of Westminster, or at the assizes, for money mispent by churchwardens, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be taken and admitted.

Churchwardens are comprehended within the purview of the statutes 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5. and 21 Jac. 1. cap. 12. as to pleading the general issue to actions brought against them, and as to double costs when they have judgment.

But in action on the case against a churchwarden for a false and malicious presentment, though there be judgment for him, yet he shall not have double costs; for the statute does not extend to spiritual affairs. The spiritual court can only order the churchwardens accounts to be audited, but cannot make a rate to reimburse them, because they are not obliged to lay out money before they receive it. Rep. temp. Hardwicke per Annaly. p. 381. Darvson and Wilkinson. Cro. Car. 285, 286. See Church, Highways, Poor.

Church-reve, Is the same with churchwarden, (revere in the Sax. being as much as guardian in the French) the guardian or overseer of the church: the word is now out of use, but is mentioned by Cbaucer on the jurisdiction of archdeacons, viz.

*Of church-reves, and of testaments,
Of contracts and of lack of sacraments.*

Churcheslet, or chirchset, ciricseat, A Saxon word used in Domesday, which is interpreted quasi semen ecclesie, corn paid to the church. Fleta says, it signifies a certain measure of wheat, which in times past every man on St. Martin's day gave to holy church, as well in the times of the Britains as of the English; yet many great persons, after the coming of the Romans, gave that contribution according to the ancient law of Moses, in the name of first fruits; as in the writ of King Canutus sent to the pope is particularly contained, in which they call it chirchsed, as one would say church-seed. Selden's Hist. Tithes, p. 216.

Church-scot, Customary oblations paid to the parish-priest; from which duties the religious sometimes purchased an exemption for themselves and their tenants.

Churtle, ceorle, carl. Was in the Saxon time a tenant at will, of free condition, who held some land of the Thanes, on conditions of rents and services: which ceorles were of two sorts; one that hired the lord's tenementary estate, like our farmers; the other that tilled and manured the demesnes, (yielding work and not rent) and were thereupon called his sockmen or ploughmen. Spelm.

Cinque Ports, (quinque portus) Are those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought to be vigilantly guarded and preserved against invasion: in which respect they have an especial governor, called Lord warden of the cinque ports, and divers privileges granted them, as a peculiar jurisdiction; their warden having not only the authority of an admiral amongst them, but sending out writs in his own name, &c. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 48. 4 Inst. 222.

Cambden tells us, that Kent is accounted the key of England; and that William, called The Conqueror, was the first who made a constable of Dover castle, and warden of the cinque ports, which he did to bring that country under a stricter subjection to his government; but King John was the first who granted the privileges to those ports, which they still enjoy: however, it was upon condition that they should provide a certain number of ships at their own charge for forty days, as often as the king should have occasion for them in the wars, he being then under a necessity of having a navy for passing into Normandy, to recover the dukedom which he had lost. And this service the barons of the cinque ports acknowledged and performed, upon the king's summons, attending with their ships the time limited at their proper costs, and staying as long after as the king pleased at his own charge. Sommer of Rom. Ports in Kent.

The cinque ports, as we now account them, are, Dover, Sandwich, R Romney, Winchelsea, and Rye; and to these we may add Hythe and Hastings, which are reckoned as part or members of the cinque ports: though by the first institution it is said that Winchelsea and Rye were added as members, and that the others were the cinque ports; there are also several other towns adjoining that have the privileges of the ports. These cinque ports have certain franchises to hold pleas, &c. and the king's writs do not run there; but on a judgment in any of the king's courts, if the defendant hath no goods, &c. but in the ports; the plaintiff may get the record certified into Chancery, and from thence sent by mittimus to the lord warden to make execution. 4 Inst. 223. 3 Leon. 3.

The constable of Dover castle is Lord warden of the cinque ports. And there are several courts within the cinque ports; one before the said constable, others within the ports themselves, before the mayors and jurats; another, which is called curia quinque portuum apud Shepway: there is likewise a court of Chancery in the cinque ports, to decide matters of equity; but no original writs issue thence. 1 Danv. Abr. 793. The jurisdiction of the cinque ports is general, extending to personal, real, and mix'd actions: and if any erroneous judgment is given in the cinque ports before any of the mayors and jurats, writ of error lies not in B. R. but it shall be redressed, according to the custom, by bill in nature of a writ of error coram domino custode seu guardiano quinque portuum apud curiam suam, &c. And in these cases the mayor and jurats may be fined, and the mayor removed, &c. 4 Inst. 334. Crompt. Jurisd. 138.

It has been observed, that the cinque ports are not jura regalia, like counties palatine, but are parcel of the county of Kent: so that if a writ be brought against one for land within the cinque ports, and he appears and pleads to it, and judgment is given against him in the Common Pleas, this judgment shall bind him; for the land is not exempted out of the county, and the tenant may waive the benefit of his privilege. Wood's Inst. §19. The cinque ports cannot award process of outlawry. Cro. Eliz. 910. And a quominus lies to the cinque ports. Ibid. 911. If a man is imprisoned at Dover by the lord warden, an habeas corpus may be issued; for the privilege that the king's writ lies not there is intended between party and party, and there can be no such privilege against the king; and an habeas corpus is a prerogative writ, by which the king demands an account of the liberty of the subject. Cro. Jac. 543. 1 Nelf. Abr. 447. Certiorari lies to the cinque ports, to remove indictments; and the jurisdiction that breve dom. regis non currit is only in civil causes between party and party; but this has been held to extend only to indictments dictments before the mayors, barons, &c. as justices of peace, on late statutes, &c. Cro. Car. 252, 253. 3 Hawk. P. C. 286, 287.

Circa, A watch; from which circutor; quatuor circutores monasterii quos alio nomine circas vocant, juxta præceptum sancti Benedicti certis horis circuire debent monasterii officinas.

Circar, A tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archdeacon for visiting the churches. De Fresne.

Circuit, or Circuitry of Action, (circuitus actionis) Is a longer course of proceeding to recover a thing sued for than is needful: as if a person grant a rent-charge of 10*l.* per annum out of his manor of B. and after the grantee disseiseth the grantor of the same manor, who brings an assise and recovers the land, and 20*l.* damages, which being paid, the grantee brings his action for 10*l.* of his rent due during the time of the disseisin, which he must have had if no disseisin had been: this is called circuitry of action, because as the grantor was to receive 20*l.* damages, and pay 10*l.* rent, he might have received but 10*l.* only for damages, and the grantee might have kept the other 10*l.* in his hands by way of retainer for his rent, and so saved his action, which appears to be needless. Terms de Ley. This example shews that an action may be rightfully brought for a debt or duty, and yet be wrong; for that it might have been as well otherwise answered and determined.

Circuits, Certain divisions of the kingdom appointed for the judges to go, twice a year, for administering of justice, in the several counties. These circuits are made in the respective vacations, after Hilary and Trinity terms. See Black. Com. 3 V. 58. and 4 V. 415, 417.

Circumspicte Agatis, Is the title of a statute made anno 13 Ed. 1. relating to prohibitions, prescribing certain cases to the judges, wherein the king's prohibition lies not. 2 Inst. 187.

Circumstantial Evidence, or the doctrine of presumptions, Takes place, next to positive proof: for when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily or usually attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Co. Lit. 373. Black. Com. 3 V. 371.

Circumstantibus, By-standers; and signifies in our law the supplying or making up the number of jurors, if any impanelled appear not, or appearing are challenged by either party, by adding to them so many of those that are present or standing by that are qualified as will serve the turn. Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 6. The act of supplying is usually called a tales de circumstantibus. See Tales.

Citation, (citatio) A summons to appear, applied particularly to process in the spiritual court. The ecclesiastical courts proceed according to the course of the civil and canon laws, by citation, libel, &c. A person is not generally to be cited to appear out of the diocese, or peculiar jurisdiction where he lives; unless it be by the archbishop, in default of the ordinary; where the ordinary is party to the suit, in cases of appeal, &c. And by law a defendant may be sued where he lives, though 'tis for subtracting tithes in another diocese, &c. 1 Nels. 449. By the Stat. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 9. Every archbishop may cite any person dwelling in any bishop's diocese within his province ~~for any offence~~, if the bishop or other ordinary consents, or if the bishop or ordinary, or judge, do not his duty in punishing the offence. Where persons are cited out of their diocese, and live out of the jurisdiction of the bishop, a prohibition or consultation may be granted: but where persons live in the diocese, if when they are cited they do not appear, they are to be excommunicated, &c. The above statute was made to maintain the jurisdiction of inferior dioceses; and if any person is cited out of the diocese, &c. where the Civil or Canon law doth not allow it, the party grieved shall have double damages. If one defame another within the peculiar of the archbishop, he may be punished there; although he dwell in any remote place out of the archbishop's peculiar. Godb. 190.

Citatio ad instantiam Partis, Is mentioned in 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. for laying impositions on proceedings at law.

City, (civitas) By Cowel is a town corporate, which hath a bishop and cathedral church, which is called civitas, oppidum and urbs; civitas in regard it is governed by justice and order of magistracy; oppidum, for that it contains a great number of inhabitants: and urbs, because it is in due form begirt about with walls. But Crompton, in his Jurisdictions, where he reckons up the cities, leaveth out Ely, although it hath a bishop and cathedral church; and puts in Westminster, though it hath not at present a bishop: and Sir Edward Coke makes Cambridge a city; yet there is no mention that it ever was an episcopal see. Indeed it appears by the Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 10. that there was a bishop of Westminster; since which, by 27 Eliz. cap. 5. it is termed a city, or borough: and notwithstanding what the Lord Coke observes of Cambridge, by the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 4. Cambridge is called only a town.

Kingdoms have been said to contain as many cities as they have seats of archbishops and bishops: but according to Blount, city is a word which hath obtained since the conquest; for in the time of the Saxons there were no cities, but all great towns were called burghs, and even London was then stiled London Burgh; as the capital of Scotland is now called Edinburgh. And long after the conquest the word city is used promiscuously with the burgh, as in the charter of Leicester 'tis called both civitas and burgus; which shews that those writers were mistaken, that tell us every city was or is a bishop's fee. And tho' the word city signifies with us such a town corporate as hath usually a bishop and cathedral church; yet 'tis not always so. See Black. Com. 1 V. 114.

As to the antient state of cities and villages, whilst the feudal policy prevailed they held of some great lord, on whom they depended for protection, and were subject to his arbitrary jurisdiction. The inhabitants were deprived of the natural and most unalienable rights of humanity. For various instances thereof, see Robert's Hist. Em. Charles V. 1 V. 31.

The freedom of cities was first established in Italy, principally owing to the introduction of commerce. Ib. 32.

'Twas afterwards gradually introduced into France and other countries of Europe, and in our own country many causes contributed, which a work of this kind will not permit us to enumerate.

Citizens, (cives) Of London, are either freemen, or such as reside and keep a family in the city, &c. and some are citizens and freemen; and some are not, who have not so great privileges as the others: the citizens of London may prescribe against a statute, because their liberties are reinforced by statute. 1 Roll. Rep. 105.

Civil Law, Is defined to be that law which every particular nation, commonwealth or city, has established peculiarly for itself: jus civile est, quod quisque populus sibi constituit Just. Inst. But more strictly the civil law is that which the old Romans used, compiled from the laws of nature and of nations. The twelve tables were also the foundation of this law; which for its great wisdom is as it were the Common law, or the foundation of it, in all well governed kingdoms, a very few only excepted; and no other laws are esteemed comparable to it for its equity. The civil law is either written or unwritten; and the written law is public or private: public, which immediately regards the state of the commonwealth, as the enacting and execution of laws, consultations about war and peace, establishment of things relating to religion, &c. Private, that more immediately hath respect to the concerns of every particular person. The unwritten law is custom introduced by the tacit consent of the people only, without any particular establishment: the authority of it is great, and it is equal with a written law, if it be wholly uninterrupted, and of a long continuance.

The whole civil law is contained in four books or tomes, 1. The code. 2. The pandects or digest. 3. The institutes. 4. The novels or authenticks. The code is divided into twelve books, and was the first book of the civil law, which the Emperor Justinian ordered to be collected: it was published in the year 529, and contains the constitutions, &c. of fifty-six Emperors, and their wise councils. The first book of it treats of religion, priests, &c. B b b ℥c. Other books are upon trade, merchandise, the exchequer, &c. The digest or pandects, was collected from the works and commentaries of the ancient lawyers, some whereof lived before the coming of our Saviour: this tome is divided into fifty books; and upon a more particular division, the whole digest is divided into seven parts: the first part contains the elements of the law, as what is justice, right, &c. The second part treats of judges and judgments: the third part of personal actions, &c. The fourth part of contracts, pawns and pledges: the fifth part of wills, testaments, &c. The sixth part of the possession of goods: the seventh part of obligations, crimes, punishments, &c. The institutes contain a system of the whole body of law, and are an epitome of the digest divided into four books; but sometimes they correct the digest: they are called institutes, because they are of instruction, and shew an easy way to the obtaining a knowledge of the Civil law: but they are not so distinct and comprehensive as they might be, nor so useful at this time as they were at first. The novels or authenticks were published at several times without any method: they are termed novels as they are new laws, and authenticks, being authentically translated from the Greek into the Latin tongue; and the whole volume is divided into nine collations, constitutions or sections, and they again into 168 novels, which also are distributed into certain chapters: the first collation relates to heirs, executors, &c. The second, the state of the church: the third is against bawds: the fourth concerns marriages, &c. The fifth forbids the alienation of the possessions of the church: the sixth shews the legitimacy of children, &c. The seventh determines who shall be witnesses: the eighth ordains wills to be good, though imperfect, &c. And the ninth contains matter of succession in goods, &c.

To those tomes of the Civil law we may add the book of feuds, which contains the customs and services that the subject or vassal oweth to his prince or lord, for such lands or fees as he holdeth of him. The constitutions of the Emperor, are either by a rescript, which is the letter of the Emperor in answer to particular persons who enquire the law of him; or by edict, which the Emperor establishes of his own accord, that it may be generally observed by every subject; or by decree, which the Emperor pronounces between plaintiff and defendant, upon hearing a particular cause. The power of issuing forth rescripts, edicts and decrees, was given to the prince by the lex regia, wherein the people of Rome wholly submitted themselves to the government of one person, viz. Julius Caesar, after the defeat of Pompey, &c. And by this submission the prince could not only make laws, but was esteemed above all coercive power of them. The matters wherein the whole Civil law is generally exercised, relate either to persons in the Common-wealth; or to the things belonging or not belonging to them; or to the actions whereby men claim such things as are due to them by the law, &c. The Civil law is allowed in this kingdom in the two Universities, for the training up of students, &c. In matters of foreign treaties between princes; marine affairs civil and criminal; in the ordering of martial causes; the judgments of ensigns and arms, rights of honour, &c. Vide Treatise of Laws, pag. 243, 396. and Ferrieries Hist. of Civ. Law.

Civil list, To defray the extraordinary charge of the civil list, viz. for paying debts and arrears due to his majesty's Servants, tradesmen, &c. and other uses of his civil government, 1,000,000*l.* was granted by parliament, by Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 16. Vide King's Household.

Clack Wool, Is to cut off the sheep's mark, which makes it weigh lighter; as to force wool, signifies to clip off the upper and hairy part thereof; and to bard it, is to cut the head and neck from the rest of the fleece. Stat. 8 H. 6. cap. 22.

Clades, Clida, cleta, cleia, from the Brit. clie, and the Irish clia, A wattle or hurdle; and a hurdle for penning or folding of sheep, is still in some counties of England called a cley. Paroch. Antiq. p. 575.

Clarendon, (constitutions of) Certain constitutions, made in the reign of Hen. 2. A. D. 1164, in a parliament held at Clarendon, whereby the King checked the power of the Pope, and his Clergy, and greatly narrowed the total exemption they claimed from the secular jurisdiction. Blak. Com. 4 V. 415.

Claretum, A liquor made of wine and honey, clarified or made clear by decoction, &c. which the German, French, and English, called hippocras: and it was from this, the red wines of France were called claret.—Ad hæc etiam in tanta abundantia vinum sic videtur, ut etiam, pigmentum, et claretum mustum et medonem. Girald. Camb. apud Wharton. Ang. Sax. Par. 2. p. 480.

Claim, (clameum) Is a challenge of interest in any thing that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own, as claim by charter, by descent, &c. And claim is either verbal, where one doth by words claim and challenge the thing that is so out of his possession; or it is by an action brought, &c. and sometimes it relates to lands, and sometimes to goods and chattels. Litt. Sect. 420. Where any thing is wrongfully detained from a person, this claim is to be made; and the party making it, may thereby avoid descents of lands, disseisins, &c. and preserve his title, which otherwise would be in danger of being lost. Co. Litt. 250. A man who hath present right or title to enter, must make a claim; and in case of reversions, &c. one may make a claim where he hath right, but cannot enter on the lands: when a person dares not make an entry on land, for fear of being beaten or other injury, he may approach as near as he can to the land, and claim the same; and it shall be sufficient to veil the seisin in him. 1 Inst. 25.

If nothing doth hinder a man having right to land, from entering or making his claim; there he must do so, before he shall be said to be in possession of it, or can grant it over to another: but where the party who hath right, is in possession already, and where an entry or claim cannot be made, it is otherwise. 1 Rep. 157. A claim will divest an estate out of another when the party must enter into some part of the land; but if it be only to bring him into possession, he may do it in view. By claim of lands in most cases is intended a claim with an entry into part of the land, or by a near approach to it. Co. Litt. 252, 254. Poph. 67. One in reversion after an estate for years, or after a statute merchant, staple, or elegit, may enter and make a claim to prevent a descent, or avoid a collateral warranty. And claim of a remainder by force of a condition must be upon the land, or it will not be sufficient. Co. Litt. 202.

If a man seised of lands in right of his wife, make a seoffment in fee on condition, and the husband dieth, and then the condition is broken, and the heir enters; in this case the wife need not claim to get possession of her estate, for the law doth vest it in her without any claim. Co. Litt. 202. 8 Rep. 43. The claim of the particular tenant, shall be good for him in reversion or remainder; and of him in reversion, &c. for particular tenant: so claim of a copyholder, will be good for the lord, &c. But if tenant for years, in a court of record claim the fee of his land, it is a forfeiture of his estate. Plowd. 359. Co. Litt. 251. A claim may be made by the party himself; and sometimes by his servants or deputy: and a guardian in focage, &c. may make a claim or enter in the name of the infant that hath right, without any commandment. Co. Litt. 245.

Claim or entry should be made as soon as may be, and by the Common law it is to be within a year and a day after the disseisin, &c. and if the party who hath unjustly gained the estate, do afterwards occupy the land, in some cases an assise, trespass, or forcible entry may be had against him. Litt. Sect. 426, 430. If a fine is levied of lands, strangers to it are to enter and make a claim within five years, or be barred: infants after their age, feme covert after the death of their husbands, &c. have the like time, by Stat. 1 R. 3. cap. 7. If a disseisor levy a fine, and the disseisee enters his claim in the record of the foot of the fine, this is not such a claim as shall avoid the Statute. 4 Hen. 7. cap. 24. 1 Lill. Abr. 270. See the Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. §. 16. and Continual Claim.

Claim of Liberty, Is a suit or petition to the King in the Court of Exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the King's Attorney General. Co. Ent. 93.

Clamea admittenda in Itinere per Itinomatum, A writ by which the King commands the justices in Eyre to admit a person's claim by attorney who is employed in the King's service, and cannot come in his own person, Reg. Orig. 19.

Clap-board, Is board cut in order to make casks or vessels; which shall contain three foot and two inches at least in length: and for every fix ton of beer exported, the same cask, or as good, or 200 of clap-boards shall be imported, by statute 35 El. c. 11.

Clarigarius Tringum, An herald at arms. Blount.

Claro, A trumpet. Statimque clangebant clariones & tubæ. Knighted, anno 1346.

Classarius, A seaman, or soldier serving at sea.—Omnesque ejus capitaneos, milites & classarios, &c. Chart. Carol. 5. Imperator. Thomæ Comit. Surr. dat. in urbe Londoniensi, 8 Junii 1522.

Claud, (Brit.) A ditch: Claudere, to enclose, or turn open fields into inclosures.—Dedi & concessi totam culturam ad claudendum & faciendum quicquid inde diis canonicis placuerit. Paroch. Antiq. 236.

Claves Insule, Is a term used in the Isle of Man, where all ambiguous and weighty cases are referred to twelve persons, whom they call claves insule, i. e. the keys of the island.

Clavia. In the inquisition of serjeanties in the 12th and 13th years of King John, within the counties of Essex and Hertford; Boydin Aylet tenet quatuor lib. terræ in Bradwell, per manum Willielmi de dono per serjeantiam clavic, viz. By the serjeanty of the club or mace. Brady's Append. Introduct. to Eng. Hist. 22.

Clavigeratus, A treasurer of a church.—Aliter Willielmus Wallingford clavigeratus. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 184.

Claufe Rolls, (rotuli clausi) Contain all such matters of record as were committed to close writs: these rolls are preserved in the Tower.

Claustura, Bruthwood for hedges and fences. King Henry 3. gave to the prior and canons of Chetwode, quinque carucatas claustræ ad prædictæ terræ claustrum sustinendum. Paroch. Antiq. 247.

Clausum fregit, Signifies in our law as much as action of trespass; and it is a writ so called, because the defendant is summoned thereby to answer Quare clausum fregit of the plaintiff, that is why he did such a trespass. It is the course of the Common Pleas, to declare in actions (especially upon an assumpsit or the like) upon a quare clausum fregit, as they do on a latitat in the King's Bench. 2 Vent. 192, 259. But by the Lord Clarendon's orders in Chancery, cursitors of that court are not to make writs of clausum fregit, &c. in London, without special warrant from the Lord Chancellor, or Master of the Rolls, unless it appear by affidavit that the same is the proper cause of action, &c. In C. B. a pone in trespass, (and here the proceedings are by præcipe or pone) according to the ancient course, is made out thus: Wiltis, ff. ff. A. B. sec. &c. tunc pone C. D. nuper de, &c. de placito quare vi & armis clausum & domum ipsius A. fregit & alia enormia ei intulit, ad grave dampn. ipsius A. et contra pacem. This is delivered to the filizer of the county to draw out the capias, &c. And debt may be added to it, viz. pone, &c. C. D. nuper de, &c. in com. tuo clausum freg. apud, &c. & aliam in debito pro 50 l. &c.

Clausum Pasche, (Stat. regim. 1.) In crastino clausi pasche, or in crastino pasche pasche, which is all one, that is the morrow of the utis of Easter. 2 Inst. 157. Clausum pasche, i. e. Dominica in albis; sic dictum, quod pascha claudat. Blount.

Clausura Heye, The enclosure of a hedge.—Johannes Stanley ar. clamat quod ipse & barones sui sunt quieti de clausura heyæ de Macclesfield, scil. clausura unius rodæ terre circiter hayam prædictæ. Rot. Plac. in itinere apud Cestriam, ann. 14 H. 7.

Claw, A close, or final measure of land.—Unam elawm terræ cum pertinentiis. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. pag. 250.

Clepto, This word is taken for a rogue or thief. Howden anno 946.

Clergy, (clerus) Signifies the assembly or body of clerks or ecclesiasticks, being taken for the whole number of those who are de clero domini, of our Lord's lot or share, as the tribe of Levi was in Juda; and are separate from the noise and bustle of the world, that they may have leisure to spend their time in heavenly meditation and prayer.

Sometimes clergy is used for a plea to an indictment of felony, &c. being an ancient privilege of the church, where a priest or one in orders is arraigned of felony, before a secular judge, who may pray his clergy; which is as much as if he prayed to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected against him. Stamf. P. C. lib. 2. cap. 41. Anciently the clergy strongly insisted that by the law of God their persons were so sacred, that they could not, without a violation of that law, be conveyed before, and much less be punished by any secular judge; but it hath been observed that this is not warranted by scripture: though all persons in holy orders have this privilege from the Canon law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 337. It is said by Lord Chief Justice Hale, that anciently princes converted to christianity, in favour of the clergy, and for encouraging them in their offices and employments, did grant to them very bountiful privileges; as 1st, An exemption of places consecrated to religious duties from arrests for crimes, which was the original of sanctuaries. 2dly, The exemption of their persons from criminal proceedings, in some cases capital before secular judges; and this was the true original of the privilegium clericale: the clergy increasing in wealth, power and interest, afterwards set up for themselves; and that which they obtained by the favour of princes and states at first, they now began to claim as their right, and that of the highest nature jure divino; and by their canons and constitutions, procured vast extensions of those exemptions. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 323.

As to the clergy in general, they are regular or secular: those are regular, which live under certain rules, being of some religious order, and are called men of religion, or the religious: such as all Abbots, Priors, Monks, &c. The secular are those that live not under any certain rules of the religious orders; as Bishops, Deans, Parsons, Vicars, &c. And although the clergy claimed an exemption from all secular jurisdiction, yet Mat. Paris tells us, that soon after William the First had conquered Harold, he subjected the bishopricks and abbeyes who held per baroniam, that they should be no longer free from military service; and for that purpose he in an arbitrary manner registered how many soldiers every bishoprick and abbey should provide, and send to him and his successors in time of war; and having placed these registers of ecclesiastical servitude in his treasury, those who were aggrieved, departed out of the realm: but the clergy were not, till then, exempted from all secular service; because by the laws of King Edgar they were bound to obey the secular magistrate in three cases, viz. Upon any expedition to the wars, and to contribute to the building and repairing of bridges, and of castles for the defence of the kingdom. 'Tis probable that by expedition to the wars, it was not at that time intended they should personally serve, but contribute towards the charge: one they must do; as appears by the petition to the King, anno 1267, viz. Ut omnes clerici tenentes per baroniam vel feudum laicum, personaliter armati procederent contra regios adversarios, vel tantum servitium in expeditione regis invenirent, quantum pertineret ad tantam terram vel tenementum. But their answer was, that they ought not to fight with the military, but with the spiritual sword, that is with prayers and tears; that they were to maintain peace and not war, and that their baronies were founded on charity; for which reason they ought not to perform any military service. Blount.

That the clergy had greater privileges and exemptions at Common law than the laity is certain; for they are confirmed to them by Magna Charta, and other ancient statutes; but these privileges are in a great measure lost, the clergy being included under general words in later statutes; so that clergymen are liable to all public charges imposed by act of parliament, where they are not particularly excepted. Indeed they are not at this day to undergo temporal offices, as the office of sheriff, constable, &c.

Ec. (though they are sometimes in the commission of the peace, in which commission they may either act as justices, or not act at their pleasure) nor are they to serve on juries, or obliged to appear at turns and leets; or to be pressed to serve in the wars in person, although by statutes they are compellable to contribute to the charge of a war, and to musters of the militia: their bodies are not to be taken upon statutes merchants or staple, Ec. for the writ to take the body of the consor is si laicus sit; and if the sheriff or any other officer arrest a clergyman upon any such process, it is said an action of false imprisonment lies against him that does it, or the clergyman arrested may have a superfedeas out of the Chancery.

In action of trespass, account, Ec. against a person in holy orders, wherein process of capias lies, if the sheriff return that the defendant is clericus beneficiatus nullum habens laicum sedum ubi summoneri potest; in this case the plaintiff cannot have a capias to arrest his body; but the writ ought to issue to the bishop, to compel him to appear, Ec. But on execution had against such clergyman, a sequestration shall be had of the profits of his benefice. Clergymen may not be arrested in the church, or churchyard, while attending on divine service, Ec. on pain of imprisonment, and ransom at the King's pleasure, and likewise to make agreement with the party: and he that beats a clergyman, may be obliged to do penance in the Spiritual Court. But these are all the privileges remaining on civil accounts: though by the Common law, they were to be free from the payment of tolls, in all fairs and markets, as well for all the goods gotten upon their church livings, as for all goods and merchandises by them bought to be spent upon their rectories; and they had several other exemptions, Ec. These privileges, for the most part, have been allowed the clergy, that they might with the more freedom attend the service of God and religion, and be respected as they ought; and therefore they are not to undertake any secular business, by which they may be diverted from their duty, or be brought into contempt.

They are used like other men in criminal cases; except as to burning in the hand for felony, from which upon producing of their orders, or the ordinary's certificate, they ought to be freed: and though they have had the privilege of the clergy for a felony, yet they may again have their clergy, and so cannot a layman. But see Stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 1. In ancient times clergymen convicted of crimes, were delivered over to the ordinary, to be punished by the ecclesiastical laws; but this privilege is long since abolished, nor was it ever allowed in treason or sacrilege. Wood's Inst. 24. Parson's Conc. 145, Ec. 2 Inst. 4, 58, Ec. Black. Com. 4 V. 358.

Benefit of clergy, we have already said is an ancient privilege, where one in orders claimed to be delivered to his ordinary to purge himself of a felony. And this purgation was to be by his own oath affirming his innocence, and the oaths of twelve compurgators as to their belief of it, before a jury of twelve clerks: if the clerk failed in his purgation, he was deprived of his character, whereby he became a mere layman, or he was to be kept in prison till a pardon was obtained: but if he purged himself, he was set at liberty. Sometimes the delivery to the ordinary was without purgation, as upon attainder by confession of the felony, or by verdict, where the felony was notorious, and then the clerk was to be degraded, or kept in prison by the ordinary, Ec. though in these cases the ordinaries would frequently proceed to purgation. But purgation is now taken away by Stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 7. which enacts that where an offender is admitted to his clergy, after burning in the hand, he shall not be delivered to the ordinary, but shall be enlarged by the court, Ec. And the benefit of clergy, and burning in the hand, comes in the place of purgation at Common law.

In ancient times in the King's courts where felonies were determined, the bishop or his deputy were to attend to inform the court whether the felon could read as a clerk or not; but the court was still to judge of his sufficiency. Since the Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7. Every man to whom benefit of clergy was granted, hath been put to read at the bar after found guilty, and convicted of felony, and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner or deputy standing by did say, — Legit ut clericus; or otherwise he was to be hanged. But reading at last, as well as purgation, is wholly laid aside; for by the 5 Ann. c. 6. if any person convicted of such felony, for which he ought to have the benefit of the clergy, doth pray the benefit of this act, he shall not be required to read, but shall be punished ~~as a~~ convicted. A lord of parliament shall have the benefit of his clergy, though he cannot read, and without burning in the hand, for the first time only; and the King may pardon the burning of the hand in others, which is not so much in nature of a punishment, as a mark to notify that the person may have his clergy but once.

But he shall not be ousted of his clergy, by the bare mark in his hand, or by a parol averment, without the record testifying it, or a transcript thereof, according to the following statutes. 2 H. H. 373.

By stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 14. The clerk of the crown, or of the peace, or of assize, shall certify a transcript briefly of the tenor of the indictment, outlawry, or conviction, and attainder, into the King's Bench in 40 days: And the clerk of the crown, when the judges of assize, or justices of the peace write to him for the names of such persons, shall certify the same, with the causes of the conviction or attainder.

Another method is given by the stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9. sect. 7. which enacts, that the clerk of the crown, clerk of the peace, or clerk of assize, where a person admitted to clergy shall be convicted, shall at the request of the prosecutor, or any other on the King's behalf, certify a transcript briefly and in few words, containing the effect and tenor of the indictment and conviction, of his having the benefit of clergy, and the addition of the party, and the certainty of the felony and conviction, to the judges where such person shall be indicted for any subsequent offence.

Also it seems, that if the party deny that he is the same person, issue must be joined upon it, and it must be found upon trial that he is the same person, before he can be ousted of clergy. 2 H. H. 373.

The privilege of clergy is said to have its beginning from an encroachment of the Pope upon the temporal power, in behalf of the clergy, whom he endeavoured to exempt from the jurisdiction of lay judges in case of life and member; which the temporal courts would not yield to, but only in part: and first they would indict clerks for felony, as well as others, and proceed thereon till the ordinary did demand them; and if the ordinary would not demand them, the King's courts proceeded to conviction, attainder and execution; and if the ordinary did claim clerks before conviction, then an inquisition was taken whether the party was guilty or not; and if acquitted, he was discharged; but if found guilty, then delivered to the ordinary, Ec. The privilege so restrained was confirmed and established by the statute of Westm. 1. cap. 2. and allowed by divers other acts of parliament; and though originally the clergy never intended that any should have that privilege, but those who were in holy orders; yet afterwards they extended it to those who were not strictly in orders, but were assistants to them in doing divine offices. And as to laymen being admitted to this privilege, it hath been observed that in those days few were bred to literature, but those who were actually in orders, or educated for that purpose; and therefore the way of trial whether one was a clerk or no, was by reading, of which the court was judge; for if he could not read, the court would not deliver him as a clerk, though the ordinary did claim him; and if he did read, he should be allowed as a clerk, though the ordinary refused him: and reading being the way of trial, whether a man was a clerk or not, without further examination into any other qualification, by an equitable construction of the statutes that established and extended this privilege, all persons that so approved themselves by reading, were allowed to be clerks. Linwood 92, 100. Kel. 180.

It appears by our books that laymen that could read had the privilege of clergy since the 25 Ed. 3. which allowance never was condemned in parliament, or complained of as a grievance, but rather approved of: and by the 18 Eliz. c. 7. all persons as well lay as spiritual, have have a right to the benefit of that statute, for the first offence, in the same manner as clergymen. Though it was anciently the usual method for the ordinary to demand the criminal as his clerk, before the court allowed him the benefit of his clergy; yet there was no necessity for such demand, but the court might without it admit a person to the benefit of clergy, on sufficient evidence of his being a clerk, as upon producing letters of orders, or reading as a clerk, &c. except he appeared to have been guilty of sacrilege, or of breaking the prison of the ordinary; in which cases it is said to have been at the discretion of the ordinary, whether he should have his clergy or not: and as there is no necessity that the ordinary should demand the benefit of the clergy for a clerk; so neither is there any that the prisoner himself should demand it, where it sufficiently appears to the court that he hath a right to it, in respect of his being in orders, &c. In which case, if the prisoner does not demand it, it is left to the discretion of the judge, either to allow, or not allow it him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 359. Those who demand the benefit of clergy, are to plead, and put themselves upon trial; but after a clerk hath put himself upon trial, and the inquest are charged with him, some writers tell us, that he may, if he desire it, be admitted to his clergy before the jury come back; and shall not forfeit his goods, unless they find him guilty. Ibid. 358.

This claim of clergy might formerly be made on arraignment, or as soon as the prisoner was brought to the bar: afterwards it could not be claimed till after conviction, because it is for the advantage of the King as to the forfeiture of the lands and goods of the criminal convict, and for the advantage of the party himself to make his challenges to the inquest; and perhaps he may be acquitted, and then he will not need this privilege. 2 Inst. 164, 633. At Common law, if the party had not demanded his clergy before conviction, he lost it: but in the time of H. 6. an alteration was made in the method of allowing clergy, viz. That the party indicted or appealed, was to answer to the felony, and after conviction, upon his demand the judge to allow him his clergy; which course has been ever since observed. Kel. 100. Clergy may be demanded after judgment given against a person, whether of death, &c. and even under the gallows, if there be a proper judge there, who has power to allow it. 2 Hawk. 357.

Persons admitted to their clergy, may be continued in prison as a further punishment, not exceeding one year. 18 El. cap. 7.

By stat. 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11. Persons convicted of offences within benefit of clergy (except receivers and buyers of stolen goods) may, instead of being whipped and burnt in the hand, be transported for seven years.

A person admitted to his clergy, forfeits all his goods that he hath at the time of the conviction. 2 H. H. 388.

But presently, upon burning in the hand, he ought to be restored to the possession of his lands, and from thenceforth to enjoy the profits thereof. 2 H. H. 388.

Also, it restores him to his credit; and consequently enables him to be a good witness. 2 Hawk. 364.

And it is holden, that after a man is admitted to his clergy, it is actionable to call him felon; because his offence being pardoned by the statute, all the infamy and other consequences of it are discharged. 2 Hawk. 365.

Clergy is never allow'd by the Civil law; so that pirates, &c. shall not have clergy. 1 Nelf. Abr. 449. The Common law did not deny clergy but in certain cases; as in high treason, or sacrilege; where a person was convicted of heresy; was a Turk, Jew, or Infidel, &c. Also women are not allow'd it; but this is altered by Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9. By statutes, clergy is denied in a great many felonies; though it is allowed in all cases where not expressly taken away. And where clergy is taken away expressly by any statute, the offence must be laid in the indictment to be against that very statute, and the words of it, or the offender shall have his clergy. Kel. 104. H. P. C. 231. In what cases the benefit of clergy is yet allowed, and in what cases it is taken away by several statutes, see title Felony, &c. and Table to Statutes, same title, &c.

Clerico admittendo, Is a writ directed to the bishop, for admitting a clerk to a benefice, upon a ne admittat tried and found for the party that procures the writ. Reg. Orig. 31. If a parson recover a benefice, the patron may have this writ to the bishop, though the six months are past, if the church is void, &c. And this ancient writ begins thus: Rex venerabili in Christo patri, &c. Cum A. B. de, &c. in curia nostra recuperasset versus nos presentationem suam ad vicariam de, &c. vobis mandamus quod ad presentat. ipsius A. B. ad vicariam idoneam personam admittatis, &c.

Upon a presentation to a benefice recovered in a quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, the execution is by this writ; directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring them to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. Black. Com. 3 V. 413.

Clerico infra sacros Ordines constituto, non Eligendo in Officium, Is a writ directed to those who have thrust a bailliwick, or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him. Reg. Orig. 143.

Clerico capto per Statutum Mercatorum, &c. A writ for the delivery of a clerk out of prison, who is taken and imprisoned upon the breach of a statute merchant. Reg. Orig. 147.

Clerico convicto commissio Gaolæ in defectu Ordinarii deliberando, Is an ancient writ that lay for the delivery of a clerk to his ordinary, that was formerly convicted of felony, by reason his ordinary did not challenge him according to the privileges of clerks. Reg. Orig. 69.

Clerk, (clericus) In the most general signification, is one that belongs to the holy ministry of the church; under which, where the Canon law hath full power, are not only comprehended sacerdotes and diaconi; but also subdiaconi, lectores, acolyti, exorcistæ and ostiarii: but the word has been anciently used for a secular priest; in opposition to a religious or regular. Paro. b. Antiq. 171. And is said to be properly a minister or priest, one who is more peculiarly called in sortem domini. Blount.

Clerk, In another sense denotes a person who practises his pen in any court, or otherwise; of which clerks there are various kinds, in several offices, &c. As the officers of the courts of law were formerly often clergymen, hence it is said they go under the term of clericus, or clerk. And Temp. Ed. 1. Johannes Sawell, clericus domini regis, was supposed to signify secretary or clerk of his council. Antiq. Nottinghamsh. 317.

Clerk of the Mts, Is an officer in the navy office, whose business is to record all orders, contracts, bills, warrants, &c. transacted by the lord high admiral, or lords commissioners of the admiralty, and commissioners of the navy; and is mentioned in the Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 5. And 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11.

Clerk of Affidavits, In the court of Chancery, is an officer that files all affidavits made use of in court.

Clerk of the Assise, Is he that writes all things judicially done by the justices of assise in their circuits. Cromp. Jurisd. 227. This officer is associated to the judge in commission of assise, to take assises, &c.

Clerk of the Bails, An officer belonging to the court of King's Bench. He files the bail pieces taken in that court, and attends for that purpose.

Clerk of the Check, Is an officer in the King's court, so called, because he hath the check and controlment of the yeomen of the guard, and all other ordinary yeomen belonging either to the King, Queen, or prince; giving leave, or allowing their absence in attendance, or diminishing their wages for the same: he also by himself or deputy takes the view of those that are to watch in the court, and hath the setting of the watch. 33 H. 8. c. 12. Also there is an officer of the same name in the King's navy at Plymouth, Deptford, Woolwich, Chatham, &c. 19 Car. 2. c. 1.

Clerk of the Crown, (clericus coronæ) An officer in the King's Bench, whose function is to frame, read and record all indictments against offenders there arraigned or indicted of any publick crime. And when divers persons are jointly indicted, the clerk of the crown shall take but one fee, viz. 2s. for them all. Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 10. He is otherwise termed clerk of the crown-office, and exhibits informations, by order of the court, for divers offences: And on informations exhibited in the crown-office, for trespass, battery, &c. Recognisances are to be entered into for the informer to prosecute with effect, &c. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22.

Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, Is an officer in that court who continually attends the Lord Chancellor in person or by deputy: he writes and prepares for the Great Seal, special matters of state by commission, or the like, either immediately from his Majesty's orders, or by order of his council, as well ordinary as extraordinary, viz. commissions of lieutenancy, of justices of assize, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, and of the peace, with their writs of association, &c. Also all general pardons, at the King's coronation; or in parliament, where he sits in the Lords house in parliament time; and into whose office the writs of parliament, with the names of knights and burgesses elected thereupon, are to be returned and filed. He hath likewise the making out of all special pardons; and writs of execution upon bonds of statute staple forfeited; which was annexed to his office in the reign of Queen Mary, in consideration of his chargeable attendance.

Clerk of the Declarations, An officer of the court of King's Bench, that files all declarations in causes there depending, after they are ingross'd, &c.

Clerk of the Deliberies, Is an officer in the Tower of London, who exercises his office in taking of indentures for all stores, ammunition, &c. issued from thence.

Clerk of the Errors, (clericus errorum) In the court of Common Pleas, transcribes and certifies into the King's Bench the tenor of the records of the cause or action, upon which the writ of error, made by the curfitor, is brought there to be heard and determined. The clerk of the errors in the King's Bench, likewise transcribes and certifies the records of causes in that court into the Exchequer, if the cause or action were by bill: if by original, the Lord Chief Justice certifies the record into the house of peers in parliament, by taking the transcript from the clerk of the errors, and delivering it to the Lord Chancellor, there to be determined, according to the statutes 27 Eliz. c. 8. and 31 Eliz. c. 1. The clerk of the errors in the Exchequer also transcribes the records, certified thither out of the King's Bench, and prepares them for judgment in the court of Exchequer Chamber, to be given by the Justices of C. B. and Barons there. Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 2. 20 Car. 2. c. 4.

Clerk of the Essoins, Is an officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who keeps the essoins rolls; and the essoins roll is a record of that court: he has the providing of parchment, and cutting it out into rolls, marking the numbers thereon: and the delivery out of all the rolls to every officer of the court; the receiving of them again when they are written, and the binding and making up the whole bundles of every term; which he doth as servant of the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice of C. B. is at the charge of the parchment of all the rolls, for which he is allowed; as is also the Chief Justice of B. R. besides the penny for the seal of every writ of privilege and outlawry, the seventh penny taken for the seal of every writ in court under the green wax, or petit seal; the said Lord Chief Justices having annexed to their offices or places, the custody of the said seals belonging to each court.

Clerk of the Excheats, (clericus excheatorum) A clerk or officer belonging to the Exchequer, who every term receives the excheats out of the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer's office, and writes them out to be levied for the King: and he makes schedules of such sums excheated as are to be discharged.

Clerk of the Hanaper, or Hamper, Is an officer in the Chancery, whose office is to receive all the money due to the King, for the seals of charters, patents, commissions and writs; as also fees due to the officers for inrolling and examining the same. He is obliged to attendance on the Lord Chancellor daily in the term time, and at all times of sealing, having with him leather bags, wherein are put all charters, &c. After they are sealed, those bags, being sealed up with the Lord Chancellor's private seal, are delivered to the controller of the hanaper, who upon receipt of them, enters the effect of them in a book, &c. This hanaper represents what the Romans termed fiscum, which contained the Emperor's treasure: and the Exchequer was anciently so called, because in eo reconderentur hanapi & scutrea cateraque vasa quæ in censum & tributum persolvi solebant; or it may be for that the yearly tribute which princes received was in hampers or vessels full of money. There being an arrear of 10,590*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* of several antient fees and salaries, &c. payable out of this office; and there being a remainder of 13,698*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* of the six-penny stamp-duty on writs granted for relief of the suitors of the court of Chancery; it was enacted by the Stat. 23 G. 2. c. 25. that thereout the 10,590*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* should be paid to the creditors of this office. That the said duty should be made perpetual; and thereout 3000*l.* per annum should be paid to the clerk of the hanaper, that the residue of the 13,698*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* should be laid out in government securities, and the interest paid to the clerk of the hanaper, who should pay 1,200*l.* to the Master of the Rolls. And that in case the revenue of this office to augmented, should be more than sufficient to pay all fees, salaries, &c. the clerk should account for the surplus.

Clerk of the Inrollments, Is an officer of the Common Pleas, that inrolls and exemplifies all fines and recoveries, and returns writs of entry, summons and seisin, &c.

Clerk of the Juries, (clericus juratorum) An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who makes out the writs of habeas corpora and distringas, for the appearance of juries; either in that court, or at the assizes, after the jury or panel is returned upon the venire facias: he also enters into the rolls the awarding of these writs; and makes all the continuances from the going out of the habeas corpora until the verdict is given.

Clerk Controller of the King's House, Is an officer in the King's court, that hath authority to allow or disallow charges and demands of purfivants, messengers of the Green Cloth, &c. He hath likewise the oversight of all defects and miscarriages of any of the inferior officers; and hath a right to sit in the counting-house, with the superior officers, viz. the lord steward, treasurer, controller, and cofferer of the household, for correcting any disorders. 33 H. 8. c. 12.

Clerk Marshal of the King's House, An officer that attends the marshal in his court, and records all his proceedings, 33 H. 8. c. 22.

Clerk of the King's Silver, (clericus argenti regis) Is an officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, to whom every fine is brought after it hath passed the office of the custos brevium, and by whom the effect of the writ of covenant is entered into a paper-book; according to which all the fines of that term are recorded in the rolls of the court. And the entry is in this form: Wills, ff. A. B. dat domino regi dimidiam marcam, &c. pro licentia concordandi cum C. D. pro talibus terris in, &c. & habet per chirographum per pacem admissum, &c. After the King's silver is entered, it is accounted a fine in law, and not before.

Clerk of the King's Great Wardrobe, An officer of the King's household, that keeps an account or inventory of all things belonging to the royal wardrobe. Stat. 1 E. 4. c. 1.

Clerk of the Market, (clericus mercati hospitii regis) Is an officer of the King's house, to whom is belongs to take charge of the King's measures, and keep the standards of them, which are examples of all measures throughout the land; as of ells, yards, quarts, gallons, &c. And of weights, bushels, &c. And to see that all weights and measures in every place be answerable to the said standard: of which office you may read in Flora, lib. 2. cap. 8, 9, 10, &c. Touching this officer's duty, there are also divers statutes, as 13 R. 2. cap. 4. and 16 R. 2. c. 3. by which every clerk of the market is to have weights and measures with him when he makes assay of weights, &c. mark'd according to the standard; and to seal weights and measures, under penalties. The 16 Car. 1. c. 19. enacts, That clerks of the market of the King's or Prince's household, shall only execute their offices within the verge; and head officers are to act in corporations, &c. The clerks of markets have generally power to hold a court, to which end they may issue out process process to sheriffs and bailiffs to bring a jury before them; and give a charge, take presentments of such as keep or use false weights and measures; and may set a fine upon the offenders, &c. 4 Instr. 274. But if they take any other fee or reward than what is allowed by statute, &c. or impose any fines without legal trial; or otherwise misbehave themselves, they shall forfeit 5*l.* for the first offence, 10*l.* for the second, and 20*l.* for the third offence, on conviction before a justice of peace, &c. Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 19.

Clerk of the Nichils, or Nibils (clericus nibilorum) An officer of the court of Exchequer, who makes a roll of all such sums as are nibiled by the sheriffs upon their estreats of green wax, and delivers the same into the remembrancer's office, to have execution done upon it for the king. See Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 13. Nibils are issues by way of fine or amercement.

Clerk of the Ordinance, Is an officer in the Tower, who registers all orders touching the king's ordinance.

Clerk of the Outlawries, (clericus outlawiarum) An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, being the servant or deputy to the King's Attorney General, for making out writs of capias utlagatum, after outlawry; the King's Attorney's name being to every one of those writs.

Clerk of the Paper-Office, Is an officer in the court of King's Bench, that makes up the paper-books of special pleadings and demurrers in that court.

Clerk of the Papers, An officer in the Common Pleas; who hath the custody of the papers of the warden of the Fleet, enters commitments and discharges of prisoners, delivers out day-rules, &c.

Clerk of a Parish. It was held, that a parish clerk is a mere layman, and ought to be deprived by them that put him in, and no other; and if the ecclesiastical court meddle with deprivation of the parish clerk, they incur a præmunire, and the canon, which wills that the parson shall have election of the parish clerk, is merely void to take away the custom that any had to elect him. 2 Brownl. 38. Pasch. 8 Jac. C. B. Gaudy v. Newman.

Resolved, that if the parish clerk misdeemean himself in his office, or in the church, he may be sentenced for it in the ecclesiastical court to excommunication, but not to deprivation. 2 Brownl. 38. Pasch. 8 Jac. C. B. Gaudy v. Newman.

Parish clerk may sue in court christian for his fees, which are called largitiones charitativæ. Arg. cites the Register, fol. 52. for he is quodam modo an officer spiritual, cites 21 Ed. 4. 47. 2 Roll. Rep. 71. Hill. 18 Jac. B. R. in Bishop's case.

Parish clerk nominated by the parson is by Common law an officer, and in for life, without deed. 2 Salk. 536. pl. 27. Hill. 10 Ann. B. R. Parish of Gatten v. Milwick.

Clerk of the Parliament Rolls, (clericus rotulorum parliamenti) Is that person which records all things done in the high court of parliament, and ingrosseth them in parchment rolls, for their better preservation to posterity: of these officers there are two, one in the Lord's House, and another in the House of Commons.

Clerk of the Patents, Or of the letters patent under the Great Seal of England; an office created 18 Jac. 1:

Clerk of the Peace, (clericus pacis) Is an officer belonging to the sessions of the peace: his duty is to read indictments, enrol the proceedings, and draw the process; he keeps the counter-part of the indenture of armour; records the proclamation of rates for servants wages; has the custody of the register-book of licences given to badgers of corn; of persons licensed to kill game, &c. And he registers the estates of papists and others not taking the oaths. Also he certifies into the King's Bench transcripts of indictments, outlawries, attainders and convictions, had before the justices of peace, within the time limited: and by statute, clerks of the peace, &c. are to certify the tenor of every indictment, outlawry, &c. into B. R. within forty days, under a certain penalty. Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 14. And every clerk of the peace is to deliver to the Sheriff within twenty days after Michaelmas yearly an estreat of all fines, &c. 22 Car. 2. c. 22. The custos rotulorum of the county hath the appointment of the clerk of the peace, who may execute his office by deputy. 37 H. 8. c. 1. And if a clerk of the peace misdeemean himself, the justices of peace in quarter-sessions have power to discharge him; and the custos rotulorum is to chuse another resident in the county, or on his default the sessions may appoint one: the place is not to be sold, on pain of forfeiting double the value of the sum given, and disability to enjoy it, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 21. See the 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. For the oath of the clerk of the peace on delivery of the estreats, and the 3 Geo. 1. c. 18. by which the Barons of the Exchequer may amerce the clerk of the peace, for neglecting to return the estreats according to the said two acts of 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22. and 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 24. See Estreats.

Clerk of the Pell, (clericus pellis) Is a clerk belonging to the Exchequer, whose office is to enter every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis receptorum, and also to make another roll of payments, which is termed pellis exituum; wherein he sets down by what warrant the money was paid; mentioned in the Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22.

Clerk of the Petty-Bag (clericus parvæ bagæ) An officer of the court of Chancery. There are three of these officers, of whom the Master of the Rolls is the chief. Their office is to record the return of all inquisitions out of every shire; to make out patents of customers, gaugers, controllers, &c. all conge d'elires for bishops, the summons of the nobility, and burgesies to parliament; commissions directed to knights and others of every shire, for assessing subsidies and taxes: all offices found pist mortem are brought to the clerks of the petty bag to be filed; and by them are entered all pleadings of the Chancery concerning the validity of patents or other things which pass the Great Seal; they also make forth liberates upon extents of statutes staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, and all elegits upon them: and all suits for or against any privileged person are prosecuted in their office, &c.

Clerk of the Pipe, (clericus pipæ) Is an officer in the Exchequer, who having the accounts of debts due to the king, delivered and drawn out of the remembrancer's offices, charges them down in the great roll, and is called clerk of the pipe from the shape of that roll, which is put together like a pipe: he also writes out warrants to the sheriffs to levy the said debts upon the goods and chattels of the debtors; and if they have no goods, then he draws them down to the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, to write estreats against their lands. The ancient revenue of the crown stands in charge to him, and he sees the same answered by the farmers and sheriffs: he makes a charge to all sheriffs of their summons of the pipe, and green wax, and takes care it be answered on their accounts. And he hath the drawing and ingrossing of all leases of the king's lands; having a secondary and several clerks under him. In the reign of King Hen. 6. this officer was called ingrossator magni rotuli. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 22.

Clerk of the Pleas, (clericus placitorum) An officer in the court of Exchequer, in whose office all the officers of the court, upon special privilege belonging unto them, ought to sue or be sued in any action, &c. In this office are also prosecuted actions at law, by other persons as well as officers of the court; but the plaintiff ought to be tenant, or debtor to the King, or some way accountant to him: now it is only matter of form. The clerk of the pleas has under him a great many clerks, who are attornies in all suits commenced or depending in the Exchequer.

Clerk of the Privy Seal, (clericus privati sigilli) There are four of the officers which attend the Lord Privy Seal: or if there be no Lord Privy Seal, the Principal Secretary of State; writing and making out all things that are sent by warrant from the Signet to the Privy Seal, and which are to be passed to the Great Seal: also they make out privy seals, upon a special occasion of his Majesty's affairs, as for loan of money, and the like. He that is now called Lord Privy Seal, seems to have been in ancient times called clerk of the privy seal; but notwithstanding to have been reckoned in the number of the great officers of the realm. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 11. And 27 H. 8. c. 11.

Clerk of the Rolls, An officer of the Chancery, that makes search for, and copies deeds, offices, &c.

Clerk of the Rules, In the court of King's Bench, is he who draws up and enters all the rules and orders made in court: and gives rules of course on divers writs: this officer is mentioned in the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22.

Clerk of the Sewers, An officer belonging to the commissioners of sewers, who writes and records their proceedings, which they transact by virtue of their commissions, and the authority given them by Statute 13 El. c. 9.

Clerk of the Signet, (clericus signeti) Is an officer continually attendant on his Majesty's Principal Secretary, who hath the custody of the privy signet, as well for sealing his Majesty's private letters, as such grants as pass the King's hand by bill signed: and of these clerks or officers there are four that attend in their course, and have their diet at the Secretary's table. The fees of the clerk of the signet, and privy seal, are limited particularly by statute, with a penalty annexed for taking any thing more. See 27 H. 8. c. 11.

Clerk of the Supersebas's, An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who makes out writs of supersebas, upon a defendant's appearing to the exigent on an outlawry, whereby the sheriff is forbidden to return the exigent.

Clerk of the Treasury, (clericus thesaurarii) Is an officer of the Common Pleas, who hath the charge of keeping the records of the court, and makes out all the records of Nisi prius; also he makes all exemplifications of records being in the Treasury; and he hath the fees due for all searches. He is taken to be the servant of the Chief Justice, and removeable at pleasure; whereas all other officers of the court are for life: there is a secondary, or under clerk of the Treasury for assistance, who hath some fees and allowances: and likewise an under-keeper, that always keeps one key of the Treasury door, and the chief clerk of the secondary another; so that the one cannot come in without the other.

Clerk of the Warrants, (clericus warrantorum) An officer belonging to the Common Pleas court, who enters all warrants of attorney for plaintiffs and defendants in suits; and inrolls deeds of indentures of bargain and sale, which are acknowledged in the court, or before any judges out of the court. And it is his office to eistreat into the Exchequer all issues, fines and amerciaments, which grow due to the King in that court, for which he hath a standing fee or allowance.

Cleronimus, An old word signifying heir; it is mentioned in Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 129.

Clipping the coin, An offence pernicious to trade, and an insult on the prerogative. The offence is high treason, by 5 Eliz. c. 11. Also see 18 Eliz. c. 1. & 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. Made perpetual by 7 Ann. c. 25. against buying, selling, and having in possession any instruments proper only for coining of money. By 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28. Colouring silver coin to make it resemble gold, or copper to resemble silver, is high treason.

Cliffe, Cliff. The names of places beginning or ending with these words, signify a rock from the old Saxon.

Clocks and Watches. Dial-plates and cases not to be exported without the movement, 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 28. sect. 2.—Makers shall engrave their names on clocks and watches, 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 28. sect. 2.—Penalties on workmen, &c. imbezilling materials of clocks and watches, 27 Geo. 2. c. 7.

Cloete, A prison or dungeon; 'tis conjectured to be of British original: the dungeon or inner prison of Wallingford castle, temp. H. 2. was called cloete brien, i. e. carcer brien, &c. Hence seems to come the Lat. clauca, which was anciently the closest ward or nastiest part of the prison: the old cloacarius is interpreted carceris custos:

and the present cloacarius, or keeper of a jakes, is an office in some religious houses abroad, imposed on an offending brother, or by him chosen as an exercise of humility and mortification. Corwel.

Cloze Rolls and Cloze Writs, Grants of lands, &c. from the crown are contained in charters or letters patens, that is, open letters, literas patentes, so called because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the Great Seal pendant at the bottom; and are usually addressed by the King to all his subjects at large. And therein they differ from other letters of the King, sealed also with his Great Seal, but directed to particular persons, and for particular purposes: which therefore, not being fit for publick inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, literæ clausæ; and are recorded in the close-rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent-rolls. Black. Com. 2 V. 346.

Closh, Was an unlawful game, forbidden by Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 3. and 33 H. 8. c. 9. It is said to have been the same with our nine-pins; and is called clashcayles by the 33 H. 8. c. 9. At this time 'tis allowed, and called kailes, or kittles.

Coach, (currus) A convenience well known; and for regulating of hackney coaches in London, there are several statutes. By 9 Ann. c. 23. Eight hundred hackney coaches and two hundred chairs are allowed in London and Westminster; which are to be licensed by commissioners, and pay a duty to the crown: and if any person drive a hackney coach without licence, he shall forfeit 5*l.* and a chair 40*s.* Coachmen and chairmen, giving abusive language, or demanding more than their fare, &c. a justice of peace may order them to pay not exceeding 20*s.* to the poor, and not being able to pay it, send them to the house of correction; and persons not paying coachmen their fare, or cutting or defacing coaches, &c. a justice will order satisfaction to be made, and on refusal, may bind them over to the quarter-sessions. The 1 Geo. 1. c. 57. ordains, That where coachmen refuse to go at, or exact more for their hire than is limited by the act, they shall forfeit not exceeding 3*l.* nor under 10*s.* and the commissioners have power to determine it. The fare of hackney coachmen in London, or within ten miles thereof, is 10*s.* per day, allowing 12 hours to the day; and by the hour not above 1*s.* 6*d.* for the first, and 1*s.* for every hour after: and none are obliged to pay above 1*s.* for the use of any hackney coach for any distance, not mentioned in the act, which is not above one mile and four furlongs; nor above 1*s.* 6*d.* for any distance not exceeding two miles: the fare of a hackney chair is 1*s.* for any distance not exceeding a mile, and 1*s.* 6*d.* for any distance not exceeding a mile and four furlongs. There are certain places and distances mentioned in the act for the extent of the respective fares; and other distances measured and rated by the commissioners, in pursuance of the statutes. Coachmen are to have numbers to their coaches on tin-plates, or shall forfeit 5*l.* and refusing any person to take the number of their coaches, or giving a wrong number, incurs the forfeiture of a sum not exceeding 40*s.* None but licensed coaches shall ply at funerals for hire, under the penalty of 5*l.* Drivers of hackney coaches are to give way to persons of quality, and gentlemen's coaches, on the penalty of 10*s.* On Sundays there were formerly only one hundred and seventy-five coaches to ply, but now we believe there are more. There are several standings of coaches, at the most noted parts of the town, ordered by the commissioners to be in the middle of streets, &c. Vide 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 22. 9 Ann. c. 23. 10 Ann. c. 19. sect. 158. 12 Ann. stat. 1. c. 14. 1 Geo. 1. c. 57. And 12 Geo. 1. c. 12. sect. 13. 16 Geo. 2. c. 26. sect. 3.

The masters of stage coaches are not liable to an action for things lost by their coachmen, who have money given them to carry the goods; unless where any such master takes a certain price for the same. See 1 Salt. 282. By the Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 10. A yearly tax of 4*l.* is laid on every coach, berlin, landau, chariot, calash with four wheels, chaise marine, chaise with four wheels, and caravan kept by any person for his own use, (except such as are licensed by the commissioners for hackney coaches), and of 40*s.* on every calash, chaise and chair with two wheels, drawn by one or more horses, kept by any person for his own use. No person to pay for more than five such carriages on which 4*l.* a year is laid, except kept to be let out for hire. This duty to be under the management of the commissioners of excise. Persons keeping such coaches, &c. yearly to give notice to the excise-office, and then pay the duty. Stage coaches and post-chaises are excepted. Post-chaises are to be entered at the excise-office, and have a figure or mark of distinction; and so are coaches, &c. let out for hire. Coaches, &c. kept for sale are not to be taxed. If any person, having paid the duty, shall die before the end of the year, no person claiming title to the coach, &c. shall be liable to any tax for the remainder of the year.

Coachmakers. The wares of coachmakers shall be searched, by persons appointed by the saddlers company. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 22.

Coadjutor, (Lat.) A fellow-helper or assistant; particularly applied to one appointed to assist a bishop, being grown old and infirm, so as not to be able to perform his duty.

Coal-mines. Maliciously setting fire to coal-mines, or to any delph of coal, is felony. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. sect. 6.

Coals. The sack of coals is to contain four bushels of clean coals: and sea coals brought into the river Thames, and sold, shall be after the rate of thirty-six bushels to the chaldron: and one hundred and twelve pounds the hundred, &c. The Lord Mayor and court of Aldermen in London, and justices of the peace of the several counties, or three of them, are empowered to set the price of all coals to be sold by retail; and if any person shall refuse to sell for such prices, they may appoint officers to enter any wharfs or places where coals are kept, and cause the coals to be sold at the prices appointed. 7 Ed. 6. cap. 7. 16 & 17 Car. 2. cap. 2. 17 Geo. 2. c. 35. Commissioners are ordained for the measuring and marking of keels, and boats for coals at Newcastle; and vessels carrying coals before measured and marked, shall be forfeited, &c. 30 Car. 2. c. 8. & 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 10. English ships trading in coals may be manned with foreigners during war. 2 W. & M. c. 17. A duty is laid on coals imported, by Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 18. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 21. 8 Ann. c. 4. 9 Ann. c. 6, 22 & 28. 12 Ann. stat. 2. c. 9. 5 Geo. 1. c. 9. & 30 Geo. 2. c. 19. For the contents of the coal-bushel, see 12 Ann. stat. 2. c. 17.

Contracts between coal owners and masters of ships, &c. for restraining the buying of coals are void; and the parties to forfeit 100*l.* And selling coals for other sorts than they are, shall forfeit 50*l.* Not above fifty laden colliers are to continue in the port of Newcastle, &c. And work people in the mines there shall not be employed who are hired by others, under the penalty of 5*l.* Coal-sacks shall be sealed and marked at Guildhall, &c. and be four feet and two inches in length, and twenty-six inches in breadth, on pain of 20*s.* Also sellers of coals are to keep a lawful bushel, and put three bushels to each sack, which bushel and other measures shall be edged with iron, and sealed; and using others, or altering them, incurs a forfeiture of 50*l.* &c. The penalties above 5*l.* recoverable by action of debt, &c. and under that sum before justices of peace. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 26. Owners or masters of ships shall not enhance the price of coals in the river of Thames, by the keeping of turn in delivering of coals there, under the penalty of 100*l.* &c. 4 Geo. 2. c. 30. The price of sea-coals imported into London and ports adjacent, to be there sold, may be set by the Lord Mayor, &c. for one year; and persons selling coals out of any vessel, yard, or warehouse, for a higher price, shall forfeit 36*s.* per chaldron, to be levied by warrant of two justices. Dealers in coals at Billingsgate, &c. refusing to sign legal contracts, shall forfeit 50*l.* And any person vending coals at New-castle, that refuseth to put a loading on shipboard, on tender of the price they bear, is liable to the forfeiture of 100*l.* to be recovered by action in the courts at Westminster, within six months, by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 15.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 35. Two land coal-meters are to be appointed for the city and liberty of Westminster, and that part of the dutchy of Lan after adjoining thereto, and the several parishes of St. Giles in the Fields, St. Mary le Bon, and such part of the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, as lies in the county of Middlesex, are to appoint labouring coal-meters. No person, after coals delivered from any ship, is to break bulk, before the time of delivery at the wharf, in the absence of a meter or the consumer, under the penalty of 5*l.* All contracts for coals coals to be delivered within the limits aforesaid (not being less than five chaldron) shall be for pool measure, including the ingrain, and shall be so understood, though the term pool measure be omitted in the contract; and shall be loaded separately, and delivered without being measured, unless the buyer desire it. All coals sold for wharf measure, above eight bushels, shall be measured in the presence of a labouring coal-meter. The seller to pay 4*d.* per chaldron to the principal coal-meter, who is to deliver to the seller a ticket of the names of the seller and consumer, quantity of coals, &c. the seller is to deliver the same to the consumer, who is to pay for the metage. Penalty of altering or refusing a ticket 5*l.* Penalty of carrying coals without a ticket 50*l.* Penalty on false ticket or false measure 5*l.* Consumer dissatisfied may have coals re-measured. The carman, on notice in writing, that the consumer is dissatisfied, shall not quit the cart till the coals are re-measured. By 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. If either of the principal land coal-meters shall neglect to station labouring coal-meters, he shall forfeit 10*l.* Every labouring coal-meter neglecting to attend forfeits 40*s.* For farther regulations of the coal trade, see 22 Geo. 2. c. 37. 31 Geo. 2. c. 15. 32 Geo. 2. c. 27. & 33 Geo. 2. c. 15.

Coat-armour. Courts of arms were not introduced into seals, nor indeed into any other use, till about the reign of Richard the First, who brought them from the Croisade in the Holy Land; where they were first invented and painted on the shields of the knights, to distinguish the variety of persons of every Christian nation who resorted thither, and who could not, when clad in complete steel, be otherwise known or ascertained. Black. Com. 2*V.* 306.

It is the business of the court military, or the court of chivalry, according to Sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial ensigns, bearings, crests, supporters, pennons, &c. and also rights of place or precedence, where the King's patent or act of parliament (which cannot be over-ruled by this court) have not already determined it. Black. Com. 3*V.* 105.

Cocherings, An exaction or tribute in Ireland, now reduced to chief rents. See Bonaght.

Cochineal. The importation of cochineal from ports in Spain was declared lawful during the late war, &c. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 33. Any persons may import cochineal into this kingdom, in ships belonging to Great Britain, or other country in amity, from any place whatsoever, by 7 Geo. 2. cap. 18.

Cocket, (cockettum) Is a seal belonging to the King's custom-house: or rather a scroll of parchment sealed, and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandises are customed: which parchment is otherwise called litera de coketto, or litera testimoniales de coketto. 11 Hen. 6. Reg. Orig. 179, 192. So it is used, 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 14, &c. The word cockettum or cocket, is also taken for the custom-house or office where goods to be transported were first entered, and paid their custom, and had a cocket or certificate of discharge: and cockettata lana is wool duly entered and cocketted, or authorized to be transported. Mem. in Scac. 23 Ed. 1. Cocket is likewise used for a sort of measure, as we may read in Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 9. Panis vero integer quadrantalibus frumenti ponderabitur unum cocket & dimidium; and it is made use of for a distinction of bread, in the statute of bread and ale. 51 H. 3. stat. 1. ord. pro pistor. Where mention is made of wastel bread, cocket bread, bread of treet, and bread of common wheat; the wastel bread being what we now call the finest bread, or French bread; the cocket bread the second sort of white bread; bread of treet, and of common wheat, brown, or household bread, &c. What we call cocket, (as to the King's seal) was called coke, and a part of the King's seal. Madock Exch. 1*V.* 783. c. 18. & ibid. c. 1. N. S.

Cockletus, A boatman, cockswain or coxon. Cowell.

Cocula, A cogue, or little drinking-cup, in form of a small boat, used especially at sea, and still retained in a cogue of brandy. These drinking cups are also used in taverns to drink new sherry, and other white wines, which look foul in a glass.

Codicil, (codicillus, from codex, a book, a writing) Is a schedule or supplement to a will, where any thing is omitted, which the testator would add, or he would explain, alter, or retract what he hath done; and it is the same with a testament, but that it is without an executor: and one may leave behind him only ~~or~~ testament, by as many codicils as he pleases. Wed. Symb. 7. 336. A codicil is taken as part of the will; and the codicils ought to be annexed to the testament, and the executor is to see that they are all performed: if the will or codicils are kept from the executor, he may force the party detaining them to deliver them up by the ecclesiastical law, and recover them in the spiritual court. Swinb. pag. 1. sect. 1. Some writers, comparing a testament and a codicil together, call a testament a great will, and a codicil a little one.

Coffee, Tea, and Chocolate. The custom duties on coffee, tea, and chocolate, are taken off by statute, and inland duties granted in their stead, payable by druggists, and all persons dealing in coffee, &c. And entries are to be made of all warehouses, under penalties and forfeiture of the goods. Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10. The duties to be paid are 2*s.* per pound for coffee, for tea 4*s.* and chocolate 1*s.* 6*d.* But see post. And coffee, &c. not to be sold but in places entered; and if above six pounds weight, to have a permit: dealers in coffee and chocolate, coffee-house keepers, &c. shall keep an account of goods sold every day, and deliver their books to the officers on oath, &c. Chocolate shall be stamped, and chocolate-makers are to make an entry of all chocolate made, under the penalty of 50*l.* And persons, mixing other drugs with coffee or tea, shall forfeit 100*l.* Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 20. See the late statute against sophisticating tea, and exporting cocoa nutshells or husks to make chocolate, &c. 4 Geo. 2. c. 14. See 5 Geo. 2. c. 24. The inland duties on tea altered, 18 Geo. 2. c. 26. Drawback on tea taken off, 18 Geo. 2. c. 26. India Company may import tea by licence from European ports, 18 Geo. 2. c. 26. Tea may be imported to Ireland and the plantations without paying inland duty, 21 Geo. 2. c. 14. Tea above 6*lb.* in British ships, come from abroad and not employed by the India Company, forfeited. 28 Geo. 2. c. 21. Additional duty on coffee and chocolate, 32 Geo. 2. c. 10.

Cofferer of the King's Household, Is a principal officer of the King's house, next under the controller, who in the counting-house, and elsewhere, hath a special charge and oversight of other officers of the household, to all which he pays their wages: this officer passes his accounts in the Exchequer, and is mentioned in 39 Eliz. c. 7.

Cogge, A small fishing-boat, upon the coasts of Yorkshire: and cogs, (cogones) are a kind of little ships, or vessels, used in the rivers Ouse and Umler. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 18. — Preparatis cogonibus, Galleis & aliis Navibus, &c. Matt. Paris. anno 1066. And hence the cogmen, boatmen of seamen, who after shipwreck or losses by sea, travelled and wandered about to defraud the people by begging and stealing, till they were restrained by divers good laws. Du Fresne.

Cognati, Relations ~~by the mother,~~ as the agnati are relations by the father.

Cognitione, A writ of coufenage. See Coufenage.

Cognissance, or cognizance, (Fr. connaissance, Lat. cognitio) Is used diversly in our law: sometimes it is an acknowledgment of a fact, or confession of a thing done; and there is a cognissance of taking a distress: sometimes it is the hearing of a matter judicially; as to take cognissance of a cause: and sometimes it signifies a jurisdiction, as cognissance of pleas is a power to call a cause or plea out of another court; which none can but the King, or by charter. This cognissance of pleas is a privilege granted by the King to a city or town, to hold plea of all contracts, &c. within the liberty of the franchise; and when any man is impleaded for such matters in the courts of Westminster, the mayor, &c. of such franchise may ask cognissance of the plea, and demand that it shall be determined terminated before them: but if the courts at Westminster be possessed of the plea before cognisance be demanded, it is then too late. Terms de Ley. See Stat. 9 H. 4. c. 5. Cognisance of pleas extends not to assises; and when granted, the original shall not be removed: it lies not in a quare, adit, for they cannot write to the bishop, nor of a plea out of the county-court, which cannot award a resumption. Esc. Jenk. Cent. 31, 34. This cognisance shall be demanded the first day: and if the demandant in a plea of land counterpleads the franchise, and the tenant joins with the claim of the franchise, and it is found against the franchise, the demandant shall recover the land; but if it be found against the demandant, the writ shall abate. Ibid. 18.

There are three sorts of inferior jurisdictions, one whereof is tenere placita, and this is the lowest sort; for it is only a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may sue there, or in the King's courts, if he will. The second is consuance of pleas, and by this a right is vested in the lord of the franchise to hold the plea, and he is the only person who can take advantage of it. The third sort is an exempt jurisdiction, as where the King grants to a great city, that the inhabitants thereof shall be sued within their city, and not elsewhere; this grant may be pleaded to the jurisdiction of this court, if there be a court within that city which can hold plea of the cause, and no-body can take advantage of this privilege but a defendant; for if he will bring certiorari, that will remove the cause, but he may waive it if he will, so that the privilege is only for his benefit. 3 Salk. 79, 80. pl. 4. Hill. 1 Ann. B. R. Crosse v. Smith.

King Hen. 8. by letters patent of the 14th of his reign, and confirmed by parliament, granted to the university of Oxford consuance of pleas, in which a scholar or servant of a college should be party, ita quod iusticiarii de utroque banco se non intromittant. An attorney of C. B. sued a scholar in C. B. for battery; per cur. This general grant does not extend to take away the special privilege of any court without special words, Litt. Rep. 304. Mich. 5 C. C. B. Oxford (University's) case.

If a scholar of Oxford or Cambridge be sued in Chancery for a special performance of a contract to lease lands in Middlesex, the University shall not have consuance, because they cannot sequester the lands. Gilb. Hist. of C. P. 194. cites 2 Vent. 363.

Consuance must be demanded before an imparlance, and the same term the writ is returnable, after the defendant appears, because till he appears there is no cause in court, otherwise there would be a delay of justice; for if after imparlance, when the defendant has a day already allowed him, he would have two days, since when the consuance is allowed, the franchise prefixes a day to both parties to appear before them, and it is the lord's laches if he does not come soon enough not to delay the parties. Gilb. Hist. of C. P. 196.

Consuance was granted to the University of Oxford, (no case being shewn to the contrary), in Easter Term, 9 Geo. 2. in the case of Woodcocks and Brooke. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annuity, fo. 241.

Cognisance also signifies the badge of a waterman or servant, which is usually the giver's crest, whereby he is known to belong to this or that nobleman or gentleman. Vide Black. Com. 3 V. 300. & 4 V. 275.

Cognitor and Cognisee, (or cognizor) Cognitor, is he that passeth and acknowledged a fine of lands or tenements to another; and cognisee is he to whom the fine of the said lands, &c. is acknowledged. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 5.

Cognitiones, Ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms—Cum viderunt hostes Christi armis, vexillis & cognitionibus picturatis, &c. Mat. Paris. 1250.

Cognitionibus ostendit, Is a writ to one of the King's justices of the Common Pleas, or other that hath Power to take a fine, who having taken the fine defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it. Reg. Orig. 68.

Cognovit Vincit, Is where a defendant acknowledges or confesses the plaintiff's cause against him to be just and true, and before, or after issue, suffers judgment to be entered against him without trial. And here the confession generally extends no further than to what is contained in the declaration; but if the defendant will confess more, he may. 1 Roll. 929. Hob. 178.

Cogware, Is said to be a sort of coarse cloths, made in divers parts of England, of which mention is made in the 13 R. 2. cap. 10.

Cohuagium, A tribute paid by those who meet promiscuously in the market or fair; cohua signifying a promiscuous multitude of men in a fair or market.—Quieti ab omni thelonio, Passagio, pontagio, cohugio, pallagio, &c. Du Cange.

Coif, (coisa) A title given to serjeants at law; who are called serjeants of the coif, from the lawn coif they wear on their heads under their caps, when they are created. The use of it was anciently to cover tonsuram clericalem, otherwise called corona clericalis; because the crown of the head was close shaved, and a border of hair left round the lower part, which made it look like a crown. Blount.

Coin, (cuna pecunia) Seems to come from the Fr. coign, i. e. angulus, a corner, whence it has been held, that the ancientest sort of coin was square with corners, and not round as it now is: it is any sort of money coined. Crompt. Jurisd. 220. Coin is a word collective, which contains in it all manner of the several stamps and species of money in any kingdom: and this is one of the royal prerogatives belonging to every sovereign prince, that he alone in his own dominions may order and dispose the quantity, value, and fashion of his coin. But the coin of one King is not current in the kingdom of another, unless it be at great loss; though our King by his prerogative may make any foreign coin lawful money of England at his pleasure, by proclamation. Terms de Ley. If a man binds himself by bond to pay one hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, and the person bound, the obligor, pays the obligee the money in French, Spanish, or other coin, made current either by act of parliament, or the King's proclamation, the obligation will be well performed. 1 Inst. 207. But 'tis said a payment in farthings, is not a good payment. 2 Inst. 517. When a person has accepted of money in payment from another, and put the same into his purse, it is at his peril after his allowance; and he shall not then take exception to it as bad, notwithstanding he presently reviews it. Terms de Ley. By statute any person may break or deface pieces of silver money suspected to be counterfeit or diminished, otherwise than by wearing: but if such pieces on breaking, &c. are found to be good coin, it will be at the breaker's peril, who shall stand to the loss of it. 9 & W. 3. c. 21. Coins of gold and silver are to pass notwithstanding some of them are crack'd, or worn, but not if they are clipt. 19 H. 7. c. 5. Counterfeiting, impairing, or clipping of the King's coin, is made high treason. 25 Ed. 3. c. 14. and 18 Eliz. cap. 7. It is also treason to make any stamp, dye, mould, &c. for coining, except by persons employed in the mint, &c. Conveying such out of the mint, is the same; and so is colouring metal resembling coin of gold or silver, marking it on the edges, &c. And if any persons mix blanch'd copper with silver, to make it heavier, and look like gold, or receive, or pay counterfeit milled money, it is felony. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. Counterfeiting broad pieces of gold, &c. is declared to be treason. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. cap. 26. Persons that wash or gild any shilling, or six-pence, or alter the impression, so as to make them resemble a guinea, half guinea, &c. are adjudged guilty of high treason; and those who tender in payment, any counterfeit coin, knowingly, shall be imprisoned six months for a first offence, two years for the second, and a third suffer as felons. 15 Geo. 2. c. 28. The statutes which ordain milled money to be made, give liberty to any person to refuse hammered silver coin, as not being the lawful coin of this kingdom. 9 W. 3. c. 2. Counterfeiting of the coin extends only to gold and silver coin; for the coining of farthings or half-pence, or pieces to go for such, of copper, incurs a penalty of 5*l.* for every pound weight, by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 33. This offence is now punished with two years imprisonment, and surety to be given by the offenders for good behaviour two years more. 15 Geo. 2. c. 28. Persons apprehending money-money-coiners, clippers, &c. are to have 40*l.* reward; and a guilty person discovering two others, to be pardoned, &c. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. §. 9. 10*l.* is also given as a reward, for apprehending and convicting coiners of copper money. In the seventh year of King William III. an act was made for calling in all the old coin of the kingdom, and to melt it down and recoin it; the deficiencies whereof were to be made good at the public charge: and in every hundred pound coined, 40*l.* was to be shillings, and 10*l.* sixpences, under certain penalties. Persons bringing plate to the mint to be coined, were to have the same weight of money delivered out, as an encouragement: and receivers general of taxes, &c. were to receive money at a large rate per ounce. Our guineas have been raised and fallen, as money has been scarce or plenty, several times by statute: and anno 3 Geo. 1. on a scarcity of silver coin, for remedy, guineas were sunk to 11*s.* at which they now pass, by proclamation. See Money, and Black. Com. 4 V. 84, 88, 90, 98, 120.

Coinage, (monagium) Is the stamping and making of money, by the King's authority. And there is a duty of 10*s.* per ton on wine, beer, and brandy imported, called the coinage duty, granted for expence of the King's coinage, but not to exceed 3000*l.* per ann. Stat. 18 Car. 2. cap. 5. This duty for coinage hath been continued and advanced, by divers statutes, as 4 & 5 Ann. c. 22. 1 Geo. 1. c. 43. 9 Geo. 1. c. 19. &c. The coinage duties are continued for seven years, by a late statute; and the commissioners of the treasury, out of the money arising by this act, or other publick supplies, shall defray the expence of the mints of England and Scotland, not exceeding 75000*l.* a year. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 12. By Stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 16. The coinage-duty is continued for seven years from March 1, 1761. See Tab. to Stat. tit. Money.

Coliberts, (coliberti) Were tenants in socage; and particularly such villeins as were manumitted or made freemen. Domesday. But they had not an absolute freedom; for though they were better than servants, yet they had superior lords to whom they paid certain duties, and in that respect they might be called servants, though they were of middle condition, between freemen and servants. — Libertate carens colibertus dicitur esse. Du Cange.

Collateral, (collateralis) from the Lat. laterale, sideways, or that which hangeth by the side, not direct: as collateral assurance is that which is made over and above the deed itself: collateral security, is where a deed is made of other land, besides those granted by the deed of mortgage: and if a man covenants with another, and enters into bond for performance of his covenant, the bond is a collateral assurance; because it is external, and without the nature and essence of the covenant. If a man hath liberty to pitch booths or standings, for a fair or market in another person's ground, it is collateral to the ground: The private woods of a common person, within a forest, may not be cut down without the King's licence; it being a prerogative collateral to the foil. And to be subject to the feeding of the King's deer, is collateral to the foil of a forest. Crompt. Jurisd. 185. Manwood, p. 66.

Collateral Consanguinity, or kindred. Collateral relations agree with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor; but differ in this, that they do not descend from each other. Collateral kinsmen, therefore, are such as lineally spring from one and the same ancestor, who is the stirps or root, the stipes, trunk, or common stock, from whence these relations are branched out. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 204, &c.

Collateral Discent, and Collateral Warranty. See Discent and Warranty.

Collateral Issue. Is where a criminal convict pleads any matter, allowed by law, in bar of execution, as pregnancy, the King's pardon, an act of grace, or diversity of person, viz. that he or she is not the same that was attainted, &c. whereon issue is taken, which issue is to be tried, by a jury, instantly. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 389.

Collatio Honorum, Is in law where a portion or money advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into hotchpot, in order to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate, at his death, according to the intent of the Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. Abr. Caf. Eq. p. 254. See Hotchpot, and Black. Com. 2 V. 517.

Collation of a Benefice, (collatio beneficii) Signifies the bestowing of a benefice by the bishop, when he hath right of patronage. And it differs from institution in this, that institution is performed by the bishop upon the presentation of another, and collation is his own act of presentation; and it differeth from a common presentation, as it is the giving of the church to the parson, and presentation is the giving or offering of the parson to the church. But collation supplies the place of presentation and institution; and amounts to the same as institution, where the bishop is both patron and ordinary. 1 Lill. Abr. 273. Anciently the right of presentation to all churches, was in the bishop; and now if the patron neglects to present to a church, then this right returns to the bishop by collation: and if the bishop neglects to collate within six months after the lapse of the patron, then the archbishop hath a right to do it; and if the archbishop neglects, then it devolves to the King; the one as superior, to supply the defects of bishops, the other as supreme, to reform all defects of government. As a bishop may neglect to collate, so it may happen that he may make his collation without title; but such a wrongful collation doth not put the true patron out of possession; for after the collatee of the bishop is instituted and inducted, he may present his clerk: and collation in this case, shall be intended only as a provisional incumbency to perform divine service till presentment is made by the true patron. 1 Inst. 344. By collation the church is not full; and a right patron may bring his writ at any time to remove the person collated; except his right be likewise to collate, when plenary by collation may be pleaded. Wood's Inst. 159. Where a bishop gives a benefice as patron, he collates to it jure pleno; and when by lapse, he doth it jure devoluto. The collation by lapse, is in right of the patron, and for his turn: and in assise of darrein presentment, &c. it shall be laid as his possession. 24 Ed. 3. 26. F. N. B. 31.

Collatione facta uni post mortem alterius, Is a writ directed to the justices of the Common Pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the King; who died during the suit between the King and the bishop's clerk: for judgment once passed for the King's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the King may bestow his presentation on another. Reg. Orig. 31.

Collatione Heremitagii, A writ whereby the King conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk. Reg. Orig. 303, 308.

Collation of Seals. This was when upon the same label, one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other. — Ad majorem securitatem premissorum sigillum discreti viri officialis domini Batho Well. Episcopi filo medio per modum collationis, sigillo meo apponi procuravi. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. 105.

Collative Advowsons. An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and the same person: in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does, by the one act of collation, or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases, by presentation and institution. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 22, 23.

Collectors, of money due to the King, not paying the same to whom it ought to be paid, shall answer so much per Cent. to his majesty till payment. Stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 2. See Receivers.

College, (collegium) A particular corporation, company or society of men, having certain privileges founded by the King's licence: and for Colleges in reputation, see 4 Rep. 106, 108. The establishment of Colleges or Universities is a remarkable æra in literary history. The schools in Cathedrals and Monasteries confined themselves chiefly to the teaching of grammar. There were only one or two masters employed in that office. But in Colleges, professors were appointed to teach all the different parts of science. The first obscure mention of academic degrees in the University of Paris, (from which the other Universities in Europe have borrowed most of their customs and institutions), occurs, A. D. 1215. Vide Roberts. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 323. Vide Leq. 1st.

See the power of visitors of Colleges well explained in Dr. Walker's case. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 212. Vide Leases.

Collegiate Church, Is that which consists of a dean and secular canons; or more largely, it is a church built and endowed for a society, or body corporate, of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church. There were many of these societies distinguished from the religious or regulars, before the reformation: and some are established at this time; as Westminster, Windsor, Winchester, Southwell, Manchester, &c.

Colligendum bona defuncti, (letters ad.) In defect of representatives and creditors to administer to an intestate, &c. the ordinary may commit administration to such discreet person as he approves of, or grant him these letters, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to keep the goods in his safe custody, and to do other acts for the benefit of such as are entitled to the property of the deceased. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 505.

Colloquium, (a colloquendo) A talking together, or affirming of a thing, laid in declarations for words in actions of slander, &c. Mud. Cas. 203. Cartheau 90.

Collusion, (collusio) Is a deceitful agreement or contract between two, or more persons, for the one to bring an action against the other, to some evil purpose, as to defraud a third person of his right, &c. This collusion is either apparent, when it shews itself in the face of the act; or which is more common, it is secret, where done in the dark, or covered over with a shew of honesty. And 'tis a thing the law abhors; wherefore when found it makes void all things dependant upon the same, though otherwise in themselves never so good. Co. Litt. 109, 360. Plowd. 54. Collusion may sometimes be tried in the same action wherein the covin is, and sometimes in another action, as for lands aliened in mortmain by a quale jus: and where it is apparent there needs no proof of it, but when it is secret, it must be proved by witnesses, and found by a jury like other matters of fact. 9 Rep. 33. The statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 33. gives the writ quale jus, and inquiry in these cases: and there are several other statutes relating to deeds, made by collusion and fraud. The cases particularly mentioned by the statute of Westm. 2. are of quare impedit, assise, &c. which one corporation brings against another, with intent to recover the land or advowson, for which the writ is brought, held in mortmain, &c. Vide the statute.

Colonies, See Charter-governments in America. Plantation.

Colonus, An husbandman or villager, who was bound to pay yearly a certain tribute, or at certain times in the year to plough some part of the lord's land; and from hence comes the word clown; who is called by the Dutch boor.

Colour, (color) Signifies a probable plea, but what is in fact false; and hath this end, to draw the trial of the cause from the jury to the judges: and therefore colour ought to be matter in law, or doubtful to the jury. This colour is used in assises, or action of trespass; and every colour ought to have these qualities following: 1. It is to be doubtful to the lay gens, as in case of a deed of feoffment pleaded, and it is a doubt whether the land passeth by the feoffment, without livery, or not. 2. Colour ought to have continuance, though it wants effect. 3. It should be such colour, that if it were effectual, would maintain the nature of the action; as in assise, to give colour of freehold, &c. 10 Rep. 88, 90, a. 91. Colour must be such a thing, which is a good colour of title, and yet is not any title. Cro. Jac. 122. If a man justifies his entry for such a cause as binds the plaintiff or his heirs for ever, he shall not give any colour: but if he pleads a descent in bar, he must give colour, because this binds the possession, and not the right; so that when the matter of the plea bars the plaintiff of his right, no colour must be given. When the defendant entitles himself by the plaintiff; where a person pleads to the writ, or to the action of the writ; he who justifies for tithes, or where the defendant justifies as servant: in all these cases no colour ought to be given. 10 Rep. 91. Lutw. 1343. Where the defendant doth not make a special title to himself, or any other, he ought to give colour to the plaintiff. Cro. Eliz. 76. In trespass for taking and carrying away twenty loads of wood, &c. the defendant says, that A. B. was possessed of them, ut de bonis propriis, and that the plaintiff claiming them by colour of a deed after made, took them, and the defendant retook them; and adjudged that the colour given to the plaintiff, makes a good title to him, and confesseth the interest in him. 1 Lill. Abr. 275. Colour is for this cause, viz. Where the defendant justifies by title in trespass or assise, if he do not give the plaintiff colour, his plea amounteth only to Not guilty; for if the defendant hath title, he is Not guilty. 1 Rep. 79, 108. Terms de Ley 140. See Doct. Plac. 72, 73. Black. Com. 3 V. 309. But colour is now considered only as matter of form.

Colour of Office, (color officii) Is when an act is evilly done by the countenance of an office; and always taken in the worst sense, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and colour. Plowd. Comment. 64. See Extortion.

Colpices, (colpicium, colpiciis) Young poles, which being cut down, make leavers or lifters; and in Warwickshire they are called colpices to this day. Blount.

Colpo, A small wax-candle, à copo de cere: we read in Hoveden, that when the King of Scots came to the English court, as long as he staid there, he had every day, De liberatione triginta sol. & duodecim vassellos domini os, & quadraginta grossos longos colpones de dominica candela regis, &c. anno 1194.

Combarones, The fellow barons, or commonalty of the cinque ports: King Hen. 3. grants to the barons, or freemen of the port of Feverham, quitantiam de omni thelowie, & consuetudine, sicut ipsi & antecessores sui, & combarones sui de quinque portibus cum melius & plenius habuerunt tempore Regis Edwardi. Placit. temp. Ed. 1. & Ed. 2. But the title of barons of the cinque ports is now given to their representatives in parliament; and the word combaron is used for a fellow member, the baron and his combaron.

Comba terræ, From Sax. cumbe, Brit. kum, Eng. comb, a valley or low piece of ground or place between two hills; which is still so called in Devonshire and Cornwall: hence many villages in other parts of England have their names of comb, as Wickcomb, &c. from their situation. Kennet's Gloss.

Combat, (Fr.) Is taken with us for a formal trial between two champions, of a doubtful cause or quarrel, by the sword or battons. The last case of the kind in this kingdom was anno 6 Car. 1. between Donald lord Rey, appellant, and David Ramsay, Esq; defendant, both Scotchmen, before Robert earl of Lindsey, lord high constable, Thomas earl of Arundel, earl marshal, with other lords; when after the court had met several times in the painted chamber, and other formalities, it was at last referred to the King's will and pleasure, who was inclined to favour Ramsay. Co. Litt. 294. Orig. Juridical. fol. 65. The trial by combat was formerly authorized over all Europe, but as Dr. Robertson justly observes, "the prohibition of this form of trial was a considerable step towards the introduction of such regular government as secured public order and private tranquillity." See Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 47, 52, 54, 55, 291, 295, &c. See Battel.

Combinations to do unlawful acts, are punishable before the unlawful act is executed; this is to prevent the consequence of combinations, and conspiracies, &c. 9 Rep. 57. See Confederacy.

Combustio Pecunie, The ancient way of trying mixt and corrupt money, by melting it down upon payments into the Exchequer. In the time of King Henry 2. a constitution was made called the trial by combustion; the practice of which differed little or nothing from the present method of assaying silver. But whether this examination of money by combustion, was to reduce an equation of money only of sterling, viz. a due proportion of alloy with copper; or to reduce it to a fine pure silver with alloy, doth not appear. On making the constitution of trial, it was considered, that though the money did answer numero & pondere, it might be deficient in value; because mixed with with copper or brals, &c. Vide Lowndes's Essay upon Coin, p. 5.

Comitatus, A county. Ingulphus tells us, That England was first divided into counties by King Alfred; and counties into hundreds, and these again into tithings; and Fortescue writes, that regnum Angliæ per comitatus ut regnum Franciæ per ballivatus distinguitur. Sometimes it is taken for a territory or jurisdiction of a particular place, as in Mat. Paris. anno 1234. Infra metas illas continentur quedam prædia & etiam civitates & castra, quas comitatui suo assignare præsumunt. And in Charta H. 2. apud Hoveden: Castellum de Nottingham cum comitatu, &c. And, De firmis mortuis & debitis, de quibus non est shes, fiat unus rotulus, & intituletur comitatus, & legatur singulis annis super computum vicecomitum. Claus. 12 Ed. 1. See County.

According to Lord Lyttleton, in his history of Hen. 2. lib. 2. fo. 217. each county was antiently an earldom, so that previous to the reign of K. Stephen, there were not any titular earls, nor more earls than counties, tho' there might be fewer. As to the divisions of counties into hundreds and tythings, see Ld. Lytt. l. 2. fo. 259. Also see Bract. l. 3. c. 10.

Comitatu Commissio, Is a writ or commission whereby a sheriff is authorized to take upon him the charge of the county. Reg. Orig. 295.

Comitatu & Castro Commissio, A writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, is committed to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. ibid.

Comitiva, A companion or fellow traveller; 'tis mentioned in Brompton, Regu. H. 2. And sometimes it signifies a troop or company of robbers; as in Walsingham, anno 1366. Interpellaverunt auxilium regis Angliæ contra magnas comitivas, &c.

Commandry, (præceptoria) Was any manor or chief messuage, with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem in England; and he who had the government of such a manor or house was stiled the commander, who could not dispose of it but to the use of the priory, and only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. New Eagle in Lincolnshire was and still is called the commandry of Eagle, and did antiently belong to the said priory of St. John: so Selbach in Pembrokeshire, and Sbingay in Cambridgeshire, were commandries in the time of the knights templars, says Cambden: and these in many places of England are termed Temples, because they formerly belonged to the said templars. Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 2. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, were given to King Hen. 8. by the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. about the time of the dissolution of Abbeys and monasteries; so that the name only of commandries remains, the power being long since extinct.

Commandment, (præceptum) Is diversly taken; as the commandment of the King, when upon his own motion he hath cast any man into prison. Commandment of the justices, absolute or ordinary; absolute, where upon their own authority they commit a person for contempt, &c. to prison, as a punishment; ordinary is when they commit one rather for safe custody, than for any punishment: and a man committed upon such an ordinary commandment is replevisable. Staundf. P. C. 72, 73. Persons committed to prison by the special command of the King, were not formerly bailable by the court of King's Bench; but at this day the law is otherwise declared and settled, as appears under bail. 2 Hawk. P. C. 96.

In another sense of this word; magistrates may command others to assist them in the execution of their offices, for the doing of justice; and so may a justice of peace to suppress riots, apprehend felons; an officer to keep the King's peace, &c. Bro. 3. A master may command his servant to drive another man's cattle out of his ground, to enter into lands, seize goods, distrain for rent, or do other things; if the thing be not a trespass to others. Fitx. Abr. The commandment of a thing is good, where he that commands hath power to do it, and a verbal command in most cases is sufficient; unless it be where it is given by a corporation, or when a sheriff's warrant is to a bailiff to arrest, &c. Bro. 288. Dyer 202. Commandment is also used for the offence of him that willet another man to transgress the law, or do any thing contrary to it: and in the most common signification, it is taken where one willet another to do an unlawful act; as murder, theft, or the like: which the civilians called mandatum. Bract. lib. 3. c. 15.

He that commandeth any one to do an unlawful act, is accessory to it and all the consequences, if it be executed in the same manner as commanded: but if the commander revoke the command; or if the execution varies from it, or in the nature of the offence, in such case he will not be accessory. 3 Inst. 51, 57. 2 Inst. 182. If a man command another to commit a felony on a particular person, and he doth it on another, as to kill A. and he kills B. or to burn the house of A. but he burns the house of B. or to steal one thing, and he steals another; or to commit a felony of one kind, and he commits another: it is said that the commander is not an accessory, because the act done varies in substance from that which was commanded. 1 H. C. P. 436, 452. And see 2 Hawk. 316. Pleas. 475. But where a person commands or advises another to kill such a one in the night, and he kills him in the day; or to kill him in the fields, and he kills him in the town; or to poison him, and he stabs or shoots him; these acts being the same felony in substance with that which was intended, and varying only in circumstances, in respect to time, place, &c. the commander is as much an accessory as if there had been no variance at all between the command and the execution of it. 2 Hawk. 316. If I command a man to rob another, and he kills him in the attempt, though he doth not rob him, I am guilty of the murder; it being the direct and immediate effect of an act done in execution of my command to commit a felony; and if the command be to beat a person, and the person commanded beat him in such a manner that he dies thereof, I am an accessory before to the felony; because it happened in the execution of a command, which tended to endanger the life of the other. Also it is said, that if one command another to burn the house of a certain person, and he by burning it burn likewise the house of another, the commander is equally accessory to the subsequent felony, as to that which was directly commanded. Ibid. 315, 316. To command or counsel any one to commit burglary, is felony without benefit of clergy. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M.

In forcible entries, &c. an infant or feme covert may be guilty in respect of actual violence done by them in person; though not in regard to what shall be done by others at their command, because all such commands of theirs are void. Co. Litt. 357. 1 Hawk. 147. In trespass, &c. the master shall be charged criminally for the act of the servant, done by his command; but servants shall not be excused for committing any crime, when they act by command of their masters; who have no authority over them to give such command. Dost. & Stud. c. 42. H. P. C. 66. Kel. 13. And if a master commands his servant to distrain, and he abuseth the distress, the servant shall answer it to the party injured, &c. Kitch. 372.

Commarchio, The confines of the land; from whence probably comes the word marcbes.—Imprimis de nostris landimeris, commarchionibus. Du Cange.

Commendam, (ecclesia commendata, vel custodia ecclesiæ alicui commissa) Is the holding of a benefice or church-living, which being void, is commended to the charge and care of some sufficient clerk, to be supplied until it may be conveniently provided of a pastor: and he to whom the church is commended, hath the profits thereof only for a certain time, and the nature of the church is not changed thereby, but is as a thing deposited in his hands in trust, who hath nothing but the custody of it, which may be revoked. When a parson is made bishop, there is a cession or voidance of his benefice, by the promotion; but if the King by special dispensation gives him power to retain his benefice, notwithstanding his promotion; he shall continue parson, and is said to hold it in Commendam. Hob. 144. Latib. 236. As the King is the means of avoidances on promotions to dignities, and the presentations thereon belong to him, he often on the creation of bishops grants them licences to hold their benefices in commendam; but this is usually where the bishopricks are small, for the better support of the dignity dignity of the bishop promoted: and it must be always before consecration; for afterwards it comes too late, because the benefice is then absolutely void. A commendam, founded on the statute 25 H. 8. c. 21. is a dispensation from the supreme power, to hold or take an ecclesiastical living contra jus positivum: and there are several sorts of commendams, as a commendam semestris, which is for the benefit of the church without any regard to the commendatory, being only a provisional act of the ordinary, for supplying the vacation of six months, in which time the patron is to present his clerk, and is but a sequestration of the cure and fruits until such time as the clerk is presented: a commendam retinere, which is for a bishop to retain benefices, on his preferment; and these commendams are granted on the King's mandate to the archbishop, expressing his consent, which continues the incumbency, so that there is no occasion for institution. A commendam recipere is to take a benefice de novo in the bishop's own gift, or in the gift of some other patron, whose consent must be obtained. Dyer 228. 3 Lev. 381. Hob. 143. Darw. 79.

A commendam may be temporary for six or twelve months; two or three years, &c. or it may be perpetual, i. e. for life, when it is equal to a presentation, without institution or induction. But all dispensations beyond six months were only permissive at first, and granted to persons of merit: the commendam retinere is for one or two years, &c. and sometimes for three or six years, and doth not alter the estate which the incumbent had before: a commendam retinere, as long as the commendatory should live and continue bishop, hath been held good. Vaugh. 18. The commendam recipere must be for life, as other parsons and vicars enjoy their benefices; and as a patron cannot present to a full church, so neither can a commendam recipere be made to a church that is then full. Show. 414. A benefice cannot be commended by parts, any more than it may be presented unto by parts; as that one shall have the glebe, another the tithes, &c. Nor can a commendatory have a juris utrum, or take to him and his successors, sue or be sued, in a writ of annuity, &c. But a commenda perpetua may be admitted to do it. 11 H. 4. Compl. Incumb. 360. See 1 Nelf. Abr. 454.

Commendatary, (commendatarius) Is he that hath a church living or preferment in commendam.

Commendatary Letters, Are such as are written by one bishop to another, in behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese, travelling thither, that they may be received among the faithful: or that the clerk may be promoted; or necessities administered to others, &c. several forms of these letters may be seen in our historians, as in Bede, lib. 2. c. 18.

Commendatus, One that lives under the protection of a great man. Spelm. Commendati homines were persons who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any superior lord: for ancient homage was either predial, due for some tenure; or personal, which was by compulsion, as a sign of necessary subjection; or voluntarily with a desire of protection: and those, who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any men of power, were sometimes call'd homines ius commendati: and sometimes only commendati, as often occurs in Domesday. Commendati dimidii were those who depended on two several lords, and paid one half of their homage to each: and sub-commendati were like under-tenants, under the command of persons that were dependants themselves on a superior lord: also there were dimidii sub-commendati, who bore a double relation to such depending lords. Domesday. This phrase seems to be still in use, in the usual complement, Commend me to such a friend, &c. which is to let him know, I am his humble servant. Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 20.

Commerce, (commercium) Traffick, trade or merchandise in buying and selling of goods. See Merchant.

There is a distinction between commerce and trade; the former relates to our dealings with foreign nations, or our colonies, &c. abroad; the other to our mutual traffick and dealings among ourselves at home.

With respect to the establishment of commerce in Europe, (its first origin in Italy about the beginning of the eleventh century) see Robert's Hist. of the Emperor Charles

V. 1 V. 32, 33, &c. As to the commerce of the ancients, see Montesquieu L'Esprit des Loix, l. 21. c. 6. Vide also An Essay on Maritime Power and Commerce, by Deslandes, published by Vaillant, in 1743.

Commissary, (commissarius) Is a title in the ecclesiastical law, belonging to one that exerciseth spiritual jurisdiction, in places of a diocese which are so far from the episcopal city, that the chancellor cannot call the people to the bishop's principal consistory court, without their too great inconvenience. This commissary was ordained to supply the bishop's jurisdiction and office in the out-places of the diocese; or in such places as are peculiar to the bishop, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the archdeacon: for where, either by prescription or composition, archdeacons have jurisdiction within their archdeaconries, as in most places they have, this commissary is superfluous and oftentimes vexatious, and ought not to be; yet in such cases a commissary is sometimes appointed by the bishop, he taking prebend money of the archdeacon yearly pro exteriori jurisdictione, as it is ordinarily called. But this is held to be a wrong to archdeacons and the poorer sort of people. Cowell's Interp. 4 Inst. 338.

There are also commissaries in time of war. Persons sent abroad to take care of provisions for the army.—How well they executed the great trust reposed in them, during the late war in Germany, is too well known to the present age, and it is hoped it will be transmitted to posterity.

Commission, (commissio) Is taken for the warrant or letters patent, which all men exercising jurisdiction either ordinary or extraordinary, have to authorize them to hear or determine any cause or action: as the commission of the judges, &c. Commission is with us as much as delegatio with the civilians: and this word is sometimes extended farther than to matters of judgment; as the commission of purveyance, &c. Commissions of inquiry shall be made to the justices of one bench or the other, &c. and to do lawful things, are grantable in many cases: also most of the great officers, judicial and ministerial, of the realm, are made by commission. And by such commissions, treasons, felonies, and other offences, may be heard and determined; by this means likewise, oaths, cognisance of fines, answers are taken, witnesses examined, offices found, &c. Bro. Abr. 12. Rep. 39. Stat. 42 E. 3. c. 4. And most of these commissions are appointed by the King under the Great Seal of England: but a commission granted under the Great Seal may be determined by a Privy Seal; and by granting another new commission to do the same thing, the former commission determines; and on the death or demise of the King, the commissions of judges and officers generally cease. Bro. Commis. 2 Dyer 289. There was formerly a high commission court founded on 1 Eliz. c. 1. but it was abolished by act of parliament 17 Car. 1. c. 11. And by Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2. Of commissions you may see divers in the table of the Register of Writs. See 4 Hen. 4. c. 9. 7 Hen. 4. c. 11. And 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 8. 6 Ann. c. 7.

Commission of Intercipation, Was a commission under the Great Seal to collect a tax or subsidy before the day. 15 H. 8.

Commission of Association, Is a commission to associate two or more learned persons with the justices in the several circuits and counties of Wales, &c. 18 Eliz. c. 9.

Commission of Bankrupt, Where any person is become a bankrupt within any of the statutes against bankrupts, on security given to prove the party a bankrupt, &c. this commission issues from the Lord Chancellor to certain commissioners appointed to take order with the bankrupt's lands and goods, for the satisfaction of the creditors. Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 4. 13 Eliz. c. 7. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, &c. See Bankrupt.

Commission of Charitable Uses, Goes out of the Chancery to the bishop and others, where lands given to charitable uses are misemployed, or there is any fraud or disputes concerning them, to enquire of and redress the abuse, &c. 43 Eliz. c. 4.

Commission of Delegates, Is a commission under the Great Seal to certain persons; usually two or three temporal lords, as many bishops, and two judges of the law, to sit upon an appeal to the King in the court of Chancery, where any sentence is given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. Now generally three three of the Common law judges, and two Civilians, sit as delegates.

Commission to enquire of faults against the Law, Was an ancient commission sent forth on extraordinary occasions and corruptions.

Commission of Lunacy, A commission out of Chancery to enquire whether a person represented to be a lunatic be so or not, that if lunatic, the King may have the care of his estate, &c. 17 Ed. 2. c. 10.

Commission of Rebellion, Otherwise called a writ of rebellion, issues when a man after proclamation made by the sheriff, upon a process out of the Chancery, on pain of his allegiance, to present himself to the court by a day assign'd, makes default in his appearance: and this commission is directed to certain persons, to the end they, three, two, or one of them apprehend the party, or cause him to be apprehended as a rebel and contemner of the King's laws, whosoever found within the kingdom, and bring or cause him to be brought to the court on a day therein assigned: this writ or commission goes forth after an attachment returned, non est inventus, &c. Terms de Ley.

Commission of Sewers Is directed to certain persons to see drains and ditches well kept and maintained in the marshy and fenny parts of England, for the better conveyance of the water into the sea, and preserving the grass upon the land. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 5. 15 Eliz. c. 9.

Commission of Treaty with foreign Princes, Is where leagues and treaties are made and transacted between states and kingdoms, by their ambassadors and ministers, for the mutual advantage of the kingdoms in alliance.

Commission to take up Men for War, Was a commission to press or force men into the king's service. This power of impressing is much doubted by many; yet, in favour of its legality, much hath been said by a late learned judge. Vide Post. Rep. 154. Broadfoot's case. And Black. Com. 1 V. 418. Comb. 245.

Commissioner, (commissionarius) Is he that hath a commission, letters patent, or other lawful warrant to examine any matters, or to execute any publick office, &c. And some commissioners are to hear and determine offences, without any return made of their proceedings; and others to inquire and examine, and certify what is found. 4 Hen. 4. 9. Commissioners by the Common law must pursue the authority of the commission, and perform the effect thereof; and they are to observe the antient rules of the courts whence they come; and if they do any thing for which they have not authority, it will be void. 2 Co. Rep. 25. Co. Lit. 157. The office of commissioners is to do what they are commanded; and it is necessarily implied, that they may do that also, without which what is commanded cannot be done: their authority, when appointed on any statute law, must be used as the statutes prescribe. 12 Rep. 32. If a commission is given to commissioners to execute a thing against law, they are not bound to accept or obey it: commissioners not receiving a commission may be discharged, upon oath before the Barons of the Exchequer, &c. and the King by superfedeas out of Chancery, may discharge commissioners. Besides commissioners relating to judicial proceedings; there are Commissioners of the Treasury, of the Customs, wine-licences, alienations, &c. of which there is an infinite number.

Committee, Are those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, by some court, or by consent of parties to whom it belongs: as in parliament, a bill either consented to and passed, or denied, or neither, but being referred to the consideration of certain persons appointed by the house farther to examine it, they are thereupon called a committee. And when a parliament is called, and the speaker and members have taken the oaths and the standing orders of the house are read, committees are appointed to sit on certain days, viz. the committee of privileges and elections, of religion, of grievances, of courts of justice, and of trade; which are the standing committees. But though they are appointed by every new parliament, they do not all of them act, only the committee of privileges; and this being not of the whole house, is first called in the speaker's chamber, from whence it is adjourned into the house, every one of the house having a vote therein, though not named, which makes the same usually very numerous: and any member may be present at any select committee; but is not to vote unless he be named. The chairman of the grand committee, who is always some leading member, sits in the clerk's place at the table, and writes the votes for and against the matter referred to them; and if the number be equal, he has a casting voice, otherwise he hath no vote in the committee; and after the chairman hath put the question for reporting to the house, if that be carried, he leaves the chair, and the speaker being called to his chair, (who quits it in the beginning, and the mace is laid under the table) he is to go down to the bar, and so bring up his report to the table. After a bill is read a second time in the House of Commons, the question is put, whether it shall be committed to a committee of the whole house, or a private committee; and the committees meet in the speaker's chamber, and report their opinion of the bill with the amendments, &c. And if there be any exceptions against the amendments reported, the bill may be recommitted: eight persons make a committee, which may be adjourned by five, &c. Lex Constitutionis 147, 150. There is a committee of the King, mentioned in West's Symb. tit. Chancery, sect. 144. And this hath been used, though improperly, for the widow of the King's tenant being dead, who is called the committee of the King, that is, one committed by the ancient law of the land to the King's care and protection. Kitch. fel. 160. See Parliament.

Commitment, Is the sending of a person to prison by warrant or order, who hath been guilty of any crime: here it is to be considered,

- I. What kind of offenders may be committed, and by whom and in what manner.
- II. To what prison they may be committed, and at whose charge.
- III. How they may be removed and discharged.

I. As to the kind of offenders.

There is no doubt but that persons apprehended for offences which are not bailable, and also all persons who neglect to offer bail for offences which are bailable, must be committed.—And it is said, that wheresoever a justice of peace is empowered by any statute to bind a person over, or to cause him to do a certain thing, and such person being in his presence shall refuse to be bound, or to do such thing, the justice may commit him to the gaol to remain there till he shall comply.

It seems agreed by all the old books, that wheresoever a constable or private person may justify the arresting another for a felony or treason, he may also justify the sending or bringing him to the common gaol; and that every private person hath as much authority in cases of this kind, as the sheriff, or any other officer, and may justify such imprisonment by his own authority, but not by the command of another. 2 Hawk. P. C. 116, 117.

But inasmuch as it is certain, that a person lawfully making such an arrest, may justify bringing the party to the constable, in order to be carried by him before a justice of peace; and inasmuch as the statutes of 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 13. and 2 & 3 P. & M. cap. 10. which direct in what manner persons brought before a justice of the peace for felony, shall be examined by him, in order to their being committed or bailed, seem clearly to suppose, that all such persons are to be brought before such justice for such purpose; and inasmuch as the statute of 31 Car. 2. c. 2. commonly called the Habeas corpus act, seems to suppose that all persons, who are committed to prison, are there detained by virtue of some warrant in writing, which seems to be intended of a commitment by some magistrate, and the constant tenor of the late books, practice and opinions, are agreeable hereto; it is certainly most advisable at this day, for any private person who arrests another for felony, to cause him to be brought, as soon as conveniently he may, before some justice of peace, that he may be committed or bailed by him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 117. H. P. C. 91, 112. Dalt. c. 118.

It is certain, that the privy council, or any one or two of them, or secretary of state, may lawfully commit persons for treason, and for other offences against the state, as in all ages they have done. 2 Hawk. P. C. 117.

As to the manner of commitment, it is enacted by 2 & 3 P. & M. 10. That justices of peace shall examine persons brought before them for felony, &c. or suspicion thereof, before they commit them to prison, and shall bind their accusers to give evidence against them.

A justice of the peace may detain a prisoner a reasonable time, in order, to examine him; and it is said, that three days is a reasonable time for this purpose. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119. Dalt. c. 125. 2 Inst. 52, 591.

Every commitment must be in writing, and under the hand and seal, and shew the authority of him that made it, and the time and place, and must be directed to the keeper of the prison. Hawk. P. C. 119. It may be either in the King's name, and only tested by the justice, or in the justice's name. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119.

It may command the gaoler to keep the party in safe and close custody; for this being what he is obliged to do by law, it can be no fault to command him so to do. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119.

It ought to set forth the crime with convenient certainty; whether the commitment be by the privy council, or any other authority, otherwise the officer is not punishable by reason of such mittimus, for suffering the party to escape; and the court, before whom he is removed by habeas corpus, ought to discharge or bail him; and this doth not only hold where no cause at all is expressed in the commitment, but also where it is so loosely set forth, that the court cannot adjudge whether it were a reasonable ground for imprisonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119.

A commitment for high treason or felony in general, without expressing the particular species, has been held good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119. But now, since the habeas corpus act, it seems that such a general commitment is not good; and therefore where A. and B. were committed for aiding and abetting Sir James Montgomery to make his escape, who was committed by a warrant of a secretary of state for high treason, on a habeas corpus, they were admitted to bail, because it did not appear of what species of treason Sir James was guilty. Skinn. 596. 1 Salk. 347. S. C.

It is safe to set forth that the party is charged upon oath; but this is not necessary, for it hath been resolved, that a commitment for treason, or for suspicion of it, without setting forth any particular accusation or ground of the suspicion, is good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 120.

Every such mittimus ought to have a lawful conclusion, viz. that the party be safely kept till he be delivered by law, or by order of law, or by due course of law, or that he be kept till further order, (which shall be intended of the order of law) or to the like effect; and if the party be committed only for want of bail, it seems to be a good conclusion of the commitment, that he be kept till he find bail; but a commitment till the person who makes it shall take further order, seems not to be good; and it seems that the party committed by such or any other irregular mittimus may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 120.

Also a commitment grounded on an act of parliament ought to be conformable to the method prescribed by such statute; as where the churchwardens of Northampton were committed on the 43 Eliz. cap. 2. and the warrant concluded in the common form, viz. Until they be duly discharged according to law; but the statute appointing, that the party should there remain until he should account, for want of such conclusion they were discharged. Garth. 152, 153.

II. To what prison, and at whose charge.

With regard to this head it is to be observed, that all commitments must be to some prison within the realm of England. For

By the Stat. 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. it is enacted, "That no subject of this realm, being an inhabitant or resident of this kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Burwich-upon-Tweed, shall or may be sent prisoner into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, Tangier, or into any parts, garrisons, islands, or places beyond the seas, which then were, or at any time after should be within or without the dominions of his Majesty."

Also by 14 Ed. 3. c. 10. "In the right of the gaols which were wont to be in ward of the sheriffs, and annexed to their bailiwicks, it is assented and accorded, that they shall be rejoined to the sheriffs, and the sheriffs shall have the custody of the same gaols as before this time they were wont to have, and they shall put in such under-keepers for whom they will answer. And this is confirmed by 19 Hen. 7. cap. 10. Also it is recited by 5 Hen. 4. cap. 10. That divers constables of castles within the realm, being assigned justices of the peace by the King's commission, had, by colour of such commission, used to take people, to whom they bore evil will, and imprison them within the said castles, till they had made fine and ransom with the said constables for their deliverance: and thereupon it is enacted, "That none be imprisoned by any justice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, saving to lords, and others who have gaols, their franchise in this case." And it seems that the King's grant, since this statute, to private persons to have the custody of prisoners committed by justices of peace, is void. And it is said, that none can claim a prison as a franchise, unless he have also a gaol delivery.

Also it hath been held, that regularly no one can justify the detaining a prisoner in custody out of the common gaol, unless there be some particular reason for so doing; as if the party be so dangerously sick, that it would apparently hazard his life to send him to the gaol; or there be evident danger of a rescue from rebels, &c. yet constant practice seems to authorize a commitment to a messenger; and it is said, that it shall be intended to have been made in order for the carrying of the party to gaol. 2 Hawk. P. C. 118.

And it is said, that if a constable bring a felon to gaol, and the gaoler refuse to receive him, the town where he is constable ought to keep him till the next gaol delivery. H. P. C. 114.

If a person arrested in one county for a crime done in it, fly into another county, and be retaken there, he may be committed by a justice of the first county to the gaol of such county. H. P. C. 93. But by the better opinion, if he had before any arrest fled into such county, he must be committed to the gaol thereof by a justice of such county. 2 Hawk. P. C. 118. Dalt. c. 118. Also it seems to be laid down as a rule by some books, that any offender may be committed to the gaol next to the place where he was taken, whether it lie in the same county or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. 118.

By Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 19. Vagrants and other criminals, offenders, and persons charged with small offences, may for such offences, or for want of sureties, be committed either to the common gaol, or house of correction, as the justices in their judgment shall think proper.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. If a person is apprehended, upon a warrant indorsed, in another county, for an offence not bailable, or if he shall not there find bail, he shall be carried back into the first county, and be committed, or if bailable, bailed, by the justices in such first county.

As to the charges of commitment, it is enacted by 3 Jac. 1. c. 10. Offenders committed are to bear their own charges, and the charges of those who are appointed to guard them; and if they refuse to pay, the charges may be levied by sale of their goods. And by 27 Geo. 2. c. 3. If they have no goods, &c. within the county where they are apprehended, the justices are to grant a warrant on the Treasurer of the county for payment of the charges. But in Middlesex the same shall be paid by the overseers of the poor of the parish where the person was apprehended.

By the 3 Edw. 7. c. 3. The sheriff shall certify the names of all prisoners in his custody to the justices of gaol-delivery.

III. How they may be removed and discharged.

As prisoners ought to be committed at first to the proper prison, so ought they not to be removed thence, except in some special cases; and to this purpose it is enacted by 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. "That if any subject of this realm shall be committed to any prison, or in custody of any officer or officers whatsoever, for any criminal, or supposed

Criminal matter, that the said person shall not be removed from the said prison and custody, into the custody of any other officer or officers, unless it be by habeas corpus, or some other legal writ, and where the prisoner is delivered to the constable or other inferior officer, to carry such prisoner to some gaol; or where any person is sent by order of any judge of assize, or justice of the peace, to any common workhouse, or house of correction; or where the prisoner is removed from one prison or place to another within the same county, in order to a trial or discharge by due course of law; or in case of sudden fire or infection, or other necessity; upon pain that he who makes out, signs, or countersigns, or obeys or executes such warrant, shall forfeit to the party grieved 100*l.* for the first offence, 200*l.* for the second, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 118.

As to the manner of their discharge.

A person legally committed for a crime, certainly appearing to have been done by some one or other, cannot be lawfully discharged by any other but by the King, till he be acquitted on his trial, or have an ignemius found by the grand jury, or none to prosecute him on a proclamation for that purpose, by the justices of gaol delivery. 2 Hawk. P. C. 121.

But if a person be committed on a bare suspicion, without any appeal or indictment for a supposed crime, where afterwards it appears that there was none; as for the murder of a person thought to be dead, who afterwards is found to be alive, it hath been holden that he may be safely dismissed without any farther proceeding; for that he who suffers him to escape, is properly punishable only as an accessory, where there can be no principal; and it would be hard to punish one for a contempt founded on a suspicion appearing in so uncontested a manner to be groundless. 2 Hawk. P. C. 121.

If the words of a statute are not pursued in a commitment, the party shall be discharged by habeas corpus. Ibid. 291. See Bail, Imprisonment.

Commoneigne, (Fr.) A word signifying a fellow monk, that lives in the same convent. 3 Inst. 15.

Commonalty, (populus, plebs, communitas) In art. super chartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 1. Tout le Commune d'Angleterre signifies all the people of England. 2 Inst. 539. But this word is generally used for the middle sort of the King's subjects, such of the commons as are raised beyond the ordinary sort, and coming to have the managing of offices, by that means are one degree under burgesses, which are superior to them in order and authority; and in companies incorporated they are said to consist of masters, wardens, and commonalty, the first two being the chief, and the others such as are usually called of the livery. The ordinary people, and freeholders, or at best knights and gentlemen, under the degree of baron, having been of late years called communitas regni, or tota terra communitas; yet antiently, if we credit Brady, the barons and tenants in capite, or military men, were the community of the kingdom; and those only were reputed as such in our most ancient histories and records. Brady's Gloss. to his Introduc. to Engl. Hist.

Common, communia. Common is a right or privilege which one or more persons claim to take or use, in some part or portion of that which another man's lands, waters, woods, &c. do naturally produce, without having an absolute property in such land, waters, wood, &c. It is called an incorporeal right, which lies in grant, as if originally commencing on some agreement between lords and tenants, for some valuable purposes, which by age being formed into a prescription continues, although there be no deed or instrument in writing which proves the original contract or agreement. 4 Co. 37. 2 Inst. 65. 1 Vent. 387.

Under this title is to be considered,

I. The several kinds of commons.

II. The interest of the owner of the soil; wherein of approvement and inclosure.

III. The commoners interest in the soil; wherein, of apportionment and extinguishment.

I. Of the several kinds of commons.

There is not only common of pasture, but also common of piscary or fishing; common of estovers; common of turbary, which see under their several heads. The word common however, in its most usual acceptation, signifies common of pasture, which is divided into common in gross, common appendant, common appurtenant, and common pur cause de vicinage. Common in gross is a liberty to have common alone, without any lands or tenements, in another person's land, granted by deed to a man and his heirs, or for life, &c. F. N. B. 31, 37. 4 Rep. 30. Common appendant is a right belonging to a man's arable land, of putting beasts commonable into another's ground. And common appurtenant is belonging to an estate for all manner of beasts commonable or not commonable. 4 Rep. 37. Plowd. 161. Common appendant and appurtenant, are in a manner confounded, as appears by Fitzherbert; and are there defined to be a liberty of common appertaining to or depending on a freehold; which common must be taken with beasts commonable, as horses, oxen, kine, and sheep; and not with goats, hogs, and geese. But some make this difference, that common appurtenant may be severed from the land whereto it pertains; but not common appendant, which, according to Sir Edward Coke, had this beginning: when a lord enfeoffed another of arable land, to hold of him in socage, the feoffee, to maintain the service of his plough, had at first, by the courtesy or permission of the lord, common in his wastes for necessary beasts to eat and compost his land, and that for two causes; one, for that it was tacitly implied in the feoffment, by reason the feoffee could not till or compost his land without cattle, and cattle could not be sustained without pasture; so by consequence the feoffee had, as a thing necessary and incident, common in the waste and lands of the lord: and this may be collected from the ancient books and statutes: and the second reason of this common was, for the maintenance and advantage of tillage, which is much regarded and favoured by the law. F. N. B. 180. 4 Rep. 37. Common pur cause de vicinage, common by reason of neighbourhood, is a liberty that the tenants of one lord in one town have to common with the tenants of another lord in another town: it is where the tenants of two lords have used, time out of mind, to have common promiscuously in both lordships, lying together and open to one another. 8 Rep. 78. And those that challenge this kind of common, which is usually called intercommoning, may not put their cattle in the common of the other lord, for then they are distrainable; but they may turn them into their own fields, and if they stray into the neighbouring common, they must be suffered. Terms de Ley. The inhabitants of one town or lordship may not put in as many beasts as they will, but with regard to the freehold of the inhabitants of the other: for otherwise it were no good neighbourhood, upon which all this depends. Ibid.

If one lord encloses the common, the other town cannot then common; but though the common of vicinage is gone, common appendant remains. 7 Rep. 5. 4 Rep. 38. Every common pur cause de vicinage is a common appendant. 1 Danv. Abr. 799. Common appendant is only to ancient arable land, not to a house, meadow, pasture, &c. It is against the nature of common appendant to be appendant to meadow or pasture: but if in the beginning land be arable, and of late a house hath been built on some part of the land, and some acres are employed to meadow and pasture, in such case it is appendant; though it must be pleaded as appendant to the land, and not to the house, pasture, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 457. This may be common appendant, tho' it belongs to a manor, farm, or ploughland: and common appendant is of common right; but it is not common appendant, unless it has been appendant time out of mind. 1 Danv. 746. It may be upon condition; be for all the year, or for a certain time, or for a certain number of beasts, &c. by usage: though it ought to be for such cattle as plough and compost the land, to which it is appendant. Ibid. 797. Common appendant may be to common in a field after the common is severed, till the ground is resown: so it may be to have common in a meadow after the hay is carried off the same till Candlemas, &c. Yelv. 185. This common, which is in its nature without number, by custom may be limited as to the beasts: common appurtenant ought always to be for those levant and couchant, and may be sans number. Plowd. 161. A man may prescribe to have common appurtenant for all manner of cattle, at every season in the year. 25 Aff. 8. Common by prescription for all manner of commonable cattle as belonging to a tenement, &c. must be for cattle levant and couchant upon the land, (which is so many as the land will maintain) or it will not be good: and if a person grants common sans number, the grantee cannot put in so many cattle, but that the grantor may have sufficient common in the same land. 1 Danv. Abr. 798, 799. He who hath common appendant or appurtenant, can keep but a number of cattle proportionable to his land; for he can common with no more than the lands to which his common belongs is able to maintain. 3 Salk. 93. Common appurtenant may be to a house, pasture, &c. though common appendant cannot; but it ought to be prescribed for as against common right: and uncommonable cattle, as hogs, goats, &c. are appurtenant: this common may be created by grant at this day; so may not common appendant. 1 Inst. 122. 1 Roll. Abr. 398.

If a man grant common to another in land wherein he hath nothing, if he afterwards purchases the land, this shall be a good common appurtenant: and it is not necessary that he should have the land at the time of the grant. 1 Danv. 800.

Common appurtenant for a certain number of beasts may be granted over. 1 Danv. 802. A man may use common appurtenant to his manor, with cattle which are for his household; though it is said he cannot use it with cattle which are to sell. Sed qu.

II. As to the interest of the owner of the soil.

The property of the soil in the common is entirely in the lord; and the use of it, jointly in him and the commoners.

Lords of manors may depasture in commons where their tenants put in cattle; and a prescription to exclude the lord is against law. 1 Inst. 122.

The lord may agist the cattle of a stranger in the common by prescription: and he may license a stranger to put in his cattle, if he leaves sufficient room for the commoners. 1 Danv. 795. 2 Mod. 6. Also the lord may surcharge, &c. an overplus of the common: and if, where there is not an overplus, the lord surcharges the common, the commoners are not to distrain his beasts; but must commence an action against the lord. F. N. B. 125. But it is said, if the lord of the soil put cattle into a close, contrary to custom, when it ought to lie fresh, a commoner may take the cattle damage-feasant: otherwise it is a general rule that he cannot distrain the cattle of the lord. 1 Danv. 807.

The lord may distrain where the common is surcharged; and bring action of trespass for any trespass done in the common. 9 Rep. 113.

A lord may make a pond on the common: though the lord cannot dig pits for gravel or coal; the statutes of approvement being only by inclosure. 3 Inst. 204. 1 Roll. 106. If the lord makes a warren on the common, the commoners may not kill the conies; but are to bring their action, for they may not be their own judges. 1 Roll. 90. 405.

By statute, lords may approve against their tenants, viz. inclose part of the waste, &c. and thereby discharge it from being common, leaving common sufficient; and neighbours as well as tenants claiming common of pasture, shall be bound by it. 20 H. 3. c. 4. If the lord encloses on the common, and leaves not common sufficient, the commoners may not only break down the inclosures; but may put in their cattle, although the lord ploughs and sows the land. 2 Inst. 188. 1 Roll. Abr. 406.

III. Of the commoners interest in the soil.

A commoner hath only a special and limited interest in the soil, but yet he shall have such remedies as are commensurate to his right, and therefore may distrain beasts damage-feasant, bring an action on the case, &c. but not being absolute owner of the soil, he cannot bring a general action of trespass for a trespass done upon the common. See Bridg. 10, 11. Godb. 123, 124. 2 Leon. 201, 202.

A commoner cannot regularly do any thing on the soil which tends to the melioration or improvement of the common, as cutting down of bushes, fern, &c. 1 Sid. 251. 12 Hen. 8. 2. 13 Hen. 8. 15. Yet vide post.

Therefore if a common every year in a flood is surrounded with water, the commoners cannot make a trench in the soil to avoid the water, because he has nothing to do with the soil, but only to take the grass with the mouth of the cattle. 1 Roll. Abr. 405. 2 Bull. 116.

Every commoner may break the common if it be inclosed, and although he does not put his cattle in at the time, yet his right of commonage shall excuse him from being a trespasser. Lit. Rep. 38. See 1 Roll. Abr. 406. Supposing the inclosure made by the lord, and that there is not sufficient common; or that the inclosure is made by any other person than the lord.

If a tenant of the freehold ploughs it, and sows it with corn, the commoner may put in his cattle, and therewith eat the corn growing upon the land; so if he lets his corn lie in the field beyond the usual time, the other commoners may notwithstanding put in their beasts. 2 Leon. 202, 203.

The commoner cannot use common but with his own proper cattle: but if he hath not any cattle to manure the land, he may borrow other cattle to manure it, and use the common with them; for by the loan, they are in a manner made his own cattle. 1 Danv. 798. Grantee of common appurtenant, for a certain number of cattle, cannot common with the cattle of a stranger: he that hath common in gross, may put in a stranger's cattle, and use the common with such cattle. Ibid. 803. Common appendant or appurtenant, cannot be made common in gross: and approvement extends not to common in gross. 2 Inst. 86. A commoner may distrain beasts put into the common by a stranger, or every commoner may bring action of the case, where damage is received. 9 Rep. 11. But one commoner cannot distrain the cattle of another commoner, though he may those of a stranger, who hath no right to the common. 2 Lutw. 1238. Unless he puts in more than he hath a right for.

Where a commoner surcharges the common, the other commoners may have a writ of admeasurement; and admeasurement is to be according to the quality and quantity of the freehold, and for all the cattle which are upon the land. It lies only by one commoner against another; but not against a commoner sans number; nor against the lord, in which case there must be an assise. 1 Danv. 809. If a man be disseised of his common, he shall have an assise. New Nat. Br. 399. If any commoner incloses, or builds on the common, every commoner may have an action for the damage. Where turf is taken away from the common, the lord only is to bring the action: but 'tis said the commoners may have an action for the trespass, by entering on the common, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 89, 398. 2 Leon. 201. If a commoner who hath a freehold in his common be ousted of, or hindered therein, that he cannot have it so beneficially as he used to do; whether the interruption be by the lord or any stranger, he may have an assise against him: but if the commoner hath only an estate for years, then his remedy is by action on the case. And if it be only a small trespass, that is little or no loss to the commoner, but he hath common enough besides, the commoner may not bring any action. 8 Rep. 79. 4 Rep. 37. Dyer 316. A commoner cannot dig clay on the common, which destroys the grass, and carrying it away doth damage to the ground: so that the other commoners can't enjoy the common in tam amplo modo as they ought. Godb. 344. Also a commoner may not cut bushes, dig trenches, &c. in the common, without a custom to do it. 1 Nelf. 462. If he makes any thing de novo, he is a trespasser: he can do nothing to impair the common; but may reform a thing abused, fill up holes, dig down mole-hills, &c. for improvement. 1 Brownl. 208. Sed qu. Vide first case in this column. Yet vide post.

No commoner can take the grass that grows on the common, otherwise than by depasturing it; nor can he meddle with the soil: but if the owner of the soil set up a hedge on the common, the commoner may throw it down. 15 H. 7. A commoner may abate hedges erected on a common; for though the lord hath an interest in the soil, by abating the hedges, the commoner doth not meddle with it. 2 Mod.

2 Mod. 65: Any man may by prescription have common and feeding for his cattle in the King's high-way, although the soil doth belong to another. Hill. 42 Eliz. But the occupation of common by usurpation, will not give title to him that doth occupy it, unless he hath had it time beyond memory. And if a man enfeoffed of land, by reason of which he hath right to common, aliens it to one who doth not take or use the common; and then he makes an alienation to another, the last feoffee may not have it, for he shall not have a better estate in the land than his feoffor had. Fitz. Abr. Comm. 255.

Upon agreement between two commoners to enclose a common, a party having interest not privy to the agreement, will not be bound; but one or two wilful persons shall not hinder the publick good. Chan. Rep. 48. Commoners must be driven yearly at Michaelmas or within fifteen days after: infected horses, and stone-horses under size, &c. are not to be put into commons, under forfeitures, by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13. New erected cottages, though they have four acres of ground laid to them ought not to have common in the waste. 2 Inst. 740. In law proceedings, where there are two distinct commons, the two titles must be shewn: cattle are to be alledged commonable; and common ought to be in lands commonable: and the place is to be set forth where the messuage and lands lie, &c. to which the common belongs. 1 Nels. 462, 463.

Common appendant, because it is of common right, shall be apportioned by the commoner's purchase of part of the land in which he hath such common; but common appurtenant shall be extinct by the commoner's purchase of part of the land, in which, &c. Both common appendant and appurtenant shall be apportioned by alienation of part of the land to which the common is appendant or appurtenant. Co. Litt. 122. Hob. 235. 8 Co. 78. Owen 122. 4 Co. 37.

A release of common in one acre, is an extinguishment of the whole common. See 4 Co. 37.

If A. hath common in the lands of B. as appurtenant to a messuage, and after B. infeoffs A. of the said lands, whereby the common is extinguished; and then A. leases to B. the said messuage and lands, with all commons, &c. occupat' vel usitat' cum præd. messuagio; this is a good grant of a new common for the time. Cro. Eliz. 570. Where a person purchaseth part of the land wherein he hath common, the whole common is extinct and gone. Cro. Eliz. 594. If several persons are seised of several parts of a common, and a commoner purchases the inheritance of one part, his entire common is extinct. 1 And. 159. When a man hath common appendant for a certain number of cattle, and to a certain parcel of land, if he sell part of it, the common is not extinguished; for the purchaser shall have common pro rata: but 'tis otherwise in common appurtenant. 8 Rep. 73. 1 Nels. 460. See Fitz. Abr. tit. Comm. per tot.

Common of Estovers, Is a right of taking wood out of another man's wood, for house-bote, plough-bote, and hay-bote. What botes are necessary, tenants may take, notwithstanding no mention be made thereof in their leases; but if a tenant take more house-bote than is needful, he may be punished for waste. Terms de Ley. Tenants for life may take upon the land demised reasonable estovers, unless restrained by special covenant: and every tenant for years hath three kinds of estovers incident to his estate. 1 Inst. 41. When a house having estovers appendant or appurtenant, is blown down by wind, if the owner rebuilds it in the same place and manner as before, his estovers shall continue: so if he alters the rooms and chambers, without making new chimnies; but if he erect any new chimnies he will not be allowed to spend any estovers in such new chimnies. 4 Rep. 87. 4 Leon. 333. If one have a dwelling-house whereunto common of estovers doth belong, and the house by fire is burnt down, and a new one built near the to the place, or in the place in another form, the estovers are gone: but if the old house be only some of it down, it is otherwise; and in all cases where the alterations to a house do no prejudice to the tertenant or owner of the land or wood, the estovers will remain. F. N. B. 180. Where a man hath estovers for life, if the owner cut down all the wood, that there is none left for him, he may bring an assise of estovers; and if the tenant have but an estate for years, or at will, he may have an action of the case. Moor Ca. 65. 9 Rep. 112. If the tenant who hath common of estovers, shall use them to any other purpose than he ought, he that owns the wood may bring trespass against him: as where one grants twenty loads of wood to be taken yearly in such a wood, ten loads to burn, and ten to repair pales; here he may cut and take the wood for the pales, though they need no amending, but then he must keep it for that use. 9 Rep. 113. F. N. B. 58, 159.

Common of Piscary, Is a liberty of fishing in another man's water. Common of piscary to exclude the owner of the soil, is contrary to law: though a person by prescription may have a separate right of fishing in such water and the owner of the soil be excluded; for a man may grant the water; without passing the soil: and if one grant separatam piscariam, neither the soil nor the water pass, but only a right of fishing. 1 Inst. 4, 122, 164. 5 Rep. 34. No person shall fish in any river without the owner's consent, under penalties: and nets, angles, &c. shall be seized and destroyed, by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. See Fish and Fishing.

Common of Turbary, Is a licence to dig turf upon the ground of another, or in the lord's waste. This common is appendant or appurtenant to an house, and not to lands; for turfs are to be burnt in the house: and it may be in gross; but it does not give any right to the land, trees, or mines. It cannot exclude the owner of the soil. 1 Inst. 4. 4 Rep. 37.

There is a common or liberty of digging coals, and gravel, sand, &c. as well as turf.

Common Bench, (banus communis, from the Sax. banc, bank, and thence metaphorically a bench, high seat or tribunal) The court of Common Pleas was anciently called Common Bench, because communia placita inter subditos ex jure nostro, quod commune vocant, in hoc disceptantur: That is, the pleas or controversies between common persons are there tried and determined. Carob. Britan. 113. In law books and references the court of Common Pleas is writ C. B. from Communi Banco, (or C. P.) And the justices of that court are stiled Justiciarii de Banco. See Common Pleas.

Common Day of Plea in Law, Signifies an ordinary day in court, as Obabis Hilarii, Quindena Pasche, &c. It is mentioned in the Stat. 51 H. 3. St. 2. & St. 3. concerning general days in bank.

Common Fine, (finis communis) A small sum of money, which the resiants within the liberty of some leets pay to the lords, called in divers places head silver or head pence, in others cert money; and was first granted to the lord, towards the charge of his purchase of the court-leet, whereby the resiants have the ease to do their suit within their own manors, and are not compellable to go to the sheriff's turn: in the manor of Sheepshead in the county of Leicester, every resiant pays 1 d. per poll to the lord at the court held after Michaelmas, which is there called common fine. For this common fine the lord may distrain; but he cannot do it without a prescription. 11 Re. 44. There is also common fine of the county.—Quod communes misericordie, vel fines comitatum amerciatorum in finibus itinerum justiciariorum, &c. Fleta, lib. 7. c. 48. See Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 18.

Commons House of Parliament, Is the lower house of parliament, so called, because the commons of the realm, that is, the knights, citizens; and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the commons, do sit there. Crompt. Jurisd. See Parliament.

Common Intendment, Is common meaning or understanding, according to the subject matter, not strained to any extraordinary or foreign sense: bar to common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which commonly disables the plaintiff's declaration. There are several cases in the law where common intendment, and intendment take place: and of common intendment a will shall not be supposed to be made by collusion. Co. Lit. 99. See Co. Lit. 303, a, b, &c.

Common Law, (Lex Communis) Is taken for the law of this kingdom simply, without any other laws; as it was generally holden before any statute was enacted in parliament to alter the same: and the King's courts of justice justice are called the Common Law Courts. The Common Law is grounded upon the general customs of the realm; and includes in it the law of nature, the law of God, and the principles and maxims of the law: it is founded upon reason; and is said to be the perfection of reason, acquired by long study, observation and experience, and refined by learned men in all ages. And it is the common birthright, that the subject hath for the safe-guard and defence, not only of his goods, lands, and revenues; but of his wife and children, body, fame, and life also. Co. Litt. 97, 142. Treatise of Laws, p. 2.

According to Hale, the Common law of England, is the common rule for administering justice, within this kingdom, and asserts the King's royal prerogatives, and likewise the rights and liberties of the subject: 'tis generally that law, by which the determinations in the King's ordinary courts are guided; and this directs the course of descents of lands; the nature, extent and qualification of estates; and therein the manner and ceremonies of conveying them from one to another; with the forms, solemnities and obligation of contracts; the rules and directions for the exposition of deeds, and acts of parliament: the process, proceedings, judgments and executions of our courts of justice; also the limits and bounds of courts, and jurisdictions; the several kinds of temporal offences and punishments, and their application, &c. Sir Matthew Hale's Hist. of the Law, pag. 24, 44, 45.

As to the rise of the Common law, this account is given by some ancient writers: after the decay of the Roman empire, three sorts of the German people invaded the Britains, viz. the Saxons, the Angles, and the Jutes; from the last sprung the Kentish men, and the inhabitants of the Isle of Wight; from the Saxons came the people called East, South, and West Saxons; and from the Angles, the East Angles, Mercians and Northumbrians: These people having different customs, they inclined to the different laws by which their ancestors were governed; but the customs of the West Saxons and Mercians, who dwelt in the midland counties, being preferred before the rest, were for that reason called jus Anglorum; and by these laws those people were governed for many ages: but the East Saxons having afterwards been subdued by the Danes, their customs were introduced, and a third law was substituted, which was called Dane-lage; as the other was then stiled West-Saxon-lage, &c. At length the Danes being overcome by the Normans, William called the Conqueror, upon consideration of all those laws and customs, abrogated some, and established others; to which he added some of his own country laws, which he judged most to conduce to the preservation of the peace: and this is what we now call the Common law.

But though we usually date our Common law from hence, this was not the original of the Common law; for Ethelbert, the first christian King of this nation, made the first Saxon laws, which were published by the advice of some wise men of his council: and King Alfred who lived 300 years afterwards, being the first sole Monarch after the heptarchy, collected all the Saxon laws into one book, and commanded them to be observed through the whole kingdom, which before only affected certain parts thereof; and it was therefore properly called the Common law, because it was common to the whole nation; and soon after it was called the sole right. i. e. the peoples right.

Alfred was stiled Anglicarum legum conditor: and when the Danes had introduced their laws on the conquest of the kingdom, they were afterwards destroyed; and Edward the Confessor out of the former laws composed a body of the Common law; wherefore he is called by our historians Anglicarum legum reformator. Blount. In the reign of Edw. 1. Britton wrote his learned book of the Common law of this realm, which was done by the King's command, and runs in his name, answerable to the Institutiones of the Civil law, which Justinian assumes to himself, though composed by others. Staundf. Prerog. 6, 21. But Justinian ought to be intitled to the honour, as the Institutes were composed by his direction. This Britton is mentioned by Gwin to be bishop of Hereford. Bracon, a great lawyer, in the time of Hen. 3. wrote a very learned treatise of the Common law of England, held in great estimation; and he was said to be Lord Chief Justice of the kingdom. Also the famous and learned Glanvil, Lord Chief Justice in the reign of Hen. 2. wrote a book of the Common law, which is said to be the most ancient composition extant on that subject. Besides these, in the time of Ed. 4. the renowned lawyer Littleton wrote his excellent book of English Tenures. In King James the First's reign, the great oracle of the law, Sir Edward Coke, published his learned and laborious Institutes of our law, and commentaries on Littleton. About the same time likewise Dr. Cowel, a civilian, wrote a short institute of our laws. In the reign of King George the First, Dr. Tho. Wood, a civilian and common lawyer, and at last a divine, wrote an institute of the laws of England, which is something after the manner of the institutes of the Civil law. And to conclude the whole of this head, the learned Dr. Blackstone, (now one of his Majesty's Justices of the court of Common Pleas) in the reign of George the Third, published Commentaries on the laws of England, in 4 volumes quarto, the best analytic and most methodic system of our laws which ever was published: 'Tis equally adapted for the use of students, and of those gentlemen who choose to acquire that knowledge of our laws, which is, in fact, essentially necessary for every one.

Common Pleas, (communia placita) Is one of the King's courts now constantly held in Westminster hall; but in ancient time was moveable, as appears by Magna Charta, cap. 11. Gwyn, in the preface of his reading, says, That till Hen. 3. granted the great charter there were but two courts, called the King's courts, viz. the King's Bench and the Exchequer, which were then stiled Curia Domini Regis, and Aula Regis, because they followed the court or the King; and that upon the grant of that charter, the court of Common Pleas was erected and settled in one certain place, i. e. Westminster-hall; and after that, all the writs ran Quod sit coram iudiciariis meis apud Westm. whereas before, the party was required by them to appear Coram me vel iudiciariis meis, without any addition of place, &c. as he observes out of the writings of Glanvil and Bracon. But Sir Edward Coke is of opinion in his preface to the eighth report, that the court of Common Pleas was constituted before the conquest; and was not created by Magna Charta, at which time there were Iudiciarii de Banco, &c. Though before this act, Common Pleas might have been held in Banco Regis; and all original writs were returnable there.

Writs returnable in this court, are now coram iudiciariis nostris apud Westm. But original writs, &c. returnable in B. R. are, Coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia. The jurisdiction of this court is general, and extends itself throughout England: it holds pleas of all civil causes at Common law; between subject and subject, in actions real, personal, and mixed; and it seems to have been the only court for real causes. In personal and mixed actions it hath a concurrent jurisdiction with the King's Bench: but it hath no cognizance of pleas of the crown; and Common Pleas are all pleas that are not such. This court cannot regularly hold plea in any action, real or personal, &c. but by writ out of Chancery returnable here, except it be by bill for or against an officer, or other privileged person of the court. All actions belonging to this court, come hither either by original, as arrears and outlawries; or by privilege or attachment, for or against privileged persons; or out of inferior courts, not of record, by pone, recordare, accedas ad curiam, writ of false judgment, &c. Actions popular, and actions penal, of debt, &c. upon any statute, are cognizable by this court: and besides having jurisdiction for punishment of its officers and ministers; the court of Common Pleas may grant prohibitions to keep temporal and ecclesiastical courts within due bounds. 4 Inft. 99, 100, 118. In this court are four judges, created by letters patent; of whom the chief justice is a lord (i. e. so called) by his office: the seal of the court is committed to the custody of the chief justice.

The other officers of the Common Pleas are the Custos Brevium, three Prothonotaries and their Secondaries, the Clerk of the Warrants, Clerk of the Effoins, fourteen Filers, four Exigenters, a Clerk of the Juries, the Chirographer, Chirographer, Clerk of the King's Silver, the Clerk of the Treasury, Clerk of the Seal, of Out-lawries, and the Clerk of the Inrolment of Fines and Recoveries, Clerk of the Errors, &c. Prothonotarius Brevium is the chief clerk in this court, who receives and keeps all writs returnable therein; and all records of Nisi prius, which are delivered to him by the clerks of the assize of every circuit, &c. and he files the rolls together, and carries them into the treasury of records: he also makes out exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records, &c. The Prothonotaries enter and inrol all declarations, pleadings, judgments, &c. and they make out all judicial writs, writs of execution, writs of privilege, procedendo's &c. The Secondaries are assistants to the Prothonotaries in the execution of their offices; and they take minutes, and draw up all orders and rules of court. The Filazers, who have the several counties of England divided among them, make out all mesne process, as capias, alias, pluries, &c. between the original writ and the declaration; and they make all writs of view, &c. The Exigenters, appointed for several counties, make out all exigents and proclamations in order to outlawry. The Clerk of the Warrants, enters all warrants of attorney; inrols deeds of bargain and sale; and estreats all issues. The Clerk of the Effoins, keeps the roll of the effoins, wherein he enters them, and nonsuits, &c. The Clerk of the Juries, makes out all writs of habeas corpora juratorum, for juries to appear; and he enters the continuances till the verdict given. The Clerk of the Treasury keeps the records of the court, and makes exemplifications of records, copies of issues, judgments, &c. The Clerk of the Seals, seals all writs and mesne process; also writs of outlawry and surperseades, and all patents. The Clerk of the Outlawries, makes out the writs of capias utlagatum. The Clerk of the Errors is for the allowance of writs of error, &c. The Clerk of the Inrolments of fines and recoveries, returns all writs of covenant, writs of entry and seisin, and inrols and exemplifies fines, &c. The Clerk of the King's Silver enters the substance of the writ of covenant: and the Chirographer ingrosseth all fines, and delivers the indentures to the parties, &c. And to these officers may be added, a Proclamator; a Keeper of the court; Cryer; and Tipstaffs; besides the Warden of the Fleet. There are also Attornies of this court, whose number is unlimited; and none may plead at the bar of the court, or sign any special pleadings, but Serjeants at law.

Common Prayer, (Preces Publicæ) Is the liturgy, or prayers used in our church. It is the particular duty of clergymen every Sunday, &c. to use the publick form of prayer, prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer: and if any incumbent be resident upon his living, as he ought to be, and keep a curate, he is obliged by the act of uniformity once every month at least, to read the Common Prayers of the church, according as they are directed by the book of Common Prayer, in his parish church, in his own person, or he shall forfeit 5*l.* for every time he fails therein. Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. Also by that statute the book of Common Prayer is to be provided in every parish, under the penalty of 3*l.* a month; and the Common Prayer must be read before every lecture; the whole appointed for the day, with all the circumstances, and ceremonies, &c. And by one of the canons of the church; ministers before all sermons, are to move the people to join in a short prayer, for the catholick church; and the whole congregation of christian people, &c. for the King and Royal Family; the ministers of God's word, nobility, magistrates, and whole commons of the realm, &c. and conclude with the Lord's Prayer. Can. 55. Refusing to use the Common Prayer; or using any other open prayers, &c. is punishable by Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. See Church, Service, and Sacrament.

Common Weal, Is understood in our law to be bonum publicum, and is a thing much favoured; and therefore the law doth tolerate many things to be done for common good, which otherwise might not be done: and hence it is, that monopolies are void in law; and that bonds and covenants to restrain free trade, tillage, or the like, are adjudged void. 11 Co. Rep. 50. Plowd. 25. Shep. Fp. 270.

Commorancy, (commerantia, from commoro) An abiding, dwelling or continuing in any place; as an inhabitant of a house in a vill, &c. And commorancy for a certain time, may make a settlement in a parish. Dalt. See Poor.

Commoroth, or Comoroth, (comorotha) From the Brit. cymmorth, i. e. subsidium; a contribution which was gathered at marriages, and when young priests said or sung the first masses, &c. 4 Hen. 4. c. 27. But the 26 H. 8. c. 6. prohibits the levying any such in Wales, or the Marches, &c.

Commote, In Wales is half a cantred or hundred, containing fifty villages. Stat. Wallie, 12 Ed. 1. Wales was anciently divided into three provinces; and each of these were again subdivided into cantreds, and every cantred into commotes. Doderige's Hist. Wal. fol. 2. Commote also signifies a great seignory or lordship, and may include one or divers manors. Co. Litt. 5.

Communance. The commoners, or tenants and inhabitants, who had the right of common, or commoning in open field, &c. were formerly called the communance. Cowel.

Commune Concilium Regni Angliæ, The common council of the King and people assembled in parliament.

Communia placita non tenenda in Scaccario, Is an ancient writ directed to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer, forbidding them to hold plea between common persons in that court, where neither of the parties belong to the same. Reg. Orig. 187.

Communum Custodia, A writ which anciently lay for the lord, whose tenant holding by knight's service died, and left his eldest son under age, against a stranger that entered the land, and obtained the ward of the body. F. N. B. 89. Reg. Orig. 161. Since the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. hath taken away wardships, this writ is become of no use.

Community of the kingdom. Vide Commonalty.

Companage, (Fr.) Is all kind of food, except bread and drink: and the learned Spelman interprets it to be quicquid cibi cum pane sumitur. In the manor of Feferton in the county of Nottingham, some tenants when they performed their boons or work-days to the lords, had three boon loaves with companage allowed them. Reg. de Thurgarton cited in Antiq. Nottingham.

Companion of the Garter, Is one of the knights of that most noble order; at the head of which is the King, as sovereign. 24 H. 8. c. 13.

Compass, An instrument used in navigation, by the direction and assistance whereof vessels are steered to the most distant parts of the world. 'Twas invented soon after the close of the holy war, and thereby navigation was rendered more secure as well as more adventurous, the communication between remote nations was facilitated, and they were brought nearer to each other. See Robert's Hist. Emp. C. 1. 1 V. 78.

Compellativum, An adversary or accuser.—Episcopus in compellativum adlegationem docere ne quis alium persequatur, cogat jurejurando vel in ordalio. Leg. Athelstan.

Compertorium, A judicial inquest in the Civil law, made by delegates, or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

Compounding felony, or best-bote, Is where the party robbed not only knows the felon, but also takes his goods again, or other amends upon agreement not to prosecute. It was formerly held to make a man an accessory; but is now punished only with fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 125. By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. even to advertise a reward for the return of things stolen, with no questions asked, or words to the same purport, subjects the advertiser and the printer to a forfeiture of 50*l.* each.

Composition, (compositio) An agreement or contract between a parson, patron and ordinary, &c. for money or other thing in lieu of tithes. Land may be exempted from the payment of tithes, where compositions have been made: and real compositions for tithes are to be made by the concurrent consent of the parson, patron and ordinary. Real compositions are distinguished from personal contracts; for a composition called a personal contract is only an agreement between the parson and the parishioners, to pay so much instead of tithes; and though such agreement is confirmed by the ordinary, yet (if the parson is not a party) that doth not make it a real composition, because he ought to be a party to the deed of composition. Marb's Rep. 87. The compositions for tithes made by the consent of the parson, patron and ordinary, by virtue of 13 Elix. c. 10. shall not bind the successor unless made for twenty-one years or three lives, as in case of leases of ecclesiastical corporations, &c. Compositions were at first for a valuable consideration, so that though in process of time, upon the increase of the value of the lands such compositions do not amount to the value of the tithes, yet custom prevails, and from hence arises what we call a modus decimandi. Hob. 29. The word composition hath likewise another meaning, i. e. deciso litis. See Tithes.

Compositi were in antient times allowed for crimes and offences, even for murder.—An expedient employed by the civil magistrate, in order to set some bounds to the violence of private revenge. This custom may be traced back to the antient Germans. Tacit. de Morib. Ger. c. 21. Vide Robert's Hist. Emp. Charles V. 1 V. 278, 299, &c. But see particularly Lord Kaim's Hist. Law Tr. 1 V. 41, 42, &c.

Compositio Mensurarum, Is the title of an antient ordinance for measure, not printed.

Compositum, Dung, soil or compost laid on lands. Registr. Eccl. Cantuar. MS.

Comprint, Intends a surreptitious printing of another bookseller's copy, to make gain thereby, which is contrary to the Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 33. and 8 Ann. c. 19, &c. and to Common law.

Compromise, (compromissum) Is defined to be a mutual promise of two or more parties at difference, to refer the ending of their controversy to arbitrators: and West says it is the faculty or power of pronouncing sentence between persons at variance, given to arbitrators by the parties private consent. West's Symb. jell. 1. Matters compromised, are also matters of law referred, or made an end of.

Compurgator, One that by oath justifies another's innocence. Compurgators were introduced as evidence in the jurisprudence of the middle ages.—Their number varied according to the importance of the subject in dispute, or the nature of the crime with which a person was charged. Du Cange voc. Juramentum, vol. 3. p. 1599. Robert's Hist. Emp. Charles V. 1 V. 49. See Oath, and Black. Com. 3 V. 342, 3. 4 V. 361, 407.

Computation, (computatio) Is the true account and construction of time; and to the end neither party to an agreement, &c. may do wrong to the other, nor the determination of time be left at large, it is to be taken according to the just judgment of the law. A deed dated the 20th day of August, to hold from the day of the date, shall be construed to begin on the 21st day of August: but if in the habendum it be to hold from the making, or from thenceforth, it shall begin on the day delivered. 1 Inft. 46. 5 Rep. 1. If an indenture of lease dated the 4th day of July, made for three years from thenceforth, be delivered at four of the clock in the afternoon of the said 4th day of July, the lease shall end the 3d day of July in the third year: and the law in this computation rejects all fractions or divisions of the day. But some have held that rent is not due on the day limited to be paid till the middle of the day, and after noon; in case a tenant for life dies at such a critical juncture, &c. See Day and Month.

Computation of stiles after the English manner, is allowing 5280 feet, or 1760 yards to each mile; and the same shall be reckoned not by strait lines, as a bird or arrow may fly, but according to the nearest and most usual way. Cro. Eliz. 212.

Computo, (Lat.) Is a writ to compel a bailiff, receiver or accountant, to yield up his accounts: it is founded on the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 12. And also lies against guardians, &c. Reg. Orig. 135.

Concealers, (concelatores, so called a concelando, as mons a monendo, by an antiphrasis) Are such as find out concealed lands, &c. such lands as are privily kept from the King by common persons, having nothing to shew for their title or estate therein. 39 Elix. cap. 22. There were concealers of crimes; and concealing treason, &c. when misprision, see Misprision.

Concessit, A word of frequent use in conveyances, creating a covenant in law; as dedi makes warranty. Co. Lit. 384. This word is of a general extent, and said to amount to a grant, seoffment, lease and release, &c. 2 Saund. 96.

Concionatores, Common-council men, freemen, called to the hall or assembly, as worthby.—Quodam tempore cum convenissent concionatores apud London, &c. Hittor. Elien. edit. Gale, c. 46.

Conclusion, (conclusio) Is when a man by his own act upon record hath charged himself with a duty or other thing, or confessed any matter whereby he shall be concluded: as if a sheriff returns that he hath taken the body upon a capias, and hath not the body in court at the day of the return of the writ; by the return, the sheriff is concluded from plea of escape, &c. Terms d. Lay. In another sense, this word conclusion signifies the end of any plea, replication, &c. and a plea to the writ is to conclude to the writ; a plea in bar, to conclude to the action, &c. Conclusion of plea in bar shall be, et hoc paratus est verificare: of pleas tendering issue, et de hoc ponit se super patriam. Kitch. 219, 220. See Black. Com. 3 V. 303. and Co. Lit. 303. a. b. &c.

Concord, (concordia) Is an agreement made between two or more, upon a trespass committed; and is divided into concord executory and concord executed: and according to Plowden, one binds not, as being imperfect, but the other is absolute, and ties the party. Though by some opinions, agreements executory are perfect, and bind no less than agreements executed. Plowd. 5, 6, 8. These concords and agreements are by way of satisfaction for the trespass, &c. Concord is also an agreement between parties, who intend the levying of a fine of lands one to the other, how and in what manner the lands shall pass: it is the foundation and substance of the fine, taken and acknowledged by the party before one of the judges of C. B. or by commissioners in the country, and in Latin begins thus: Et est concordia talis scilicet quod præd. A. B. recogn. tenementa præd. cum petiti' esse jus ipsius C. D. ut ill. quæ idem C. D. habet de dono præd. A. B. Et ill. remisit. Et quiet. clam. de se & hæred. suis præfuit. C. & hæred. suis imperpetuum, &c.

Concubitant, Signifies a lying together. Stat. 1 H. 7. cap. 6.

Concubinage, (concubinatus) In common acceptation is the keeping of a whore or concubine: but in a legal sense, it is used as an exception against her that sueth for dower, alledging thereby that she was not a wife lawfully married to the party, in whose lands she seeks to be endowed, but his concubine. Brit. c. 107. Brett. lib. 4. tract. 6. cap. 8. There was a concubinage allowed in Scripture to the patriarchs, secundum legem matrimonii, &c. Blount.

Conders, (from the Fr. conduire, to conduct) Are such as stand upon high places near the sea-coast, at the time of herring-fishing, to make signs with boughs, &c. to the fishermen at sea, which way the shoals of herrings passeth; for this may be better discovered by such as stand upon some high cliff on the shore, by reason of a kind of blue colour which the herrings cause in the water; than by those that are in the ships or boats for fishing. These are otherwise called huers and balkers, directors and guiders, as appears by the Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 23.

Condition, (conditio) Is a restraint annexed to a thing, so that by the non-performance, the party to it shall receive prejudice and loss; and by the performance, commodity and advantage: or it is a restriction of mens acts, qualifying or suspending the same, and making them uncertain whether they shall take effect or not; also 'tis defined to be what is referred to an uncertain chance, which may happen or not happen. West's Symb. part 1. lib. 2. sect. 156. And of conditions there are divers kinds, viz. conditions in deed and in law; conditions precedent, and subsequent; conditions inherent, and collateral, &c.

A condition in deed is that which is joined by express words to a feoffment, lease, or other grant; as if a man makes a lease of lands to another, reserving a rent to be paid at such a feast, upon condition if the lessee fail in payment, at the day, then it shall be lawful for the lessor to enter. Condition in law is when a person grants another an office, as that of keeper of a park, steward, bailiff, &c. for term of life; here, though there be no condition expressed in the grant, yet the law makes one, which is, if the grantee do not justly execute all things belonging to the office, it shall be lawful for the grantor to enter and discharge him of his office. Lit. lib. 3. c. 5.

These conditions are also called condition expressed, and condition implied. Condition precedent is when a lease or estate is granted to one for life, upon condition that if the lessee pay to the lessor a certain sum at such a day, then he shall have fee simple; in this case the condition precedes the estate in fee, and on performance thereof gains the fee-simple. Condition subsequent is when a man grants to another his manor of Dale, &c. in fee, upon condition that the grantee shall pay to him at such a day such a certain sum, or that his estate shall cease; here the condition is subsequent, and following the estate, and upon the performance thereof continues and preserves the same: so that a condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or estate made upon condition by the performance of it; as a condition subsequent keeps and continues the estate by the performance of the condition. 1 Inst. 201, 327. Terms de Ley. If one agree with another to do such an act, and for the doing thereof the other shall pay so much money; here the doing the act is a condition precedent to the payment of the money, and the party shall not be compelled to pay till the act is done: but where a day is appointed for the payment of money, which day happens before the thing contracted for can be performed, there the money may be recovered before the thing is done; for here it appears that the party did not intend to make the performance of the thing a condition precedent. 3 Salk. 95.

Inherent conditions are such as descend to the heir with the land granted, &c. And collateral condition is that which is annexed to any collateral act. Conditions are likewise affirmative, which consist of doing; negative, and consist of not doing: some are further said to be restrictive, for not doing a thing; and some compulsory, as that the lessee shall pay the rent, &c. Also some conditions are single, to do one thing only; some copulative, to do divers things; and others disjunctive, where one thing of several is required to be done. Co. Lit. 201.

Among these several kinds of conditions, the cases which most frequently occur fall under the distinctions of conditions precedent and subsequent. We shall therefore speak of them more at large under the following divisions, wherein it is to be considered,

I. To what conditions may be annexed: what conditions are good, and by what words they may be created.

II. What shall be a good performance of a condition, and in what manner the breach of it must be taken advantage of.

III. Of conditions precedent and subsequent.

I. To what conditions may be annexed: what are good, and by what words they may be created.

Conditions may be to any estate, whether in fee-simple, fee tail, for life or years: they run with the estate, and bind in the hands of whomsoever they come. Lit. Rep. 128. But a condition may not be made but on the part of the lessor, donor, &c. For no man may annex a condition to an estate, but he that doth create the estate itself. Conditions are good to enlarge or limit estates: and there are four incidents, which conditions to create and increase an estate ought to have. 1. They should have a particular estate, as a foundation whereupon the increase of the greater estate shall be built. 2. Such particular estate shall continue in the lessee or grantee, until the increase happens. 3. It must vest at the time the contingency happens, or it shall never vest. 4. The particular estate and increase must take effect by the same deed, or by several deeds delivered at the same time. 8 Rep. 75. Conditions to create estates shall be favourably construed: but conditions which tend to destroy, or restrain an estate, are to be taken strictly. A feoffment upon condition, that the feoffee shall not aliene, is void: but a condition in a feoffment not to aliene for a particular time, or to a particular person, may be good. Hob. 13, 261. And if a condition is, that tenant in tail shall not aliene in fee, &c. or tenant for life or years not aliene during the term, these conditions are good: where the reversion of an estate is in the donor, he may restrain an alienation by condition. 10 Rep. 39. 1 Inst. 222. If one make a gift in tail, on condition that the donee or his heirs shall not aliene; this is good to some intents, and void to others: for if he make a feoffment in fee, or any other estate by which the reversion is discontinued tortiously, the donor may enter; but 'tis otherwise if he suffer a common recovery. 1 Inst. 223.

A liberty inseparable from an estate cannot be restrained; and therefore a condition that a tenant in tail shall not levy a fine, within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. or suffer a recovery; or not make a lease, within the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 36. is void and repugnant. But if the condition restrain levying a fine at Common law, it may be good. 2 Danv. Abr. 22. A gift in tail, or in fee, upon condition that a feme shall not be endowed; or baron be tenant by the curtesy, is repugnant and void. So is a condition in a lease, &c. that the lessee shall not take the profits: and where a man grants a rent-charge out of land, provided it shall not charge the lands. Co. Lit. 146. Conditions repugnant to the estate, impossible, &c. are void: and if they go before the estate, the estate and condition are void; if to follow it, the estate is absolute, and the condition void. 1 Inst. 206. 9 Rep. 128. But if at the time of entering into a condition, a thing be possible to be done, and become afterwards impossible by the act of God, the estate of a feoffee (created by livery) shall not be avoided. 2 Mod. 204.

A feoffment in fee is made upon condition, that the feoffee shall within a year go to Rome, &c. if the feoffee dies before the year ended, yet the estate of the feoffee is become absolute; for the estate, once vested by the livery, shall not be divested without default in the feoffee. Ibid. Where a condition is of two parts, one possible, and the other not so, it is a good condition for performing that part which is possible. Cro. Elix. 780. Though if a condition is of two parts disjunctive, and one part becomes impossible, by the act of God, the person bound is not obliged to perform the other. 1 Rol. 446. l. 45. 2 Mod. 202, 203. If a condition be in the copulative, and is not possible to be performed, 'tis said it may be taken in the disjunctive. 1 Danv. Abr. 73. Where an estate is to be wholly created upon a condition impossible to be performed, there the estate shall never come in effect. 1 Leon. c. 311. A woman makes a feoffment to a man that is married, upon condition that he shall marry her; this condition is not impossible, for the man's wife may die, and then he may marry her. 2 Danv. 25. A reversion may be granted in tail upon condition, that if the grantee pays so much, he shall have the fee. 8 Rep. 73. But if a man grants lands, &c. for years, upon condition that if the lessee pay 20s. within one year, that he shall have it for life: and that if he after the year pay 20s. he shall have the fee; though both sums are paid, he shall have but an estate for life; the estate for life, at the time of the grant, being only in contingency, and a possibility cannot increase upon a possibility, nor can the fee increase upon the estate for years. 8 Rep. 79.

If a lease be made to two, with condition to have fee, and one dies, the survivor may perform the condition, and have the fee; but if they make partition, the condition is destroyed. 8 Rep. 75, 76. If a feoffee grant the reversion of part of the land, on a lease for years, on which a rent upon condition is reserved, all the condition is confounded and gone; though if the lessee assign part, the condition remains, for he cannot discharge the estate of the condition. 2 Danv. Abr. 119. A man makes a feoffment upon condition, and after levies a fine to a stranger, the condition is gone. Ibid. 120. If a feoffee, upon condition to infeoff another, infeoff a stranger; or if it be to reinfeoff the feoffor, and he grant the land to another person, upon condition to perform the condition, dition, the condition is broken, because the feoffee hath disabled himself to do it: so where such feoffee, upon condition to re infeoff, &c. takes a wife, that the land is subject to the dower of the wife; and so if the land is recovered, and execution sued out by another, the condition is broken. Co. Lit. 221. 1 Danv. 79.

If one disseise the feoffee, or any other who hath land by just title, and thereof infeoff a stranger on condition, and the land is lawfully recovered from him that hath the title; by this the condition is destroyed: and if a disseisor make a feoffment in fee upon condition; and after the disseisee doth enter upon the feoffee, this doth extinguish the condition. Perk. sect. 821. If the feoffee makes a feoffment of all or part of the land to the feoffor, before the condition is broken; the condition is gone for ever: and if he make a lease for life or years only, then the condition will be suspended for that time. Co. Lit. 218. But 'tis otherwise where the feoffment, or lease for life or years, are made to any other but the feoffor. Ibid. Where the condition of a feoffment is, that if the feoffor or his heir pay a certain sum of money to the feoffee such a day, and before that day the feoffor dieth without heir: or if the feoffment be made by a woman on condition to pay her 10*l.* or that the feoffee infeoff her by a certain day, and they intermarry before the day, and the marriage doth continue till after it; in these cases the condition is gone. Perk. sect. 763, 764.

A condition that would take away the whole effect of a grant, is void; and so it is if it be contrary to the express words of it. Conditions against law are void; but what may be prohibited by law may be prohibited by deed. 1 Inst. 220, 206. He that taketh an estate in remainder, is bound by condition in a deed, though he doth not seal it.

As to the proper words to create a condition.

The word si will not always make a condition; but sometimes it makes a limitation, as where a lease is made for years, if A. B. lives so long. And this is contrary to a condition, for a stranger may take advantage of an estate determined thereby, &c. Co. Lit. 236. Dyer 300. *Sub conditio*ne is the most proper word to make a condition: proviso is as good a word, when not dependant upon another sentence; but in some cases, the word proviso may make no condition, but be only a qualification, or explication of a covenant. 2 Danv. 1, 2. And neither the word proviso, nor any other, makes a condition, unless it is restrictive. Plowd. 34. 1 Nelf. 466.

Regularly the word (pro) does not import a condition, tho' it has the force of a condition when the thing granted is executory, and the consideration of the grant is a service, or some such thing, for which there is no remedy; but the stopping the thing granted, as in the case of an annuity granted pro consilio, or for executing the office of a steward of a court, or the service of a captain or keeper of a fort, here the failure of giving counsel, or performing the service, is a kind of eviction of that which is to be done for the annuity, the grantor having no means either to exact the counsel, or recompence for it, but by stopping the annuity; and in these cases the condition is not precedent, and therefore the performance thereof need not be averred when the annuity is demanded. Per Hobart Ch. J. Hob. 41. Mich. 10 Jac. in the case of Cowper v. Andrews. Sed qu. as to the nature.

Of the condition, and the necessity of an averment.

As the intent of the testator chiefly governs in wills, such construction is always made of the words, as will best support his intent, and therefore these words ad faciendum, faciendo ea intentione, ad effectum, &c. in a will create a condition. Co. Lit. 204. a. See Dewise, Will.

A grant to one, to the intent he shall do so and so, is no condition, but a trust and confidence. Dyer 138. Some words in a lease do not make a condition but a covenant, upon which the lessor may bring his action. A lease being the deed of lessor and lessee, every word is spoken by both; and a condition may be therein, though it sounds in covenant. 1 Nelf. 464. A covenant not to grant, sell, &c. may be a condition; and covenant that paying the rent, the lessee shall enjoy the land, is conditional. 2 Danv. 2, 6. Where words are indefinite, and proper to defeat an estate, they shall be taken to have the force of a condition. Palm. 163.

II. With regard to the performance of conditions.

A condition may be well performed, when it is done as near to the intent as may be: for if the condition of a feoffment be that the feoffee shall make an estate back to the feoffor and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor; in this case, if the feoffor die before, the estate shall be made to the wife without impeachment of waste, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the wife, &c. Co. Lit. 219. 8 Rep. 69. If a condition be performed in substance and effect, it is good although it differs in words; as where it is to deliver letters patent, and the party bound having lost them, delivers an exemplification, &c. 2 Danv. 40. Though payment of the money before the day, is payment at the day, in performance of a condition; yet a feoffor, &c. cannot re-enter, and re-vest his old estate by force of the condition, till the day whereon the condition gives him power to re-enter. Ibid. 121. If a man seised of land in right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee on condition, and dies; if the heir of the feoffor enters for the condition broken, and defeats the feoffment, his estate vanishes, and presently it is vested in the wife. Co. Lit. 202. And if a person seised of land, as heir on the part of his mother, makes a feoffment on condition and dieth; tho' the heir on the part of the father, who is heir at Common law, may enter for the condition broken, the heir of the part of the mother shall enter upon him, and enjoy the land. Ibid. 12.

Where there is a condition in a feoffment or lease, that if no distress can be found, the feoffor, &c. shall re-enter; if the place is not open to the distress, as if there be only a cupboard in the house, which is locked, &c. it is all one as if there was no distress there, and the feoffor, &c. may enter. 2 Danv. 46. When a rent is to be paid upon condition at a certain day, the lessor cannot enter for the condition broken, before demand of the rent. Ibid. 98. And the lessor ought to demand the rent at the day, or the condition shall not be broken by the non-payment of the rent. A re-entry may be given on a feoffment, &c. though none be reserved: if one make a lease for life or feoffment upon condition, that if the feoffee or lessee does such an act, the estate shall be void: now although the estate cannot be void before entry, this is a good condition, and shall give an entry to the lessor, &c. by implication. 1 Rel. Abr. 408. A lease for life on condition, being a freehold, cannot cease without entry; but if it be a lease for years, the lease is void ipso facto, on breach of the condition, without any entry. 1 Inst. 214. If a lease for years is, that on breach of the condition, the term shall cease, the term is ended without entry; but where the words are, that the lease shall be void, it is otherwise. Cro. Car. 511. 3 Rep. 64. Regularly, where one will take advantage of a condition, if he may enter, he must do it; and if he cannot enter, he must make a claim. Co. Lit. 218.

No one can reserve the power or benefit of re-entry, on breach of a condition, to any other but himself, his heirs, executors, &c. parties and privies, in right and representation: privies in law, grantees of reversions, &c. are to have no advantage by it. But by the the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. Grantees of reversions may take advantage against lessees, &c. by action. 1 Inst. 214, 215. Plowd. 175. Where one doth enter for a condition broken, it generally makes the estate void ab initio, and the party comes in of his first estate; and he shall have the land in the same manner it was when he departed with it; and his possession at the time of making the condition: therefore he shall avoid all subsequent charges on the lands. 4 Rep. 120. Plowd. 186. Co. Lit. 233. If one enters on a condition performed, he shall avoid all incumbrances upon the land after the condition made: and a condition when broken, or performed, &c. will defeat the whole estate. So that if there be a lease for life, remainder in fee, on condition that the lessee for life shall pay 20*l.* to the lessor; if he pay not this money, the estate in remainder will be avoided.

avoided also. Dyer 127. 8 Rep. 90. But this may be otherwise by special limitation to an use: and if tenant for life, and he in remainder join in a feoffment on condition, that if, &c. then the tenant for life shall re-enter, this may be good without defeating the whole estate; tho' regularly a condition may not avoid part of an estate, and leave another part entire, for can the estate be void as to some persons, and good as to others. 8 Rep. 190. 1 Inst. 214.

Lessee for life makes a feoffment on condition, and enters for the condition broken; by this he shall be restored to his estate for life, and reduce the reversion to the lessor; and the rent due to the lessor shall be revived: but in this case the lessee will not be in the same course as he was before, for his estate is subject to a forfeiture, though he be tenant for life still. Roll. 474. Shep. Abr. 405.

Tenants by the curtesy, tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, tenant in dower, for life, or years, &c. hold their estates subject to a condition in law, not to grant a greater estate than they have, nor to commit waste, &c. 1 Inst. 233. And estates made by deed to infants, and feme covert, upon condition, shall bind them, because the charge is on the land. 2 Danv. 30. A release of all a man's right may be upon condition; a lessee may surrender upon condition; a contract may be upon condition, &c. But a parson cannot resign upon condition, any more than be admitted upon condition: and a condition cannot be released on condition. 9 Rep. 85.

No person shall defeat any estate of freehold upon condition without shewing the deed wherein the condition is contained: but of chattels real or personal, &c. a man may plead that such grants or leases were made upon condition without shewing the deeds; and in the case of a condition to avoid a freehold, though it may not be pleaded without the deed, it may be given in evidence to a jury, and they may find the matter at large. Lit. 374. 5 Rep. 40. A condition may be apportioned by act of law, or of the lessee. 4 Rep. 120. But a man cannot by his own act divide, or apportion a condition, which goes to the destruction of an estate. 1 Nels. Abr. 474. A condition in a will is a thing odious in law, which shall not be created without sufficient words. 2 Leen. 40. A devise to the heir at law, provided he pay to A. B. 20*l.* is a void condition, because there is no person to take advantage of the non-performance. 1 Lutw. 797. Yet conditional devises, as well of lands as of goods, are allowed by our law, and not being performed, the heir or executors shall take advantage of them. 1 Nels. 467.

Where there are negative and affirmative conditions, the pleader must shew, not only that he has not broke the negative ones, but also that he has performed the affirmative ones. Fletcher v. Richardson, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 322.

III. With respect to the distinction between conditions precedent and subsequent.

It is to be observed, that conditions precedent are such as must be punctually performed before the estate can vest; but on a condition subsequent, the estate is immediately executed; yet the continuance of such estate dependeth on the breach or performance of the condition. Co. Lit. 218. Fq. Abr. 108. As if I grant, that if A. will go to such a place, about my business, that he shall have such an estate, or that he shall have 10*l.* &c. this is a condition precedent. 1 Roll. Abr. 414. So if I retain a man for 40*s.* to go with me to Rome, this is a condition precedent, for the duty commences by going to Rome. 1 Roll. Abr. 914. So if a man, by will, devises certain legacies, and then devises all the residue of his estate to his executor, after debts, legacies, &c. paid and discharged, this is a condition precedent; so that the executor cannot have the residue of the estate before the debts and legacies are discharged. 1 Roll. Abr. 415. 1 Jones 327. Cro. Car. 335.

But if a man devises a term to A. and that if his wife suffers the devisee to enjoy it for three years, that she shall have all his goods as executrix; but if she disturbs A. then he makes B. executor, and dies, his wife is executrix presently; for though in grants the estate shall not vest till the condition precedent is performed, yet it is otherwise in a will, which must be guided by the intent of the parties; and this shall not be construed as a condition precedent, but only as a condition to abridge the power of being executrix, if she perform it not. Cro. Eliz. 219.

Where the one promise is the consideration of the other, and where the performance and not the promise is, must be gathered from the words and nature of the agreement, and depends intirely thereupon; for, if there was a positive promise that one should release his equity of redemption, and on the other side that the other would pay 7*l.* then the one might bring his action without any averment of performance; but where the agreement is, that the plaintiff should release his equity of redemption, in consideration whereof the defendant was to pay him 7*l.* so that the release is the consideration, and therefore being executory, it is a condition precedent, which must be averred. 12 Mod. 455, 460. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. by Holt Ch. Justice, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Thorp v. Thorp.

If there be a day set for the payment of money, or doing the thing which one promises, agrees, or covenants to do for another thing, and that day happens to incur before the time, the thing for which the promise, agreement or covenant is made, is to be performed by the tutor of the agreement, there, tho' the words be, that the party shall pay the money, or do the thing for such a thing, or in consideration of such a thing; after the day is past the other shall have action for the money, or other thing, tho' the thing for which the promise, agreement, or covenant was made, be not performed; for it would be repugnant there to make it a condition precedent; and therefore they are in that case left to mutual remedies, on which, by the express words of the agreement, they have depended. Per Holt Ch. Justice. 12 Mod. 461. Pasch. 13 W. 3. in the case of Thorp v. Thorp.

M. agrees to give A. so much for the use of a coach and horses for a year, and A. agreed further with M. to keep the coach in repair; it was averred the coach and horses were delivered to M. but nothing of the repair; and Holt Ch. Justice held upon this evidence, that repairing was not a condition precedent, and therefore need not be averred. Per Holt Ch. Justice at Guildhall, and judgment pro querente. 12 Mod. 503. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. Atkinson v. Murrice.

But if the agreement had been that A. had agreed to give M. a coach and horses for a year, and to repair the coach, and that for that M. promised so much money, then the repairing had been a condition precedent necessary to be averred. Per Holt Ch. Justice. 12 Mod. 503. Pasch. 13 W. 3. in S. C.

Condition that A. shall do, and for the doing B. shall pay, is a condition precedent, but time fixed for payment will verify the condition; per Holt Ch. Justice. 1 Salk. 171. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. B. R. Thorp v. Thorp.

Where an award consists of divers things, and one of them is void, and it be expressly said, that upon performance of that void thing, the other party shall do such a thing, there the doing of the void thing is a condition precedent, and must be averred before action against the other for not doing his part; but where there be several things in an award, and some are good, and others not; and it is further said, that upon performance præmissorum the other shall release for the purpose, there it suffices to make averment of performance of what is well awarded without more; per Powell Justice. 12 Mod. 588. Mich. 13 W. 3. in C. B. Lee v. Elkins.

If A. makes a lease for five years to B. upon condition, that if B. pays him 10*l.* within two years, that then he shall have a fee-simple in the lands, and make livery and seisin to B. this passes the freehold immediately, and B. has a fee conditional; because if the freehold was not to vest in B. till the condition performed, it would be difficult to determine in whom the freehold lay; for conditions may be inserted in such deeds as are perfected privately, which might prove greatly prejudicial to strangers. Lit. seâ. 350. Co. Lit. 216, 217.

But in case of a lease for life, with such a condition, the freehold passes not before the condition performed; formed, because the livery may presently work upon the freehold. But if a man grants an advowson; &c. (which lie in grant) for years, upon such condition, the grantee shall have no fee till the condition performed. Co. Lit.

217.

If A. leases to B. for years, upon condition, that if B. pays money to A. or his heirs, at a day, that B. shall have the fee, and before the day A. is attainted of treason and executed; now though the condition became impossible by the act and offence of A. yet B. shall not have a fee, because a precedent condition to increase an estate must be performed; and if it becomes impossible, no estate shall rise. Co. Lit. 210. Also in equity, with respect to conditions precedent and subsequent, the prevailing distinction seems to be, to relieve against the breach or non-performance, whether the condition be precedent or subsequent, where a compensation can be made. 1 Vern. 79, 167. As if A. conveys lands to B. &c. and their heirs, upon trust, that if C. the son of A. within six months after the death of A. should secure to trustees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after such security given, to convey to C. and his heirs, and until the time for giving such security, in trust for the eldest son of C. and in default of such security, to convey to such eldest son and his heirs, if C. dies before any such security given, yet this condition, though precedent, being only in nature of a penalty, the intent of the trust shall be regarded, which was to secure 500*l.* for the younger children. 1 Chan. Ca. 89.

If a feme covert, having power by will to devise lands, devises them to her executors, to pay 500*l.* out of them to her son; provided, that if the father gives not a sufficient release of certain goods to her executors, that then the devise of the 500*l.* should be void, and go to the executors, and after her death a release is tendered to the father, and he refuses, yet upon making the release after, the money shall be paid to the son; for it was said to be the standing rule of the court, that a forfeiture should not bind, where a thing may be done after, or a compensation made for it; as where the condition is to pay money, &c. and though it is generally binding, where there is a devise over, yet here, it being to go to the executors, it is no more than the law implies. 2 Vent. 352. See more concerning conditions under title Bond, and Black. Com. 2 V. 152, 154, 155. And see Com. Dig. 2 V. tit. Condition, (p. 318, &c.) per tot.

Conduits, for water in London, shall be made and repaired, and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen may inquire into defaults therein, &c. by the Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 10.

Cone and Key. A woman at the age of fourteen or fifteen years might take the charge of her house, and receive cone and key: cone or clue in the Sax. signifying computus, so that she was then held to be of competent years, when she was able to keep the accounts and keys of the house.—Famina in tali ætate potest disponere domui suæ & habere cone & key. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 37. And there is something to the same purpose in Glanv. lib. 7. c. 9.

Coney-burrows. Places where conies or rabbits breed and haunt, &c. Commoners cannot lawfully dig up coney-burrows in the common. Cope v. Marshall & al. Wilf. par. 2. fo. 51.

Confederacy, (confederatio) Is when two or more combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act. And false confederacy between divers persons shall be punished, though nothing be put in execution: but this confederacy punishable by law before it is executed, ought to have these incidents; first, it must be declared by some matter of prosecution, as by making of bonds, or promises the one to the other; secondly, it should be malicious, as for unjust revenge; thirdly, it ought to be false against an innocent; and lastly, it is to be out of court voluntarily. Terms de Ley. Where a writ of conspiracy doth not lie, the confederacy is punishable: and inquiry shall be made of conspirators and confederators, who bind themselves together, &c.

Confession, (confessio) Is where a prisoner is indicted of treason or felony, and brought to the bar to be arraigned; and his indictment being read to him, the court demands what he can say thereto; then either he confesses the offence, and the indictment to be true, or pleads Not guilty, &c. Confession may be made in two kinds, and to two several ends: the one is, that the criminal may confess the offence whereof he is indicted openly in the court, before the judge, and submit himself to the censure and judgment of the law; which confession is the most certain answer, and best satisfaction that may be given to the judge to condemn the offender; so that it proceeds freely of his own accord, without any threats or extremity used; for if the confession arise from any of these causes, it ought not to be recorded: as a woman indicted for the felonious taking of a thing from another, being thereof arraigned, confessed the felony, and said that she did it by commandment of her husband; the judges in pity would not record her confession, but caused her to plead Not guilty to the felony; whereupon the jury found that she did the fact by compulsion of her husband, against her will, for which cause she was discharged. 27 Assiz. pl. 50. The other kind of confession is, when the prisoner confesses the indictment to be true, and that he hath committed the offence whereof he is indicted, and then becomes an approver, or accuser of others, who are guilty of the same offence whereof he is indicted, or other offences with him; and then prays the judge to have a coroner assigned him, to whom he may make relation of those offences, and the full circumstances thereof. There is also a third sort of confession, formerly made by an offender in felony, not in court before the judge, as the other two are, but before a coroner in a church, or other privileged place, upon which the offender, by the ancient law of the land, was to abjure the realm. 3 Inst. 129.

Confession is likewise in civil cases, where the defendant confesses the plaintiff's action to be good: by which confession there may be a mitigation of a fine against the penalty of a statute; though not after verdict. Finch 387. 2 Keb. 408. And there is a confession indirectly implied, as well as directly expressed in criminal cases; as if the defendant, in a case not capital, doth not directly own himself guilty of the crime, but by submitting to a fine owns his guilt; whereupon the judge may accept of his submission to the King's mercy. Lamb. lib. 4. c. 9. By this indirect confession, the defendant shall not be barred to plead Not guilty to an action, &c. for the same fact: the entry of it is, that the defendant posuit se in gratiam regis, &c. And of the direct confession, quid cognovit indictmentum, &c. And this last confession carries with it so strong a presumption of guilt, that being entered on record, on indictment of trespass, it estops the defendant to plead Not guilty to an action brought afterwards against him for the same matter: but such entry of a confession of an indictment of a capital crime, 'tis said, will not estop a defendant to plead Not guilty to an appeal, it being in case of life. And where a person upon his arraignment actually confesses himself guilty, or unadvisedly discloses the special manner of the fact, supposing that it doth not amount to felony, where it doth; the judges upon probable circumstances, that such confession may proceed from fear, weakness, or ignorance, may refuse such a confession, and suffer the party to plead. 2 Hawk. 333.

A confession may be received, and the plea of Not guilty be withdrawn, though recorded. Kil. 11. The confession of the defendant, whether taken upon an examination before justices of peace, in pursuance of the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. or 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10. upon a bailment, or commitment for felony; or taken by the Common law, upon an examination before a secretary of state, or other magistrate, for treason or other crimes, is allowed to be given in evidence against the party confessing; but not against others. Also two witnesses of a confession of high treason, upon an examination before a justice of peace, were sufficient to convict the person so confessing, within the meaning of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12. and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 11. which required two witnesses in high treason; unless the offender should willingly confess, &c. But the 7 W. 3. cap. 3. requires two witnesses, except the party shall willingly without violence confess, &c. in open court. 2 Hawk. P. C. 429.

It has been held, that where-ever a man's confession is made use of against him, it must all be taken together, and not by parcels. Ibid. And no confession shall, before final judgment deprive the defendant of the privilege of taking exceptions in arrest of judgment, to faults apparent in the record. Ibid. 333. A demurrer amounts to a confession of the indictment as laid, so far, that if the indictment be good, judgment and execution shall go against the prisoner. Bro. 86. S. P. C. 150. H. P. C. 246. And in criminal cases, not capital, if the defendant demur to an indictment, &c. whether in abatement, or otherwise, the court will not give judgment against him to answer over, but final judgment. 2 Hawk. 334. Where a prisoner confesses the fact, the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him. And, confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur. 11 Rep. 30. 4 Inst. 66.

Confessor, (Lat. confessor, confessionarius) Hath relation to private confession of sins, in order to absolution: and the priest, who received the auricular confession, had the title of confessor; though improperly, for he is rather the confessee, being the person to whom the confession is made. This receiving the confession of a penitent, was in old English to shrove or shrive; whence comes the word beshrived, or looking like a confessed or shrived person, on whom was imposed some uneasy penance. The most solemn time of confessing was the day before Lent, which from thence is still called Shrove-Tuesday. Cowel.

Confirmation, (confirmatio, from the verb confirmare, quod est firmum facere) Is a conveyance of an estate, or right in esse, from one man to another, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable; or a particular estate is increased, or a possession made perfect. And 'tis a strengthening of an estate formerly made, which is voidable, though not presently void: as for example; a bishop granteth his chancellorship by patent, for term of the patentee's life; this is no void grant, but voidable by the bishop's death, except it be strengthened by the confirmation of the dean and chapter. Confirmation, aut est perficiens, crescens, aut diminuens: Perficiens, as if feoffee upon condition make a feoffment, and the feoffor confirm the estate of the second feoffee: Crescens, that doth always enlarge the estate of a tenant; as tenant for years, to hold for life, &c. Diminuens, as when the lord of whom the land is holden, confirms the estate of his tenant, to hold by a less rent. 9 Rep. 142.

The lord may diminish the services of his tenant by confirmation; but not reserve new services, so long as the former estate in the tenancy continues: and therefore if he confirm to the tenant, to yield him a hawk, &c. yearly, it is void. Litt. Sect. 539. 1 Co. Inst. 296. Leases for years may be confirmed for part of the term, or part of the land, &c. But it is otherwise of an estate of freehold, which being entire, cannot be confirmed for part of the estate. 5 Rep. 81. There may be a confirmation implied by law, as well as express by deed; where the law by construction makes a confirmation of a grant made to another purpose: and a confirmation may enlarge an estate, from an estate held at will to term of years, or a greater estate; from an estate for years to an estate for life; from an estate for life, to an estate in tail, or in fee; and from an estate in tail to an estate in fee-simple. 1 Inst. 305. 9 Rep. 142. Dyer 263. But if the confirmation be made to lessee for life or years, of his term or estate, and not of the land, this doth not increase the estate, though if the lessor confirm the land, to have and to hold the land to the lessee and his heirs, this will enlarge the estate, and so of the rest. Co. Litt. 299. Plowd. 40.

In every good confirmation, there must be a precedent rightful or wrongful estate in him to whom made, or he must have the possession of the thing as a foundation for the confirmation to work upon; the confirmor must have such an estate and property in the land, that he may be thereby enabled to confirm the estate of the confirmee; the precedent estate must continue till the confirmation come, so that the estate to be increased comes into it; and it is required that both these estates be lawful. Co. Litt. 296. 1 Rep. 146. Dyer 109. 5 Rep. 15. If one have common of pasture in another's land, and he confirms the estate of the tenant of the land, nothing passes of the common, but it remains as it was before: so if a man have a rent out of the land, and he doth confirm the estate which the tenant hath in the land, the rent remaineth. Litt. Sect. 537.

Tenant for life makes a lease for years to a man, and after leases the land to another person for years; and he in reversion confirms the last lease, and after that the first lease, this is not good: the second lessee hath an interest before by the confirmation of him in reversion. But in a like case, confirmation of the first lease, after the second was confirmed, was held good: for the lease takes no interest by the confirmation, but only to make it durable and effectual. Moor. c. 180. 1 Inst. 296. Plowd. 10. If a disseisor confirm the land to the disseisor but for one hour, one week, a year, or for life, &c. it is a good confirmation of the estate for ever: and if he confirms the estate of the disseisor without any word of heirs, he hath a fee-simple; and if a disseisor make a gift in tail, and the disseisor doth confirm the estate of the donee, it shall enure to the whole estate: also if the disseisor enfeoffs A. and B. and the heirs of B. and the disseisor confirms the estate of B. for his life; this shall extend to his companion, and for the whole fee-simple. Co. Litt. 291, 297, 299. But where the estate is divided, it is otherwise; as if there be an estate for life, the remainder over, there the confirmation may be of either of the estates: and if the lessee of a disseisor of a lease for 20 years, make a lease for 10 years; the disseisor may confirm to one of them, and not to the other. 1 Cro. 472. 5 Rep. 81. If a disseisor or any other make a lease for years to begin at a day to come, a confirmation to the lessee before the lease begins will not be good; for there is no estate in him. Co. Litt. 296.

The tenant in tail of land hath a reversion in fee expectant; in this case, the confirmation of the estate-tail will not extend to the reversion. And if my disseisor make a lease for life, the remainder in fee, and I confirm the estate of the tenant for life; this shall not confirm the estate of him in remainder: but if I confirm the remainder estate, without any confirmation to tenant for life, it shall enure to him also. Co. Litt. 297, 298. If lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and the donor confirms their estates in the lands, to have and to hold to them two and their heirs; this shall be construed a joint estate for their lives, and after they shall have several inheritances. Co. Litt. 299. Tenant in tail, or for life of land, lets it for years, if after he makes a confirmation of the land to the lessee for years, to hold to him and his heirs for ever, the lessee hath only an estate for the life of the tenant in tail, &c. and therein his lease for years is extinct. Litt. Sect. 606.

A freehold for life, and term for years, it is said, cannot stand together of the same land, in the same person. 1 Nels. Abr. 480. If a feme lessee for years marries, and the lessor confirms the estate of husband and wife, to hold for their lives, by such a confirmation the term will be drowned; and the husband and wife are jointenants for their lives. Co. Litt. 300. But if the feme were lessee for life, then by the confirmation to husband and wife for their lives, the husband holdeth only in right of his wife for her life; but shall take a remainder for his life. Ibid. 299. Confirmation to lessee for life, and a stranger to hold for their lives, is void, for there is no privity: but 'tis otherwise, if for years. 2 Damv. Abr. 141. If tenant for life grant a rent-charge, &c. to one and his heirs, he in reversion is to confirm it, otherwise 'tis good only for the life of tenant for life. Litt. 529. A tenant for life, and remainder-man in fee, join in a lease, this shall be taken to be the lease of tenant for life, during his life, and confirmation of him in remainder: though after the death of tenant for life, it is the lease of him in remainder, and confirmation of tenant for life. 6 Rep. 15. 1 Nels. Abr. 481.

If lessee for years, without impeachment for waste, accepts a confirmation of his estate for life; by this he hath lost the privilege annexed to his estate for years. 8 Rep. 76. Acceptance of rent in some cases makes a confirmation of a lease: and if a man leases for life, reserving rent upon a condition of re-entry; if after the condition is broken, by non-payment of the rent, the lessor distrains for the said rent, this act shall be a confirmation of the lease, so as he cannot enter: 2 Danv. 128, 129. What a person may defeat by his entry, he may make good by his confirmation. Co. Litt. 300. But none can confirm, unless he hath a right at the time of the grant; he that hath but a right in reversion cannot enlarge the estate of a lessee. 2 Danv. 140, 141. And where a person hath but interesse termini, he hath no estate in him, upon which a confirmation may enure. Co. Litt. 290.

As confirmation is to bind the right of him who makes it; but not alter the nature of the estate of him to whom made; it shall not discharge a condition. Poph. 51. If A. enfeoffs B. upon condition, and after A. confirms the estate of B. yet the condition remains: though if B. had enfeoffed C. so that the estate of C. had been only subject to the condition in another deed, and after A. had confirmed the estate of C. this would have extinguish'd the condition, which was annexed to the estate of B. 1 Rep. 147. A confirmation will take away a condition annexed by law: and by confirmation, a condition after broken in a deed of feoffment is extinguish'd. 1 Co. Rep. 146. Confirmations may make a defeasible estate good; but cannot work upon an estate that is void in law. Co. Litt. 295.

A confirmation of letters patent, which are void as they are against law, is a void confirmation. 1 Lill. Abr. 295. If there be lord and tenant, and the tenant having issue is attainted of felony, if the King pardons him, and the lord confirms his estate, and the tenant dies, his issue shall not inherit, but the lord shall have it against his own confirmation: for that could not enable him to take by descent, who by the attainder of his father was disabled. 9 Rep. 141. Grants and leases of bishops not warranted by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. must be confirmed by dean and chapter: and grants and leases of parsons, &c. by patron and ordinary. 1 Inst. 297, 300, 301. Bishops may grant leases of their church-lands for three lives, or twenty-one years, having the qualities required by 32 H. 8. c. 28. and concurrent leases for twenty-one years, with confirmation of dean and chapter. See 1 El. c. 4. & c. 19. If a prebend leases parcel of his prebendary, and the bishop, who is patron, confirms it; this shall bind the succeeding bishop, without confirmation of dean and chapter, because the patronage is parcel of the possessions of the bishoprick; but it shall bind the present bishop, &c. 2 Danv. 139. If a parson grants a rent, the confirmation of the patron and bishop, is sufficient without the dean and chapter, and shall be good against the successor bishop. Ibid. 140. The dean of Wells may pass his possessions, with the assent of the chapter, without any confirmation of the bishop. Ibid. 135. Leases of bishops are affirmed ex assensu & consensu decani & totius capituli. A confirmation is in nature of a release, and in some things is of greatest force: and in this deed, it is good to recite the estate of the tenant, as also of him that is to confirm it; and to mention the consideration: the words ratify and confirm, are commonly made use of; but words give, grant, demise, &c. by implication of law, may enure as a confirmation. 1 Inst. 295. West. Symb. 1. p. 457. As to confirmation of bishops, see Black. Com. 1 V. 378, 380.

Confiscate, From the Lat. confiscare, and that from fiscus, which signifies metonymically the Emperor's treasure: and as the Romani say, such goods as are forfeited to the Emperor's treasury for any offence are bona confiscata, so we say of those that are forfeited to our King's Exchequer. And the title to have these goods is given to the King by the law, when they are not claimed by some other: as if a man be indicted for stealing the goods of another person, when they are in truth his own proper goods, and when the goods are brought in court against him, and he is asked what he says to the said goods, if he disclaims them, he shall lose the goods, although that afterwards he be acquitted of the felony, and the King shall have them as confiscated; but 'tis otherwise if he do not disclaim them. It is the same where goods are found in the possession of a felon, if he disavows them, and afterwards is attainted for other goods, and not for them; for there the goods which he disavows are confiscated to the King; but had he been attainted for the same goods, they should have been said to be forfeited and not confiscate. So if an appeal of robbery be brought, and the plaintiff leaves out some of his goods, he shall not be received to enlarge his appeal; and forasmuch as there is none to have the goods so left out, the King shall have them as confiscate, according to the rule, Quod non capit christus, capit fiscus. Staud. P. C. lib. 3. cap. 24. Goods confiscated are generally such as are arrested and seized for the King's use: but confiscare and forisfacere are said to be synonyma; and bona confiscata are bona forisfacta. 3 Inst. 227. Confratrie, (confraternitas) A fraternity, brotherhood, or society; as the confratrie de St. George, or les chevaliers de la bleu gartier, the honourable society of the knights of the garter.

Confreres, (confratres) Brethren in a religious house; fellows of one and the same society. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24.

Confusion, property by—Where goods of two persons are so intermixed, that the several portions can no longer be distinguished, if the intermixture be by consent, 'tis supposed the proprietors have an interest in common, in proportion to their respective shares: but, if one willfully intermixes his money, corn, or hay, with that of another man, without his approbation or knowledge, or cast gold in like manner into another's melting pot or crucible, our law does not allow any remedy in such case; but gives the entire property, without any account, to him; whose original dominion (or property) is invaded, and endeavoured to be rendered uncertain, without his own consent. Black. Com. 2 V. 405.

Congeable, (from the Fr. conge, i. e. leave or permission) Signifies in our law as much as lawful, or lawfully done, or done with permission: as entry congeable, &c. Lit. Sect. 420.

Conge d'Accorder, (Fr.) Leave to accord or agree, mentioned in the statute of finer, 18 Ed. 1. in these words.—When the original writ is delivered in the presence of the parties before justices, a pleader shall say this, Sir justice conge d'accorder; and the justice shall say to him, What saith Sir R. and name one of the parties, &c.

Conge d'Esire, (Fr. i. e. leave to choose) Is the King's licence or permission sent to a dean and chapter to proceed to the election of a bishop, when any bishoprick becomes vacant. According to Gwyn, in his preface to his Readings, the King of England, as sovereign patron of all bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had of ancient time free appointment of all church dignities, when ever they became void, investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent; and in process of time he made the election over to others; under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should at every vacation, before they choose, demand of the King conge d'esire; that is leave to proceed to election, and then after the election, to crave his royal assent, &c. And he affirms that King John was the first that granted this; which was afterwards confirm'd by Stat. West. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 1. And by Articuli Cleri, 25 Ed. 3. cap. 1. All the prelacies in England were conferred at the pleasure of the King, and the persons invested by the King's delivery of a staff and ring, till Archbishop Anselm denied this royal prerogative; and prevailed with Pope Paschal to abrogate this custom by a solemn canon: after which, the first bishop who came in by a regular election, was Roger bishop of Salisbury, anno 3 H. 1.

By statute, no man is to be presented to the see of Rome for the dignity of a bishop, &c. but election is to be by the King's conge d'esire, or licence, to elect the person named by the King; which the dean and chapter must do in twenty days, or they will incur a premunire: and if they fail to make election, the King is to nominate, &c. by his letters patent. 25 H. 8. c. 20. The 1 Ed. 6. c. 6. ousted the writ of conge d'esire, and empowered the King to collate to an archbishoprick or bishoprick, absolutely by letters patent. But this statute was repealed by 1 M. cap. 2. though the election by conge d'esire, as now made, seems to be little more than form. See 8 El. c. 1. and 39 El. c. 8. and Black. Com. 1 V. 379, 382. 4 V. 414.

Conjugal rights. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights is one of the species of matrimonial causes: and is brought when either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. Black. Com. 3 V. 94.

Conjuratio, Is an oath; and conjuratus, the same with conjurator, viz. one who is bound by the same oath. Conjurare is where several affirm a thing by oath. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 207.

Conjuratio, (conjuratio) Signifies a plot or compact made by persons combining by oath, to do any publick harm: but it is more especially used for the having personal conference with the devil, or some evil spirit, to know any secret, or effect any purpose. The difference between conjuratio and witchcraft is, that a person using the one endeavours by prayers and invocations to compel the devil to say or do what he commands him; the other deals rather by friendly and voluntary conference, or agreement with the devil or familiar, to have his desires served, in lieu of blood or other gift offered. And both differ from enchantment or sorcery; because they are personal conferences with the devil, and these are as were but medicines and ceremonial forms of words usually called charms, without apparition. Cowel. Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, lib. 1. pag. 5. says that conjurers are those who by force of certain magick words, endeavour to raise the devil, and oblige him to execute their commands. Witches are such who by way of conference bargain with an evil spirit, to do what they desire of him: and sorcerers are those who by the use of certain superstitious words, or by the means of images, &c. are said to produce strange effects, above the ordinary course of nature. All which were anciently punished in the same manner as hereticks, by the writ de heretico comburendo, after a sentence in the ecclesiastical court: and they might be condemned to the pillory, &c. upon an indictment at Common law. 3 Inst. 44. H. P. C. 38. The Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 12. against conjuratio and witchcraft is repealed; and no prosecution shall be commenced on the same: but where persons pretend to exercise any kind of witchcraft or conjuratio, &c. Or undertake to tell fortunes, or from their skill in any crafty science to discover where goods stolen or lost may be found; upon conviction, shall be imprisoned a year, and stand in the pillory once in every quarter, in some market-town, and may be ordered to give security for their good behaviour, by Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. And also in administrations, which shall be granted to the next of kin. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 434. 2 V. 202. and a very excellent table of confanguinity, Black. Com. 2 V. 203.

Consent. In all cases when any thing executory is created by deed, it may, by consent of all persons that were parties to the creation of it by their deed, be defeased and annulled, and therefore it was said, that warranties, recognizances, rents, charges, annuities, covenants, leases for years, uses at Common law, &c. may, by a Release made with the mutual consent of all that were parties to the creation of them by deed, be annulled, discharged, and defeated. 1 Rep. 113. Hill. 28 Elix. in Albany's Case.

So if I have land thro' which a river runs to your mill, and I lop the fallows growing on the river side which accidentally stop the water so as your mill is hindered. So if I am building my own house, and a piece of timber falls on my neighbour's house, and breaks part of it. Conservator, (Lat.) A protector, preserver, or maintainer; or a standing arbitrator, chosen and appointed as a guarantee to compose and adjust differences that should arise between two parties, &c. Paroch. Antiq. p. 513.

Conservator of the Peace, (conservator vel custos pacis) Is he that hath an especial charge to see the King's peace kept: and of these conservators Lambard saith, That before the reign of Ed. 3. who first created justices of the peace, there were divers persons that by the Common law had interest in keeping the peace; some whereof had that charge by tenure, as holding lands of the King by this service, &c. And others as incident to their offices which they bore, and so included in the same, that they were nevertheless called by the name of their office only: also some had it simply, as of itself, and were thereof named custodes pacis, wardens or conservators of the peace. The chamberlain of Chester is a conservator of the peace in that county, by virtue of his office. 4 Inst. 212. Sheriffs of counties at Common law are conservators of the peace; and constables, by the Common law were conservators, but some say they were only subordinate to the conservators of the peace, as they are now to the justice.

The King's majesty is, by his Office and dignity royal, the principal conservator of the peace within all his dominions; and may give authority to any other to see the peace kept, and to punish such as break it: hence it is usually called the King's peace. The Lord Chancellor or Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord High Steward of England, the Lord Marechal, and Lord High Constable of England, (when any such officers are in being) and all the justices of the court of King's Bench, (by virtue of their offices), and the Master of the Rolls, (by prescription), are general conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it: the other judges are only so in their own courts. The Coroner is also a conservator of the peace within his own county; as is also the Sheriff, and both of them may take a recognizance or security for the peace. Constables, tything-men, and the like, are also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdictions; and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them till they find sureties for their keeping it. Black. Com. 1 V. 350.

Conservator of the Truce and Safe Conducts, (conservator induciarum & saluorum regis conductuum) Was an officer appointed by the King's letters patent, whose charge was to inquire of all offences done against the King's truce and safe conducts upon the main sea, out of the liberties of the cinque ports, as the admirals customably were wont to do, and such other things as are declared 3 Hen. 5. c. 6. Two men learned in the law were joined to conservators of the truce as associates; and masters of ships sworn not to attempt any thing against the truce, &c. And letters of request and of marque were to be granted when truce was broken at sea, to make restitution. Stat. 4 H. 5. c. 7. See Black. Com. 4 V. 69.

There was anciently a conservator of the privileges of the Hospitallers and Templars. West. 2. c. 43. And the corporation of the great livel of the fens consists of a governor, six bailiffs, twenty conservators, and commonalty. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 17.

Consideratio Curie, Is often mentioned in law pleadings, and where matters are determined by the court. Ideo consideratum est per curiam, i. e. Therefore it is considered and adjudged by the court; for consideratio curie is the judgment of the court. In the entry of a judgment for debt, it concludes thus: Ideo consideratum est per cur. quod præd. A. recuperet versus præfat. B. debitum suum, necnon, &c. pro dampnis suis, &c. quam pro mis. & custag', &c. et præd. B. in mia', &c.

Consideration, (consideratio) Is the material cause, or quid pro quo, of any contract, without which it will not be effectual or binding. This consideration is either expressed; as when a man bargains to give so much, for a thing bought; or to sell his land for 100*l.* or grants it in exchange for other lands; or where I promise that if one will marry my daughter, or build me a house, &c. I will give him a certain sum of money; or one agrees for 20*s.* to do a thing. Or it is implied; when the law itself enforces a consideration; as where a person comes to an inn, and there staying eats and drinks, and takes lodging for himself and horse, the law presumes he intends to pay for both, though there be no express contract for it; and therefore if he discharge not the house, the host may stay his horse: and so if a tailor makes a garment for another, and there is no express agreement what he shall have for it; he may keep the clothes till he is paid, or sue the party for the same. 5 Rep. 19. Plowd. 308. Dyer 30, 337. Also there is a consideration of nature and blood; and valuable consideration in deeds and conveyances: but if a man be indebted to divers others, and in consideration of natural affection, gives all his goods to his son, or other relation, this shall be construed a fraudulent gift, within the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. because that act intends a valuable consideration. Terms de Ley.

Considerations of natural love, affection, marriage, &c. are good to raise uses to a man's family: if the uses are limited to a stranger, then it must be for a valuable consideration, not for love, affection, &c. 1 Inst. 271. 1 Rep. 176. A sale can never be without a valuable consideration: though the law establishes free gifts without the same. Noy's Max. 87. Hob. 230. A consideration ought to be matter of profit and benefit to him to whom it is done; by reason of the charge or trouble of him who doth it. Cro. Car. 8. If a person hath disbursed several sums for another, without his request, and afterwards such other says, that in consideration he hath paid the said sums for him, he promises to pay them: this is no consideration, because it was executed before. But it will be otherwise, if the sums were paid at the request of the other. Moor 220. Cro. Eliz. 282. A mere voluntary curtesy will not be a good consideration of a promise: but the value and proportion of the consideration is not material, to maintain an action; for a shilling or a penny, is as much binding as 100*l.* Though in these cases, the jury will give damages proportionably to the loss. Hob. 4. 10 Rep. 76.

A consideration that is void in part, is void in the whole: and if two considerations be alledged, and one of them is found false by the jury, the action fails. Hob. 126. Cro. Eliz. 848. But if there be a double consideration, for the grounding of a promise, for the breach whereof an action is brought; though one of the considerations be not good, yet if the other be good, and the promise broken, the action will lie upon that breach: for one consideration is enough to support the promise. 1 Lill. 297. A consideration must be lawful, to ground an assumpsit. 2 Lev. 161. Where considerations are valuable, and consist of two or more parts, there the performance of every part ought to be shewn. Cro. El. 579. If a deed express a consideration of money, on a purchase, it is said this will be no proof on a trial that the money was actually paid; but it is to be made out by proof of witnesses. Style's Rep. 169. In case a deed of feoffment be made of lands & or a fine and recovery be passed, and no consideration is expressed in the deed, &c. for the doing thereof, it shall be intended by the law, that it was made in trust, for the use of the feoffor or conusor; for it shall be presumed he would not part with his land without a consideration, and yet the deed shall be construed to operate something, and that which is most reasonable. 1 Lill. Abr. 299.

Consign, Is a word used by merchants, where goods are assigned or delivered over to a factor, &c. Lex Mercat.

Consilium, (dies consilii) Was a time allowed for one accused to make his defence, and answer the charge of the accuser. In aliis querat accusatus consilium, & habeat ab amicis & paribus suis, quod nullo jure debet defendi, &c. H. 1. c. 46. It is now used for a speedy day appointed to argue a demurrer; which the court grants after the demurrer joined on reading the record of the cause, &c. See Black. Com. 4 V. 349.

Consimili casu, writ of entry in: A writ of entry. This and the writ in casu proviso lay not at Common law, but are given by statute, Gloc. 6 Ed. 1. c. 7. and Westm. 2.

13 Ed. 1. c. 24. for the reverfioner after alienation; but during the life of the tenant in dower, or other tenant for life, see F. N. B. 205, 206. Black. Com. 3 V. 183. n.

Confistor, A magiftrate fo called: teftibus Rogero de Gant, Willielmo confiftore Ceftria, &c. Blount.

Confiftory, (confiftorium) Signifies as much as prætorium, or tribunal: it is commonly used for a council-house of ecclefiaftical perfons, or place of juftice in the fpiritual court; a feflion or afsembly of prelates. And every archbifhop and bifhop of every diocefe hath a confiftory court, held before his chancellor or commiffary in his cathedral church, or other convenient place of his diocefe, for ecclefiaftical caufes. 4 Inf. 338. The bifhop's chancellor is the judge of this court, fupposed to be skilled in the Civil and Canon law: and in places of the diocefe, far remote from the bifhop's confiftory, the bifhop appoints a commiffary (commiffarius foraneus) to judge in all caufes within a certain diftrict, and a register to enter his decrees, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 286. Seld. Hift. of Tithes, 413, 414.

Consolidation, (confolidatio) Is used for the uniting of two benefices into one. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21. Which union is to be by the affent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, &c. and to be of fmall churches lying near together. Vide Church. This word is taken from the Civil law, where it fignifies properly an uniting of the poffeffion, occupancy or profit of lands, &c. with the property. See Extinguifhment.

Conspiracy, (conspiratio) Is used for an agreement of two or more perfons falfly to indict one, or to procure him to be indicted of felony; who, after acquittal, fhall have writ of conspiracy. See 33 Edw. 1. stat. 2. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11. 3 Hen. 7. c. 13. 1 Hen. 5. c. 3. 18 Hen. 6. c. 22. And writ of conspiracy lies for him that is indicted of a trefpafs, and acquitted, though it was not felony: alfo upon an indictment for a riot. 2 Mod. 306. 5 Mod. 405. Where a man is falfly indicted of any crime, which may prejudice his fame or reputation; and though it doth not import flander, if it endangers his liberty; or if the indictment be injurious to his property, &c. writ of conspiracy lieth. 3 Salk. 97. But though a conspiracy to charge falfly be indictable, yet the party ought to fhew himfelf to be innocent; and the writ of conspiracy lies not without an acquittal. Mod. Caf. 137, 185, 186. Not only writ of conspiracy, which is a civil action at the fuit of the party; but alfo action of the cafe in the nature of a writ of conspiracy, doth lie for a falfe and malicious accusation of any crime, whether capital or not capital, even of high treason; and though the bill of indictment is found ignoramus, or it does not go fo far as an indictment. And the fame damages may be recovered in fuch action, as in a writ of conspiracy, where the party is lawfully acquitted by verdict. 1 Roll. Abr. 111, 112. 9 Rep. 56. See Gilb. Ca. 185. 10 Mod. 148, 214. Salk. 15. And an action on the cafe is preferable, as being more in ufe, and the proceedings eafier, and not attended with fuch niceties as conspiracy.

If one falfly and maliciously procure another to be arrefted, and brought before a juftice of peace to be examined concerning a felony, &c. on purpofe to vex and difgrace him, and put him to charges and trouble, although he is not indicted for the fame, yet he may have an action of the cafe; in which he need not aver that he was lawfully acquitted, as he ought to do in a writ of conspiracy: but he muft aver that the accusation was falfe & malitiofe, which words are neceffary in the declaration; and it muft appear that there was no ground for it. And as action on the cafe may be profecuted againft one perfon, where the writ of conspiracy or indictment doth not lie but againft two, this action is moft commonly brought. 1 Danv. Abr. 208, 213. 2 Inf. 562, 638.

Conspirators may be indicted at the fuit of the King; and at the Common law, one may prefer an indictment againft confpirators, who only confpire together, and nothing is executed: though the conspiracy ought to be declared by fome act, or promife to ftand by one another, &c. But a bare conspiracy will not maintain a writ of conspiracy, at the fuit of the party, becaufe he is not damaged by it; though it is a ground for an indictment. 9 Rep. 56. 2 Roll. Abr. 77. If the defendants can fhew any foundation or probable caufe of fufpicion, they fhall be difcharged: and if a man hath good caufe of fufpicion that a perfon is guilty of felony, and caufes him to be indicted, in profecution of juftice, action of conspiracy will not lie: but 'tis otherwife if the profecutor impofes the crime of felony, where no felony was committed. 1 Roll. Abr. 115. and Rep. 438.

An action lies not againft a juftice of peace, who fends out his warrant upon a falfe accusation; but it lies if he makes it out without any accusation. 1 Leon. 187. Conspiracies ought to be out of court; for if a profecution be ordered in a courfe of juftice, and witneffes appear againft a party, &c. there fhall be no punifhment: and if perfons acted only as jurors in a criminal matter; or judges in open court, there is no ground for profecution. S. P. C. 173. 12 Rep. 24. If all the defendants but one are acquitted on indictment for conspiracy, that one muft be acquitted alfo; becaufe one perfon alone cannot be indicted for this crime: and husband and wife, being but one perfon, may not be indicted for a conspiracy. 2 Roll. Abr. 708. The acquittal of one perfon is the acquittal of another upon indictment of conspiracy. 3 Mod. 220. Though where one is found guilty, according to the opinion of the Lord Chief Juftice Hale; if the other doth not come in upon procefs, or if he dies pending the fuit, judgment fhall be had againft the other. 1 Vent. 234. Writ of conspiracy was brought againft two perfons, and one found Not guilty; the other fhall not have judgment: but in action on the cafe, it had been good. Cro. Eliz. 701. If the parties are found guilty of the conspiracy, upon an indictment of felony, at the King's fuit; the judgment is, that they fhall lofe their frank law (which difables them to be put upon any jury, to be fworn as witneffes, or to appear in perfon in any of the King's courts) and that their lands, goods and chattels be feifed as forfeited, and their bodies committed to prifon; which is called a villainous judgment. 2 Inf. 143, 222. Crompt. Juft. 156.

The matter of the conspiracy ought to touch a man's life, where this judgment is impofed. 1 Hawk. P. C. 193. For confpiring to charge a perfon with poifoning another, &c. one of the parties was fined 1000*l.* and fome others had judgment of the pillory, and to be burnt in the cheek with the letters F. and G. to fignify falfe confpirators. Moor 816. Fine and imprifonment is the ufual punifhment at this day on indictment for conspiracy: and on writ of conspiracy, &c. the party fhall be fined, and render damages. There is a conspiracy to maintain fuits and quarrels; and of victuallers, to fell their victuals at certain prices; of labourers and artificers, &c. punifhable by ftatutes 33 Ed. 1. ft. 2. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15.

Conspirators, (conspiratores) By 33 E. 1. ft. 2. are defined to be thofe that do bind themfelves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that every of them fhall aid the other falfly and maliciously to indict perfons; or falfly to move or maintain pleas, &c. And fuch as retain men in the country, with liveries, or fees, to maintain their malicious enterprifes, which extends as well to the takers as the givers; and ftewards and bailiffs of great lords, who by their office or power, undertake to bear and maintain quarrels, pleas or debates, that concern other parties than fuch as relate to the eftate of their lords or themfelves. 2 Inf. 384, 562. And againft confpirators, falfe informers and imbracers of inqueft, the King hath provided a writ in the Chancery; and the juftices of either bench and juftices of affize, fhall, on every plaint, award inqueft thereupon. Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 10. From the defcription of confpirators, in feveral of our old law books, conspiracy is taken generally, and confounded with maintenance and champerty. Befides thefe, there are confpirators in treafon; by plotting againft the government, &c. See Treafon.

Conspiration, Is a writ that lies againft confpirators. Reg. Orig. 134. F. N. B. 114.

Constable, (constabularius) is a Saxon word, compounded of coning, i. e. king, and ftaple, which fignify the ftay or hold of the king. This word is diversly ufed in our law; firft for the lord constable of England, whose power was anciently fo extenfive, that fome time fince, that office hath been thought too great for any fubject; unlefs at the King's coronation to compleat the grandeur of that ceremony, mony; and for the ancient trials by combat, &c. In the reign of Henry the Fourth, the Lord North was made Lord constable for life: and this office being formerly of inheritance, by tenure of certain manors, the line of the Bobuns, Earls of Hereford and Essex, enjoyed it in right of the manors of Harlefield, Newman, and Witenburst, and afterwards it came to the Staffords, and Dukes of Buckingham, as heirs general of them; but Edward Duke of Buckingham being attainted of high treason, anno 13 H. 8. this office became forfeited to the crown, and since that time it was never granted but pro hac vice, to be exercised at a coronation, &c.

The power and jurisdiction of the lord high constable, was the same with the earl marshal, and he sat as judge, having precedence of the earl marshal in the marshal's court: but the constable of England is by some of our books also called marshal; who takes cognizance of all matters of war and arms, and had originally several courts under him; but has now only the Marshalsea; and his office is in force both in time of peace and war, so that though the lord constable had the precedence, yet the court held before them was called the marshal's court. See Lex Constitutionis, p. 175, 176. Of this officer or magistrate, Gwyn saith to this effect: The court of the constable and marshal determineth contracts touching deeds of arms out of the realm upon land, and handleth things concerning war within the realm, as combats; blazons of armory, &c. which cannot be determined by the Common law; and in these matters is commonly guided by the Civil law.

By statute, the constable of England hath cognizance of things concerning arms and wars, which cannot be discussed by the Common law: and when a plea is commenced before the constable and marshal, which may be tried at the Common law, the party grieved shall have a privy seal to cause the constable and marshal to cease, until it be decided by the King's counsel whether it may be tried there or at the Common law. 13 R. 2. c. 2. The constable and marshal shall not have cognizance of pleas or suits that ought to be tried at Common law. Stat. 8 R. 2. c. 5. Appeals of things done out of the realm, are to be tried by the constable and marshal of England. 1 H. 4. c. 14. And if a man be wounded on the high sea, and die of the same wound in a foreign country, though this be done in the seas belonging to England, yet it cannot be inquired of by the Common law, because it is not within any of the counties of the realm: neither can the admiral hear and determine this murder; for though the stroke was within his jurisdiction, the death was infra corpus comitatus, whereof he cannot inquire: nor is it within the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 4. because the murder was not committed on the sea. But by Stat. 13 R. 2. §. 1. c. 5. The constable and marshal may hear and determine the same. And vide the 2 Geo. 2. c. 21. Justices of gaol delivery and oyer and terminer may try the offender.

The office of constable of England is said to consist in the care of the common peace of the land, in deeds of arms and matters of war: and there is a constable of the Tower; a constable of Dover castle and of divers other castles; but these are more properly called castellanes. Out of the high magistracy of the constable of England (says Lambard) were drawn those inferior constables, which we call constables of hundreds and franchises; and the statute of Winchester, 13 E. 1. appoints for conservation of the peace, and view of armour, two constables in every hundred and franchise, who in Latin are called constabularii capitales, high constables; because continuance of time, and increase of people and offences, have under these made others necessary in every town, called petty constables, in Latin sub-constabularii, which are of like nature, but of inferior authority to the other. And there are other officers, whose duty is much the same with constables, as headboroughs, tithingmen, &c. of which the petty constable seems to be the principal officer, but in his absence, or where there is no petty constable, their duty is the same. It has been held, that both high constables and petty constables were officers at Common law, before the statute of Winton, 13 Ed. 1. cap. 6. And that by the Common law they might arrest persons for a breach of the peace, and carry them before a justice to find sureties for their good behaviour, &c. But my Lord Coke says, That they were created by 13 Ed. 1. §. 2. c. 6. and their duty was thereby limited, though subsequent statutes have enlarged their power; but being created by act of parliament, they have no more authority than the act that created them, or some other acts have given them, and cannot prescribe as officers at the Common law may. 4 Inst. 267. 2 Davv. Abr. 148.

Under this head is to be considered,

I. Their election.

II. Their power and duty.

I. Of their election.

Anciently high and petty constables were appointed by the sheriff in his tourn, and sworn there as well as in the leet: and by the Common law, they ought to be chosen in the tourn or leet. Dalt. cap. 21. Of common right, a constable is to be chosen by the jury in the leet; and if he be present, and refuse to be sworn, the steward may fine him; if he be absent, he shall be sworn before justices of peace; and if such constable refuses to be sworn, the jury must present his refusal at the next court, and then he shall be amerced, for the steward of the leet may not fine him if he is absent. 1 Salk. 175. 5 Mod. 130. A high constable may be chosen at a court-leet by the steward, on presentment of the jury, when custom warrants it; but where such courts are not kept, or there is a neglect in choosing him, the justices at their quarter-sessions may chuse and swear a high constable; and this is the usual way observed at this time. Mich. 21 Car. 1. Mod. Just. 133. And he may be sworn out of sessions, by warrant from thence; and be elected out of the sessions, by the greater number of justices in the division. Ibid. If one that is elected to the office of constable refuse to take the oath to serve in that office, a writ of mandamus may be had to compel him to do it. 1 Lill. Abr. 303. The justices of peace may appoint a constable in such place where there was never any before. 1 Mod. 13.

If constables, headboroughs, &c. die or go out of the parish, two justices of peace are to swear new ones till the lord of the manor hold a court-leet, or till the next quarter-sessions, who shall approve of them or appoint others: and if any of them continue above a year, the justices of peace may discharge them, and put in others till the lord of the manor holds a court. By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 12. a constable's oath runs thus: "You shall well and truly serve our sovereign lord the King, and the lord of this leet (if sworn in a court leet) in the office of constable, in and for the hundred of, &c. or parish of, &c. for the year ensuing, or until you shall be thereof discharged according to due course of law: you shall well and truly do and execute all things belonging to the said office, according to the best of your knowledge. So help you God." Formerly the oath of a constable was very long, he being sworn to several articles which included his particular duty. High constables are generally chosen and sworn by the justices of peace in their sessions: and petty constables, who are their assistants, in each town, parish or vill, the choice of them properly belongs to the court-leet; but at this day they are usually elected by the parishioners, and sworn by a justice of peace, who on just cause may remove them. 4 Inst. 267. These constables are appointed yearly; and are to be men of honesty, knowledge and ability, not infants, lunatics, &c. And if they refuse to serve, they may be bound over to the sessions, and indicted, and fined and imprisoned. 8 Rep. 41. 5 Mod. 96. But physicians, apothecaries, surgeons, &c. are excused by statute from bearing the office of constable, or other parish office. See 5 H. 6. c. 6. 5 H. 8. c. 6. 3 H. 8. c. 43. & 6 W. & M. c. 4. Also attorneys and officers of the courts at Westminster, barristers at law, aldermen of London, &c. are privileged from serving the office of constable; and if a gentleman of quality be chosen constable, where there are sufficient persons beside, and no special custom concerning it; 'tis said such persons may be relieved in B. R. 2 Harw. P. C. 63, 64.

A constable may make a deputy; but the constable is answerable, and his deputy must be sworn. Sid. 355. Dissenters chosen to the office of constables, &c. scrupling to take the oaths, may execute the office by deputy, who shall comply with the law in this behalf. 1 W. & M. c. 18. Constables may appoint a deputy, or person to execute a warrant when by reason of sickness, &c. they cannot do it themselves. A woman made constable, by virtue of a custom, that the inhabitants of a town shall serve by turns, on account of their estates or houses, may procure another to serve for her, and the custom is good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 63.

II. Of their power and duty.

The high constable has the direction of the petty constables, headboroughs, and tithing-men, within his hundred: his duty is to keep the peace, and apprehend felons, rioters, &c. to make hue and cry after felons; and take care that the watch be duly kept in his hundred; and that the statutes for punishing rogues and vagrants be put in execution. He ought to prevent unlawful games, tippling, and drunkenness; bloodshed, affrays, &c. He is to execute precepts and warrants, directed to him by justices of the peace, and make returns to the sessions of the peace to all the articles contained in his oath, or that concern his office: and shall also cause the petty constables to make their returns. He is to return all victuallers and alehouse-keepers that are unlicensed; and all such persons as entertain inmates, who are likely to be a charge to the parish. He must likewise present the faults of petty constables, headboroughs, &c. who neglect to apprehend rogues, vagrants and idle persons, whores, night-walkers, mothers of bastard children like to be chargeable to the parish, &c. And also all defects of highways and bridges, and the names of those who ought to repair them: scavengers who neglect their duty; and all common nuisances in streets and highways; bakers who sell bread under weight; brewers selling beer to unlicensed alehouses; forestallers, regrators, ingrossers, &c. And at every quarter-sessions they are to pay to the treasurer of the county all such money as hath been levied and received by them, of the churchwardens, &c. for the relief of prisons and hospitals. Dalt. Ca. 28. Lamb. 125. By statute, high constables now collect a general county rate, made by the justices in sessions, and assessed upon every parish, &c. which the churchwardens and overseers, out of the money raised for the poor, shall pay to them within thirty days, or may be levied by distress; and then they pay the same to the treasurers appointed, as the publick stock for repairing bridges, gaols, houses of correction, &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 29.

The authority of petty constables, in their several towns, tithings, and boroughs, is generally the same as the high constable hath in his hundred: they are to keep the peace in the absence of the high constable; and assist him in making presentments at the assizes and quarter-sessions, of every thing that is amiss: they may command affrayers to keep the peace, and depart, &c. And may break into a house to see the peace kept; make fresh pursuit into another county, &c. Also they may command all persons to assist them, to prevent a breach of the peace; justify beating another if assaulted; and if they happen to be killed, doing their duty, it will be taken to be premeditated murder. They may, without warrant from a justice of peace, take into custody any persons whom they see committing a felony or breach of the peace; but if it be out of their sight, as where a person is seized by another, &c. they may not do it without a warrant from a justice. A constable cannot detain a man at his pleasure; but only stay him to bring him before a justice to be examined, &c. And this detaining of an offender by the constable may be for a day, without warrant, and be justified. Dalt. c. 1, 8. Lamb. 125. H. P. C. 135. 1 Leon. 307. Moor 408.

If one abuses a constable in the execution of his office, he cannot commit him to prison there to remain till punished for the offence; but must carry him before a justice, who may commit him, &c. 2 Darv. Abr. 149. But 'tis said, by the original power in the constable, he may for breach of the peace, and some other misdemeanors, less than felony, imprison a man: and if an offence be committed, for which a constable may arrest, he may convey the offender to the sheriff or his gaoler; though the safest way in all cases is to bring them to a justice, to be bailed or committed, as the case shall require. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 88, 90. The constable's office being ministerial and relative to the justices of peace, coroners, sheriffs, &c. their precepts ought to be executed by him, or on default he may be indicted and fined. Ibid.

Petty constables are to execute all warrants of justices, and not dispute it where the justice hath jurisdiction, and the warrant is lawful: and being sworn officers, they need not shew their warrants when they come to arrest any one. 10 Rep. 76. If any justice sends his warrant to a constable, &c. to bring a person before him to answer all such matters as shall be objected against him by another, and doth not set forth the special matter in the warrant, the warrant is unlawful, because it doth not give the offender time and opportunity to find sureties; and the constable, if he executes it, is liable to an action of false imprisonment. 2 Inst. 521. So if a justice of peace sends a warrant to a constable to take up one for slander, &c. the justices having no jurisdiction, in such cases, the constable ought not to execute it.

The constable is the proper officer to a justice of peace, and bound to execute his lawful warrants; and therefore where a statute authorises a justice to convict a person of any crime, and to levy the penalty, &c. without saying to whom such warrant shall be directed, the constable is the officer to execute the warrant, and must obey it. 5 Mod. 130. 1 Salk. 381. If a warrant be directed to a constable by name, commanding him to execute it, tho' he is not compellable to go out of his own parish, yet he may if he will, and execute it in any place in the county, and shall be justified by the warrant for so doing; but if the warrant be directed to all constables, &c. generally, no constable can execute the same out of his precinct. 1 Salk. 175. 3 Salk. 99. It is at the election of a constable to carry an offender before any other justice than him who issued the warrant; if the warrant be not special, to bring the offender before the justice that granted it. 5 Rep. 59. By the Stat. 24 G. 2. c. 55. A constable may execute a warrant in any other county, &c. if indorsed by a justice of such other county, &c. and carry the offender before a justice of such other county, &c. and if the offender shall give bail, the constable is to deliver the recognizance, examination or confession of the offender, and all other proceedings relating thereto to the clerk of assizes, or clerk of the peace of the county, &c. where the offence was committed, under the penalty of 10 l. But if the offence shall not be bailable, or the offender shall not give bail, the constable shall carry the offender before a justice of the county where the offence was committed. A constable is not obliged to return a justice's warrant to the justice, but may keep the same for his own justification, in case he should be questioned for his acting; but he must give the justice an account of what he hath done upon it. 2 Ld. Raym. 1196. And by Hale Chief Justice, where the constable returns want of distress upon a warrant to distrain; the justice ought to make a record of it, and then give judgment for corporal punishment. Ibid.

Constables, headboroughs, &c. out of purse in their offices, they and the inhabitants may tax all persons chargeable, by the 43 El. c. 2. as every occupier of land, &c. which rate being confirmed by two justices, the constables may levy it by distress and sale of goods. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. A constable, by warrant from a justice of peace, may sell the goods of an offender apprehended, to discharge the expence of carrying him to prison: if the offender hath no goods, then the town where he was apprehended must be at the expence, and the constable with three or four of the principal inhabitants, may impose a tax on every inhabitant, &c. which being allowed by a justice, the constable by his warrant may levy it: and if the inhabitants refuse to make a tax, two justices may by warrant compel them to do it. 3 Jac. 1. c. 10. See 27 Geo. 2. c. 3.

The particular duty of constables is further as follows: they are not only to command affrayers to depart, but call others to their assistance to suppress affrays; and they may put affrayers in the stocks, till they can convey them before a justice, &c. Dalt. 33. Lamb. 135, 141. Constables are to levy the penalties on persons keeping alehouses without without licence, selling less than measure, &c. or forfeit 40*s*. &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. They are to stop such persons as go or ride unlawfully armed, in terror of the people; take away their arms, and carry them before a justice of peace. Dalt. 338. To take up artificers going out of the kingdom, by justice's warrant. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27. Constables shall levy penalties on bakers, making or selling bread wanting weight, deficient in goodness, &c. and selling large bread at a higher price than set by mayors, &c. 1 Geo. 1. c. 26. 3 Geo. 2. c. 29. The constable of a parish is to apprehend mothers of bastard children. Dalt. A constable may, with others called to his assistance, enter hawdy-houses, and arrest persons with lewd women, for breach of the peace. Mich. 13 Hen. 7. The constable, and two most able inhabitants in the parish, are to make an assessment for the repairs of bridges, to be allowed by justices. 22 H. 8. c. 5. The forfeiture for mixing corrupt butter with good, and opening casks, &c. is leviable by constables. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 26. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 7. By a justice's warrant, constables shall levy penalties for using cloth buttons, &c. upon clothes. 4 Geo. 1. c. 7. 7 Geo. 1. c. 12. Constables shall provide carriages on the marching of soldiers, by virtue of a justice of peace's warrant, being allowed by the officers 1*s*. a mile for a waggon, &c. See the Table to the Statutes, tit. Soldiers. They may seize cattle brought from Ireland, and cause them to be killed, and the flesh distributed among the poor. 18 Car. 2. c. 2. High constables may hear and determine complaints of clothiers, and their work-people; search for and seize ropes, engines, &c. for the stretching of cloth: spinsters, &c. imbeziling wool from clothiers, shall make satisfaction, or be whipped by constables, &c. and constables, by warrant of two justices, may enter and search houses of clothiers for ends and refuse of yarn, which may not be worked up again, under penalties leviable by the constables; and they also levy by distress the forfeiture for taking away cloth from the tenters, or yarn, wool, &c. left abroad to dry in the night. 4 E. 4. c. 1. 39 Eliz. c. 20. 7 Jac. 1. c. 16. 13 Geo. 1. c. 23. 14 Geo. 2. c. 35, &c. Where coals are sold by sacks not lawful measure, &c. constables shall levy the forfeiture inflicted. 3 Geo. 2. c. 26. Also the penalty for selling coals, at higher price than appointed, by justice's warrant, &c. 11 Geo. 2. c. 15.

Constables, headboroughs, &c. are to levy the fines imposed on those who shall be present at unlawful conventicles; and by virtue of a justice's warrant may enter such places, break open doors upon their being refused entrance, and take into custody persons unlawfully assembled, &c. 22 Car. 2. c. 1. To levy penalties on curriers who do not curry leather sufficiently, or that neglect the same within certain times. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. They are to be assisting to all persons appointed by the King for the collecting and management of the customs; and to persons having a warrant from the lord treasurer, &c. to make a search for goods that have not paid the customs. 12 Car. 2. c. 19. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35, &c. The penalties on deer-stealers are to be levied by constables, by virtue of a justice's warrant: and the penalties are 20*l*. for hunting deer in any place inclosed; and 30*l*. for each deer killed, &c. And they may enter any suspected place, and carry away venison, skins of deer, tails, &c. 13 Car. 2. stat. 1. c. 10. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. By a justice's warrant to levy the penalty on distillers, &c. selling brandy about the streets, on any bulks or sheds, &c. 6 Geo. 2. c. 17. And constables, and other officers of the peace, are to carry unlawful retailers of spirituous liquors before a justice, &c. and refusing to be aiding in executing the acts against distillers, shall forfeit 20*l*. 11 Geo. 2. c. 26. Constables are to assist landlords in taking distresses for rent in arrear; and in the appraisement of the goods, sale, &c. if the same are not replevied in five days. 2 W. & M. c. 5. They shall give assistance to searchers of dyed cloths, in entering and examining whether the cloths or stuffs are deceitfully dyed, &c. 13 Geo. 1. c. 24. They are to levy the penalty of 5*s*. on drunkards, for the use of the poor; or shall forfeit 10*s*. 4 Jac. 1. c. 1. Constables are to attend officers of the excise, and enter with them into brewhouses, private houses, &c. for discovery of frauds: and by warrant from justices, they are to levy the penalties on offenders against any law of excise, by distress, &c. See Excise Laws.

A constable, permitting a felon to escape, before arrested, is guilty of a misdemeanor, for which he may be indicted and fined; and if the felon be actually in custody, and then he voluntarily permits him to escape, 'tis felony in the constable; but if the escape be involuntary, it is only fineable: he may put a felon in the stocks, and lock him in; or put irons upon him, or pinion him, to prevent an escape. A constable may discharge any person arrested on suspicion of felony, where no felony is actually committed. Dalt. 272. Cro. Eliz. 202, 752. Constables ex officio are to apprehend felons, may call other persons to their assistance therein, and apprehend any upon suspicion, and carry them before a justice, &c. A constable, upon complaint or common fame of a felony, may search suspicious houses, both for the felon and goods stolen; and may justify breaking open a house to take a felon; and if the felon fly, he is to make an inventory of his goods, send hue and cry after him, &c. Dalt. 289, 340. 27 El. c. 13. Constables must levy the penalty of 10*s*. for fishing in a river, without the owner's consent; and search for unlawful nets, engines, &c. Also levy forfeitures for using engines to destroy the breed of fish; and selling sea fish under certain lengths. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. 3 Jac. 1. c. 12. 1 Geo. 1. c. 18, &c. They are to give assistance to justices of the peace, in removing forcible entries, &c. or shall be committed and fined. 5 Rep. 2. To prevent forefallers of markets, ingrossers, &c. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. Constables are to carry higlers, chapmen, victuallers, &c. before a justice, who have in their custody any hare, or other game; and by a justice's warrant are to search suspected houses for game, &c. They may carry persons, not qualified to kill game, before a justice, for keeping greyhounds, setting-dogs, &c. See the Game Acts. They are to make a search monthly for gaming-houses, where unlawful games shall be kept; and they may commit the masters of such houses, and the gamesters found therein; though it is best to carry them before a justice of peace: Constables neglecting their duties in this particular, forfeit 40*s*. They likewise levy penalties on persons for playing at unlawful games, ace of hearts, faro, &c. adjudged to be a kind of lotteries. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. If gaolers refuse to receive a felon, the constable may either secure the prisoner in his house, or carry him back to the town where apprehended: and to defray the charge of carrying him to gaol, &c. Constables have power to sell the offender's goods, &c. or the same may be levied by a tax. 10 H. 4. Dalt. 340. 3 Jac. 1. c. 12. In London and Westminster the constables, &c. shall make a search for gunpowder, in the houses of persons keeping a greater quantity than allowed by statute, and remove the same. 5 Geo. 1. c. 26. 11 Geo. 1. c. 23. And they are to levy the penalty for putting gunpowder on board ships, &c. above Blackwall in the river Thames. 5 Geo. 1. c. 26. If any constable refuse to assist in putting the laws in execution against hawkers and pedlars, that travel without licences, and are thereby liable to penalties, he shall forfeit 40*s*. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25. The penalties of selling trusses of hay, &c. under due weight in the Hay-market, are leviable by constables. 2 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 8. Constables are to whip hedge-breakers, &c. for not making satisfaction ordered by a justice: they may apprehend persons suspected of hedge-breaking, or of having in their possession any underwood, poles, gates, fules, &c. and carry them before a justice, &c. 43 El. c. 7. 15 Car. 2. c. 2. To be aiding and assisting in putting the acts in execution relating to the repairing of the highways; under the penalty of 40*s*. And they are to return lists of persons qualified for the office of surveyor, to the justices in their sessions on the 3d of January yearly, under the penalty of 20*s*. See the Highway Acts, and 22 Car. 2. c. 12, &c. To levy the penalty for privately conveying away hops, to avoid paying duty; and forfeiture for adulterating hops, &c. 9 Ann. c. 12. 1 Geo. 1. c. 12. 7 Geo. 2. c. 19. Constables are to be assisting in driving off commons, forests, &c.

Ec. horses and cattle; on pain of 40*s.* 32 H. 8. c. 13. They are to make hue and cry after offenders where a felony or robbery is committed: to call upon the parishioners to assist in the pursuit; and if the criminal be not found in the precinct of the first constable, he is to give notice to the next constable, and he to the next, who are to do as the first, and continue the pursuit from town to town, and county to county, Ec. 13 Ed. 1. St. 2. c. 6. 27 Eliz. c. 13. Pursuers of the hue and cry may search suspected houses, and arrest all suspicious persons. And where offenders are not taken, constables shall levy the tax to satisfy an execution, on recovery against a hundred, and pay the same to the sheriffs, Ec. and neglecting to make hue and cry, shall forfeit 5*l.* 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. A constable, on complaint, is to cause an innkeeper to be indicted and punished, for refusing to lodge a traveller, or to provide him victuals, Ec. who offers to pay for the same. See the statutes relating to justices of the peace. Constables being head officers of places, shall have in their custody sealed weights, &c. under penalties: persons buying or selling by false weights or measures, forfeit 5*s.* leviable by constables. 8 H. 6. c. 5. 16 Car. 1. c. 19. And constables are to call together assistance to save ships from wreck; and no persons shall enter any such ships, without leave from the commander, constable, &c. 12 Ann. cap. 18.

By the Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 31. Constables, by the order of the high constable, are to give notice to the several inn-keepers and alhouse-keepers, within their respective constablewicks, of the day and place appointed by the justices for granting licences.

If a constable doth not his duty, he may be indicted and fined by the justices of peace; on the other hand, he is protected by law, in the execution of his duty.

By 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5. If any action is brought against a constable, for any thing done by virtue of his office, he, and also all others who in his aid, or by his command, shall do any thing concerning his office, may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence, and if he recovers he shall have double costs. And see 21 Jac. 1. c. 5.

By the Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. No action shall be brought against any constable, or other officer, or any person acting by his order, and in his aid, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant of a justice of peace, until demand hath been made, or left at the usual place of his abode, by the party intending to bring such action, or his attorney or agent, in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected by the space of six days after such demand; and in case after such demand and compliance therewith, by shewing the said warrant to, and permitting a copy to be taken thereof by the party demanding the same, any action shall be brought against such constable or other officer, or such person acting in his aid, for any such cause as aforesaid, without making the justice who signed or sealed the said warrant, a defendant; then on producing and proving such warrant at the trial, the jury shall give a verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice; and if such action, be brought jointly against such justice, and also against such constable or other officer, or other person acting in his aid, then on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such constable, or other officer, and other person so acting, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction as aforesaid; and if the verdict shall be given against the justice, the plaintiff shall recover his costs against him, to be taxed in such manner, as to include such costs as such plaintiff shall be liable to pay to such defendant or defendants, for whom such verdict shall be found as aforesaid. No action shall be brought against any constable, or other officer, or other person acting as aforesaid, unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed.

Stat. 27 Geo. 2. cap. 20. sect. 2. The constable executing a justice's warrant for levying a penalty, or other sum of money directed by any act of parliament; by distress, may deduct his own reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the goods distrained; returning the overplus on demand, after such penalty or sum of money, and charges deducted. See Commitment, County-rates, Justices of peace.

Penalty on constables taking money to excuse from quartering soldiers, 4 Geo. 3. c. 3. sect. 26 & 66.—High constable to obey the orders of the court to be held in pursuance of 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. sect. 12.—One to be constables who are sixty-three or upwards. 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. sect. 13.

Constables of London, (which city is divided into twenty-six wards, and every ward into the like number of precincts; in each whereof is a constable), are nominated by the inhabitants of each precinct on St. Thomas's day, and confirmed, or otherwise, at the court of wardmote; and after they are confirmed, they are sworn in their offices at a court of aldermen, on the next Monday after twelfth day. The substance of their oath is, to keep the King's peace to the utmost of their power; to arrest attorneys, rioters, and such as make contests to the breach of the peace, and carry them to the house of correction or comptor of one of the sheriffs; and in case of resistance, to make outcry on them, and pursue them from street to street; and from ward to ward; till they are arrested; to search for common nuisances, in their respective wards, being required by scavengers, &c. and upon request to assist the beadle and raker in collecting their salaries and quarterage; to present to the Lord Mayor and ministers of the city, defaults relating to the ordinances of the city; to certify once a month into the mayor's court, the names and surnames of all freemen deceased; and also of the children of such freemen, being orphans: and by the articles of the wardmote inquest, constables are to certify the names, surnames, place of dwelling, possession and trade of every person, who shall newly come to inhabit in their precincts, and to keep a roll thereof; in order to which, they are to make inquiry at least once a month into what persons are come to lodge and sojourn there; and if they find by their own confessions, or the record of the aldermens books, that such new comers are ejected from any other ward for bad living, or any misdemeanor, and refuse to find sureties for their good behaviour, warning is to be given to them and their landlords, that they depart; and on refusal, they may be imprisoned, and the landlords fined a year's rent agreed for by such new comers. Calth. Rep. 129, 138.

Constables of London, in each ward, are to attend the watch by turns, and go the rounds; and with the beables every night are to warn such persons as are to serve upon the watch in their several precincts; and if they refuse to appear, the constable may hire others in their stead, and they shall pay him according to the custom of the city: but the common council appoint the watchmen. Watchmen are to apprehend night walkers, vagabonds, persons going armed, &c. and may arrest strangers in the night, and carry them before the constable to be examined, and finding cause of suspicion secure them till the morning; and whether they are horsemen or footmen, or drivers of carriages, or persons that carry burdens, the watch may stay them till the morning, unless they can render a good account of themselves, their company, and carriage, &c. and constables, &c. are to be aiding and assisting to the watch; and the watchmen are to obey their orders, in conveying offenders to the comptor, which is the common prison for offenders for the breach of the peace, till they are examined, and punished by the Lord Mayor, &c. But constables ought to be careful whom they send to the comptor, for fear of action for false imprisonment; prosecution for damages, &c.

If any will not obey the arrest of the watch, they may make hue and cry after them; and for such arrest of a stranger, (especially one suspected), none is liable to punishment. Dalt. 240. The court of common council are to meet the first of October yearly, and order a proper number of watchmen, beables and nightly constables for the city of London and liberties, and determine sums to be levied to bear the charge thereof upon each ward; and for raising money, the aldermen and common-councilmen of wards, shall make a rate and assessment upon the inhabitants, leviable by distress; and shall appoint their watchmen, set down in writing their stands and number of rounds, and make orders for regulating the watch, &c. Constables to keep watch and ward, from the 10th of Sept. to the 10th of March, from nine in the evening, till seven the next morning, and from 10th of March to 10th of September, from ten in the evening till five next morning. The constables shall use their best endeavours, for preventing fires, robberies and disorders, and arrest malefactors; and go twice or oftener about their wards, in every night; and the watchmen are to apprehend all suspected persons, &c. and deliver them to the constable of the night, who shall carry them before a justice of peace; constables misbehaving themselves, to forfeit 20s. and the Lord Mayor, or two justices for the city, may hear and determine offences, and levy penalties by distress and sale of goods, &c. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 22.

Constables are to certify to the Lord Mayor, and common council of the city, the names of all such persons as shall interrupt them in the discharge of their offices: and a constable of London has power to execute warrants, &c. throughout the whole city, upon occasion. Such as are chosen into the office are obliged to place the King's arms, and the arms of the city over their doors; and if they reside in alleys, at the end of such alleys, towards the streets, to signify that a constable lives there, and that they may be the more easily found when wanted. See Comp. Parish Officer, 6 Edit. p. 7, 8, &c.

Constat, (Lat.) Is the name of a certificate, which the clerk of the pipe, and auditors of the Exchequer, make at the request of any person who intends to plead or move in that court, for the discharge of any thing: and the effect of it, is the certifying what does constare upon record, touching the matter in question. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 4. and 13 Eliz. c. 6. A constat is held to be superior to an ordinary certificate, because it contains nothing but what is evident on record. And the exemplification under the great seal, of the enrolment of any letters patent, is called a constat. Co. Litt. 225.

Construative Treason. The Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. was made to define treason, and prevent the subject from being condemned for construive treason. See Black. Com. 4 V. 75, 76, 85, &c.

Conuetudinarius, A ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices, or the customs of abbeys and monasteries: 'tis mentioned in Brompton.

Conuetudinibus & Seruiciis, Is a writ of right close, which lies against the tenant that desorceth his lord of the rent or service due to him. Reg. Orig. 159. F. N. B. 151. When the writ is brought by the party in the right only, he shall count of the seisin of his ancestor, and the writ be in the debet; but when he counts of his own seisin, then the writ is in the debet & solet, &c. And if the party say in the writ ut in redditibus & arreragiis, these words prove that the demandant himself was seised of the services; and then if he count in such writ of seisin of his ancestors, and not of his own seisin, the writ shall abate: so that if he will bring a writ of customs and services of the seisin of his ancestors, he ought to leave these words ut in redditibus, &c. out of the writ. Where a person brings a writ of customs and services against any tenant, and by count demands homage, the writ ought to make special mention thereof; as ut in homagio, &c. or the writ shall abate. New Nat. Brev. 338. If this writ be brought against tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee, there the tenant may pray in aid of him in the remainder, &c.

Consul, (Lat.) In our law books signifies an earl. Bract. lib. 1. c. 8. tells us, that as comes is derived from comitatu, so consul is derived from consulendo; and in the laws of Edward the Confessor, mention is made of vicecomes and viceconsules. Blount. Consuls among the Romans, were chief officers, of which two were yearly chosen, to govern the city of Rome: but this government of Rome has long since been abrogated. Our Consuls abroad take care of the affairs and interests of merchants, in foreign kingdoms where they are appointed by the King; as at Lisbon, &c.

Consulta Ecclesia, A church full, or provided for, according to Council.

Consultation, (consultatio) Is a writ whereby a cause being removed by prohibition from the ecclesiastical court, to the King's court, is returned thither again; for if the judges of the King's court, upon comparing the libel with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false, or not proved, and therefore the cause to be wrongfully called from the ecclesiastical court, then upon this consultation or deliberation they decree it to be returned; whereupon the writ in this case obtained is called a consultation. Reg. Orig. 44, &c. Statute of writ of consultations, 24 Ed. 1. This writ is in nature of a procedendo; but properly a consultation ought not to be granted, but in case where a man cannot recover at the Common law, in the King's courts. New Nat. Br. 119. Causes of which the ecclesiastical or spiritual courts have jurisdiction, are of administrations, admissions of clerks, adultery, appeals in ecclesiastical causes, apostacy, general bastardy, blasphemy, solicitation of chastity, dilapidations and church repairs, celebration of divine service, divorces, fornication, heresy, incest, institution of clerks, marriage rites, oblations, obventions, ordinations, commutation of penance, pensions, procurations, schism, simony, tithes, probate of wills, &c. and where a suit is in the ecclesiastical court, for any of these causes, or the like, and not mixed with any temporal thing; if a suggestion is made for a prohibition, a consultation shall be awarded. 5 Rep. 9. To move for a prohibition in another court, after motion in the Chancery, &c. on the same libel which is granted, is merely vexatious, for which a consultation shall be had. Cro. Eliz. 277. Where a consultation is granted upon the right of the thing in question, there a new prohibition shall never be granted on the same libel; but where granted upon any default of the prohibition, in form, &c. there a prohibition may be granted upon the same libel again. 1 Nels. Abr. 485. A consultation must be pursuant to the libel, &c. Vide Prohibition. See Black. Com. 3 V. 114.

Contempt, (contemptus) Is a disobedience to the rules and orders of a court, which hath power to punish such offence: and one may be imprisoned for a contempt done in court; but not for a contempt out of court, or a private abuse. Cro. Eliz. 689. Attachment also lies against one for contempt to the court, to bring in the offender to answer on interrogatories, &c. and if he cannot acquit himself, he shall be fined. 1 Lill. 305. If a sheriff, being required to return a writ directed to him, doth not return the writ, it is a contempt: and this word is used for a kind of misdemeanor, by doing what one is forbidden; or not doing what he is commanded. 12 Rep. 36. And as this is sometimes a greater, and sometimes a lesser offence; so it is punished with greater or less punishment, by fine, and sometimes imprisonment. Dyer 128, 177. 1 Bulst. 85. See Attachment. See Black. Com. 4 V. 280.

An attachment of contempt may issue against a bishop, or other peer: but for not returning a sermone de bonis ecclesiasticis, it is proper to move against the chancellor, commillary, or official. Rex v. Bishop of St. Asaph, Wils. par. 1. p. 332.

One committed for a contempt of the House of Commons cannot be bailed by the court of King's Bench, the Honourable Alexander Murray's case, ib. p. 299, 300.

It is a contempt to institute a suit fictitiously, though the demand is real, either to hurt any person, or to get the opinion of the court. Coxe and Phillips. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 237, 239.

Contentement, (contentementum) Is said to signify a man's countenance or credit, which he hath together with, and by reason of, his freehold: in which sense, it is used in the statute of 1 Ed. 3. and other statutes: and Spelman in his Glossary says, Contentementum est assimatio & conditionis forma, qua quis in rebus subsistit. But contentment is more properly that, which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeable to their several qualities, or states of life: and seems to be freehold land, which lieth to a man's tenement, or dwelling-house, that is in his own occupation. For by Magna Charta, cap. 14. it is enacted, that a freeman shall not be amerced, but secundum magnitudinem delicti, salvo sibi contentemento suo; & mercator eodem modo, salva merchandisa; & villanus salvo wainagio; that is, as Glanvil tells us, he should be amerced, secundum quantitatem feodorum suorum & secundum facultates, ne nimis gravari inde videantur vel suum contentementum amittere. Lib. 9. c. 8.

Contingent Legacy. If a contingent legacy be left to any one; is, when he attains, or if he attains the age of twenty-one, and he dies before that time; it is a lapsed legacy. D. 59. 1 Eq. Caf. Abr. 255. But a legacy to one, to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years, is a vested legacy, an interest which commences in presenti, although it be solvendum in futuro: and if the legatee legatee dies before that age, his representatives shall receive it out of the testator's personal estate, at the same time it would have become payable, in case the legatee had lived. Black. Com. 2 V. 513.

Contingent Remainder, Contingent or executory remainders (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 3 Rep. 20. Black. Com. 2 V. 169. And see 10 Rep. 85.

Contingent Use, Is a use limited in a conveyance of land, which may, or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such use: a use in contingency is such which by possibility may happen in possession, reversion or remainder. 1 Rep. 121. A remainder contingent is said to be an estate vested; but on such remainder in executory devises, the estate descends till the contingency happens, and nothing is vested till then. 1 Vent. 189.

Continual Claim, Is a claim made from time to time, within every year and day, to land, or other thing, which in some respect we cannot attain without danger: as if a person be disseised of land, into which, though he hath a right of entry, he dare not enter for fear of beating, &c. it behoves him to hold on his right of entry at his best opportunity, by approaching as near it as he can, once a year, as long as he lives, and to save the right of entry to his heir. Lit. lib. 3. c. 7. Continual claim is where it is made, and repeated yearly, so as to be within a year and a day before the death of him that hath the lands; and if after he dies seised, so that his heir is in by descent, yet he that makes the claim may enter, &c. but if no claim be made, then the entry of the person disseised, &c. is taken away. 32 H. 8. cap. 33. Though by the statute the disseisor is to have peaceable possession for five years, without entry or continual claim, for a descent on his death, to take away the entry of the disseisee, or his heir; after the five years, the disseisee is to make continual claim, as before the statute: the feoffee of a disseisor, abators, &c. are out of the statute. As to this claim, though the tenant die within the year and day, and it be but once made, it shall preserve the entry of him that maketh it: and if the ancestor claim, and the disseisor die, and then the ancestor dieth, now his heir may enter: but if an ancestor or predecessor make a continual claim, and dieth, and the son or successor make no continual claim, and within the year and day after the claim made by the ancestor, the disseisor dies; this shall take away the entry of the son or successor, for the descent was cast in his time. Co. Lit. 250, 251. If there be tenant for life, remainder for life, the remainder in fee, and the tenant for life alien in fee: if he in remainder for life maketh continual claim, before the dying seised of the alienee, and after the alienee die seised, and after that the remainder-man for life dieth before any entry made by him: in this case he in remainder in fee shall have benefit by the claim of tenant for life, and he may enter upon the heir of the alienee, &c. Lit. Sect. 416. This claim shall not avoid a descent, unless it be made by him that hath title to enter, and in whose life the dying seised was: and so it is for the continual claim of a tenant for life, to give him in remainder advantage, except the disseisor, &c. die in the life-time of tenant for life. Co. Lit. 250. See Black. Com. 2 V. 316. 3 V. 175.

Continuance, Is the continuing of a cause in court, by an entry upon the records there for that purpose. There is a continuance of the assize, &c. And continuance of a writ or action is from one term to another, in case where the sheriff hath not returned a former writ, issued out in the said action. Kitch. 262. Continuances and essoins are amendable upon the roll, at any time before judgment: they are the acts of the court, and at Common law they may amend their own acts before judgment, though in another term; but their judgments are only amendable in the same term wherein they are given. 3 Lev. 431. Upon an original, a term or two or three terms may be mesne between the teste and the return; and this shall be a good continuance; for the defendant is not at any prejudice by it, and the plaintiff may give a day to the defendant beyond the common day if he will: but a continuance by capias ought to be made from term to term, and there cannot be any mesne term, because the defendant ought not to stay so long in prison. 2 Darw. Abr. 150. If a man recovers upon demurrer, or by default, &c. and a writ of inquiry of damages is awarded, there ought to be continuances between the first and second judgment, otherwise it will be a discontinuance; for the first is but an award, and not compleat till the second judgment upon the return of the writ of inquiry of damages. Ibid. 153. If the plaintiff be nonsuit, by which the defendant is to recover costs; if the plaintiff will not enter his continuances, on purpose to save the costs, the defendant shall be suffered to enter them. Cro. Jac. 316, 317. The course of the court of King's Bench is to enter no continuance upon the roll, till after issue or demurrer, and then to enter the continuance of all upon the back, before judgment: and if it is not entered, it is error. Trin. 16 Jac. B. R. Vide Discontinuance.

Continuando, Is a word used in a special declaration of trespass, when the plaintiff would recover damages for several trespasses in the same action: and to avoid multiplicity of suits, a man may in one action of trespass recover damages for many trespasses, laying the first to be done with a continuando to the whole time, in which the rest of the trespasses were done; which is in this form, Continuando transgressionem prædictam, &c. a prædicto die, &c. usque talem diem, including the last trespass. Terms de Ley. In trespass with a continuando of divers things, though of some of those things there could be no continuando; yet it shall be good for those things for which the continuando could be, and not for the others: but if the continuando had been particularly of such things whereof a continuando could not be, then it had been naught. 3 Lev. 94. Every day's trespass is said to be a several trespass; though a continuando may not be of men's continuing a trespass day and night, for some time together; for mankind must take some rest: where cattle do trespass upon ground, they are continually trespassing night and day, and therefore the continuando in that case is good. 1 Lill. Abr. 307. Trespass for breaking an house with a continuando, is good; and until a re-entry is made, the continuation of the possession, is a continuing of the trespass. Lutw. 1312.

Contraband Goods, (from contra, and the Ital. banda, an edict or proclamation) Are those which are prohibited by act of parliament, or the King's proclamation to be imported into, or exported out of this into any other nation: as during the late war with France, French wines, &c. were prohibited by statute to be imported here from thence: and wool, &c. is not to be exported from hence to other kingdoms. Stat. 27 E. 3. c. 3. 13 & 14 Car. 2. 7 & 8 W. 3. &c.

Contracausatoz, A criminal, or one prosecuted for a crime: this word is mentioned in Leg. H. 1. cap. 61.

Contract, (contractus) Is a covenant or agreement between two or more persons, with a lawful consideration or cause. West. Symb. part 1. As if a man sells his horse or other thing to another, for a sum of money; or covenants, in consideration of 20*l.* to make him a lease of a farm, &c. these are good contracts, because there is a quid pro quo, or one thing for another: but if a person make promise to me, that I shall have 20*s.* and that he will be debtor to me therefore, and after I demand the 20*s.* and he will not give it me, yet I shall never have any action to recover this 20*s.* because this promise was no contract, but a bare promise, or nudum pactum; though if any thing were given for the 20*s.* if it were but to the value of a penny, then it had been a good contract. Every contract doth imply in itself an assumpsit in law, to perform the same; for a contract would be to no purpose, if there were no means to enforce the performance thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 308. Where an action is brought upon a contract, and the plaintiff mistakes the sum agreed upon, he will fail in his action: but if he brings his action on the promise in law, which arises from the debt, there, although he mistakes the sum, he shall recover. Aleyn 29. Assumpsit in deed must be fully proved. Gilb. Law of Evid. 193. Assumpsit in law, proof of any part good. Ib. 172. See Gilb. Law of Evidence, 204, 205. 2 Vent. 154.

There

'There is a diversity where a day of payment is limited on a contract, and where not; for where it is limited, the contract is good presently, and an action lies upon it, without payment; but in the other not: If a man buys 20 yards of cloth, &c. the contract is void, if he do not pay the money presently; but if day of payment be given, there the one may have an action for the money, and the other trover for the cloth. Dyer 30, 293. Where a seller says to a buyer, he will sell his horse for so much, and the buyer says he will give it; if he presently tell out the money it is a contract; but if he do not it is no contract. Nov's Max. 87. Hob. 41. The property of any thing sold is in the buyer immediately by the contract; though regularly it must be delivered to the buyer, before the seller can bring his action for the money. Noy 88. If one contract to buy a horse or other thing of me, and no money is paid, or earnest given, nor day set for payment thereof, nor the thing delivered; in these cases, no action will lie for the money, or the thing sold, but it may be sold to another. Plowd. 128, 309.

All contracts are to be certain, perfect, and compleat: For an agreement to give so much for a thing as it shall be reasonably worth, is void for uncertainty; so a promise to pay money in a short time, &c. or to give so much, if he likes the thing when he sees it. Dyer 91. 1 Bulst. 92. But if I contract with another to give him 10*l.* for such a thing, if I like it on seeing the same; this bargain is said to be perfect at my pleasure: Though I may not take the thing before I have paid the money; if I do, the seller may have trespass against me; and if he sell it to another, I may bring an action of the case against him. Noy 104. If a contract be to have for cattle sold 10*l.* If the buyer do a certain thing, or else to have 20*l.* it is a good contract, and certain enough: And if I agree with a person to give him so much for his horse, as J. S. shall judge him to be worth, when he hath judged it, the contract is compleat, and an action will lie on it; and the buyer shall have a reasonable time to demand the judgment of J. S. But if he dies before his judgment is given, the contract is determined. Perk. Sect. 112, 114. Shep. Abr. 294.

In contracts, the time is to be regarded, in and from which the contract is made: The words shall be taken in the common and usual sense, as they are taken in that place where spoken; and the law doth not so much look upon the form of words, as on the substance and mind of the parties therein. 5 Rep. 83. 1 Bulst. 175. A contract for goods may be made as well by word of mouth, as by deed in writing; and where it is in writing only, not sealed and delivered, it is all one as by word. But if the contract be by writing sealed and delivered, and so turned into a deed; then it is of another nature, and in this case generally the action on the verbal contract is gone, and some other action lies for breach thereof. Plowd. 130, 309. Dyer 90. Contracts, not to be performed in a year, are to be in writing, signed by the party, &c. or no action may be brought on them: But if no day is set, or the time is uncertain, they may be good without it. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. And by the same statute, no contract for the sale of goods for 10*l.* or upwards, shall be good, unless the buyer receive part of the goods sold; or gives something in earnest to bind the contract; or some note thereof be made in writing, signed by the person charged with the contract, &c. If two persons come to a draper, and one says, let this man have so much cloth, and I will pay you; there the sale is to the undertaker only, though the delivery is to another by his appointment: But if a contract be made with A. B. and the vendor scruples to let the goods go without money, and C. D. comes to him and desires him to let A. B. have the goods, and undertakes that he shall pay him for them, that will be a promise within the statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3. and ought to be in writing. Mod. Caf. 249. A contract made and entered into upon good consideration, may for good considerations be dissolved. See Agreement and Sale. Usurious Contracts, vide Usury.

Contra formam Collationis, Is a writ that lay where a man had given lands in perpetual alms, to any late houses of religion, as to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of any hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, &c. If they aliened the land, to the disherison of the house and church, then the donor, or his heirs, should bring this writ to recover the lands. It was had against the abbot, or his successor; not against the alienee, though he were tenant of the land: And was founded upon the statute of West. 2. c. 1. Reg. Orig. 238. F. N. B. 210.

Contra formam Feoffamenti, A writ that lies for the heir of a tenant enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who is afterwards distrained for more services than are mentioned in the charter. Reg. Orig. 176. Old Nat. Br. 162.

Contra formam Statuti, Is the usual conclusion of every indictment, &c. laid on an offence created by statute.

If one statute be relative to another, as where the former makes the offence, the latter adds a penalty, as the statutes of 1 & 23 Eliz. the indictment ought to conclude contra formam statutorum. 2 Hale's Pl. C. 173. cap. 24. cites Pajsb. 42 Eliz. B. R. Croke, n. 6. Dingley v. Moore.

Where there are several statutes, and it does not appear on which the information is founded, the concluding contra formam statuti is ill. Cro. J. 142. pl. 19. Mich. 4 Jac. B. R. Broughton v. Moore, cites as is adjudged in the case of Talbot & al.

Where one act makes the offence, and another gives the penalty, an information must be contra formam statutorum, and cited 33 Eliz. Talbot v. Sheldon, who was indicted for recusancy contra formam statuti, 23 Eliz. c. 1. and the judgment was reversed because the penalty was demanded; for the 10 Eliz. made the offence, and the 23d gave the penalty; but if the information be for the offence only, it had been good; per Coke. Ow. 135. Trin. 9 Jac. See 5 Vin. Abr. 552—556.

Contramandatio Placiti, Signifies a respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer; or a countermand of what was formerly ordered. Leg. H. 1. c. 59.

Contramandatum, Is said to be a lawful excuse which the defendant in a suit by attorney alledgeth for himself, to shew that the plaintiff hath no cause of complaint. Blount.

Contrapositio, A plea or answer.—Si quis in placito per justitiam posito sui vel suorum causum injustis conterminacionibus vel contrapositionibus difforciat, hanc perdat. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 34.

Contrariens. In the reign of King Edw. 2. Thomas Earl of Lancaster taking part with the Barons against the King, it was not thought fit, in respect of their great power, to call them rebels or traitors, but contrariens: And hence we have a record of those times, called Rotulum Contrarientium.

Contratenere, To with-hold. Si quis decimas contratenat. Leg. Alfredi apud Brompton, c. 9.

Contribules, Contribunales, kindred or cousins. Lamb. page 75.

Contribution, (Contributio) Is where every one pays his share, or contributes his part to any thing. One parcener shall have contribution against another; one heir have contribution against another heir, in equal degree: And one purchaser have contribution against another. Also co-nusors in a statute shall be equally charged, and not one of them solely extended. 3 Rep. 12, 13, &c. On a statute or recognizance, there is a contribution and stay till the full age of the heir, &c. and this doth extend to the lessee for life, or years of the co-nusor, who has part of the land liable, and the heir within age the residue; for the land of every one of them ought to be charged equally, because the whole is liable to the judgment; and this cannot be, if during the nonage, the burden shall fall upon one only. Jenk. Cent. 36. If lands are mortgaged, and then devised to one person for life, with remainder to another; both devisees shall make contribution to payment of the mortgage-money. Chan. Caf. 224, 271. Where goods goods are cast into the sea, for the safe-guard of a ship, or other goods, &c. aboard in a tempest; there is a contribution among merchants, towards the loss of the owners. 32 H. 8. c. 14. And where a robbery is committed on the highway, and damages are recovered against one or a few persons, in action against the hundred, the rest of the inhabitants shall make contribution to the same. 27 Eliz. c. 13.

Contributio facienda, Is a writ that lieth where there are tenants in common, that are bound to do one thing, and one is put to the whole burden; or who jointly hold a mill pro indiviso, and take the profits equally, and the mill falling into decay, one of them will not repair the mill; now the other shall have a writ to compel him to contribute to the reparations. And if there be three coparceners of land, that owe suit to the Lord's court, and the eldest performs the whole; then may he have this writ to compel the other to make their contribution. So where one suit is required for land, and that land being sold to divers persons, suit is demanded of them all, or some of them by distress, as entirely as if all the land were still in one. Reg. Orig. 175. F. N. B. 162.

Controller, (Fr. Contrôleur, Lat. Contratulator) Is an overseer or officer relating to public accounts, &c. And we have divers officers of this name; as controller of the King's Household; of the Navy; of the Customs; of the Excise; of the Mint, &c. And in our courts, there is the controller of the Hamper; of the Pipe, and of the Pell, &c. The office of Controller of the Household is to control the accounts of the Green Cloth; and he sits with the Lord Steward and other Officers in the counting-house, for daily taking the accounts of all expences of the household. The Comptroller of the Navy controls the payment of wages; examines and audits accounts; and inquires into rates of stores for shipping; &c. Controllers of the Customs and Excise, their office is to control the accounts of those revenues: And the Controller of the Mint controls the payment of wages, and accounts relating to the same. Controller of the Hamper is an officer in the Chancery attending the Lord Chancellor daily in term-time; and upon seal days; whose office is to take all things sealed from the Clerk of the Hamper, inclosed in bags of leather, and to note the just number and effect of all things so received; and enter the same in a book, with all the duties appertaining to his Magistracy, and other officers for the same. The Controller of the Pipe is an officer of the Exchequer, who writes out summons twice every year to the sheriffs to levy the farms and debts of the Pipe; and keeps a controlment of the Pipe, &c. Controller of the Pell is also an officer of the Exchequer; of which sort there are two, who are the Chamberlains clerks, that do or should keep a controlment of the Pell; of receipts and goings out: And this officer was originally such as took notes of other officers accounts or receipts, to the intent to discover if they dealt amiss, and was ordained for the Prince's better security. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 18. Stat. 12 Ed. 3. cap. 3. This last seems to be the original use and design of all Controllers.

Controverser, (Controveur) Signifies in our law one that of his own head devises or invents false news. 2 Inst. 227.

Convenable, (Fr.) Agreeable. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 21. See Covenable.

Convenient, (Conveniens) Of the use of this word, the Lord Coke in his institute says,—Non solum quod licet sed quod est conveniens est considerandum, nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. 1 Inst. 66.

Convent, (Conventus) Signifies the fraternity of an abbey or priory; as societas doth the number of fellows in a college. Brañ, lib. 2. c. 35.

Conventicle, (Conventiculum) A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion; first attributed in disgrace to the meetings of Wickliff in this nation, above two hundred years since: and now applied to the illegal meetings of the Nonconformists: It is mentioned in the statutes 2 Hen. 4. c. 15. 1 H. 6. c. 3. and 16 Car. 2. c. 4. which statute was made to prevent and suppress conventicles: And by 22 Car. 2. cap. 1. It is enacted, that if any persons of the age of sixteen years, subjects of this kingdom, shall be present at any conventicle, where there are five or more assembled, they shall be fined 5 s.

for the first offence, and 10 s. for the second; and persons preaching incur a penalty of 20 l. Also suffering a meeting to be held in a house, &c. is liable to 20 l. penalty. Justices of peace have power to enter such houses, and seize persons assembled, &c. And if they neglect their duty, they shall forfeit 100 l. And if any constable, &c. know of such meetings, and do not inform a justice of peace, or chief magistrate, he shall forfeit 5 l. But the 1 W. & M. c. 18. ordains, that protestant dissenters shall be exempted from penalties: Though if they meet in a house, with the doors lock'd, barr'd, or bolted, such dissenters shall have no benefit from 1 W. & M. Officers of the government, &c. present at any conventicle, at which there shall be ten persons, if the Royal Family be not prayed for in express words, shall forfeit 40 l. and be disabled. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 2. See Herefy.

Conventio, Is a word used in ancient law-pleadings, for an agreement or covenant: As A. B. queritur, &c. de C. D. &c. pro eo quod non teneat conventionem, &c. There is a pleasant record of the court of the manor of Hatfield, in Com. Ebor. held Anno 11 Ed. 3. which runs thus: Robertus R. qui obtulit se versus Johannem J. de eo quod non teneat conventionem inter eos factam, & unde queritur, quod certo die & anno apud, &c. convenit inter prædictum Robertum & Johannem, quod prædictus Johannes vendidit prædicto Roberto diabolum ligatum in quodam ligamine pro iii d. ob. & prædictus Robertus tradidit prædicto Johanni quoddam obolum earles (i. e. earnest-money) per quod proprietas dicti Diaboli commoratur in persona dicti Roberti ad habend. deliberationem dicti Diaboli, infra quartam diem prox. sequent. Ad quam diem idem Robertus venit ad præfatum Johannem, & petit deliberationem dicti Diaboli, secundum conventionem inter eos factam; sed Johannes prædictum Diabolum deliberate noluit, nec adhuc vult, &c. ad grave dampnum ipsius Roberti lx. sol. Et inde producit Johannem, &c. Et prædictus Johannes venit, &c. Et non dedit conventionem prædictam. Et quia videtur curia quod tale placitum non jacet inter Christianos, Ideo partes prædicti adjournantur usque in infernum, ad audiendum judicium suum, & utraque pars in Misericordia, &c.

Conventione, Is a writ that lies for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal: And it is called a Writ of Covenant. Reg. Orig. 115. F. N. B. 145.

Convention, Is properly where a parliament is assembled, but no act is passed, or bill signed, &c. See Parliament.

Convention Parliament. On the abdication of King James II. Anno 1689. The assembly of the states of the kingdom, to take care of their rights and liberties, and who settled King William and Queen Mary on the throne, was called the Convention: And the Lords and Commons thus convened were declared the two houses of parliament, notwithstanding the want of any writ of summons, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M.

Conventuals, Are those religious men who are united together in a convent or religious house. Cowel.

Conventual Church, Is a church that consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion; or of Deacon and Chapter, or other societies of Spiritual Men.

Conversion, Is where a person finding or having the goods of another in his possession, converts them to his own use, without the consent of the owner; and for which the proprietor may maintain an action of Trover and Conversion against him.—And refusal to restore goods is, prima facie, sufficient evidence of a conversion, tho' it does not amount to a conversion. 10 Rep. 56. Black Com. 3 V. 152.

Conversos. The Jews here in England were formerly called Conversos, because they were converted to the Christian religion. King Hen. 3. built an house for them in London, and allowed them a competent provision or subsistence for their lives; and this house was called Dominus Conversorum. But by reason of the vast expences of the war, and the increase of those converts, they became a burden to the crown; so that they were placed in abbeys and monasteries for their support and maintenance. And the Jews being afterwards banished, King Ed. 3. in the 51st year of his reign, gave this house which had been used for the converted Jews, for the keeping of the Rolls, and and it is said to be the same which is at this time enjoyed by the Master of the Rolls. Blount.

Conveyance, Is a deed which passes land from one man to another. Conveyance by feoffment, and livery, was the general conveyance at common law; and if there was a tenant in possession, so that livery could not be made, then was the reversion granted, and the tenant always attorned: Also upon the same reason, a lease and release was held to be a good conveyance, to pass an estate; but the lessee was to be in actual possession, before the release. But the lease is now considered as operating so as to give the possession, which it does in point of law. By the common law, when an estate did not pass by feoffment, the vendor made a lease for years, and the lessee actually entered; and the lessor granted the reversion to another, and the lessee attorned: Afterwards, when an inheritance was to be granted, then likewise was a lease for years usually made, and the lessee entered (as before) and then the lessor released to him: But after the statute of uses, it became an opinion, that if a lease for years was made upon a valuable consideration, a release might operate upon it without an actual entry of the lessee; because the statute did execute the lease, and raised an use presently to the lessee: And Serjeant Moor was the first who practised this way. 2 Mod. 251, 252. The most common conveyances now in use are deeds of gift, bargain and sale, lease and release, uses and recoveries, settlements to uses, &c. A son did give and grant lands to his mother, and her heirs; though this was a defective conveyance at common law, yet it was adjudged good by way of use, to support the intention of the donor, and therefore by these words an use did arise to the mother by way of covenant to stand seised. 2 Lev. 225. A feoffment without livery and seisin, will not enure as a grant; but where made in consideration of a marriage, &c. it has been adjudged, that it did enure as a covenant to stand seised to uses. 2 Lev. 213.

Tenant in fee, in consideration of marriage, covenanted, granted, and agreed all that messuage to the use of himself for life, then to his wife for life, for her jointure, then to their first son in tail male, &c. Now by these words it appeared, that the husband intended some benefit for his wife, wherefore the court supplied other words to make the conveyance sensible. 1 Lutw. 782. The words give and grant, &c. are proper for a conveyance at common law; but it has been held, that though some books warrant that conveyances shall operate according to the words; yet of late the judges have a greater consideration of the passing the estate, than the manner by which 'tis passed. 2 Lutw. 1209. A conveyance cannot be fraudulent in part, and good as to the rest: For if it be fraudulent and void in part, it is void in all, and it cannot be divided. 1 Lill. Abr. 311. Fraudulent conveyances to deceive creditors; defraud purchasers, &c. are void, by Stat. 50 Ed. 3. cap. 6. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. 27 Eliz. cap. 4. Vide Deeds.

Convict, (Convictus) Is he that is found guilty of an offence by verdict of a jury. Staud. P. C. 186. Crompton saith, That conviction is either when a man is outlawed, or appeareth and confesseth, or is found guilty by the inquest: And when a statute excludes from clergy persons found guilty of felony, &c. it extends to those who are convicted by confession. Crompt. Just. 9. The law implies a conviction, before punishment, though not mentioned in a statute: And where any statute makes a second offence felony, or subject to a heavier punishment than the first, it is always implied that such second offence ought to be committed after a conviction for the first. 1 Hartk. P. C. 13, 107. Judgment amounts to conviction; though it doth not follow that every one who is convict, is adjudged. Ibid. 14. A conviction at the King's suit may be pleaded to a suit by an informer, on a penal statute; because while in force it makes the party liable to the forfeiture, and no one ought to be punished twice for the same offence: But conviction may not be pleaded to a new suit by the King. Ibid. 18. A person convicted or attainted of one felony, may be prosecuted for another, to bring accessaries to punishment, &c. Fitz. Coron. 379. On a joint indictment or information, some of the defendants may be acquitted, and others convicted. 2 Hartk. 240. Persons convicted of felony by verdict, &c. are not to be admitted to bail, unless there be some special motive for granting it; as where a man is not the same person, &c. for bail ought to be before trial, when it stands indifferent whether the party be guilty, or not. Ibid. 99, 114. Conviction of felony, and other crimes, disables a man to be a juror, witness, &c. By our books, conviction and attainder are often confounded.

Conviction, before justices of peace. When an act of parliament orders the conviction of offenders by justices of peace, &c. it must be intended after summons to bring them in, that they may have an opportunity of making their defence; and if it be otherwise, the conviction shall be quashed. Mich. 2 Ann. B. R. Mod. Caf. 41.

Convict Recusant, According to the statutes. See Recusants.

Convivium, Signifies the same thing among the laity, as procuratio doth with the clergy, viz. When the tenant by reason of his tenure is bound to provide meat and drink for his lord once or oftener in the year. Blount.

Convocation, (Convocatio) Is the assembly of all the clergy, to consult of ecclesiastical matters in time of parliament: And as there are two houses of parliament, so there are two houses of convocation; the one called the Higher or Upper House, where the archbishops and all the bishops sit severally by themselves; and the other the Lower House of Convocation, where all the rest of the clergy sit, i. e. All deans and archdeacons, one proctor for every chapter, and two proctors for all the clergy of each diocese, making in the whole number one hundred and sixty-six persons. Each convocation house hath a prolocutor, chosen from among themselves, and that of the lower house is presented to the bishops, &c. The Archbishop of Canterbury is the President of the Convocation, and prorogues and dissolves it by mandate from the King. The convocation exercises jurisdiction in making of canons, with the King's assent: For by the Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. the convocation is not only to be assembled by the King's writ; but the canons are to have the royal assent: They have the examining and censuring of heretical and schismatical books, and persons, &c. But appeal lies to the King in Chancery, or to his delegates. 4 Inst. 322. 2 Roll. Abr. 225. The clergy called to the convocation, and their servants, &c. have the same privileges as members of parliament. Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 1.

Consuance of Pleas. A privilege that a city or town hath to hold pleas. See Cognisance.

Consuant, (Fr. Connoissant) Knowing or understanding: As if the son be consuant, and agreed to the feoffment, &c. Co. Litt. 159.

Coopers. Shall make their vessels of seasonable wood, and mark them with their own marks, on pain of 3 s. 4 d. forfeiture; and the contents of vessels are appointed to be observed under like penalty, as the beer barrel shall contain 36 gallons, a kilderkin 18, and firkin 9, &c. The wardens of the Coopers company in London, with an officer of the mayor, are to search all vessels for ale, beer, and soap to be sold there; and to mark them that are right, and they may burn those that be not so: And if any Cooper, &c. diminish a vessel by taking out the head, or a staff thereof, it shall be burnt, and the offender forfeit 3 s. 4 d. Also Coopers are to sell their vessels at such rates as shall be ordained by justices, mayors, &c. 23 H. 8. c. 4. This last clause is repealed by 8 Eliz. cap. 9.

Coopertio, The head or branches of a tree cut down; though Coopertio Arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Corwel.

Coopertura, A thicket or covert of wood. Chart. de Foresta, cap. 12.

Coparceners, (Participes) Otherwise called Parceners, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of an ancestor; and by law are the issue female, which, in default of heirs male, come in equality to the lands of their ancestors. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 30. They are to make partition of the lands; which ought to be made by coparceners of full age, &c. And if the estate of a coparcener be in part elected, the partition shall be avoided in the whole. Lit. 243. 1 Inst. 173. 1 Rep. 87. The crown of England is not subject to coparcenary; and there is no coparcenary in dignities, &c. Co. Litt. 27. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 22. Vide Parceners.

Copartnership,

Copartnership, Is a deed of covenants between merchants, or others, for carrying on a joint trade, &c.

Cope, Is a custom or tribute due to the King, or lord of the soil, out of the lead mines in some part of Derbyshire; of which Manlove saith thus:

*Egrefs and regrefs to the King's highway,
The miners have; and lot and cope they pay:
The thirteenth dish of ore within their mine,
To the lord, for lot they pay at measuring time;
Six-pence a load for cope the lord demands,
And that is paid to the berghmatter's hands, &c.*

Agreeable to this you may find in Sir John Pettus's Fodine Regales, where he treats on this subject. This word, by Domejday-Book, as Mr. Hagar hath interpreted it, signifies a hill: and cope is taken for the supreme cover, as the cope of heaven. Also it is used for the roof and covering of a house; the upper garment of a priest, &c.

Copia Libelli deliberanda, Is a writ that lies where a man cannot get the copy of a libel at the hand of a judge ecclesiastical, to have the same delivered to him. Reg. Orig. 51.

Coppa, A cop or cock of grafs, hay or corn divided into titheable portions; as the tenth cock, &c. This word, in strictness, denotes the gathering or laying up the corn in copes or heaps, as the method is for barley or oats, &c. not bound up, that it may be the more fairly and justly tithed: and in Kent they still retain the word, a cop or cap of hay, straw, &c. Thorn in Chron.

Copper and Copper Die. Copper plates and copper fully wrought, to what duties liable, 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 5. sect. 2. All copper may be exported paying the lawful duties and customs, 5 W. & M. c. 17.

Copy (copia) Is in a legal sense the transcript of an original writing; as the copy of a patent, of a charter, deed, &c. A clause out of a patent, taken from the chapel of the Rolls, cannot be given in evidence; but you must have a true copy of the whole charter examined: it is the same of a record. And if upon a trial, you will give part of a copy of an office in evidence to prove a deed, which deed is to prove the party's title to the land in question that gives it in evidence; if that part of the office copy given in evidence, be not so much of it as doth any way concern the land in question, the court will not admit of it: for the court will have a copy of the whole given, or no part of it shall be admitted. 1 Lill. Abr. 312, 313. Where a deed is inrolled, certifying an attested copy is proof of the inrolment; and such copy may be given in evidence. 3 Lev. 387. A common deed cannot be proved by a copy or counterpart, when the original may be procured. 10 Rep. 92. And a copy of a will of lands, or the probates is not sufficient; but the will must be shewn as evidence. 2 Roll. Abr. 74. Copies of court rolls admitted as evidence. See Evidence.

Coppyhold, (tenura per copiam rotuli curie) Is a tenure for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls, made by the steward of the lord's court; on such tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor. 4 Rep. 25. It is called base tenure, because held at the will of the lord: And Fitzherbert says, it was anciently tenure in villenage, and that copyhold is but a new name. Some copyholds are held by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they are by copy, yet are they a kind of freehold; for if a tenant of such copyhold commit felony, the King hath annum diem & waifum, as in the case of freeholders: some other copyholds are such as the tenants hold by common tenure, called meer copyhold, whose land, upon felony committed, escheats to the lord of the manor. Kitch. 81. But copyhold land cannot be made at this day; for the pillars of a copyhold estate are, That it hath been demised time out of mind by copy of court-roll; and that the tenements are parcel of or within the manor. 1 Inst. 58. 4 Rep. 24. A copyhold tenant had originally in judgment of law but an estate at will; yet custom so established his estate, that by the custom of the manor it was descendible, and his heirs inherited it: and therefore the estate of the copyholder is not merely ad voluntatem domini, but ad voluntatem domini secundum consuetudinem manerii; so that the custom of the manor is the life of copyhold estates; for without a custom, or if copyholders break their custom, they are subject to the will of the lord: and as a copyhold is created by custom, so it is guided by custom. 4 Rep. 21. A copyholder, so long as he doth his services, and doth not break the custom of the manor, cannot be ejected by the lord; if he be, he shall have trespass against him: but if a copyholder refuses to perform his services, it is a breach of the custom, and forfeiture of his estate.

Copyholds descend according to the rules and maxims of the Common law, (unless in particular manors, where there are contrary customs, of great antiquity); but such customary inheritances shall not be assets, to charge the heir in action of debt, &c. Ibid. Though a lease for one year of copyhold lands, which is warranted by the Common law, shall be assets in the hand of an executor. 1 Vent. 163. Copyholders hold their estates free from charges of dower, being created by custom, which is paramount to title of dower. 4 Rep. 24. Copyhold inheritances have no collateral qualities, which do not concern the descent; as to make them assets; or whereof a wife may be endowed; a husband be tenant by the curtesy, &c. But by particular custom, there may be dower and tenancy by the curtesy. Cro. Eliz. 361. There may be an estate-tail in copyhold lands by custom, with the cooperation of the statute W. 2. And as a copyhold may be entailed by custom, so by custom the tail may be cut off by surrender. 1 Inst. 60. A copyhold may be barred by a recovery, by special custom; and a surrender may bar the issue by custom. A fine and recovery at Common law will not destroy a copyhold estate; because Common law assurances do not work upon the assurance of the copyhold: though copyhold lands are within the Stat. 4 H. 7. of fines and proclamations, and five years non-claim, and shall be barred. 1 Roll. Abr. 506.

A plaint may be made in the court of the manor, in the nature of a real action, and a recovery shall be had in that plaint against tenant in tail, and such a recovery shall be a discontinuance to the estate-tail. 1 Brownl. 121. And the suffering a recovery by a copyholder tenant for life in the lord's court is no forfeiture, unless there is a particular custom for it. 1 Nelf. Abr. 507. Copyholders may entail copyhold lands, and bar the entails and remainders, by committing a forfeiture, as making lease without licence, &c. and then the lord is to make three proclamations, and seize the copyhold, after which the lands are granted to the copyholder, and his heirs, &c. This is the manner in some places, but it must be warranted by custom. 2 Dunw. Abr. 191. Sid. 314.

Customs ought to be time out of memory; to be reasonable, &c. And a custom in deprivation or bar of a copyhold estate, shall be taken strictly; but when for making and maintaining it, shall be construed favourably. Comp. Cop. sect. 33. Cro. El. 879. An unreasonable custom, as for a lord to exact exorbitant fines; for a copyholder for life to cut down and sell timber-trees, &c. is void. A copyholder for life pleaded a custom, that every copyholder for life might, in the presence of two other copyholders, appoint who should have his copyhold after his death; and that the two copyholders might assise a fine, so as not to be less than had been usually paid; and it was adjudged a good custom. 4 Leon. 238. But a custom to compel a lord to make a grant, is said to be against law; though it may be good to admit a tenant. Moor 788.

By the custom of some manors, where copyhold lands are granted to two or more persons for lives, the person first named in the copy may surrender all the lands. 1 Nelf. Abr. 497. There are customs ratione loci, different from other places: but though a custom may be applied to a particular place; yet 'tis against the nature of a custom of a manor to apply it to one particular tenant. 1 Nelf. 504. 1 Lutw. 126.

There are usually custom rolls of manors, exhibited on oath by the tenants; setting forth the bounds of the manor, the royalties of the lord, services of the copyhold tenants, the tenures granted, whether for life, &c. concerning admittances, surrenders, and the rights of the copyholders, as to taking timber for repairs, fire-boot, &c. Common belonging to the tenants, payment of rent, rent, suing in the court of the manor, taking heriots, &c. All which customs are to be observed. Comp. Court Keep. 21.

When an act of parliament altereth the service, customs, tenure, and interest of land, in prejudice of the lord or tenant, there the general words of such an act shall not extend to copyholds. 3 Rep. 7. Copyholders are not within the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. of jointures; nor the 32 H. 8. c. 36. of leases, copyholds being in their nature demisable only by copy: they are not within the statute of uses; nor are copyholds extendible in execution: but copyholds are within the statute of limitation of actions; and the 13 Eliz. c. 7. &c. against bankrupts. The lord shall have the custody of the lands of ideots, &c. And a copyholder is not within the act 12 Car. 2. c. 24. to dispose of the custody and guardianship of the heir; for if there be a custom for it, it belongs to the lord of the manor. 3 Lev. 395. 1 Nels. Abr. 492, 522.

Copyholders not to vote for knights of the shire. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14. sec. 1. Assignees of insolvent debtors to pay fines copyholds. 1 Geo. 3. c. 17. sec. 14. Copyholders shall neither implead nor be impleaded for their tenements by writ, but by plaint in the lord's court held within the manor: and if on such plaint, erroneous judgment be given, no writ of false judgment lies, but petition to the lord in nature of a writ of false judgment, wherein errors are to be assigned, and remedy given according to law. Co. Lit. 60. Where a man holds copyhold lands in trust to surrender to another, &c. if he refuses to surrender to the other accordingly, he may be compelled by bill exhibited in the lord's court, who, as chancellor has power to do right. 1 Leon. 2. A copyholder may have a formedon in descender in the lord's court. Lessee of a copyholder for life for one year, shall maintain an ejectment: but ejectment will not lie for a copyhold, unless the plaintiff declare on the custom, upon a lease, &c. 4 Rep. 26. Moor 679. Jed qu. A manor is lost when there are no customary tenants or copyholders: and if a copyhold comes into the hands of the lord in fee, and the lord leases it for one year, or half a year, or for any certain time, it can never be granted by copy after: but if the lord aliens the manor, &c. his alienee may re-grant land by copy. If the lord keeps the copyhold for a long time in his hand, it is no impediment but that he may after grant it again by copy. 2 Danv. Abr. 176, 177. A copyholder in fee accepts of a lease, grant, or confirmation of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate. 2 Cro. 16. Cro. Jac. 253. If a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to a lessee for years, &c. of the manor, his copyhold is extinguished. 2 Danv. 205. A copyholder may grant his estate to his lord, by bargain and sale, release, &c. for between lord and tenant the conveyance need not be according to custom. 1 Nels. 504. A copyholder in other cases cannot alien by deed: though he that hath a right only to a copyhold may release it by deed. And if a copyholder surrenders upon condition, he may afterwards release the condition by deed. 2 Danv. 205. Cro. Jac. 36. Also one joint copyholder may release to another, which will be good without any admittance, &c. Ibid.

A copyholder cannot convey or transfer his copyhold estate to another otherwise than by surrender; which is the yielding up of the land by the tenant to the lord, according to the custom of the manor, to the use of him that is to have the estate: or it is in order to a new grant, and further estate in the same.

As to copyhold grants; which are made either in fee, or for three lives, &c. the lord of the manor that hath a lawful estate therein, whether he be tenant for life or years, tenant by statute merchant, &c. or at will, is dominus pro tempore, and may grant lands, herbage of lands, a fair, mill, tithes, &c. and any thing that concerns lands, by copy of court-roll, according to custom; and such grants shall bind those in remainder: the rents and services reserved by them shall be annexed to the manor, and attend the owner thereof after their particular estates are ended. 4 Rep. 23. 11 Rep. 18. And if a lord of the manor for the time being, lessee for life, years, &c. take a surrender, and before admittance he dieth, or the years or interest determine, though the next lord comes in above the lease for life or years, or other particular interest, yet he shall be compelled to make admittance according to the surrender. Co. Lit. 59. But a lord at will, of a copyhold manor, cannot license a copyhold tenant to make a lease for years; though he may grant a copyhold for life, according to the custom: if a lord for life gives licence to a tenant to make a lease for years, this lease shall continue no longer than the life of the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 202.

If he that is dominus pro tempore of the manor admits one to a copyhold, he dispenses with all precedent forfeitures; not only as to himself, but also as to him in reversion; for such grant and admittance amount to an entry for the forfeiture, and a new grant; but a lord by tort cannot by such admittance purge the forfeiture as to the rightful lord. 1 Lev. 26. Grants by copy of court-roll by infants, &c. will be binding: and if a guardian in socage grants a copyhold in reversion, according to the custom of the manor, this shall be a good grant; for he is dominus pro tempore. 2 Roll. Abr. 41. If baron and feme seized of a manor in right of the feme grant a copyhold, this shall bind the feme notwithstanding her coverture. 4 Rep. 23. An executor may make grants of copyhold estates, according to the custom of the manor, where a devise is made that the executor shall grant copies for payment of debts. 2 Danv. 178.

A manor may be held by copy of court-roll, and the lord of such manor grant copies; and such customary manor may pass by surrender and admittance, &c. A customary manor may be holden of another manor, and such customary lord may grant copies and hold courts: but a copyholder lord of such a manor cannot hold a court baron to have forfeitures, and hold pleas in a writ of right, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 524.

All grants of copyhold estates are to be according to the custom of the manor; and rents and services customary must be reserved; for what acts of the lord in granting copyholds are not confirmed by custom, but only strengthened by the power and interest of the lord, have no longer duration than the lord's estate continueth. Comp. Court Keeper 421. If by the custom, a copyhold may be granted for three lives, and the lord grants it to one for life, remainder to such woman as he shall marry, and to the first son of his body; both these remainders are void: and a remainder limited upon a void estate in the creation, will be likewise void. But if by custom it is demisable in fee, a surrender may be to the use of one for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee. 2 Danv. Abr. 203. Cro. Eliz. 373. It is held, where by the custom of a manor the lord can grant a copyhold for three lives, he may grant it for an estate coming within the intent of the custom; as to A. B. and his assigns, to hold to him and his assigns for the lives of three others, and of the longer liver of them successively, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 994, 1000.

The lord of a manor may himself grant a copyhold estate at any place out of the manor; but the steward cannot grant a copyhold at a court held out of the manor. 4 Rep. 26. Though the steward may take surrenders out of the manor, as well as the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 181. A steward is in place of the lord, and without a command to the contrary may grant lands by copy, &c. But if a lord command a steward that he shall not grant such a copy, if he grants it, it is void: and if the steward diminishes the antient rents and services, the grant will be void. Cro. Eliz. 699.

Things of necessity done by a steward, who is but in reputed authority, are good if they come in by presentment of the jury; as the admittance of an heir upon presentment, &c. Though acts voluntary, as grants of copyhold, &c. are not good by such stewards. Ibid. If an under-steward hold a court without any disturbance of the lord of the manor, though he hath no patent nor deputation to hold it, yet it is good; because the tenants are not to examine what authority he hath, nor is he bound to give them an account of it. Moor 110. A deputy steward may authorise another to do a particular act; but cannot make a deputy to act in general. 1 Salk. 95.

In admittances, in court upon voluntary grants, the lord is proprietor; in admittances upon surrender, the lord is not proprietor of the lands, but only a necessary instrument ment of conveyance; and in admittances by descent the lord is a meer instrument, not being necessary to strengthen the heir's title, but only to give the lord his fine. 4 Rep. 21, 22. The heir of a copyholder may enter, and bring trespass, before admittance, being in by descent; and he may surrender before admittance: but he is not compleat tenant to be sworn of the homage, or to maintain a plaint in the lord's court. And if the heir do not come in and be admitted, on the death of his ancestor, where the same is presented and proclamation made, he may forfeit his estate. Cro. El. 90. 4 Rep. 22, 27.

On a surrender of a copyhold, the surrenderor or person making the same, continues tenant till the admittance of the surrenderee; and the surrenderee may not enter upon the lands, or surrender before admittance, for he hath no estate till then; though 'tis otherwise of the heir by descent, who is in by course of law, and the custom casts the possession upon him. Comp. Court Keep. 436. A surrender is not of any effect until admittance, and yet the surrenderee cannot be defrauded of the benefit of the surrender; for the surrenderor cannot pass away the land to another, or make it subject to any other incumbrances; and if the lord refuse the surrenderee admittance, he is compellable in Chancery. Comp. Cop. sect. 39. A grantee hath no interest vested in him till he is admitted: but admittance of a copyholder for life is an admittance of him in remainder, for they are but one estate; and the remainder man may, after the death of tenant for life, surrender without admittance. 3 Lev. 308. Cro. El. 504. Every admittance upon a descent or surrender may be pleaded as a grant; and a person may alledge the admittance of his ancestor as a grant; and shew the descent to him, and that he entered, &c. But he cannot plead that his father was seised in fee, &c. and that he died seised, and the land descended to him. 2 Danv. 208. Admittance on surrender must, in all respects, agree with the surrender; the lord having only a customary power to admit secundum formam et effectum sursum redditionis. 4 Rep. 26. If any are admitted otherwise, they shall be seised according to the surrender: yet where a voluntary surrender is general, without saying to whose use, a subsequent admittance may explain it. 2 Danv. 187, 204. In voluntary admittances, if the lord admits any one contrary to custom, it shall not bind his heir or successor. If a copyholder surrender to the use of another, and after the lord having knowledge of it, accepts the rent of such other out of court, this is an admittance in law: and any act, implying the consent of the lord to the surrender, shall be adjudged a good admittance. 1 Nels. Abr. 493. If the steward accept a fine of a copyholder, it amounts to an admittance. 2 Danv. 189. But delivering a copy is no admittance.

Where a widow's estate is created by custom, that shall be an admittance in law: and her estate arising out of that of her husband's, his admittance is the admittance of her. Hut. 18. And she who hath a widow's estate by the custom of the manor, upon the death of her husband, need not pay a fine to the lord for the estate; for this is only a branch of the husband's. Hob. 181. When a custom is, that the wife of every copyholder for life shall have her free bench, after the death of the baron, the law casts the estate upon the wife, so that she shall have it before admittance, &c. 2 Danv. 184. But if a wife is entitled to her free bench by custom, and a copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of another, and then dies; it has been adjudged that the surrenderee should have the land, and not the wife; because the wife's title doth not commence till after the death of her husband; but the plaintiff's title begins with the surrender, and the admittance relates to that. 1 Inst. 59. 1 Salk. 185.

The widow's title commenceth not by the marriage; if it did, then the husband could do nothing in his life time to prejudice it: but 'tis plain he may alien or extinguish his right, so as to bind the estate of the widow: the free bench grows out of the estate of the husband; and 'tis his dying seised which gives the widow a title, and as the husband has a defeasible estate, so the wife may have her free-bench defeated. 4 Mod. Rep. 452, 453. Admittances are never by attorney, for the tenant ought to do fealty; though surrenders are oftentimes by attorney.

2 Danv. 189. A copyholder in fee may surrender in court, by letter of attorney: but not out of court, without a special custom. 9 Rep. 75, 76. If one cannot come into court to surrender in person, the lord may appoint a special steward to go to him, and take the surrender. 1 Leon. 36. A copyholder being in Ireland; the steward of a manor here made a commission to one to receive a surrender from him there, and it was held good. 2 Danv. 181.

The intent of surrenders is, that the lord may not be a stranger to his tenant, and the alteration of the estate. As a copyholder cannot transfer his estate to a stranger, by any other conveyance than surrender; so if one would exchange a copyhold with another, both must surrender to each other's use, and the lord admit accordingly: and if any person would devise a copyhold estate, he cannot do it by his will: but he must surrender to the use of his last will and testament, and in his will declare his intent. Comp. Cop. sect. 36, 39. Also where a copyholder surrenders to the use of his will, the lands do not pass by the will, but by the surrender; the will being only declaratory of the uses of the surrender. 1 Bull. 200. But in case of a will, the Chancery will supply the defect of a surrender, in the behalf of children, if not to disinherit the eldest son; and for the benefit of creditors, where a copyhold estate is charged by will with the payment of debts, though there is no surrender to those uses, it will be good in equity. 4 Rep. 25. 1 Salk. 187. 3 Salk. 84. Yet 'tis held, that equity shall not supply the want of such surrender in favour of a grandchild; or bastard, who is not considered as a child; or a wife against the heir; nor in behalf of legatees: but where the surrender is refused, a will of a copyhold may be sufficient without it. Abr. Cas. Eq. 122, 124.

A cestui que trust may devise an interest in land, &c. without surrender; and if copyhold lands are in mortgage, the mortgagor can dispose of the equity of redemption by will, without any surrender made; because he hath at that time no estate in the land, whereof to make a surrender. Peced. Canc. 320, 321. One jointenant may surrender his part in the lands to the use of his will, &c. And where there are two jointenants of a copyhold in fee, if one of them make a surrender to the use of his will, and die, and the devisee is admitted, the surrender and admittance shall bind the survivor. 2 Cro. 100. A surrender may not be to commence in futuro; as after the death of the surrenderor, &c. though copyholds may be surrendered to the use of a man's will. March 177. A copyholder cannot surrender an estate absolutely to another, and leave a particular estate in himself: though he may surrender to uses, &c. A copyholder surrendered to the use of his wife and younger son, without mentioning what estate; and adjudged that they had an estate for life. 4 Rep. 29. If a man having bought a copyhold to himself, his wife and daughter, and their heirs, afterwards surrenders it to another and his heirs, for securing a sum of money; after his death, the surrenderee shall not be intitled to the land, it being an advancement for the wife and daughter. 2 Vern. 120.

A feme covert may receive a copyhold estate, by surrender from her husband, because she comes not in immediately by him, but by the admittance of the lord, according to the surrender. 4 Rep. A feme covert is to be secretly examined by the steward, on her surrendering her estate. Co. Lit. 59. An infant surrendered his copyhold, and afterwards entered at full age, and it was held lawful, though the surrenderee was admitted. Moor 597. By the general custom of copyhold estates, copyholders may surrender in court, and need not alledge any particular custom to warrant it: but where they surrender out of court, into the hands of the lord by customary tenants, &c. custom must be pleaded. 9 Rep. 75. 1 Roll. Abr. 500. And surrenders out of court are to be presented at the next court; for it is not an effectual surrender till presented in court. Where a copyholder in fee surrenders out of court, and dies before it is presented, yet the surrender, being presented at the next court, will stand good, and cestui que use shall be admitted: so if cestui que use dies before it is presented, his heir shall be admitted. But if the surrender be not presented sented at the next court, it is void. Co. Lit. 62: 2 Danv. 188. If the tenants by whose hands the surrender was made shall die, and this upon proof is presented in court, it is well enough. 4 Rep. 29.

Tenants refusing to make presentment, are compellable in the lord's court. And by surrender of copyhold lands to the use of a mortgagee, the lands are bound in equity, though the surrender be not presented at the next court. 2 Salk. 449. When a copyholder surrenders upon condition, and this is presented absolutely, the presentment is void: but where a conditional surrender is presented, and the steward omits entering the condition, on proof thereof the condition shall not be avoided; but the rolls shall be amended. 4 Rep. 25. A copyholder may surrender to the use of another, reserving rent with a condition of re-entry for non-payment, and in default of payment may re-enter. Ibid. 21.

If a copyholder of inheritance takes a lease for years of his copyhold estate, it is a surrender in law of his copyhold. Where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in fee, he in remainder may surrender his estate, if there be no custom to the contrary. 3 Leon. 329. If a surrender is made with remainders over, case lies for him in remainder against a copyholder for life, who commits waste, &c. 3 Lev. 128. A surrenderee of a reversion of a copyhold is an assignee within the equity of the Stat. 32 H. 8. to bring action of debt or covenant against a lessee, &c. 1 Salk. 185. A copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of one for life, with remainder to another for life, remainder to another in fee; as the particular estates and remainders make but one estate, there is but one fine due to the lord. 2 Danv. 191.

Fines are paid to the lord on admittances; and may be due on every change of the estate by lord or tenant: in case of a surrender, the lord may make what fine he pleases; but fines are to be reasonable; they are either certain, by custom, or uncertain; a fine certain is to be paid presently; but if it be uncertain, the copyholder is to have notice, and time to pay it. The lord may have an action of debt for his fine; or may distrain by custom. 4 Rep. 27. 13 Rep. 2.

A heriot is a duty to the lord, rendered at the death of the tenant, or on a surrender and alienation of an estate: and is the best beast or goods, found in the possession of the tenant deceased, or otherwise, according to custom. And for heriots, reliefs, &c. the lord may distrain, or bring action of debt. Plowd. 96. Relief is a sum of money which every copyholder in fee, or freeholder of a manor pays to the lord, on the death of his ancestor; and is generally a year's profits of his land. Services signify any duty whatsoever accruing unto the lord from tenants; and are not only annual, and accidental; but corporal, as homage, fealty, &c. Comp. Court Keep. 7, 8, 9, &c.

Copyholds escheat, and are forfeited in many cases; escheat of a copyhold estate, is either where the lands fall into the hands of the lord for want of an heir to inherit them; or where the copyholder commits felony, &c. But before the lord can enter on an estate escheated, the homage jury ought to present it. Forfeitures proceeding from treason, felonies, alienation by deed, &c. a presentment of them must be also made in court, that the lord may have notice of them. A copyholder refusing to do suit of court, being sufficiently warned, is a forfeiture of his estate; unless he be prevented by sickness, inundations of water, &c. If the lord demandeth his rent, and the copyholder being present denies to pay it at the time required, this is a forfeiture; but if the tenant be not upon the ground when demanded, the lord must continue his demand upon the land, so that by continual denial in law, it may amount to a denial in fact: though it is said there must be a demand from the person of the copyholder, and a wilful denial, to make a forfeiture.

A copyholder, not performing the services due to his lord; or if he sue a replevin against the lord, upon the lord's lawful distress for his rent or services, these are forfeitures. If the lord upon admittance of a copyholder, the fine by the custom of the manor being certain, demandeth his fine, and the copyholder denieth to pay it upon demand, this is a forfeiture.

Upon the descent of any copyhold of inheritance, the heir by the general custom is tied, upon three solemn proclamations, made at three several courts, to come in and be admitted to his copyhold; or if he faileth therein, this failure worketh a forfeiture; but if an infant come not in to be admitted at three proclamations, it is no forfeiture: so of one beyond sea, &c.

An idiot, lunatick, &c. though able to take copyholds, yet they are unable to forfeit them: and in respect to others, forfeitures may be mitigated by custom, and the copyholder only amerced. By Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29. On default of infants and feme coverts appearing to be admitted tenants to copyhold lands, the lord or his steward may name a person to be guardian or attorney for them, and by such guardian, &c. admit them: and if the usual fine thereon be not paid in three months, being demanded in writing, the lord may enter on the copyhold, and receive the rents, &c. till the fine is paid with all charges. And by this statute, no infant or feme covert shall forfeit any copyhold lands for their neglect to come to court to be admitted, or refusal to pay any fine.

The general custom of copyholds allows a copyholder to make a lease for one year of his copyhold estate, and no more, without incurring a forfeiture: but a copyholder may make a lease for one year, and covenant with the lessee, that after the end of that year, he shall have the same for another year, and so de anno in annum during the space of seven years, &c. and be no forfeiture. Cro. Jac. 300. Though a copyholder may not make a lease to hold for one year, and so from year to year during his life, excepting one day yearly, &c. which will be a forfeiture, being a mere evasion. But a licence to lease may be had. A woman who was a copyholder in fee married, her husband made a lease for years, not warranted by the custom, which was a forfeiture; the husband died; and adjudged that the lord shall not take advantage of this forfeiture after his death, but the wife shall enjoy the estate. Cro. Car. 7. And see 4 Rep. 21 to 25, &c.

Livery upon any conveyance of a copyhold estate amounts to a forfeiture. And yet if a copyholder for life surrender to another in fee, this is no forfeiture; for it passeth by the surrender to the lord, and not by livery.

If copyholder for life cuts down timber-trees, it is a forfeiture of his copyhold: though such copyholder may take house-boot, hedge-boot, and plough-boot, upon his copyhold, of common right, as a thing incident to the grant; if he be not restrained by custom, to take them by the assignment of the lord or his bailiff. Where a copyholder for life sells timber-trees, the lord may take them, and the estate is forfeited: but if under-lessee for years of a copyholder cut down timber, this shall not be a forfeiture of the copyhold estate, but the lord is put to his action of the case against the lessee. 1 Bulst. 150. Style 233. A copyhold granted to two for their lives successively, where the custom of the manor is, that they shall not fell trees; if the first copyholder for life cut down trees, &c. 'tis not only a forfeiture of his own estate for life, but of him in remainder. Moor 49. In other cases, a copyholder for life, committing waste, shall not forfeit the estate of him in remainder. Cro. Eliz. 880. If copyholder for life, where the remainder is over for life, commits a forfeiture by waste, &c. he in remainder shall not enter, but the lord. 2 Danv. 198. A copyholder committing waste voluntary, or permissive, this is a forfeiture: voluntary, as if he pull down any house, though built by himself; lop trees, and fell them, plough up meadow, whereby the ground is made worse, &c. Permissive, if he suffer the roof of the house to let in rain, or the house to fall; or if he permit his meadow ground to be surrounded with water, so that it becomes marshy, or his arable land to be thus surrounded and become unprofitable, &c. these and the like are forfeitures. See 2 Danv. Abr. 192, 193, 196, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 509, 510, &c. But it must be by his wilful default.

If a feme copyholder for life takes husband, who commits waste, and dies, the estate of the feme is forfeited: Though not if a stranger commit the waste, without the assent of the husband. 4 Rep. 37. Most forfeitures are caused by acts contrary to the tenure: But a succeeding lord lord of a manor, shall not have any advantage of a forfeiture, by waste done by a copyholder in the time of his predecessor. 2 Sid. 8. And if a present Lord doth any thing whereby he acknowledges the person to be his tenant after forfeiture, this acknowledgment is a confirmation of his estate. Coke's Cop. 61.

The Court of Chancery will not relieve a copyhold tenant, against a voluntary forfeiture, on committing waste, &c. But it doth for permissive waste; and when the estate is forfeited for non-payment of rent, a fine, or such things, where a value may be set on them, and compensation made the Lord on any laches of time, the tenant may be relieved; for there the land is but in nature of a security for those sums. Preced. Chanc. 569, 572.

In case of making a lease for years, without licence, and not warranted by custom, found to be a forfeiture at law, equity has nothing to do with it, to give any remedy; it is like to a feoffment made, or fine levied by particular tenants, against which there can be no relief. Ibid. 574. Where copyhold lands are purchased in fee, in trust for an alien, the lands are not seizable by the King; nor is the trust forfeited to him; for if the lands were forfeited as purchased for such alien, then the lord of the manor would lose his fines and services, &c. Hard. 436. Copyhold estates of poor prisoners, assigned to creditors, and assignees admitted by the Lord, on paying the usual fine due on a surrender, &c. See Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 26. See Comp. Court. Keeper, 3d Edit. throughout. Nelson's Lex Monerior, 2d Edit. Coke's Compleat Copyholder. & 4 Rep. 21 to 25, &c.

Corage, (Coragium) is a kind of extraordinary imposition, growing upon some unusual occasion, and seems to be of certain measures of corn: For corus tritici is a measure of wheat. Braet. lib. 2. c. 116. Numb. 6. Who in the same chapter, Numb. 8. hath these words.—Sunt etiam quedam communes praestationes, quae servitia non dicuntur, nec de consuetudine veniunt, nisi tamen necessitas intervenierit, vel cum Rex venerit: sicut in Antidagia, Corragia, & Carvagia, & alia plura de necessitate, & ex consensu communi totius Regni introducta, &c. Blount.

Coracle, A small boat used by fishermen on some parts of the river Severn, made of an oval form, of split sally twigs interwoven, and on that part next the water covered with leather, in which one man being seated in the middle, will row himself swiftly with one hand, while with the other he manages his net or fish-tackle: and coming off the water, he will take the light vessel on his back, and carry it home. This boat is of the same nature as the Indian canoes; though not of the same form, or employed to the like use. But quere if not long out of use?

Coram non Iudice, Is when a cause is brought and determined in a court whereof the judges have not any jurisdiction; then it is said to be Coram non Iudice, and void. 2 Cro. 351.

Corbel Stones, Arc stones wherein images stand: The old English Corbel, was properly a nich in the wall of a church, or other structure, in which an image was placed for ornament or superstition; and the Corbel stones were the smooth polished stones, laid for the front and outside of the Corbels or niches. The niches remain on the outside of very many churches and steeples in England, though the little statues and reliques are most of them broken down. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

Corb of Wood Is a quantity of wood eight foot long, four foot broad, and four foot high, ordained by the statute.

Corbidge, (Fr.) Is a general appellation for all stuff to make ropes, and for all kinds of ropes belonging to the rigging of a ship: It is mentioned in 15 Car. 2. c. 13.

Corbinder, From the Fr. Cordonannier, a shoemaker; we call him vulgarly a Cordwainer; and so this word is used in divers statutes; as 3 H. 8. c. 10. 5 H. 8. c. 7. 27 H. 8. c. 14. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 13. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22, &c. By which last statutes the Masters and Wardens of the Cordwainers Company in London, &c. are to appoint searchers and triers of leather; and leather is not to be sold before searched and sealed, &c.

Corbubaniarius, Also signifies a shoemaker. Cowel.

Corium forisfacere, Was where a person was condemned to be whipped; which was anciently the punishment of a servant. Si quis corium suum forisfaciat & ad ecclesiam incurrat, sit ei verberatio condonata. Corium perdere, the same: And corium redimere is to compound for a whipping.

Corn, No corn was formerly to be transported, without the King's licence; except for the victualling of ships, and in some special cases, from some ports only: And none may buy corn to sell again, without licence from justices, &c. Stat. 5 El. c. 12. But now corn, as wheat, barley, oats, &c. may be transported to states in amity when they exceed not such and such prices, by many statutes; and the exporters of it shall pay no duty or custom, but be intitled to bounty-money or a certain allowance for exportation. 3 Car. 1. 12. 15 & 22 Car. 2. 2 W. & M. &c. The transportation of corn to foreign parts, was prohibited by 8 Ann. c. 2. See 2 Geo. 2. cap. 18. A custom-duty is granted on foreign corn imported; to be paid according to the price of English corn, and no foreign corn shall be transported from one port of Great Britain to another, on pain of forfeiture, and 20 s. a bushel. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. cap. 12. If any person use violence on another person to hinder him from buying, or carrying corn to any sea-port town to be transported, &c. he shall be imprisoned by two justices, not exceeding three months, and be publicly whipped, &c. and committing a second offence, or destroying granaries, or corn in any boat or vessel, to be adjudged a felon, and transported for seven years: And the hundred to make good the damage, if not above 100 l. as in cases of robbery; where an offender is not apprehended and convicted within twelve months; but notice must be given to the constable in two days, &c. by 11 Geo. 2. c. 22. For no sort of corn, meal, flour, bread, biscuit, beef, &c. may be exported, on pain of forfeiting 20 s. for every bushel of grain, and 12 d. every pound weight of bread, &c. But his Majesty before a certain time may permit the exportation of corn by proclamation, and notice in the Gazette. Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 3. Cornage, (Cornagium, from the Lat. Cornu) a horn, was a kind of tenure in grand serjeanty; the service of which was to blow a horn when any invasion of the Scots was perceived: And by this tenure many persons held their lands northward, about the wall commonly called the Piars Wall. Camd. Britan. 609. This old service of horn blowing was afterwards paid in money, and the sheriffs accounted for it under the title of Cornagium.—Memorandum quod cum vicecomes Cambriae fideret compotum ad seaccarium apud Salop, idem vicecomes fecit tallagium sub nomine suo lx. lib. tam de Cornagio, quam de aliis debitis. Mem. in Scacc. 6 Ed. 1. Sir Edward Coke in his first institute, pag. 107. says cornage is also called in the old books Horngeld; but they seem to differ much. See Horngeld.

Cornwall, A royal duchy belonging to the Prince of Wales, abounding with mines, and having Stannary courts, &c. It yields a great revenue to the Prince; and how how leases are to be made of lands in the duchy of Cornwall, for three lives, or thirty-one years, under the ancient rents, &c. Corody, (Corodium) Signifies a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and cloathing due to the King from an abbey, or other house of religion, whereof he was founder, towards the sustentation of such a one of his servants as he thought fit to bestow it upon. The difference between a corody and pension seems to be, that a corody was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the King's servants in an abbey: A pension is given to one of the King's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided of a benefice: And of both these you may read Fitz. Nat. Br. fol. 250. where are set down all the corodies and pensions that our abbeys, when they were standing, were obliged to pay to the King. Corody is ancient in our laws: And it is mentioned in Stauf. Prærog. 44. And by the stat. of Westm. 2. c. 25. it is ordained, that an assise shall lie for a corody. It is also apparent by 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 26. that corodies belonged sometimes to bishops, and noblemen, from monasteries: And in the New Terms of Law, it is said that a corody may be due to a common person, by grant from one to another; or of common right to him that is a founder of a religious house, not holden in Frank Almoin; for that tenure was a discharge of all corodies in itself: By this book it likewise appears, that a corody is either certain or uncertain, and may be not only for life or years, but in fee. Terms de Ley. 2 Inst. 630. See the Monasticon Anglicanum, for the form of a grant of a corody.

Corodio Habendo, A writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious house. Reg. Orig. 264.

Corona Mala, or Mala Corona, The clergy who abused their character, were formerly so called. Blount.

Coronare Filium, To make one's son a priest. Anciently, Lords of Manors, whose tenants held by Villengage, did prohibit them coronare filios, lest such Lords should lose a vassal by their entering into holy orders: For ordination changed their condition, and gave them liberty, to the prejudice of the Lord, who could before claim them as his natives or born servants—Homo Coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders; and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns. Cowel.

Coronatoe Eligendo, Is a writ which lies on the death or discharge of any Coroner, directed to the Sheriff out of the Chancery, to call together the freeholders of the county, for the choice of a new coroner; and to certify into the Chancery, both the election and the name of the party elected, and also to give him his oath, &c. Reg. Orig. 177. F. N. B. 163. There are usually four coroners in a county, in some counties fewer, and in some but one, according as the usage is; and if any of them dieth, or is discharged, then shall issue this writ.

Coronatoe exonerando, Is a writ for the discharge of a coroner, for negligence, or insufficiency in the discharge of his duty: and where coroners are so far engaged in any other public business, that they cannot attend the office; or if they are disabled by old age or disease, to execute it; or have not sufficient lands, &c. they may be discharged by this writ. 2 Inst. 32. 2 Hawk. P. C. 44. But if any such writ be grounded on an untrue suggestion, the coroner may procure a commission from the Chancery to inquire thereof; and if the suggestion be disproved, the King may make a superfedeas to the sheriff, that he do not remove the coroner; or if he have removed him, that he suffer him to execute the office. Reg. Orig. 177, 178. F. N. B. 164.

Coroner, (Coronator, a Corona) is an ancient officer of this realm. Mention is made of him in King Askelstan's charter to Beverly, Anno 925: and he is so called, because he deals wholly for the King and Crown.

Herein is to be considered:

I. The Election and Jurisdiction of the Coroner.

II. His Power and Duty, with his Fees for the Execution of his Duty, and his Punishment for the Breach of it.

I. Of the Election and Jurisdiction of the Coroner.

This officer, by the stat. of Westm. c. 10. ought to be a sufficient person, that is the wisest and discreetest knight, that best would and might attend upon such an office: and there is a writ in the register, Nisi sit Miles, &c. whereby it appears it was good cause to remove a coroner chosen, if he were not a knight, and had not an hundred shillings rent of freehold (now obsolete.) Coroners are to be men of good ability, and have lands in fee in the county where chosen, to answer all people: and if insufficient, the county shall answer for them. 2 Inst. 174. The Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, is the sovereign coroner of the whole kingdom in person wheresoever he is. 4 Rep. 57. There are also special coroners, within divers liberties, as well as the ordinary officers in every county; as the Coroner of the Verge, which is a certain compass about the King's court; who is likewise called Coroner of the King's House. Crompt. Juris. 102.

The King's Coroner shall execute his office within the Verge. 32 H. 8. c. 20. sec. 7. And some corporations and colleges are licensed by charter to appoint their coroners within their own precincts. 4 Inst. 271. And for what arises on the high sea, we read of coroners appointed by the King or his Admiral. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 53. See Coroner of the King's Household.

II. Of the Coroners Power, Duty, and Fees, &c.

The office of coroners especially concerns the pleas of the crown; and they are conservators of the peace in the county where generally elected. Their authority is judicial and ministerial: Judicial, where one comes to a violent death, and to take and enter appeals of murder, pronounce judgment upon outlawries, &c. And to inquire of lands and goods, and escapes of murderers, treasure trove, wreck of the sea, deodands, &c. The Ministerial power is where the coroners execute the King's writs, on exception to the sheriff, as being party to a suit, kin to either of the parties, on default of the sheriff, &c. 4 Inst. 271. 1 Plowd. 73. And the authority of coroners does not determine by the demise of the King. 2 Inst. 174. Where coroners are empowered to act as judges, as in taking an inquisition of death, or receiving an appeal of felony, &c. The act of one of them is of the same force as if they had all joined; but after one of them has proceeded to act, the act of another of them will be void: And where they are authorized to act only ministerially, in the execution of a process directed to them upon the incapacity of the sheriff, their acts are void if they do not all join. 2 Hawk. P. C. 52. Hob. 70. So that coroners as ministers must all join; but as judges, they may divide. But two coroners ought to be judges in redress; and though one serves to pronounce an outlawry, the entry ought to be in the name of all of them: And so of all processes directed to the coroners. Stauf. f. 53. Jenk. Cent. 85.

If the sheriff is either plaintiff or defendant, or one of the cognisees, the writ must be directed to the coroner. Cro. Car. 300. But the coroner is not the officer of B. R. but where the sheriff is improper; not where there is no sheriff; for if the sheriff die, the coroner cannot execute a writ. In case of two coroners, if one is challenged, the other may execute the writ, &c. yet both make but one officer: It is the same of two sheriffs of a city, &c. 1 Salk. 144. A venire facias shall go to the coroner, where the sheriff is a party, or the defendant is a servant to the sheriff, &c. but it ought to be on a principal challenge to the favour. Moor 470.

On defaults of sheriffs, coroners are to impanel juries, and return issues on juries not appearing, &c. 2 H. 5. cap. 8. As the sheriff in his turn might inquire of all felonies by the common law, saving the death of a man; so the coroner can inquire of no felony but of the death of a person, and that super visum corporis. 4 Inst. 271. By magna charta, cap. 17. no sheriff, &c. or coroner, shall hold pleas of the crown: But by stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10. it is enacted, that coroners shall lawfully attach and present pleas of the crown; and that sheriffs shall have have counter-rolls with the coroners, as well of appeals, as of inquests, &c.

Coroners, before the stat. Magna Charta, might not only receive accusations against offenders, but might try them: But since that statute, they cannot proceed so far; and appeals before them, are removable into B. R. &c. by certiorari, directed to the coroners and sheriffs, &c. Though process may be awarded by the sheriff and coroner, or the coroner only, in the county-court on appeals, till the exigent, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 51.

By the statute de Officio Coronatoris, 4 Ed. 1. The coroner is to go to the place where any person is slain or suddenly dead, and shall by his warrant to the bailiffs, constables, &c. summon a jury out of the four or five neighbouring towns, to make inquiry upon view of the body; and the coroner and jury are to inquire into the manner of killing, and all circumstances that occasioned the party's death, who were present, whether the dead person was known, where he lay the night before, &c. Examine the body if there be any signs of strangling about the neck, or of cords about the members, &c. Also all wounds ought to be viewed, and inquiry made with what weapons, &c. And the coroner may send his warrant for witnesses, and take their examination in writing; and if any appear guilty of the murder, he shall inquire what goods and lands he hath, and then the dead body is to be buried. A coroner may likewise commit the person to prison who is by his inquisition found guilty of the murder; and the witnesses are to be bound by recognisance to appear at the next assizes, &c.

When the jury have brought in their verdict, the coroner is to inroll and return the inquisition, whether it be brought in murder, manslaughter, &c. to the justices of the next gaol delivery of the county, or certify it into B. R. where the murderers shall be proceeded against. 2 Roll. Abr. 32. Upon an inquisition taken before the coroner, he must put into writing the effect of the evidence given to the jury before him; and bind them to appear, &c. which is to be certified to the court with the inquisition; and neglecting it shall be fined. 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 13. 1 Lill. Abr. 327.

The word Murdravit is not necessary in a coroner's inquisition; though 'tis in an indictment for killing another person. 1 Salk. 377. It is not necessary that the inquisition be taken in the place where the body was viewed. 2 Hawk. 48. But a coroner has no authority to take an inquisition of death without a view of the body; and if the inquest be taken by him without such view, it is void. 2 Lev. 140.

The coroner may in convenient time take up a dead body that hath been buried, in order to view it; but if it be buried so long that he can discover nothing from the viewing it; or if there be danger of infection, the inquest ought not to be taken by the coroner, but by justices of peace, by the testimony of witnesses; for none can take it on view, but the coroner. Bro. Coron. 167, 173. If the body is buried, the town shall be amerced; as it shall be if the body is suffered to lie so long that it stinks. 2 Danv. Abr. 209, &c. Where the body hath lain for some time, that it cannot be judged how it came by its death, that must be recorded, that at the coming of the justices of assize, the town where, &c. may be amerced on sight of the coroner's rolls.

A coroner may find any nuisance by which the death of a man happens; and the township shall be amerced on such finding. 1 Nelf. Abr. 536. If one is slain in the day, and the murderer escapes, the town where done shall be amerced, and the coroner is to inquire thereof on view of the body. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. A coroner may take an indictment upon view of the body; as also an appeal, within a year after the death of one slain. Wood's Inst. 491. But a coroner, super visum corporis, cannot make an inquisition of an accessory after the murder; though he may of accessories before the fact. Meor 29.

Coroners ought to sit and inquire on the body of every prisoner that dies in prison: They have no jurisdiction within the verge of the King's courts; nor of offences, committed at sea, or between high and low water mark when the tide is in; though they have in arms and creeks of the sea. 3 Inst. 134. If a body is drowned, and cannot be found to be viewed, the inquisition must be taken by justices of peace, on the examination of witnesses, &c. 5 Rep. 110.

Where a coroner's inquest is quashed, he must make a new one super visum corporis: And a coroner may attend and amend his inquisition in matters of form: But if he misbehaves himself, and a melius inquirendum is granted upon it, that inquisition must be taken by the sheriffs or commissioners, upon affidavits, and not super visum corporis; because none but a coroner can take inquisition super visum, &c. and he is not to be trusted again. 1 Salk. 190. 2 Danv. Abr. 210.

A coroner's inquisition being final, the coroner ought to hear counsel and evidence on both sides. 2 Sid. 90, 101. The coroner must admit evidence, as well against the King's interest, as for it; but it hath been held, that if a person be killed by another, and it is certainly known that he did it, the coroner's jury are to hear the evidence only for the King; and inquire whether the killing were by malice, or without malice, &c. Per Hale C. J. Where a coroner would not admit of evidence against the King, to prove a felo de se to be non compos mentis, his inquisition was set aside; and a new inquisition taken, whereby it was found that the party was non compos. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 60. If there be an inquisition of manslaughter or murder, and also an indictment by the grand jury against one, and he is arraigned, and found Not Guilty on the indictment; here it is necessary to quash the coroner's inquisition, or to arraign the party upon it, and acquit him on that also: For otherwise it stands as a record against him, whereon he may possibly be outlawed. 2 Hale 65. And where a person found guilty by the coroner's inquest, pleads, and is acquitted by the petit jury; they must give in who it was that killed the man, which serves as an indictment against that other person, and if they cannot tell who, they may mention some fictitious name. Ibid.

As to the Fees due for the Execution of his Office.

By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 10. Coroners shall demand or take nothing for doing their offices: And by the ancient law of England, none having any office concerning the administration of justice, could take any fee for doing his office; and therefore this statute was only in affirmance of the common law. By 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1. upon an inquisition taken on view of the body, the coroner shall have 13 s. 4 d. fee of the goods of the murderer; and if he be gone, out of the amercement of the town for the escape. Though the 1 H. 8. c. 7. enacts, that where a person is slain by misadventure, the coroner is to take no fee, on pain of 40 s.
